All but three of the centennial conductors have conducted the Philharmonic in the past. The commemoration of the orchestra's centenary will mark the first time Mr. Koussevitzky has conducted an American orchestra other than the Boston Symphony since he made his American debut in Boston in 1924. He will conduct for two weeks in January.

Koussevitzky Not in Union

Mr. Koussevitzky and the members of the Boston Symphony are not members of the American Federation of Musicians, the affiliate of the American Federation of Labor through which James Caesar Petrillo, president of the union, has imposed virtually absolute rule over all musicians who perform in the United States.

Mr. Field explained last night that the Philharmonic-Symphony Society had obtained a dispensation from Mr. Petrillo on Mr. Koussevitzky's behalf. "We arranged it with the union," Mr. Field said. "They seemed perfectly happy about it." Mr. Petrillo was not available for comment.

Although Mr. Goosens and Mr. Busch have never before conducted the Philharmonic, both were guest conductors of the old New York Symphony Orchestra, which was merged with the New York Philharmonic in 1928. The centenary program will cover the hundredth anniversary of the founding of the Philharmonic Society on April 5, 1842, and of its first concert on Dec. 7, 1842. The centennial season will open on Thursday evening, Oct. 9, 1941, in Carnegie Hall.

Mr. Barbirolli, who is in his fifth season with the Philharmonic, will conduct the orchestra for eight weeks during the centennial season, two in October and six during February and March, 1942. He has been conductor of the Philharmonic since November, 1936. His contract has another year to run.

Mr. Stokowski will conduct the Philharmonic during the first fortnight of the centennial season.

Walter Will Return

Mr. Walter, who conducted the Philharmonic for four weeks during the last season, will return for the same period during the centennial season. He will conduct for two weeks in October and two in April, 1942.

Mr. Mitropoulos, who made his first appearance before members of the New York Philharmonic this season, has been engaged for a month during the centennial season.

Mr. Rodzinski likewise has been engaged for a month. The conductor has been associated with the Cleveland Orchestra for the last eight years.

Mr. Goosens and Mr. Busch have each been engaged for a fortnight. Mr. Goosens, a native of London, has been musical director of the Cincinnati Symphony for ten years.

Mr. Busch, like Mr. Walter, was ousted from his eminent musical position in his native Germany when the Nazis came to power. Since his departure from Germany he has been conductor of the Teatro Colon in Buenos Aires and the Mozart Festivals in Glyndebourne, England.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
POST
MAR 14 1941

8 GUEST CONDUCTORS FOR PHILHARMONIC CENTENNIAL

Eight guest conductors, including John Barbirolli, the regular conductor, will direct the concerts of the Philharmonic-Symphony next season as a feature of the one hundredth year of America's oldest symphony orchestra, it was announced today by Marshall Field, president of the board of directors.

The Philharmonic-Symphony centennial, commemorating the founding of the Philharmonic Society on April 5, 1842, and the first concert on December 7, 1842, will be celebrated during 1941-42 and the first half of the following season.

The season will be opened by Leopold Stokowski, who will conduct the first two weeks of concerts. Stokowski has appeared with the Philharmonic only once before, in 1930.

Serge Koussevitzky will lead the Philharmonic two weeks in January. It will be his first appearance with an orchestra other than the Boston Symphony since his arrival in America.

John Barbirolli, now in his fifth season as regular conductor, will conduct two weeks in October and two in April.

Dimitri Mitropoulos, conductor of the Minneapolis Symphony, and Artur Rodzinski, Cleveland Orchestra head, each will conduct one month.

Eugene Goosens and Fritz Busch, each of whom will conduct for two weeks, complete the list of guest conductors.

The 100th season will open Thursday evening, October 9, 1941, in Carnegie Hall. Soloists will be announced later.

This Clipping From
LOWELL, MASS.
COURIER-CITIZEN
MAR 19 1941

As Guest Conductor.

There is word that Dr. Koussevitzky is to be guest conductor of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra for two weeks next January. By reason of the visits of the Boston Symphony to the metropolis its distinguished conductor is well known there and there will be interest to see the results he gets from another ensemble. Just so long as the New Yorkers do not try to woo him away from Boston we endorse the visit and the tribute to him which

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
SUN
MAR 14 1941

Eight to Lead Philharmonic

Stokowski and Koussevitzky to Join in Celebrating Symphony's Centennial.

By WILLIAM G. KING.

Eight of the most distinguished conductors now before the public have been engaged to lead the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra during the 1941-42 season, when America's oldest symphonic organization will celebrate its centennial.

They are Leopold Stokowski, formerly conductor of the Philadelphia Orchestra; Serge Koussevitzky of the Boston Symphony, Bruno Walter, Dimitri Mitropoulos of the Minneapolis Symphony, Fritz Busch, Arthur Rodzinski of the Cleveland Orchestra, Eugene Goossens of the Cincinnati Symphony and John Barbirolli, the regular conductor of the New York Philharmonic-Symphony.

The New York Philharmonic was founded on April 5, 1842, and gave its first concert on December 7 of that year. It merged with the New York Symphony, founded in 1878 by Leopold Damrosch, in the spring of 1928.

The centennial season will open with a concert on Thursday night, October 9, 1941.

Stokowski to Open.

Mr. Stokowski, famous for his long association with the Philadelphia Orchestra and for his more recent experimental work in the motion pictures, will conduct the first fortnight of the season. He has appeared only once before with the Philharmonic-Symphony, in the autumn of 1930, when he and Arturo Toscanini interchanged posts for two weeks.

Serge Koussevitzky will conduct two weeks in January. This will mark the first occasion on which the distinguished leader of the Boston Symphony has conducted another American orchestra since coming to this country seventeen years ago. He has been made available for the Philharmonic-Symphony Centennial through the co-operation of the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

John Barbirolli, who is now in his fifth season with the Philharmonic-Symphony Society, will conduct the orchestra for eight weeks next year: two weeks in October and six during February and March.

Walter for Four Weeks.

Bruno Walter will return for four weeks, the same length of time he conducted this past season. The first half of his period will be in October, the second half in April. Mr. Walter while in New York will again divide his time between his symphonic duties with the Philharmonic-Symphony and his operatic work at the Metropolitan.

Dimitri Mitropoulos and Artur Rodzinski have each been engaged for one month. The Greek conductor of the Minneapolis Symphony was introduced to Philharmonic-Symphony subscribers this winter and immediately won their interest and respect. Dr. Rodzinski, conductor of the Cleveland Orchestra for the last eight years, last directed the Philharmonic-Symphony during the winter season 1936-37—the same season he gave the spectacular performance of the Shostakovich opera "Lady Macbeth of Mzensk" at the Metropolitan.

Eugene Goossens and Fritz Busch will conduct a fortnight each. Mr. Goossens, who has been musical director of the Cincinnati Symphony for ten years, is also well known as a composer. He has never before conducted the Philharmonic, but was guest conductor of the New York Symphony for six concerts in January, 1926, and a pair in February, 1928.

Busch Here for Fortnight.

Mr. Busch also was a guest conductor of the old New York Symphony in both 1927 and 1928. When Arturo Toscanini left the Philharmonic-Symphony, he suggested Mr. Busch as one of the conductors to follow him, but contracts in Europe at that time prevented him from considering an offer. From 1922 until the advent of Hitler, Fritz Busch was head of the Dresden State Opera. Leaving Germany voluntarily in 1933, he has been dividing his time since between opera and concert engagements in Buenos Aires, Glyndebourne, England, where he conducted the Mozart Festivals, and the Scandinavian countries. He is now in New York, but returns to the Teatro Colon, Buenos Aires, very shortly.

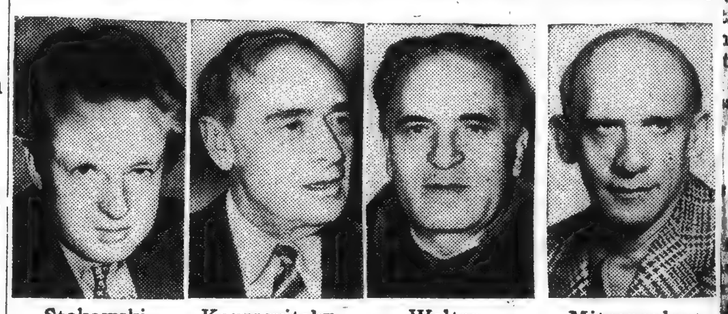
The usual subscription concerts are announced by the Philharmonic-Symphony Society for 1941-42, all at Carnegie Hall: two series of fourteen Thursday evening concerts, two series of fourteen Friday afternoon concerts; two series of seven popular Saturday evening concerts and two series of fourteen Sunday afternoon concerts.

There will again be two series of Young People's Concerts under Rudolph Ganz: six Saturday morning concerts at Carnegie Hall and three Monday afternoon concerts at the Town Hall.

Present subscribers have until May 10 to renew their subscriptions for next year.

Meanwhile new applications are being received and will be filled in the order of application. A detailed prospectus will be issued shortly.

CHOSEN TO LEAD PHILHARMONIC



Stokowski. Koussevitzky. Walter. Mitropoulos.

Barbirolli. Busch. Goossens. Rodzinski.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
MAR 23 1941

THE PHILHARMONIC CENTENARY

By VIRGIL THOMSON

LETTERS have been arriving numerously of late protesting against the meager plans announced by the Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra for the celebration of its 100th anniversary next year. Why these protests should be sent to me rather than to the directors of the Philharmonic I do not know, unless perhaps it is thought that the directors of that body are impervious to suggestion and complaint, and my correspondents hope to seduce me into waging through the press a campaign doomed apparently to failure otherwise.

The centennial festivities, as announced in the press of Saturday, March 15, consist of relieving the monotony of Mr. Barbirolli's tenure, which runs for one more year, in very much the same way as has been done this year, by a parade of guest-conductors. These would be Stokowski, Walter, Mitropoulos, Rodzinski, Goossens, Fritz Busch and possibly Toscanini and Koussevitzky. The Old Man had not yet replied to the invitation; and Mr. Petrillo, president of the National Federation of Musicians, had not yet given formal consent for the Philharmonic musicians to play under the good Doctor, who is not a member of the union, though unofficial advices from union headquarters seemed to indicate that such consent would be granted without difficulty.

* * *

Why the Festivities Announced Seem Inadequate

THE chief complaints against the inadequacy of this program are two: it honors no conductor of American birth or training, and it commissions no new compositions, American or other.

I must say that if I had been making out the list I should have put in Alexander Smallens and Howard Barlow, both American-trained and both interesting conductors, and I should have preferred Pierre Monteux and Thomas Beecham among the available European-trained to either Goossens or Busch. Under no circumstances, however, should I have made out any such list at all. A string of guest-conductors, though obviously the first thing the Philharmonic management would think of, is the last thing the Philharmonic musicians need. These have been so thoroughly guest-conducted for twenty years now that they have become temperamental, erratic and difficult as only first-class musicians can become when subjected to every known variety of browbeating and wheedling. The best birthday present the Philharmonic could offer itself and us would be a good permanent full-time conductor, somebody worthy of the job and capable of assuming all its [illegible] saying such three more [illegible]s. [illegible]d Chicago themselves really ex- appointed, because I important [illegible]e days of [illegible]nsky from [illegible], each of about ten [illegible]ason, there [illegible]e, however, [illegible]ly against new scores [illegible]st of them [illegible]sition and [illegible]s made no [illegible]rn music; [illegible]lharmonic. little of it [illegible] center of [illegible]sthetics of Orchestra, minute on [illegible]f thirty years on the sidelines of creative music, really writ. The personnel is not entirely on the do play other music other places; and they all it summers at the Stadium, where the repertory [illegible]ur Judson has other managerial irons in the fire [illegible]uite a few. But still the fact is that the current [illegible]e tradition in force ever since its merging with [illegible]n 1921, is one of fine instrumentalism and fancy conducting, not of intimate collaboration with the creators of music. And that is why I permit myself a certain cynicism in reply when people write or ask me why new works are not being commissioned to fête the hundredth year. The old Philharmonic is a tricky bird. Give her a good master and she'll lay you golden eggs. But don't expect those golden eggs to hatch live goslings. Above all, don't expect an organization that has for thirty years either ignored the existence of the most vigorous movements in contemporary music or snubbed them ostentatiously to suddenly start giving money away for their encouragement.

Petted

* * *

I View With Alarm the Philharmonic's Apparent Lack of a Musical Policy

NOT that a sudden change is inconceivable, provided some more fundamental change were to take place in the organization's musical policy. But this year, at least, the Philharmonic has shown, indeed, very little sign of having a musical policy. Each concert has seemed more or less fortuitous. Mr. Barbirolli, who is supposed to be the conductor, has been replaced by guests for nearly one-third of the concerts. A great deal of contemporary music has been played, for a change, but selected it would seem, from a grabbag. Two world-famous violinists have both played the same concerto in the same season. I have found little logic in the program-making, whether the works played were ancient or modern. This applies equally to those of the conductor and to those of his guests.

It is classical to celebrate a feast by giving way for one day to one's besetting weakness. But ladies and gentlemen who direct the destinies of the Philharmonic, do you really think another whole year of it is without serious risk? Your conductor has already accepted for this season what amounts to the status of a guest. He has accepted for next year to be one among eight. That means that for two years the Philharmonic will have had no conductor, no unified command, hence no real discipline. For twenty years they haven't had much, I admit; but once a year Mengelberg or the Old Man turned up and told them what was what. Barbirolli was all right, too, I suppose, as long as he conducted or was allowed to conduct his own orchestra. But do you really think the temperamental Philharmonic, if left for a whole year without any conductor of its own at all, won't blow sky high one day when some equally temperamental guest says "boo" to it?

Musical composition has gone on for some years now with small blessings from the Philharmonic; and, though I could wish things were otherwise, it would be against nature to expect much more right now. But I do think, birthdays aside, that that venerable institution is tempting Providence to go on playing around with guest-conductors when what she really needs is a lord and master who will take some of the jumpiness out of her and put her to work on a five-year plan of some kind, building something in America's musical life that would be worthy of her history and of the city that loves her and supports her and complains about her.

* * *

I Could Imagine One

WHAT would such a plan be? Nothing less than the building of an audience for American music and the building of an American repertory for that audience. Nothing is easier. Half the countries in Europe have accomplished a similar thing deliberately. The technique of it is known. Nothing would be a worthier job for our Philharmonic; and, of course, it could be fantastically a success. Everybody is ready. Local audience, radio executives, national public, composers even. And the naming of an American conductor, which would be necessary, because Europeans have only the vaguest conception of what American music is all about, would not present the difficulty it does when we envisage, as we do now, that problem as one of naming an American to conduct a repertory 95 per cent European.

I'm afraid I'm dreaming about the present. I should like to give the Philharmonic, one first-class, full-time American conductor complete with five-year plan and full authority to execute it. But I may as well return to my cynicism. I cannot offer such a present. And there is about as much chance of the Philharmonic offering it to itself as there is of Toscanini conducting Schoenberg's Fünf Orchesterstücke at an NBC broadcast.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
PM
MAR 14 1941

Eight Conductors Named for Philharmonic Centennial; Toscanini Not Among Them

Next year the Philharmonic-Symphony Society will be 100 years old. Last night Marshall Field, President of the Board of Directors, announced plans to celebrate the orchestra's centennial with about as brilliant a list of conductors as has ever appeared with one orchestra in one season. Here they are, with the length of each one's tenancy:

Leopold Stokowski, first two weeks;
Serge Koussevitzky, two weeks;
John Barbirolli, eight weeks;
Bruno Walter, four weeks;
Dimitri Mitropoulos, one month;
Artur Rodzinski, one month;
Eugene Goossens, two weeks;
Fritz Busch, two weeks.

Arturo Toscanini is about the only active, old-line conductor not appearing on the list. As for the others:

Mr. Stokowski resigned last week end from the Philadelphia Orchestra, where he had been conductor for 29 years. Mr. Koussevitzky, by grace of the Boston Symphony trustees, will be conducting another major American orchestra for the first time since he came to this country 17 years ago.

Mr. Barbirolli, Mr. Walter and Mr. Mitropoulos conducted the Philharmonic-Symphony this year. The first, being "permanent conductor," will have the longest assignment.

Mr. Rodzinski, conductor of the Cleveland Orchestra for the past eight years, conducted the Philharmonic-Symphony as guest in 1936-37 and last summer won great critical acclaim for his two weeks at the Stadium Concerts.

Mr. Goossens has been conductor of the Cincinnati Symphony for 10 years. Before that he conducted the Rochester Philharmonic for eight. He is an Englishman by birth.

Mr. Busch, brother of the violinist Adolf Busch, was head of the Dresden State Opera for 11 years before the advent of Hitler. Then he left Germany voluntarily and has been dividing his time between England, Buenos Aires and the Scandinavian countries. In England he conducted the Mozart Festivals at Glyndebourne. Recordings made by the Glyndebourne Company and others with a chamber orchestra are particularly treasured by American collectors.

The Society's 100th season opens Oct. 9, 1941. Its aim, says Mr. Field, is still that announced a century ago—"the study and rendering of symphonies, overtures and other classical music in such a manner as to cultivate a more general knowledge and a more correct public taste." There is this difference: during its first season, the Philharmonic gave three concerts; next season there will be about 100.

Other differences: members of the orchestra today need no longer be "professors of music"; they get paid regularly instead of sharing profits (of which there aren't any); and a quaint by-law has been withdrawn. It prohibited "all indecorum of the members . . . at all the Society's meetings, viz.: smoking, the wearing of caps or hats, violent language, etc."

THIS CLIPPING FROM BRADFORD, PA.
STAR RECORD
MAR 20 1941

NEW YORK — (U.P.) — The New York Philharmonic-Symphony, the country's oldest orchestra, will observe the 100th anniversary of its founding next year.

During the anniversary season, which opens at Carnegie Hall next October 9, eight conductors will be heard, including the regular conductor, John Barbirolli, now in his fifth season.

Leopold Stokowski, who has parted company with the Philadelphia Orchestra after many years, will conduct the first two weeks of the season. He has appeared with the Philharmonic-Symphony only once before, in 1930.

Serge Koussevitzky will conduct for two weeks in January. It will be the first time the leader of the Boston Symphony has conducted another American orchestra since coming to this country 17 years ago.

Barbirolli will conduct for eight weeks and Bruno Walter for four. Dimitri Mitropoulos, of the Minneapolis Symphony, and Artur Rodzinski, of the Cleveland Orchestra, have been engaged for one month each. Eugene Goossens, musical director of the Cincinnati Symphony, and Fritz Busch, who was head of the Dresden State Opera until the advent of Hitler, complete the list.

There will be many distinguished soloists, a list of whom is yet to be announced.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
MAR 14 1941

Stokowski and Koussevitzky Head 7 Philharmonic 'Guests'

Leopold Stokowski.

Serge Koussevitzky.

A brilliant array of conductors will be paraded before the Philharmonic-Symphony Society's patrons next season, the 100th of the society's existence, it was announced today by Marshall Field, president of the board of directors of the society. The Centennial season will open on Oct. 9, 1942, in Carnegie Hall.

Eight distinguished conductors already have been engaged for the Philharmonic Centennial Season, including John Barbirolli, regular director. A galaxy of soloists will be announced later.

Leopold Stokowski will conduct the first fortnight of the season. Mr. Stokowski, for many years the conductor of the Philadelphia Orchestra, a post which he has recently relinquished, has led the Philharmonic - Symphony only once before during a two weeks' interchange with Arthuro Toscanini in the autumn of 1930 when Mr. Toscanini was the leader of Philharmonic.

Serge Koussevitzky, scheduled for two weeks in January, has never before conducted an orchestra other than the Boston Symphony since his arrival in this country 17 years ago.

Mr. Barbirolli, in his fifth season with the Society, will lead the orchestra for eight weeks, two in October and six during February and March.

Bruno Walter will return for four weeks, two in October and two in the latter part of April. Mr. Walter, who had conducted the Philhamonic-Symphony in past seasons, will again double between the orchestra concerts and opera performances at the Metropolitan as he did this year.

Dimitri Mitropolous, director of the Minneapolis Symphony, who made his first appearance with the orchestra this season, also will return for a month of concerts.

Artur Rodzinski, whose regular berth is the conductorship of the Cleveland Orchestra, directed the Philharmonic Symphony during the wniter season of 1936-1937.

Eugene Goossens, for ten years musical director of the Cincinnati Symphony, is also a noted composer. This will be his first experience as conductor of the Philharmonic-Symphony.

Fritz Busch, once a guest conductor of the old New York Symphony, will be another to make his debut with the Philharmonic-Symphony. Mr. Busch is widely known hereabouts through his European orchestral and operatic affiliations.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TELEGRAPH
MAR 16 1941

Leading Maestros Top Philharmonic Festival

Eight of the most distinguished conductors in the field of music, recognized for their achievements not only in America, but abroad as well, will head the New York Philharmonic Symphony's series of concerts next season, according to an announcement made public yesterday by Arthur Judson, manager of the society. The conductors have been engaged by the organization in celebration of the Philharmonic's 100th anniversary celebration.

Among the names to be listed as conducting concerts during the season will be Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra; Leopold Stokowski, recently resigned conductor of the Philadelphia Symphony; Bruno Walter, just signed by the Metropolitan Opera for the coming season as well; Dmitri Mitropoulos, Artur Rodzinski, Eugene Goossens, Fritz Busch and John Barbirolli, the regular conductor of the Philharmonic. There is also a possibility that Arturo Toscanini will also appear at least once during the season, although he has not yet expressed himself on the matter.

The disclosure that Koussevitzky would conduct the Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra raised questions beyond this engagement. Koussevitzky is the regular conductor of the Boston Symphony, which is the only non-union major orchestra in the country. A union official reported that his organization had ruled recently that no non-union musician might appear with a union orchestra. The Philharmonic-Symphony has a contract with the Musicians' Union.

Petrillo Only Can Act

Mr. Judson said he anticipated no difficulty with the union about Mr. Koussevitzky's appearance, as he had conferred with union officials and had been assured that there would be no trouble. A union official explained that only James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, could waive the union rule, and that Mr. Petrillo undoubtedly had conferred with Mr. Judson. Mr. Petrillo could not be reached for comment.

Save for an appearance some years ago with a radio orchestra, Mr. Koussevitzy has not appeared in this country with any other ensemble than the Boston Symphony. His guest leadership with the Philharmonic-Symphony will be his first with this orchestra. He will, conduct two weeks in January. His appearance was made possible through the co-operation of the trustees of the Boston Symphony.

Koussevitzky to Be Guest Of N. Y. Philharmonic

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of Boston's Symphony Orchestra, will direct New York's Philharmonic-Symphony for two weeks next January as part of the orchestra's one hundredth anniversary celebration. For the same two weeks Bruno Walter will lead the Boston Symphony. This will be the first time since he came to America, 17 years ago, that Koussevitzy has led another American orchestra. His musicians are the only non-union symphonic group in the country and why or whether the A. F. of L. tycoons have lifted their restrictions in this case is not clear. A sentimental consideration for an orchestra's hundredth birthday would hardly be expected to influence President Petrillo, who avowedly considers a tavern fiddler in the same plane with Heifetz.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
MAR 15 1941

Koussevitzky To Conduct Philharmonic Next Season

NEW YORK.—In observance of its centennial next season, the Philharmonic - Symphony Society of New York has arranged for eight distinguished conductors to appear at the head of its orchestra. Marshall Field, president of the society's board, announced yesterday that the leaders would be Leopold Stokowski, Serge Koussevitzky, Bruno Walter, Dimitri Mitropoulos, Artur Bodzinski, Eugene Goossens, Fritz Busch and John Barbirolli, the regular conductor.

One other guest conductor, Arturo Toscanini, was invited to appear on next season's program. However, Arthur Judson, manager of the society, said that Mr. Toscanini had not replied. Mr. Judson added that he did not know when Mr. Toscanini would reply, but if he should accept, arrangements would be made to fix dates for him.

The disclosure that Mr. Koussevitzky would conduct the Philharmonic - Symphony Orchestra raised questions beyond this engagement. Mr. Koussevitzky is the regular conductor of the Boston Symphony, which is the only non-union major orchestra in the country. A union official reported that his organization had ruled recently that no non-union musician might appear with a union orchestra. The Philharmonic-Symphony has a contract with the Musicians' Union.

Petrillo Only Can Act

Mr. Judson said he anticipated no difficulty with the union about Mr. Koussevitzky's appearance, as he had conferred with union officials and had been assured that there would be no trouble. A union official explained that only James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, could waive the union rule, and that Mr. Petrillo undoubtedly had conferred with Mr. Judson. Mr. Petrillo could not be reached for comment.

Save for an appearance some years ago with a radio orchestra, Mr. Koussevitzy has not appeared in this country with any other ensemble than the Boston Symphony. His guest leadership with the Philharmonic-Symphony will be his first with this orchestra. He will, conduct two weeks in January. His appearance was made possible through the co-operation of the trustees of the Boston Symphony.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
MAR 15 1941

Philharmonic's Plans Revealed For Centennial

Field Says 8 Conductors, Including Barbirolli, Will Aid Celebration Seasons

Marshall Field, president and chairman of the board of directors of the Philharmonic-Symphony Society of New York, announced yesterday plans for the commemorating of the society's centennial during the seasons of 1941-'42 and 1942-'43. As part of the celebration of the one-hundredth anniversary of the oldest symphony orchestra in the United States and the third oldest in the world, eight eminent conductors, including John Barbirolli, the society's present regular conductor, will preside over the Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra.

Besides Mr. Barbirolli, the conductors will be Leopold Stokowski, Serge Koussevitzky, Bruno Walter, Dimitri Mitropoulos, Artur Rodzinski, Eugene Goossens and Fritz Busch.

Arturo Toscanini, who conducted the Philharmonic during its tour of Europe in 1930, and retired as its conductor in 1936, was invited to participate in the centennial program. Mr. Toscanini declined the invitation, explaining that he was making no commitments for next season.

All but three of the centennial conductors have conducted the Philharmonic in the past. The commemoration of the orchestra's centenary will mark the first time Mr. Koussevitzky has conducted an American orchestra other than the Boston Symphony since he made his American debut in Boston in 1924. He will conduct for two weeks in January.

Koussevitzky Not in Union

Mr. Koussevitzky and the members of the Boston Symphony are not members of the American Federation of Musicians, the affiliate of the American Federation of Labor through which James Caesar Petrillo, president of the union, has imposed virtually absolute rule over all musicians who perform in the United States.

Mr. Field explained last night that the Philharmonic-Symphony Society had obtained a dispensation from Mr. Petrillo on Mr. Koussevitzky's behalf. "We arranged it with the union," Mr. Field said. "They seemed perfectly happy about it." Mr. Petrillo was not available for comment.

Although Mr. Goosens and Mr. Busch have never before conducted the Philharmonic, both were guest conductors of the old New York Symphony Orchestra, which was merged with the New York Philharmonic in 1928. The centenary program will cover the hundredth anniversary of the founding of the Philharmonic Society on April 5, 1842, and of its first concert on Dec. 7, 1842. The centennial season will open on Thursday evening, Oct. 9, 1941, in Carnegie Hall.

Mr. Barbirolli, who is in his fifth season with the Philharmonic, will conduct the orchestra for eight weeks during the centennial season, two in October and six during February and March, 1942. He has been conductor of the Philharmonic since November, 1936. His contract has another year to run.

Mr. Stokowski will conduct the Philharmonic during the first fortnight of the centennial season.

Walter Will Return

Mr. Walter, who conducted the Philharmonic for four weeks during the last season, will return for the same period during the centennial season. He will conduct for two weeks in October and two in April, 1942.

Mr. Mitropoulos, who made his first appearance before members of the New York Philharmonic this season, has been engaged for a month during the centennial season.

Mr. Rodzinski likewise has been engaged for a month. The conductor has been associated with the Cleveland Orchestra for the last eight years.

Mr. Goosens and Mr. Busch have each been engaged for a fortnight. Mr. Goosens, a native of London, has been musical director of the Cincinnati Symphony for ten years.

Mr. Busch, like Mr. Walter, was ousted from his eminent musical position in his native Germany when the Nazis came to power. Since his departure from Germany he has been conductor of the Teatro Colon in Buenos Aires and the Mozart Festivals in Glyndebourne, England.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
POST
MAR 14 1941

8 GUEST CONDUCTORS FOR PHILHARMONIC CENTENNIAL

Eight guest conductors, including John Barbirolli, the regular conductor, will direct the concerts of the Philharmonic-Symphony next season as a feature of the one hundredth year of America's oldest symphony orchestra, it was announced today by Marshall Field, president of the board of directors.

The Philharmonic-Symphony centennial, commemorating the founding of the Philharmonic Society on April 5, 1842, and the first concert on December 7, 1842, will be celebrated during 1941-42 and the first half of the following season.

The season will be opened by Leopold Stokowski, who will conduct the first two weeks of concerts. Stokowski has appeared with the Philharmonic only once before, in 1930.

Serge Koussevitzky will lead the Philharmonic two weeks in January. It will be his first appearance with an orchestra other than the Boston Symphony since his arrival in America.

John Barbirolli, now in his fifth season as regular conductor, will conduct two weeks in length of time next season, two weeks in October and two in April.

Dimitri Mitropoulos, conductor of the Minneapolis Symphony, and Artur Rodzinski, Cleveland Orchestra head, each will conduct one month.

Eugene Goosens and Fritz Busch, each of whom will conduct for two weeks, complete the list of guest conductors.

The 100th season will open Thursday evening, October 9, 1941, in Carnegie Hall. Soloists will be announced later.

This Clipping From
LOWELL, MASS.
COURIER-CITIZEN
MAR 19 1941

As Guest Conductor.

There is word that Dr. Koussevitzky is to be guest conductor of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra for two weeks next January. By reason of the visits of the Boston Symphony to the metropolis its distinguished conductor is well known there and there will be interest to see the results he gets from another ensemble. Just so long as the New Yorkers do not try to woo him away from Boston we endorse the visit and the tribute to him which

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
SUN
MAR 14 1941

Eight to Lead Philharmonic

Stokowski and Koussevitzky to Join in Celebrating Symphony's Centennial.

By WILLIAM G. KING.

Eight of the most distinguished conductors now before the public have been engaged to lead the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra during the 1941-42 season, when America's oldest symphonic organization will celebrate its centennial.

They are Leopold Stokowski, formerly conductor of the Philadelphia Orchestra; Serge Koussevitzky of the Boston Symphony, Bruno Walter, Dimitri Mitropoulos of the Minneapolis Symphony, Fritz Busch, Arthur Rodzinski of the Cleveland Orchestra, Eugene Goossens of the Cincinnati Symphony and John Barbirolli, the regular conductor of the New York Philharmonic-Symphony.

The New York Philharmonic was founded on April 5, 1842, and gave its first concert on December 7 of that year. It merged with the New York Symphony, founded in 1878 by Leopold Damrosch, in the spring of 1928.

The centennial season will open with a concert on Thursday night, October 9, 1941.

Stokowski to Open.

Mr. Stokowski, famous for his long association with the Philadelphia Orchestra and for his more recent experimental work in the motion pictures, will conduct the first fortnight of the season. He has appeared only once before with the Philharmonic-Symphony, in the autumn of 1930, when he and Arturo Toscanini interchanged posts for two weeks.

Serge Koussevitzky will conduct two weeks in January. This will mark the first occasion on which the distinguished leader of the Boston Symphony has conducted another American orchestra since coming to this country seventeen years ago. He has been made available for the Philharmonic-Symphony Centennial through the co-operation of the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

John Barbirolli, who is now in his fifth season with the Philharmonic-Symphony Society, will conduct the orchestra for eight weeks next year: two weeks in October and six during February and March.

Walter for Four Weeks.

Bruno Walter will return for four weeks, the same length of time he conducted this past season. The first half of his period will be in October, the second half in April. Mr. Walter while in New York will again divide his time between his symphonic duties with the Philharmonic-Symphony and his operatic work at the Metropolitan.

Dimitri Mitropoulos and Artur Rodzinski have each been engaged for one month. The Greek conductor of the Minneapolis Symphony was introduced to Philharmonic-Symphony subscribers this winter and immediately won their interest and respect. Dr. Rodzinski, conductor of the Cleveland Orchestra for the last eight years, last directed the Philharmonic-Symphony during the winter season 1936-37—the same season he gave the spectacular performance of the Shostakovich opera "Lady Macbeth of Mzensk" at the Metropolitan.

Eugene Goossens and Fritz Busch will conduct a fortnight each. Mr. Goossens, who has been musical director of the Cincinnati Symphony for ten years, is also well known as a composer. He has never before conducted the Philharmonic, but was guest conductor of the New York Symphony for six concerts in January, 1926, and a pair in February, 1928.

Busch Here for Fortnight.

Mr. Busch also was a guest conductor of the old New York Symphony in both 1927 and 1928. When Arturo Toscanini left the Philharmonic-Symphony, he suggested Mr. Busch as one of the conductors to follow him, but contracts in Europe at that time prevented him from considering an offer. From 1922 until the advent of Hitler, Fritz Busch was head of the Dresden State Opera. Leaving Germany voluntarily in 1933, he has been dividing his time since between opera and concert engagements in Buenos Aires, Glyndebourne, England, where he conducted the Mozart Festivals, and the Scandinavian countries. He is now in New York, but returns to the Teatro Colon, Buenos Aires, very shortly.

The usual subscription concerts are announced by the Philharmonic-Symphony Society for 1941-42, all at Carnegie Hall: two series of fourteen Thursday evening concerts, two series of fourteen Friday afternoon concerts; two series of seven popular Saturday evening concerts and two series of fourteen Sunday afternoon concerts.

There will again be two series of Young People's Concerts under Rudolph Ganz: six Saturday morning concerts at Carnegie Hall and three Monday afternoon concerts at the Town Hall.

Present subscribers have until

CHOSEN TO LEAD PHILHARMONIC

Stokowski. Koussevitzky. Walter. Mitropoulos.

Barbirolli. Busch. Goossens. Rodzinski.

May 10 to renew their subscriptions for next year.

Meanwhile new applications are being received and will be filled in the order of application. A detailed prospectus will be issued shortly.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
MAR 23 1941

THE PHILHARMONIC CENTENARY

By VIRGIL THOMSON

LETTERS have been arriving numerously of late protesting against the meager plans announced by the Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra for the celebration of its 100th anniversary next year. Why these protests should be sent to me rather than to the directors of the Philharmonic I do not know, unless perhaps it is thought that the directors of that body are impervious to suggestion and complaint, and my correspondents hope to seduce me into waging through the press a campaign doomed apparently to failure otherwise.

The centennial festivities, as announced in the press of Saturday, March 15, consist of relieving the monotony of Mr. Barbirolli's tenure, which runs for one more year, in very much the same way as has been done this year, by a parade of guest-conductors. These would be Stokowski, Walter, Mitropoulos, Rodzinski, Goossens, Fritz Busch and possibly Toscanini and Koussevitzky. The Old Man had not yet replied to the invitation; and Mr. Petrillo, president of the National Federation of Musicians, had not yet given formal consent for the Philharmonic musicians to play under the good Doctor, who is not a member of the union, though unofficial advices from union headquarters seemed to indicate that such consent would be granted without difficulty.

* * *

Why the Festivities Announced Seem Inadequate

THE chief complaints against the inadequacy of this program are two: it honors no conductor of American birth or training, and it commissions no new compositions, American or other.

I must say that if I had been making out the list I should have put in Alexander Smallens and Howard Barlow, both American-trained and both interesting conductors, and I should have preferred Pierre Monteux and Thomas Beecham among the available European-trained to either Goossens or Busch. Under no circumstances, however, should I have made out any such list at all. A string of guest-conductors, though obviously the first thing the Philharmonic management would think of, is the last thing the Philharmonic musicians need. These have been so thoroughly guest-conducted for twenty years now that they have become temperamental, erratic and difficult as only first-class musicians can become when subjected to every known variety of browbeating and wheedling. The best birthday present the Philharmonic could offer itself and us would be a good permanent full-time conductor, somebody worthy of the job and capable of assuming all its [illegible] saying such three more [illegible]s. [illegible]d Chicago themselves really ex- appointed, because I important [illegible]e days of [illegible]sky from [illegible], each of about ten [illegible]ason, there [illegible], however, [illegible]ly against new scores [illegible]st of them [illegible]sition and [illegible]s made no [illegible]ern music; [illegible]lharmonic. little of it [illegible]e center of [illegible]sthetics of Orchestra, minute on [illegible]r thirty years on the sidelines of creative music, really writ. The personnel is not entirely on the do play other music other places; and they all [illegible]it summers at the Stadium, where the repertory [illegible]eur Judson has other managerial irons in the fire [illegible]uite a few. But still the fact is that the current [illegible]e tradition in force ever since its merging with [illegible]n 1921, is one of fine instrumentalism and fancy conducting, not of intimate collaboration with the creators of music. And that is why I permit myself a certain cynicism in reply when people write or ask me why new works are not being commissioned to fête the hundredth year. The old Philharmonic is a tricky bird. Give her a good master and she'll lay you golden eggs. But don't expect those golden eggs to hatch live goslings. Above all, don't expect an organization that has for thirty years either ignored the existence of the most vigorous movements in contemporary music or snubbed them ostentatiously to suddenly start giving money away for their encouragement.

Petted

* * *

I View With Alarm the Philharmonic's Apparent Lack of a Musical Policy

NOT that a sudden change is inconceivable, provided some more fundamental change were to take place in the organization's musical policy. But this year, at least, the Philharmonic has shown, indeed, very little sign of having a musical policy. Each concert has seemed more or less fortuitous. Mr. Barbirolli, who is supposed to be the conductor, has been replaced by guests for nearly one-third of the concerts. A great deal of contemporary music has been played, for a change, but selected it would seem, from a grabbag. Two world-famous violinists have both played the same concerto in the same season. I have found little logic in the program-making, whether the works played were ancient or modern. This applies equally to those of the conductor and to those of his guests.

It is classical to celebrate a feast by giving way for one day to one's besetting weakness. But ladies and gentlemen who direct the destinies of the Philharmonic, do you really think another whole year of it is without serious risk? Your conductor has already accepted for this season what amounts to the status of a guest. He has accepted for next year to be one among eight. That means that for two years the Philharmonic will have had no conductor, no unified command, hence no real discipline. For twenty years they haven't had much, I admit; but once a year Mengelberg or the Old Man turned up and told them what was what. Barbirolli was all right, too, I suppose, as long as he conducted or was allowed to conduct his own orchestra. But do you really think the temperamental Philharmonic, if left for a whole year without any conductor of its own at all, won't blow sky high one day when some equally temperamental guest says "boo" to it?

Musical composition has gone on for some years now with small blessings from the Philharmonic; and, though I could wish things were otherwise, it would be against nature to expect much more right now. But I do think, birthdays aside, that that venerable institution is tempting Providence to go on playing around with guest-conductors when what she really needs is a lord and master who will take some of the jumpiness out of her and put her to work on a five-year plan of some kind, building something in America's musical life that would be worthy of her history and of the city that loves her and supports her and complains about her.

* * *

I Could Imagine One

WHAT would such a plan be? Nothing less than the building of an audience for American music and the building of an American repertory for that audience. Nothing is easier. Half the countries in Europe have accomplished a similar thing deliberately. The technique of it is known. Nothing would be a worthier job for our Philharmonic; and, of course, it could be fantastically a success. Everybody is ready. Local audience, radio executives, national public, composers even. And the naming of an American conductor, which would be necessary, because Europeans have only the vaguest conception of what American music is all about, would not present the difficulty it does when we envisage, as we do now, that problem as one of naming an American to conduct a repertory 95 per cent European.

I'm afraid I'm dreaming about the present I should like to give the Philharmonic, one first-class, full-time American conductor complete with five-year plan and full authority to execute it. But I may as well return to my cynicism. I cannot offer such a present. And there is about as much chance of the Philharmonic offering it to itself as there is of Toscanini conducting Schoenberg's Fünf Orchesterstücke at an NBC broadcast.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
MAR 15 1941

Philharmonic's Plans Revealed For Centennial

Field Says 8 Conductors, IncludingBarbirolli, Will Aid Celebration Seasons

Marshall Field, president and chairman of the board of directors of the Philharmonic-Symphony Society of New York, announced yesterday plans for the commemorating of the society's centennial during the seasons of 1941-'42 and 1942-'43. As part of the celebration of the one-hundredth anniversary of the oldest symphony orchestra in the United States and the third oldest in the world, eight eminent conductors, including John Barbirolli, the society's present regular conductor, will preside over the Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra.

Besides Mr. Barbirolli, the conductors will be Leopold Stokowski, Serge Koussevitzky, Bruno Walter, Dimitri Mitropoulos, Artur Rodzinski, Eugene Goossens and Fritz Busch.

Arturo Toscanini, who conducted the Philharmonic during its tour of Europe in 1930, and retired as its conductor in 1936, was invited to participate in the centennial program. Mr. Toscanini declined the invitation, explaining that he was making no commitments for next season.

All but three of the centennial conductors have conducted the Philharmonic in the past. The commemoration of the orchestra's centenary will mark the first time Mr. Koussevitzky has conducted an American orchestra other than the Boston Symphony since he made his American debut in Boston in 1924. He will conduct for two weeks in January.

Koussevitzky Not in Union

Mr. Koussevitzky and the members of the Boston Symphony are not members of the American Federation of Musicians, the affiliate of the American Federation of Labor through which James Caesar Petrillo, president of the union, has imposed virtually absolute rule over all musicians who perform in the United States.

Mr. Field explained last night that the Philharmonic-Symphony Society had obtained a dispensation from Mr. Petrillo on Mr. Koussevitzky's behalf. "We arranged it with the union," Mr. Field said. "They seemed perfectly happy about it." Mr. Petrillo was not available for comment.

Although Mr. Goosens and Mr. Busch have never before conducted the Philharmonic, both were guest conductors of the old New York Symphony Orchestra, which was merged with the New York Philharmonic in 1928. The centenary program will cover the hundredth anniversary of the founding of the Philharmonic Society on April 5, 1842, and of its first concert on Dec. 7, 1842. The centennial season will open on Thursday evening, Oct. 9, 1941, in Carnegie Hall.

Mr. Barbirolli, who is in his fifth season with the Philharmonic, will conduct the orchestra for eight weeks during the centennial season, two in October and six during February and March, 1942. He has been conductor of the Philharmonic since November, 1936. His contract has another year to run.

Mr. Stokowski will conduct the Philharmonic during the first fortnight of the centennial season.

Walter Will Return

Mr. Walter, who conducted the Philharmonic for four weeks during the last season, will return for the same period during the centennial season. He will conduct for two weeks in October and two in April, 1942.

Mr. Mitropoulos, who made his first appearance before members of the New York Philharmonic this season, has been engaged for a month during the centennial season.

Mr. Rodzinski likewise has been engaged for a month. The conductor has been associated with the Cleveland Orchestra for the last eight years.

Mr. Goosens and Mr. Busch have each been engaged for a fortnight. Mr. Goosens, a native of London, has been musical director of the Cincinnati Symphony for ten years.

Mr. Busch, like Mr. Walter, was ousted from his eminent musical position in his native Germany when the Nazis came to power. Since his departure from Germany he has been conductor of the Teatro Colon in Buenos Aires and the Mozart Festivals in Glyndebourne, England.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
POST
MAR 14 1941

8 GUEST CONDUCTORS FOR PHILHARMONIC CENTENNIAL

Eight guest conductors, including John Barbirolli, the regular conductor, will direct the concerts of the Philharmonic-Symphony next season as a feature of the one hundredth year of America's oldest symphony orchestra, it was announced today by Marshall Field, president of the board of directors.

The Philharmonic-Symphony centennial, commemorating the founding of the Philharmonic Society on April 5, 1842, and the first concert on December 7, 1842, will be celebrated during 1941-42 and the first half of the following season.

The season will be opened by Leopold Stokowski, who will conduct the first two weeks of concerts. Stokowski has appeared with the Philharmonic only once before, in 1930.

Serge Koussevitzky will lead the Philharmonic two weeks in January. It will be his first appearance with an orchestra other than the Boston Symphony since his arrival in America.

John Barbirolli, now in his fifth season as regular conductor, will conduct two weeks in

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
SUN

was founded [illegible] gave its first concert on December 7 of that year. It merged with the New York Symphony, founded in 1878 by Leopold Damrosch, in the spring of 1928.

The centennial season will open with a concert on Thursday night, October 9, 1941.

Stokowski to Open.

Mr. Stokowski, famous for his long association with the Philadelphia Orchestra and for his more recent experimental work in the motion pictures, will conduct the first fortnight of the season. He has appeared only once before with the Philharmonic-Symphony, in the autumn of 1930, when he and Arturo Toscanini interchanged posts for two weeks.

Serge Koussevitzky will conduct two weeks in January. This will mark the first occasion on which the distinguished leader of the Boston Symphony has conducted another American orchestra since coming to this country seventeen years ago. He has been made available for the Philharmonic-Symphony Centennial through the co-operation of the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

John Barbirolli, who is now in his fifth season with the Philharmonic-Symphony Society, will conduct the orchestra for eight weeks next year: two weeks in October and six during February and March.

Walter for Four Weeks.

Bruno Walter will return for four weeks, the same length of time he conducted this past season. The first half of his period will be in October, the second half in April. Mr. Walter while in New York will again divide his time between his symphonic duties with the Philharmonic-Symphony and his operatic work at the Metropolitan.

Dimitri Mitropoulos and Artur Rodzinski, each will conduct one month.

Eugene Goosens and Fritz Busch, each of whom will conduct for two weeks, complete the list of guest conductors.

The 100th season will open Thursday evening, October 9, 1941, in Carnegie Hall. Soloists will be announced later.

This Clipping From
LOWELL, MASS.
COURIER-CITIZEN
MAR 19 1941

As Guest Conductor.

There is word that Dr. Koussevitzky is to be guest conductor of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra for two weeks next January. By reason of the visits of the Boston Symphony to the metropolis its distinguished conductor is well known there and there will be interest to see the results he gets from another ensemble. Just so long as the New Yorkers do not try to woo him away from Boston we endorse the [illegible]

[illegible] the Philharmonic, but was guest conductor of the New York Symphony for six concerts in January, 1926, and a pair in February, 1928.

Busch Here for Fortnight.

Mr. Busch also was a guest conductor of the old New York Symphony in both 1927 and 1928. When Arturo Toscanini left the Philharmonic-Symphony, he suggested Mr. Busch as one of the conductors to follow him, but contracts in Europe at that time prevented him from considering an offer. From 1922 until the advent of Hitler, Fritz Busch was head of the Dresden State Opera. Leaving Germany voluntarily in 1933, he has been dividing his time since between opera and concert engagements in Buenos Aires, Glyndebourne, England, where he conducted the Mozart Festivals, and the Scandinavian countries. He is now in New York, but returns to the Teatro Colon, Buenos Aires, very shortly.

The usual subscription concerts are announced by the Philharmonic-Symphony Society for 1941-42, all at Carnegie Hall: two series of fourteen Thursday evening concerts, two series of fourteen Friday afternoon concerts; two series of seven popular Saturday evening concerts and two series of fourteen Sunday afternoon concerts.

There will again be two series of Young People's Concerts under Rudolph Ganz: six Saturday morning concerts at Carnegie Hall and three Monday afternoon concerts at the Town Hall.

Present subscribers have until

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
MAR 23 1941

THE PHILHARMONIC CENTENARY

By VIRGIL THOMSON

LETTERS have been arriving numerously of late protesting against the meager plans announced by the Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra for the celebration of its 100th anniversary next year. Why these protests should be sent to me rather than to the directors of the Philharmonic I do not know, unless perhaps it is thought that the directors of that body are impervious to suggestion and complaint, and my correspondents hope to seduce me into waging through the press a campaign doomed apparently to failure otherwise.

The centennial festivities, as announced in the press of Saturday, March 15, consist of relieving the monotony of Mr. Barbirolli's tenure, which runs for one more year, in very much the same way as has been done this year, by a parade of guest-conductors. These would be Stokowski, Walter, Mitropoulos, Rodzinski, Goossens, Fritz Busch and possibly Toscanini and Koussevitzky. The Old Man had not yet replied to the invitation; and Mr. Petrillo, president of the National Federation of Musicians, had not yet given formal consent for the Philharmonic musicians to play under the good Doctor, who is not a member of the union, though unofficial advices from union headquarters seemed to indicate that such consent would be granted without difficulty.

* * *

Why the Festivities Announced Seem Inadequate

THE chief complaints against the inadequacy of this program are two: it honors no conductor of American birth or training, and it commissions no new compositions, American or other.

I must say that if I had been making out the list I should have put in Alexander Smallens and Howard Barlow, both American-trained and both interesting conductors, and I should have preferred Pierre Monteux and Thomas Beecham among the available European-trained to either Goossens or Busch. Under no circumstances, however, should I have made out any such list at all. A string of guest-conductors, though obviously the first thing the Philharmonic management would think of, is the last thing the Philharmonic musicians need. These have been so thoroughly guest-conducted for twenty years now that they have become temperamental, erratic and difficult as only first-class musicians can become when subjected to every known variety of browbeating and wheedling. The best birthday present the Philharmonic could offer itself and us would be a good permanent full-time conductor, somebody worthy of the job and capable of assuming all its musical responsibilities. It's no use saying such conductors don't exist. I know three out of work and at least three more who could be stepped up most deservingly from provincial posts.

As for the commissioning of musical works, both Boston and Chicago seem to have picked pretty good musical values, plus doing themselves honor, in so celebrating their fiftieth anniversaries. I hadn't really expected anything like that of the Philharmonic, but I am disappointed, all the same, at its not having been done. I hadn't expected it, because I am a little cynical about that institution.

* * *

Why the Philharmonic Has for Thirty Years Petted Conductors and Snubbed Composers

AS I pointed out earlier in the season, it doesn't play a very important part in New York's intellectual life, nor has it since the days of Gustav Mahler. It was, to say the least, quiescent under Stransky from 1911 to 1922. From 1922 on, under Mengelberg and Toscanini, each of whom ranked as a regular conductor of the Philharmonic for about ten years, but who really worked here only part of the time each season, there were some brilliant performances of classic works. On the whole, however, the weight of these men's prestige was thrown quite strongly against living thought in music. Guest conductors performed certain new scores on tolerance; Boston, Philadelphia and Cleveland brought most of them for us to hear; local societies were organized for the exposition and dissemination of others. The Philharmonic office in the 1930's made no concealment of its position. The maestro did not "like" modern music; he was under no obligation to conduct any of it at the Philharmonic. Mr. Barbirolli has played more new music than Toscanini, but little of it has been significant or striking in any way. He has been the center of much controversy, virtually none of it concerned with the esthetics of musical composition.

Thus it has come about that the Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra, both personnel and management, though pretty much up to the minute on conducting, has worked for thirty years on the sidelines of creative music, that is, of music as she is really writ. The personnel is not entirely on the outside, because the boys do play other music other places; and they all get brought up to date a bit summers at the Stadium, where the repertory is livelier. Yes, and Arthur Judson has other managerial irons in the fire than the Philharmonic, quite a few. But still the fact is that the current Philharmonic tradition, the tradition in force ever since its merging with the National Symphony in 1921, is one of fine instrumentalism and fancy conducting, not of intimate collaboration with the creators of music. And that is why I permit myself a certain cynicism in reply when people write or ask me why new works are not being commissioned to fête the hundredth year. The old Philharmonic is a tricky bird. Give her a good master and she'll lay you golden eggs. But don't expect those golden eggs to hatch live goslings. Above all, don't expect an organization that has for thirty years either ignored the existence of the most vigorous movements in contemporary music or snubbed them ostentatiously to suddenly start giving money away for their encouragement.

* * *

I View With Alarm the Philharmonic's Apparent Lack of a Musical Policy

NOT that a sudden change is inconceivable, provided some more fundamental change were to take place in the organization's musical policy. But this year, at least, the Philharmonic has shown, indeed, very little sign of having a musical policy. Each concert has seemed more or less fortuitous. Mr. Barbirolli, who is supposed to be the conductor, has been replaced by guests for nearly one-third of the concerts. A great deal of contemporary music has been played, for a change, but selected it would seem, from a grabbag. Two world-famous violinists have both played the same concerto in the same season. I have found little logic in the program-making, whether the works played were ancient or modern. This applies equally to those of the conductor and to those of his guests.

It is classical to celebrate a feast by giving way for one day to one's besetting weakness. But ladies and gentlemen who direct the destinies of the Philharmonic, do you really think another whole year of it is without serious risk? Your conductor has already accepted for this season what amounts to the status of a guest. He has accepted for next year to be one among eight. That means that for two years the Philharmonic will have had no conductor, no unified command, hence no real discipline. For twenty years they haven't had much, I admit; but once a year Mengelberg or the Old Man turned up and told them what was what. Barbirolli was all right, too, I suppose, as long as he conducted or was allowed to conduct his own orchestra. But do you really think the temperamental Philharmonic, if left for a whole year without any conductor of its own at all, won't blow sky high one day when some equally temperamental guest says "boo" to it?

Musical composition has gone on for some years now with small blessings from the Philharmonic; and, though I could wish things were otherwise, it would be against nature to expect much more right now. But I do think, birthdays aside, that that venerable institution is tempting Providence to go on playing around with guest-conductors when what she really needs is a lord and master who will take some of the jumpiness out of her and put her to work on a five-year plan of some kind, building something in America's musical life that would be worthy of her history and of the city that loves her and supports her and complains about her.

* * *

I Could Imagine One

WHAT would such a plan be? Nothing less than the building of an audience for American music and the building of an American repertory for that audience. Nothing is easier. Half the countries in Europe have accomplished a similar thing deliberately. The technique of it is known. Nothing would be a worthier job for our Philharmonic; and, of course, it could be fantastically a success. Everybody is ready. Local audience, radio executives, national public, composers even. And the naming of an American conductor, which would be necessary, because Europeans have only the vaguest conception of what American music is all about, would not present the difficulty it does when we envisage, as we do now, that problem as one of naming an American to conduct a repertory 95 per cent European.

I'm afraid I'm dreaming about the present I should like to give the Philharmonic, one first-class, full-time American conductor complete with five-year plan and full authority to execute it. But I may as well return to my cynicism. I cannot offer such a present. And there is about as much chance of the Philharmonic offering it to itself as there is of Toscanini conducting Schoenberg's Fünf Orchesterstücke at an NBC broadcast.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
MAR 15 1941

Philharmonic's Plans Revealed For Centennial

Field Says 8 Conductors, IncludingBarbirolli, Will Aid Celebration Seasons

Marshall Field, president and chairman of the board of directors of the Philharmonic-Symphony Society of New York, announced yesterday plans for the commemorating of the society's centennial during the seasons of 1941-'42 and 1942-'43. As part of the celebration of the one-hundredth anniversary of the oldest symphony orchestra in the United States and the third oldest in the world, eight eminent conductors, including John Barbirolli, the society's present regular conductor, will preside over the Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra.

Besides Mr. Barbirolli, the conductors will be Leopold Stokowski, Serge Koussevitzky, Bruno Walter, Dimitri Mitropoulos, Artur Rodzinski, Eugene Goossens and Fritz Busch.

Arturo Toscanini, who conducted the Philharmonic during its tour of Europe in 1930, and retired as its conductor in 1936, was invited to participate in the centennial program. Mr. Toscanini declined the invitation, explaining that he was making no commitments for next season.

All but three of the centennial conductors have conducted the Philharmonic in the past. The commemoration of the orchestra's centenary will mark the first time Mr. Koussevitzky has conducted an American orchestra other than the Boston Symphony since he made his American debut in Boston in 1924. He will conduct for two weeks in January.

Koussevitzky Not in Union

Mr. Koussevitzky and the members of the Boston Symphony are not members of the American Federation of Musicians, the affiliate of the American Federation of Labor through which James Caesar Petrillo, president of the union, has imposed virtually absolute rule over all musicians who perform in the United States.

Mr. Field explained last night that the Philharmonic-Symphony Society had obtained a dispensation from Mr. Petrillo on Mr. Koussevitzky's behalf. "We arranged it with the union," Mr. Field said. "They seemed perfectly happy about it." Mr. Petrillo was not available for comment.

Although Mr. Goosens and Mr. Busch have never before conducted the Philharmonic, both were guest conductors of the old New York Symphony Orchestra, which was merged with the New York Philharmonic in 1928. The centenary program will cover the hundredth anniversary of the founding of the Philharmonic Society on April 5, 1842, and of its first concert on Dec. 7, 1842. The centennial season will open on Thursday evening, Oct. 9, 1941, in Carnegie Hall.

Mr. Barbirolli, who is in his fifth season with the Philharmonic, will conduct the orchestra for eight weeks during the centennial season, two in October and six during February and March, 1942. He has been conductor of the Philharmonic since November, 1936. His contract has another year to run.

Mr. Stokowski will conduct the Philharmonic during the first fortnight of the centennial season.

Walter Will Return

Mr. Walter, who conducted the Philharmonic for four weeks during the last season, will return for the same period during the centennial season. He will conduct for two weeks in October and two in April, 1942.

Mr. Mitropoulos, who made his first appearance before members of the New York Philharmonic this season, has been engaged for a month during the centennial season.

Mr. Rodzinski likewise has been engaged for a month. The conductor has been associated with the Cleveland Orchestra for the last eight years.

Mr. Goosens and Mr. Busch have each been engaged for a fortnight. Mr. Goosens, a native of London, has been musical director of the Cincinnati Symphony for ten years.

Mr. Busch, like Mr. Walter, was ousted from his eminent musical position in his native Germany when the Nazis came to power. Since his departure from Germany he has been conductor of the Teatro Colon in Buenos Aires and the Mozart Festivals in Glyndebourne, England.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
POST
MAR 14 1941

8 GUEST CONDUCTORS FOR PHILHARMONIC CENTENNIAL

Eight guest conductors, including John Barbirolli, the regular conductor, will direct the concerts of the Philharmonic-Symphony next season as a feature of the one hundredth year of America's oldest symphony orchestra, it was announced today by Marshall Field, president of the board of directors.

The Philharmonic-Symphony centennial, commemorating the founding of the Philharmonic Society on April 5, 1842, and the first concert on December 7, 1842, will be celebrated during 1941-42 and the first half of the following season.

The season will be opened by Leopold Stokowski, who will conduct the first two weeks of concerts. Stokowski has appeared with the Philharmonic only once before, in 1930.

Serge Koussevitzky will lead the Philharmonic two weeks in January. It will be his first appearance with an orchestra other than the Boston Symphony since his arrival in America.

John Barbirolli, now in his fifth season as regular conductor, will conduct two weeks in October and six in February and March.

Bruno Walter, who was guest conductor for four weeks this year, will conduct the same length of time next season, two weeks in October and two in April.

Dimitri Mitropoulos, conductor of the Minneapolis Symphony, and Artur Rodzinski, Cleveland Orchestra head, each will conduct one month.

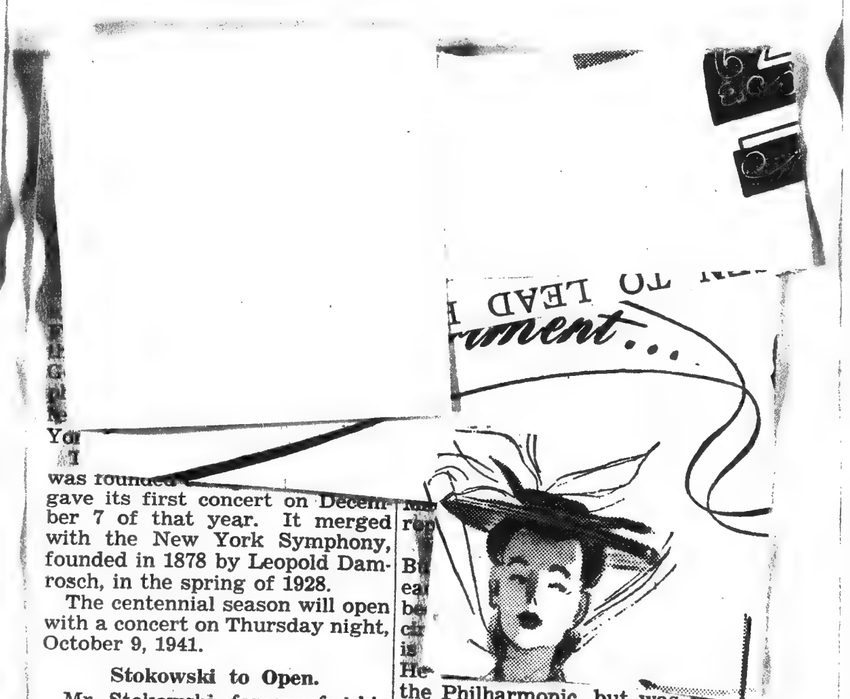
Eugene Goosens and Fritz Busch, each of whom will conduct for two weeks, complete the list of guest conductors.

The 100th season will open Thursday evening, October 9, 1941, in Carnegie Hall. Soloists will be announced later.

This Clipping From
LOWELL, MASS.
COURIER-CITIZEN
MAR 19 1941

As Guest Conductor.

There is word that Dr. Koussevitzky is to be guest conductor of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra for two weeks next January. By reason of the visits of the Boston Symphony to the metropolis its distinguished conductor is well known there and there will be interest to see the results he gets from another ensemble. Just so long as the New Yorkers do not try to woo him away from Boston we endorse the visit and the tribute to him which is implied.



was founded [illegible] gave its first concert on December 7 of that year. It merged with the New York Symphony, founded in 1878 by Leopold Damrosch, in the spring of 1928.

The centennial season will open with a concert on Thursday night, October 9, 1941.

Stokowski to Open.

Mr. Stokowski, famous for his long association with the Philadelphia Orchestra and for his more recent experimental work in the motion pictures, will conduct the first fortnight of the season. He has appeared only once before with the Philharmonic-Symphony, in the autumn of 1930, when he and Arturo Toscanini interchanged posts for two weeks.

Serge Koussevitzky will conduct two weeks in January. This will mark the first occasion on which the distinguished leader of the Boston Symphony has conducted another American orchestra since coming to this country seventeen years ago. He has been made available for the Philharmonic-Symphony Centennial through the co-operation of the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

John Barbirolli, who is now in his fifth season with the Philharmonic-Symphony Society, will conduct the orchestra for eight weeks next year: two weeks in October and six during February and March.

Walter for Four Weeks.

Bruno Walter will return for four weeks, the same length of time he conducted this past season. The first half of his period will be in October, the second half in April. Mr. Walter while in New York will again divide his time between his symphonic duties with the Philharmonic-Symphony and his operatic work at the Metropolitan.

Dimitri Mitropoulos and Artur [illegible] the Philharmonic, but was guest conductor of the New York Symphony for six concerts in January, 1926, and a pair in February, 1928.

Busch Here for Fortnight.

Mr. Busch also was a guest conductor of the old New York Symphony in both 1927 and 1928. When Arturo Toscanini left the Philharmonic-Symphony, he suggested Mr. Busch as one of the conductors to follow him, but contracts in Europe at that time prevented him from considering an offer. From 1922 until the advent of Hitler, Fritz Busch was head of the Dresden State Opera. Leaving Germany voluntarily in 1933, he has been dividing his time since between opera and concert engagements in Buenos Aires, Glyndebourne, England, where he conducted the Mozart Festivals, and the Scandinavian countries. He is now in New York, but returns to the Teatro Colon, Buenos Aires, very shortly.

The usual subscription concerts are announced by the Philharmonic-Symphony Society for 1941-42, all at Carnegie Hall: two series of fourteen Thursday evening concerts, two series of fourteen Friday afternoon concerts; two series of seven popular Saturday evening concerts and two series of fourteen Sunday afternoon concerts.

There will again be two series of Young People's Concerts under Rudolph Ganz: six Saturday morning concerts at Carnegie Hall and three Monday afternoon concerts at the Town Hall.

Present subscribers have until

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
MAR 23 1941

THE PHILHARMONIC CENTENARY

By VIRGIL THOMSON

LETTERS have been arriving numerously of late protesting against the meager plans announced by the Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra for the celebration of its 100th anniversary next year. Why these protests should be sent to me rather than to the directors of the Philharmonic I do not know, unless perhaps it is thought that the directors of that body are impervious to suggestion and complaint, and my correspondents hope to seduce me into waging through the press a campaign doomed apparently to failure otherwise.

The centennial festivities, as announced in the press of Saturday, March 15, consist of relieving the monotony of Mr. Barbirolli's tenure, which runs for one more year, in very much the same way as has been done this year, by a parade of guest-conductors. These would be Stokowski, Walter, Mitropoulos, Rodzinski, Goossens, Fritz Busch and possibly Toscanini and Koussevitzky. The Old Man had not yet replied to the invitation; and Mr. Petrillo, president of the National Federation of Musicians, had not yet given formal consent for the Philharmonic musicians to play under the good Doctor, who is not a member of the union, though unofficial advices from union headquarters seemed to indicate that such consent would be granted without difficulty.

* * *

Why the Festivities Announced Seem Inadequate

THE chief complaints against the inadequacy of this program are two: it honors no conductor of American birth or training, and it commissions no new compositions, American or other.

I must say that if I had been making out the list I should have put in Alexander Smallens and Howard Barlow, both American-trained and both interesting conductors, and I should have preferred Pierre Monteux and Thomas Beecham among the available European-trained to either Goossens or Busch. Under no circumstances, however, should I have made out any such list at all. A string of guest-conductors, though obviously the first thing the Philharmonic management would think of, is the last thing the Philharmonic musicians need. These have been so thoroughly guest-conducted for twenty years now that they have become temperamental, erratic and difficult as only first-class musicians can become when subjected to every known variety of browbeating and wheedling. The best birthday present the Philharmonic could offer itself and us would be a good permanent full-time conductor, somebody worthy of the job and capable of assuming all its musical responsibilities. It's no use saying such conductors don't exist. I know three out of work and at least three more who could be stepped up most deservingly from provincial posts.

As for the commissioning of musical works, both Boston and Chicago seem to have picked pretty good musical values, plus doing themselves honor, in so celebrating their fiftieth anniversaries. I hadn't really expected anything like that of the Philharmonic, but I am disappointed, all the same, at its not having been done. I hadn't expected it, because I am a little cynical about that institution.

* * *

Why the Philharmonic Has for Thirty Years Petted Conductors and Snubbed Composers

AS I pointed out earlier in the season, it doesn't play a very important part in New York's intellectual life, nor has it since the days of Gustav Mahler. It was, to say the least, quiescent under Stransky from 1911 to 1922. From 1922 on, under Mengelberg and Toscanini, each of whom ranked as a regular conductor of the Philharmonic for about ten years, but who really worked here only part of the time each season, there were some brilliant performances of classic works. On the whole, however, the weight of these men's prestige was thrown quite strongly against living thought in music. Guest conductors performed certain new scores on tolerance; Boston, Philadelphia and Cleveland brought most of them for us to hear; local societies were organized for the exposition and dissemination of others. The Philharmonic office in the 1930's made no concealment of its position. The maestro did not "like" modern music; he was under no obligation to conduct any of it at the Philharmonic. Mr. Barbirolli has played more new music than Toscanini, but little of it has been significant or striking in any way. He has been the center of much controversy, virtually none of it concerned with the esthetics of musical composition.

Thus it has come about that the Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra, both personnel and management, though pretty much up to the minute on conducting, has worked for thirty years on the sidelines of creative music, that is, of music as she is really writ. The personnel is not entirely on the outside, because the boys do play other music other places; and they all get brought up to date a bit summers at the Stadium, where the repertory is livelier. Yes, and Arthur Judson has other managerial irons in the fire than the Philharmonic, quite a few. But still the fact is that the current Philharmonic tradition, the tradition in force ever since its merging with the National Symphony in 1921, is one of fine instrumentalism and fancy conducting, not of intimate collaboration with the creators of music. And that is why I permit myself a certain cynicism in reply when people write or ask me why new works are not being commissioned to fête the hundredth year. The old Philharmonic is a tricky bird. Give her a good master and she'll lay you golden eggs. But don't expect those golden eggs to hatch live goslings. Above all, don't expect an organization that has for thirty years either ignored the existence of the most vigorous movements in contemporary music or snubbed them ostentatiously to suddenly start giving money away for their encouragement.

* * *

I View With Alarm the Philharmonic's Apparent Lack of a Musical Policy

NOT that a sudden change is inconceivable, provided some more fundamental change were to take place in the organization's musical policy. But this year, at least, the Philharmonic has shown, indeed, very little sign of having a musical policy. Each concert has seemed more or less fortuitous. Mr. Barbirolli, who is supposed to be the conductor, has been replaced by guests for nearly one-third of the concerts. A great deal of contemporary music has been played, for a change, but selected it would seem, from a grabbag. Two world-famous violinists have both played the same concerto in the same season. I have found little logic in the program-making, whether the works played were ancient or modern. This applies equally to those of the conductor and to those of his guests.

It is classical to celebrate a feast by giving way for one day to one's besetting weakness. But ladies and gentlemen who direct the destinies of the Philharmonic, do you really think another whole year of it is without serious risk? Your conductor has already accepted for this season what amounts to the status of a guest. He has accepted for next year to be one among eight. That means that for two years the Philharmonic will have had no conductor, no unified command, hence no real discipline. For twenty years they haven't had much, I admit; but once a year Mengelberg or the Old Man turned up and told them what was what. Barbirolli was all right, too, I suppose, as long as he conducted or was allowed to conduct his own orchestra. But do you really think the temperamental Philharmonic, if left for a whole year without any conductor of its own at all, won't blow sky high one day when some equally temperamental guest says "boo" to it?

Musical composition has gone on for some years now with small blessings from the Philharmonic; and, though I could wish things were otherwise, it would be against nature to expect much more right now. But I do think, birthdays aside, that that venerable institution is tempting Providence to go on playing around with guest-conductors when what she really needs is a lord and master who will take some of the jumpiness out of her and put her to work on a five-year plan of some kind, building something in America's musical life that would be worthy of her history and of the city that loves her and supports her and complains about her.

* * *

I Could Imagine One

WHAT would such a plan be? Nothing less than the building of an audience for American music and the building of an American repertory for that audience. Nothing is easier. Half the countries in Europe have accomplished a similar thing deliberately. The technique of it is known. Nothing would be a worthier job for our Philharmonic; and, of course, it could be fantastically a success. Everybody is ready. Local audience, radio executives, national public, composers even. And the naming of an American conductor, which would be necessary, because Europeans have only the vaguest conception of what American music is all about, would not present the difficulty it does when we envisage, as we do now, that problem as one of naming an American to conduct a repertory 95 per cent European.

I'm afraid I'm dreaming about the present I should like to give the Philharmonic, one first-class, full-time American conductor complete with five-year plan and full authority to execute it. But I may as well return to my cynicism. I cannot offer such a present. And there is about as much chance of the Philharmonic offering it to itself as there is of Toscanini conducting Schoenberg's Fünf Orchesterstücke at an NBC broadcast.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
MAR 14 1941

104

Boston Symphony Heard Last Night at Carnegie

Mahler Symphony, 3 Russian Works Are Included in the Program

By LOUIS BIANCOLLI.

Combining Gustav Mahler's Ninth Symphony and three Russian pieces, Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony covered themselves with tonal glory in Carnegie Hall last night. Which is an old story, after all.

The Mahler symphony needed magic to make it live, and Mr. Koussevitzky emptied his vials of alchemy. But somehow it held out. Strings sang lusciously and brasses blared from the heights. The symphony tugged and lurched, breathed out flame, and gasped a long last sigh. It never really came to life, depsite the glint and dazzle of superb virtuosity. Artificial respiration couldn't do it. Maybe it takes a kind of piety to turn the trick.

One treasures certain episodes, notably the main section of the rollicking Rondo, in a sprightly burlesque vein marred by excessive loitering on the fringes. And the Adagio, largely for strings, masses expressively in a vast surge, but tapers off to banality. Mr. Koussevitzky almost converted one though through polished speech. But not quite.

The Russian half was a picnic all around. Moussorgsky's Khovantschina Prelude uttered its fetching tune in rich orchestral choirings colored by broad churchly chimes. Here was a rounded entity, self-sufficient, brief, unlike Mahler's long-winded roamings. Mr. Koussevitzky gave it vibrant exotic speech. There was more sheer space in Moussorgsky's few bold strokes than in one hour of Mahler. So it seemd last night, anyway.

Liadorff's "Baba-Yaga" tone picture—mirroring the quaint traits of a child-eating sorceress—came off like a creepy ghost story in Mr. Koussevitzky's weird cabinet of spells. Then Rimsky-Korsakoff's Capriccio Espagnol went to a little Spanish town and painted it red.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
MAR 14 1941

MUSIC

By VIRGIL THOMSON

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, fourth evening concert of its New York series last night in Carnegie Hall, with the following program:

Symphony No. 9.....Mahler
Prelude to "Khovanstchina".Moussorgsky
Baba-Yaga .....Liadoff
Capriccio Espagnol .....Rimsky-Korsakoff

Mahler and Boston at Their Best

GUSTAV MAHLER is to Richard Strauss as Bach to Handel or Debussy to Ravel. All such pairs of contemporaries have a common background of style and material that gives to their extremely divergent temperaments the ability to define and to enclose an epoch as the heads and tails of a coin define and enclose between them the content of it.

* * *

Mahler's music is the more introspective. It is meditative, viscero-emotional, all about himself. Strauss's is declamatory, objective, descriptive of everything in the world but himself. Mahler's has the power of attracting fanatical devotion to itself and to the personality of its author. Strauss's gives a ripsnorting good time to all without provoking the slightest curiosity anywhere about its author's private life. Mahler wrote as if the material of Viennese music itself were so bound up with his own soul that only by integrating the two in a practically marital union could a work be created that would be a valid expression of either. Strauss wrote his pieces very much as a theatrical producer cooks up a show.

And yet the musical material and technique of the two are almost identical. Their themes might have been written by either, so characteristically do they consist of descending appogiaturas and upward skips of the sixth. The two have an equal freedom of modulation and the same habit of playing their chromatics wild, not limiting the use of these to modulatory or to melodic purposes but throwing them in anywhere they feel like it for any reason whatsoever.

Both orchestrates, of course, with a sure hand and with wide resources of imagination and fancy. Mahler's orchestra, however, is the more elegant of the two by far, as is likewise his harmonic and contrapuntal fabric. His concentration on personal sincerity gave him an integrated manner of expressing himself, at his best, that is stylistically more noble than anything Strauss, with all his barnstorming brilliance, ever achieved. The Strauss heavy doublings and unashamed usage of mere orchestral hubbub belong to a less refined and a less responsible order of musical expression. Mahler keeps his colors clean, and he never writes a middle part that hasn't in itself some intensity of expression and some musical grace.

* * *

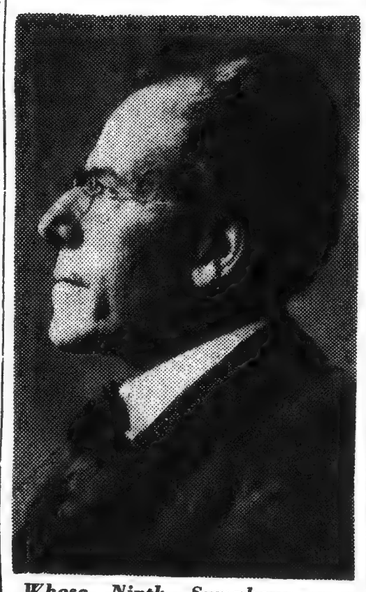
The Ninth Symphony is considered by most Mahler devotees to be the finest of his works, though "Das Lied von der Erde" has worshippers, and so have the "Kindertotenlieder."

It is indeed beautifully made, as well as beautifully thought. It is utterly German and Viennese and strangely not so at the same time. In reviewing "Das Lied von der Erde" some time back, I opined that there were some French influences in the particular contrapuntal approach Mahler employed. Naturally, I pulled down on my head a flood of abusive correspondence from the Mahlerites, who will have no analyzing of their idol and certainly no aspersions cast upon his 100 per cent Germanism. I suppose they don't count his Israelite birth or his professional travels (he conducted here at the Metropolitan Opera House and at the Philharmonic for something like three years) as factual evidence of a certain internationalism in his culture. Nevertheless, as I listened to the Ninth Symphony last night, I was still aware of French influences. Certain of these are technical, like the no-doubling orchestration. Others are esthetic. I know the protest mail I shall get for saying this, but I must. Mahler has a great deal in common with the French impressionists. As an Italian musician to whom I mentioned the matter put it, "He comes as near being an impressionist as a German could."

* * *

Mr. Koussevitzsky's reading of the work was highly satisfactory to this listener, who had only recently listened to Bruno Walter's recorded rendition of it with the Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra. Walter was slow and sentimental, and his unsteady tempi made a muddle out of Mahler's refined exactitude of notation. Koussevitzsky let the piece move and kept the rhythms in place. In addition, the orchestral playing was of the beauteous kind that only Boston gives us regularly any more. Fluffy Russian savories done to a turn lightened and ended the evening's musical repast.

Gustav Mahler



Whose Ninth Symphony was played last night by the Boston Symphony Orchestra

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
SUN
MAR 14 1941

BOSTONIANS PLAY MAHLER'S 'NINTH'

Seldom-heard Symphony Is Given by Koussevitzky.

By OSCAR THOMPSON.

Not death, but frustration stalks through the pages of Mahler's Ninth Symphony, which was performed in Carnegie Hall last night for the first time since January 9, 1932. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony, the conductor and the orchestra that introduced the work to this country some twenty years after the composer was laid in his grave, were again the intermediaries for such revels of self-pity as only Mahler has found possible in music.

This last completed symphony of the man of Kalischt remains more than a little macabre, but there is quite as much that is querulous and weakly protesting. There are moments of resignation and awe in the contemplation of eternity. But there is more that is defeatism in excelsis and the apotheosis of negation. Though Mahler objected always to the notion that there were hidden programs for his symphonies, this one is so assertively concerned with himself that no listener who knows anything of Mahler's life and personality can be expected to consider it in the light of absolute or abstract music.

There are few more formless symphonies than the Mahler Ninth. This is not altogether to its disadvantage. The improvisatory spirit of the work accords with its gloomy meditations and its outbursts of bitter mockery. It has furibund climaxes that are not to be listened to unmoved. But there is much that is tenuous and commonplace; and, so far as the basic substance is concerned, trivial. The episodes which serve as reminders of the final section of the symphony's immediate predecessor, "Das Lied von der Erde" are less poignant echoes of that haunting "Abschied," though some profess to find a similar "vision" in the long-drawn, quiet and almost static close of the adagio which has an equivalent place in the Ninth.

Mr. Koussevitzky's performance was one of the most fervid devotion. The playing was superb and the reception of such warmth that the conductor summoned his players to their feet. After the intermission came other opportunities for virtuosity on the part of an ensemble that seems to possess it in endless reserve. But the colors of Mussorgsky's "Khovanstchina" prelude, Liadov's "Baba-Yaga" tone picture and Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Capriccio Espagnol" were not those of industriously cultivated self-pity.

was performed with plastic and polished artistry by the members of the orchestra.

In the Russian group were the picturesque prelude to the first act of Moussorgsky's opera "Khovantchina"; a delightful example of Slavic folk music incorporated into Liadov's tone-picture "Baba-Yaga," and Rimsky-Korsakoff's thrice familiar "Spanish Capriccio."

* * *

Swing music, with all its concomitants of brasses and drums and muted instruments was the fare offered by Otto Cesana and his band at Town Hall last night.

It is said that Mr. Cesana was three years in preparing the program that consisted of an overture composed in the typical "swing" manner; four rhythmic dances; a like number of songs, introducing Howard Phillips as the vocalist; concerto for orchestra with Jack Schwartzer playing the solo piano part; a group of instrumental pieces ending with "Swinging the Fugue"; a symphony modelled on the same lines, and several similar smaller works.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN
MAR 14 1941

At Carnegie Hall last evening the Boston Symphony, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, performed a program of German and Russian music before a capacity audience.

The concert began with Mahler's Ninth Symphony, a work ably analyzed as one in which "emerges an unprecedented, fantastic expression of power, without rule, improvisatory, yet bearing the marks of an inner law of its own."

Its changeful moods, favoring the somber and serious, the music of fine form and high purpose, and

This Clipping From DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS
MAR 13 1941

Music in New York:

Boston Symphony In Carnegie Hall

Special to The News.

NEW YORK, March 12.—Serge Koussevitzky will bring the Boston Symphony Orchestra to Carnegie Hall for a guest appearance Thursday night. Featured on the program will be the Mahler Symphony No. 9. Other selections will include works by Mussorgsky, Liadov and Rimsky-Korsakov.

Mozart's Don Giovanni, with Zinka Milanov and Ezio Pinza in the leading roles, will be heard at the Metropolitan Opera House Thursday night. In the supporting roles and con-

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
POST
MAR 14 1941

Mahler Work Played By Boston Symphony

Serge Koussevitzky last evening conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra in its fourth evening concert in Carnegie Hall.

The concert opened with a rather leaden-footed performance of the Mahler Ninth Symphony. The famed Boston orchestra creaked and groaned through the score, minus its customary sparkle.

More in character (and to the audience's liking) were the three Russian works which followed the intermission. They were Moussorgsky's prelude to the opera "Khovanstchina," "Baba-Yaga" Liadov, and Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Capriccio Espagnol."

This Clipping From
BROOKLYN, N.Y.
EAGLE
MAR 13 1941

DOWNTOWN

Boston Symphony Group To Give 4th Boro Concert

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, will give the fourth concert of its current Brooklyn season tomorrow evening in the Brooklyn Academy of Music.

The program will open with the Overture to "The Magic Flute," by Mozart, and the rest of the evening will be given over to two great symphonies: Beethoven's Sixth in F major and Sibelius' Fifth in E flat major.

The concert is presented under the joint auspices of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences, the Brooklyn Philharmonic Society, and a Brooklyn committee. Standing room only is available.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
MAR 14 1941

MAHLER WORK LED BY KOUSSEVITZKY

Composer's Ninth Symphony Feature of the Concert Given by Boston Orchestra

'BABA YAZA' ALSO HEARD

Mussorgsky's Prelude and Rimsky-Korsakoff Number on Carnegie Hall Program

By OLIN DOWNES

The unforgettable feature of the concert given last night by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conductor, in Carnegie Hall, was the performance of Mahler's Ninth Symphony. In a sense this performance was more than the symphony. The symphony would not have been so articulate were it not for a reading which intensified everything that was beautiful and significant in the score, while it modified, almost disproportionately, what was banal or redundant. At the same time Dr. Koussevitzky made the most of Mahler's rhetoric.

For Dr. Koussevitzky's interpretation followed not only every detail of the score but everything that was behind the sounds indicated on the paper. This was accomplished with a sovereign eloquence and with the unsurpassed technical and coloristic resources of the great orchestra. The form of the symphony is free, and the symphony is much too long for its material and for the real substance of its structure. But the narrative never flagged in the telling. At the end of the good hour required for the work the audience was listening intently.

Form of Symphony Is Free

What then of the symphony? It has Mahler's self-evident and incontestable faults and more than its share of his greatnesses. The form is free and, as usual, laid out on a vast scale. One could say that this form is the form of the composer's thought-stream rather than that of a classic model. Psychologically speaking, the hand of mortality is on the music. The strong movements are the first and the last. The first part is melancholy and there are pages of frantic despair. A chorale theme is the burden of the final movement, and the prayer was intoned most poignantly. Its developments were unfolded with exaltation. The end is one of a mystical peace, after the tortured music of a man of genius who never found it. The rapt music vanishes into space. The audience was a moment in emerging from its spell.

Music Seen Repetitious

So much for Mahler's virtues. Unfortunately, they are badly tinctured with self-pity, egomania and inexcusable repetitiousness. The man talks about himself, very dramatically and forever. The lilting has not the impulsive abandon of a Tchaikovsky, for it is music of an excessive self-consciousness.

Some of us find music objectionable when it is accompanied by a "story." This music is worse than that, since its unmistakable personalities can be given but one explanation by the most unimaginative. And they say that Tchaikovsky wears his heart on his sleeve! The fact that Mahler is sincere, and often noble in his speech does not sufficiently mitigate his bombast and his bursts of banality. The more were we grateful to Dr. Koussevitzky for his understanding of the composer's essentially lofty purpose and his illumination of the highest aspects of Mahler's spirit.

The remainder of the concert was in lighter vein, contributed greatly to the pleasure of the audience which packed the hall—two short pieces which had the effect of turning over the pages of a picture book of old tales and scenes of Russian life—Mussorgsky's Prelue to "Khovantchina," a simple and wonderful piece; Liadoff's "Baba Yaga," and the scintillating "Capriccio Espagnol" of Rimsky-Korsakoff, played with abounding virtuosity.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
MAR 14 1941

104

Boston Symphony Heard Last Night at Carnegie

Mahler Symphony, 3 Russian Works Are Included in the Program

By LOUIS BIANCOLLI.

Combining Gustav Mahler's Ninth Symphony and three Russian pieces, Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony covered themselves with tonal glory in Carnegie Hall last night. Which is an old story, after all.

The Mahler symphony needed magic to make it live, and Mr. Koussevitzky emptied his vials of alchemy. But somehow it held out. Strings sang lusciously and brasses blared from the heights. The symphony tugged and lurched, breathed out flame, and gasped a long last sigh. It never really came to life, depsite the glint and dazzle of superb virtuosity. Artificial respiration couldn't do it. Maybe it takes a kind of piety to turn the trick.

One treasures certain episodes, notably the main section of the rollicking Rondo, in a sprightly burlesque vein marred by excessive loitering on the fringes. And the Adagio, largely for strings, masses expressively in a vast surge, but tapers off to banality. Mr. Koussevitzky almost converted one though through polished speech. But not quite.

The Russian half was a picnic all around. Moussorgsky's Khovantschina Prelude uttered its fetching tune in rich orchestral choirings colored by broad churchly chimes. Here was a rounded entity, self-sufficient, brief, unlke Mahler's long-winded roamings. Mr. Koussevitzky gave it vibrant exotic speech. There was more sheer space in Moussorgsky's few bold strokes than in one hour of Mahler. So it seemd last night, anyway.

Liadorff's "Baba-Yaga" tone picture—mirroring the quaint traits of a child-eating sorceress—came off like a creepy ghost story in Mr. Koussevitzky's weird cabinet of spells. Then Rimsky-Korsakoff's Capricció Espagnol went to a little Spanish town and painted it red.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
MAR 14 1941

MUSIC

By VIRGIL THOMSON

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, fourth evening concert of its New York series last night in Carnegie Hall, with the following program:

Symphony No. 9.....Mahler
Prelude to "Khovanstchina".Moussorgsky
Baba-Yaga .....Liadoff
Capriccio Espagnol .....Rimsky-Korsakoff

Mahler and Boston at Their Best

GUSTAV MAHLER is to Richard Strauss as Bach to Handel or Debussy to Ravel. All such pairs of contemporaries have a common background of style and material that gives to their extremely divergent temperaments the ability to define and to enclose an epoch as the heads and tails of a coin define and enclose between them the content of it.

* * *

Mahler's music is the more introspective. It is meditative, viscero-emotional, all about himself. Strauss's is declamatory, objective, descriptive of everything in the world but himself. Mahler's has the power of attracting fanatical devotion to itself and to the personality of its author. Strauss's gives a ripsnorting good time to all without provoking the slightest curiosity anywhere about its author's private life. Mahler wrote as if the material of Viennese music itself were so bound up with his own soul that only by integrating the two in a practically marital union could a work be created that would be a valid expression of either. Strauss wrote his pieces very much as a theatrical producer cooks up a show.

And yet the musical material and technique of the two are almost identical. Their themes might have been written by either, so characteristically do they consist of descending appogiaturas and upward skips of the sixth. The two have an equal freedom of modulation and the same habit of playing their chromatics wild, not limiting the use of these to modulatory or to melodic purposes but throwing them in anywhere they feel like it for any reason whatsoever.

Both orchestrates, of course, with a sure hand and with wide resources of imagination and fancy. Mahler's orchestra, however, is the more elegant of the two by far, as is likewise his harmonic and contrapuntal fabric. His concentration on personal sincerity gave him an integrated manner of expressing himself, at his best, that is stylistically more noble than anything Strauss, with all his barnstorming brilliance, ever achieved. The Strauss heavy doublings and unashamed usage of mere orchestral hubbub belong to a less refined and a less responsible order of musical expression. Mahler keeps his colors clean, and he never writes a middle part that hasn't in itself some intensity of expression and some musical grace.

* * *

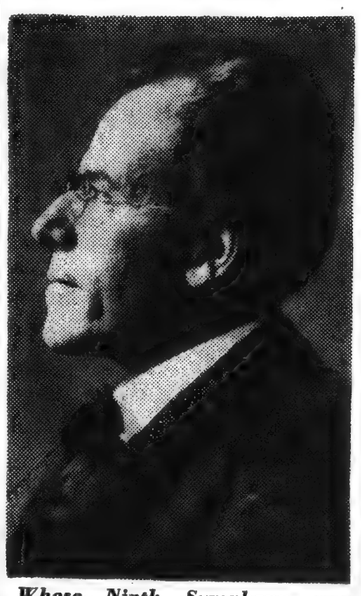
The Ninth Symphony is considered by most Mahler devotees to be the finest of his works, though "Das Lied von der Erde" has worshipers, and so have the "Kindertotenlieder."

It is indeed beautifully made, as well as beautifully thought. It is utterly German and Viennese and strangely not so at the same time. In reviewing "Das Lied von der Erde" some time back, I opined that there were some French influences in the particular contrapuntal approach Mahler employed. Naturally, I pulled down on my head a flood of abusive correspondence from the Mahlerites, who will have no analyzing of their idol and certainly no aspersions cast upon his 100 per cent Germanism. I suppose they don't count his Israelite birth or his professional travels (he conducted here at the Metropolitan Opera House and at the Philharmonic for something like three years) as factual evidence of a certain internationalism in his culture. Nevertheless, as I listened to the Ninth Symphony last night, I was still aware of French influences. Certain of these are technical, like the no-doubling orchestration. Others are esthetic. I know the protest mail I shall get for saying this, but I must. Mahler has a great deal in common with the French impressionists. As an Italian musician to whom I mentioned the matter put it, "He comes as near being an impressionist as a German could."

* * *

Mr. Koussevitzsky's reading of the work was highly satisfactory to this listener, who had only recently listened to Bruno Walter's recorded rendition of it with the Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra. Walter was slow and sentimental, and his unsteady tempi made a muddle out of Mahler's refined exactitude of notation. Koussevitzsky let the piece move and kept the rhythms in place. In addition, the orchestral playing was of the beauteous kind that only Boston gives us regularly, any more. Fluffy Russian savories done to a turn lightened and ended the evening's musical repast.

Gustav Mahler



Whose Ninth Symphony was played last night by the Boston Symphony Orchestra

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
SUN
MAR 14 1941

BOSTONIANS PLAY MAHLER'S 'NINTH'

Seldom-heard Symphony Is Given by Koussevitzky.

By OSCAR THOMPSON.

Not death, but frustration stalks through the pages of Mahler's Ninth Symphony, which was performed in Carnegie Hall last night for the first time since January 9, 1932. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony, the conductor and the orchestra that introduced the work to this country some twenty years after the composer was laid in his grave, were again the intermediaries for such revels of self-pity as only Mahler has found possible in music.

This last completed symphony of the man of Kalischt remains more than a little macabre, but there is quite as much that is querulous and weakly protesting. There are moments of resignation and awe in the contemplation of eternity. But there is more that is defeatism in excelsis and the apotheosis of negation. Though Mahler objected always to the notion that there were hidden programs for his symphonies, this one is so assertively concerned with himself that no listener who knows anything of Mahler's life and personality can be expected to consider it in the light of absolute or abstract music.

There are few more formless symphonies than the Mahler Ninth. This is not altogether to its disadvantage. The improvisatory spirit of the work accords with its gloomy meditations and its outbursts of bitter mockery. It has furibund climaxes that are not to be listened to unmoved. But there is much that is tenuous and commonplace; and, so far as the basic substance is concerned, trivial. The episodes which serve as reminders of the final section of the symphony's immediate predecessor, "Das Lied von der Erde" are less poignant echoes of that haunting "Abschied," though some profess to find a similar "vision" in the long-drawn, quiet and almost static close of the adagio which has an equivalent place in the Ninth.

Mr. Koussevitzky's performance was one of the most fervid devotion. The playing was superb and the reception of such warmth that the conductor summoned his players to their feet. After the intermission came other opportunities for virtuosity on the part of an ensemble that seems to possess it in endless reserve. But the colors of Mussorgsky's "Khovanstchina" prelude, Liadov's "Baba-Yaga" tone picture and Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Capriccio Espagnol" were not those of industriously cultivated self-pity.

was performed with plastic and polished artistry by the members of the orchestra.

In the Russian group were the picturesque prelude to the first act of Moussorgsky's opera "Khovantchina"; a delightful example of Slavic folk music incorporated into Liadov's tone-picture "Baba-Yaga," and Rimsky-Korsakoff's thrice familiar "Spanish Capriccio."

* * *

Swing music, with all its concomitants of brasses and drums and muted instruments was the fare offered by Otto Cesana and his band at Town Hall last night.

It is said that Mr. Cesana was three years in preparing the program that consisted of an overture composed in the typical "swing" manner; four rhythmic dances; a like number of songs, introducing Howard Phillips as the vocalist; concerto for orchestra with Jack Schwartzer playing the solo piano part; a group of instrumental pieces ending with "Swinging the Fugue"; a symphony modelled on the same lines, and several similar smaller works.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN
MAR 14 1941

At Carnegie Hall last evening the Boston Symphony, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, performed a program of German and Russian music before a capacity audience.

The concert began with Mahler's Ninth Symphony, a work ably analyzed as one in which "emerges an unprecedented, fantastic expression of power, without rule, improvisatory, yet bearing the marks of an inner law of its own."

Its changeful moods, favoring the somber and serious, the music of fine form and high purpose,

This Clipping From DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS
MAR 13 1941

Music in New York:

Boston Symphony In Carnegie Hall

Special to The News.

NEW YORK, March 12.—Serge Koussevitzky will bring the Boston Symphony Orchestra to Carnegie Hall for a guest appearance Thursday night. Featured on the program will be the Mahler Symphony No. 9. Other selections will include works by Mussorgsky, Liadov and Rimsky-Korsakov.

Mozart's Don Giovanni, with Zinka Milanov and Ezio Pinza in the leading roles, will be heard at the Metropolitan Opera House Thursday night. In the supporting roles will be Novotna, Savao, Schipa and Baccaloni. Bruno Walter will conduct.

ning conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra in its fourth evening concert in Carnegie Hall.

The concert opened with a rather leaden-footed performance of the Mahler Ninth Symphony. The famed Boston orchestra creaked and groaned through the score, minus its customary sparkle.

More in character (and to the audience's liking) were the three Russian works which followed the intermission. They were Moussorgsky's prelude to the opera "Khovanstchina," "Baba-Yaga" Liadov, and Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Capriccio Espagnol."

This Clipping From
BROOKLYN, N.Y.
EAGLE
MAR 13 1941

DOWNTOWN

Boston Symphony Group To Give 4th Boro Concert

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, will give the fourth concert of its current Brooklyn season tomorrow evening in the Brooklyn Academy of Music.

The program will open with the Overture to "The Magic Flute," by Mozart, and the rest of the evening will be given over to two great symphonies: Beethoven's Sixth in F major and Sibelius' Fifth in E flat major.

The concert is presented under the joint auspices of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences, the Brooklyn Philharmonic Society, and a Brooklyn committee. Standing room only is available.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
MAR 14 1941

MAHLER WORK LED BY KOUSSEVITZKY

Composer's Ninth Symphony Feature of the Concert Given by Boston Orchestra

'BABA YAZA' ALSO HEARD

Mussorgsky's Prelude and Rimsky-Korsakoff Number on Carnegie Hall Program

By OLIN DOWNES

The unforgettable feature of the concert given last night by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conductor, in Carnegie Hall, was the performance of Mahler's Ninth Symphony. In a sense this performance was more than the symphony. The symphony would not have been so articulate were it not for a reading which intensified everything that was beautiful and significant in the score, while it modified, almost disproportionately, what was banal or redundant. At the same time Dr. Koussevitzky made the most of Mahler's rhetoric.

For Dr. Koussevitzky's interpretation followed not only every detail of the score but everything that was behind the sounds indicated on the paper. This was accomplished with a sovereign eloquence and with the unsurpassed technical and coloristic resources of the great orchestra. The form of the symphony is free, and the symphony is much too long for its material and for the real substance of its structure. But the narrative never flagged in the telling. At the end of the good hour required for the work the audience was listening intently.

Form of Symphony Is Free

What then of the symphony? It has Mahler's self-evident and incontestable faults and more than its share of his greatnesses. The form is free and, as usual, laid out on a vast scale. One could say that this form is the form of the composer's thought-stream rather than that of a classic model. Psychologically speaking, the hand of mortality is on the music. The strong movements are the first and the last. The first part is melancholy and there are pages of frantic despair. A chorale theme is the burden of the final movement, and the prayer was intoned most poignantly. Its developments were unfolded with exaltation. The end is one of a mystical peace, after the tortured music of a man of genius who never found it. The rapt music vanishes into space. The audience was a moment in emerging from its spell.

Music Seen Repetitious

So much for Mahler's virtues. Unfortunately, they are badly tinctured with self-pity, egomania and inexcusable repetitiousness. The man talks about himself, very dramatically and forever. The lilting has not the impulsive abandon of a Tchaikovsky, for it is music of an excessive self-consciousness.

Some of us find music objectionable when it is accompanied by a "story." This music is worse than that, since its unmistakable personalities can be given but one explanation by the most unimaginative. And they say that Tchaikovsky wears his heart on his sleeve! The fact that Mahler is sincere, and often noble in his speech does not sufficiently mitigate his bombast and his bursts of banality. The more were we grateful to Dr. Koussevitzky for his understanding of the composer's essentially lofty purpose and his illumination of the highest aspects of Mahler's spirit.

The remainder of the concert was in lighter vein, contributed greatly to the pleasure of the audience which packed the hall—two short pieces which had the effect of turning over the pages of a picture book of old tales and scenes of Russian life—Mussorgsky's Prelue to "Khovantchina," a simple and wonderful piece; Liadoff's "Baba Yaga," and the scintillating "Capriccio Espagnol" of Rimsky-Korsakoff, played with abounding virtuosity.

This Clipping From
BROOKLYN, N.Y.
EAGLE
MAR 15 1941

Boston Symphony Heard In Excellent Program

Music in New York

Bostonians Play Mahler Ninth and Berlioz "Fantastique"—New Friends' Mozart Series

By LLOYD V. ALMIRALL

NEW YORK, March 22—The monthly visits of the Boston Symphony are always the highlights of our orchestral season, but [illegible] was added interest in last week's pair of concerts because [illegible] simultaneous announcement that Koussevitzky would preside over the New York Philharmonic for two weeks during its [illegible] centennial celebration next season. These guest appearances will be eagerly awaited, though it would be foolish to anticipate that in two weeks Koussevitzky (or anyone else) could elevate the Philharmonic to the heights of tonal splendor achieved by the Boston orchestra after so many years of constant improvement.

Ironically enough, nothing so emphasizes the true greatness of the Boston Symphony as an off day. At its evening concert last week, the Mahler Ninth Symphony received a magnificent reading and had it been any other orchestra the occasion would have marked a peak of accomplishment. But there was lacking some almost indefinable element of the usual Boston standards of play and the resulting disappointment was testimony to the exacting requirements the orchestra must always meet, by reason of the standards Koussevitzky and his men have set up for themselves.

Whatever was lacking Thursday evening was amply compensated for on Saturday afternoon. No praise could sufficiently convey the beauty of Mozart's Eine Kleine Nachtmusik for the string orchestra, and Berezowsky's Third Symphony was enthusiastically received. The last half of the program was devoted to a glorious performance of Berlioz' Symphonie Fantastique.

possible to shake off the feeling that Mahler owed something to Richard Strauss, especially in the first movement, that he achieved a true peasant atmosphere in the country-dance-like texture of the second, that the last two movements were the best of the symphony with the Adagio the most compelling.

The rest of the program was Russian and decidedly on the brighter side. Moussorgsky's gem-like prelude to "Khovanstchina" gave way to the entertaining Liadov Tone Picture "Baba-Yaga" and the concert ended with Rimsky-Korsakov's well known Capriccio Espagnol. All of these were played in typical Bostonian style, but they were dwarfed by what had gone before and their orchestral color was not bright enough to atone for the solemnity of the Mahler.

ensuing relaxation in the timing and in motivation mitigated whatever drive or color there might have been in the music itself. He did not appear to be keyed up to the vitalizing pitch usually associated with his conducting.

It was a gratifying program from the musical point of view, balancing the classical greatness of Mozart's Overture to "The Magic Flute" and Beethoven's "Pastoral" Symphony with the contemporary greatness of Sibelius Fifth Symphony. Such music carries its own inspiration. That it did not receive the definitive interpretations anticipated must be charged up to the conductor's approach to his concert on this occasion.

The entrancing beauty of the Pastoral Symphony needs no further exposition in written words, but it could have been more captivatingly set forth in performance last night. The serenity of the country scene of the first movement suggested that the day was warm and the atmosphere hazy. The quality of awakening was overcast with drowsiness. Where was the sparkle of the Andante, which depicts the freshness of the scene by the brookside? Where was the joviality of the gathering of country folk? Even the thunderstorm was a mild one. Finally, the Shepherd's Song may have been thankful but it was hardly gladsome. The whole performance spelled a certain weariness.

The heroic music of Sibelius retained its character more through the rhythmic pulsation of the music than the impelling forcefulness of the performance. The playing did carry more intensity and the closing measures of the second movement stirred the emotions to the point where restraining from applause was almost painful. The Andante was beautifully done. But when it came to a shattering statement of the dominating theme of the finale, the horns merely stated the theme, while in the triumphant coda Dr. Koussevitzky pulled his punches, bringing an anti-climax to the final chords. The movement is marked Allegro molto, but last night its tempo was held in so that the inevitability of the finale never came to pass.

All these remarks in the face of superb playing by the orchestra! It just happens that Dr. Koussevitzky has given both the Beethoven and the Sibelius in Brooklyn with more conspicuous success from [illegible]odman is president.

This Clipping From
BROOKLYN, N.Y.
EAGLE
MAR 15 1941

Symphony Concert At the Academy Attracts Society

Boxes Occupied by Socially Prominent as Fourth Boston Symphony Recital Is Given

Local music lovers filled the Opera House of the Academy of Music to capacity last night to hear the fourth concert of the 55th season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Brooklyn. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, presented the following program: Overture to "The Magic Flute," by Mozart; Symphony No. 6 in F major, the Pastoral, by Beethoven and the Symphony No. 5 in E flat major, Op. 83, by Sibelius.

Mrs. Frank E. Simmons and Mrs. Maxwell Lester were box hosts to Mr. and Mrs. Harry Spencer, Jacob Klinck and Mr. and Mrs. Norman Elliott.

With Mrs. Dean C. Osborne in her box were Mr. and Mrs. Donald G. C. Sinclair, Mrs. James M. Fawcett, Dr. and Mrs. Frank C. Hamm and Mr. and Mrs. Alfred H. Everson.

Box Holders

Mrs. Benjamin Prince was hostess in a box to Mr. and Mrs. James G. McDonald, Dr. and Mrs. Paul D. Shafer and Rear Admiral and Mrs. James C. Pryor.

The Brooklyn Woman's Club box was occupied by Mrs. Oscar W. Swift, Mrs. Oliver G. Carter, Mrs. Thomas H. McClintock, Mrs. Robert Franklin Ives, Mrs. Frederick W. Burbank, Mrs. Jason Davis, Mrs. Theodore Vosseler and Mrs. Wilson Briggs Zimmer.

With Mrs. Thomas W. Lauderdale in her box were Mr. and Mrs. Russell B. Harding, Mr. and Mrs. Rollin Plumb and Mrs. B. J. Grant.

In the box of the Alumnae Association of Adelphi Academy were Mr. and Mrs. William Slater, Mrs. William B. Parker, Miss Rosalie Parker, Miss Janet Hughes, Miss Gwendolyn Glass and Miss Emma Jessie Ogg.

Other boxes were occupied by the students of the Polytechnic Preparatory County Day School, Brooklyn Friends School and Packer Collegiate Institute.

The final concert of the season will be given on Friday evening, April 4. The concerts are presented under the auspices of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences of which James McDonald is president; the Brooklyn Committee of which Adrian Van Sinderen is chairman, and Mrs. Henry J. Davenport, executive chairman, and the Brooklyn Philharmonic Society of which Dr. R. Huntington [illegible]odman is president.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
BROOKLYN, N. Y.
CITIZEN
MAR 15 1941

Many Attend Boston Symphony Concert; Mrs. Frank Simmons, Mrs. Lester, Are Box Hostesses

Mrs. Frank E. Simmons, Mrs. Maxwell Lester, Mrs. Dean C. Osborne, Mrs. Benjamin Prince and Mrs. Thomas Lauderdale, the Alumnae Association of Adelphi Academy, and the Brooklyn Woman's Club wer the boxholders last night for the season's fourth concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Brooklyn Academy of Music.

Other boxes wer occupied by students of the Polytechnic Preparatory Country Day School, Brooklyn Friends School and Packer Collegiate Institute.

The guests of Mrs. Simmons and Mrs. Lester were: Mr. and Mrs. Henry Spencer, Jacob Klinck and Mr. and Mrs. Norman Elliott.

In Mrs. Osborne's box were: Mr. and Mrs. Donald G. C. Sinclair, Mrs. James M Fawcett, Dr. and Mrs. Frank C. Hamm and Mr. and Mrs. Alfred H Everson.

Mrs. Prince entertained Mr. and Mrs. James G. McDonald, Dr. and Mrs. Paul D. Shafer and Rear Admiral and Mrs. James C. Phyor. The box of the Brooklyn Woman's Club was occupied by Mrs. Oscar W. Swift, president of the club; Mrs. Oliver G. Carter, Mrs. Thomas H. McClintock, Mrs. Robert Franklin Ives, Mrs. Frederick W. Burbank, Mrs. Jason Davis, Mrs. Theodore Vosseler and Mrs. Wilson Briggs Zimmer.

Mrs. Lauderdale's box guests included: Mr. and Mrs. Russell Harding, Mr. and Mrs. Rollin Plumb and Mrs. B. J. Grant. In the box of teh Alumnae Association of Adelphi Academy were: Mr. and Mrs. William Slater, Mrs. William B. Parker, Miss Rosalie Parker, Miss Janet Hughes, Miss Gwendolyn Glass and Mis sEmma Jessie Ogg.

A review of the concert will be found in another section of this edition of "The Brooklyn Citizen." The orchestra, led by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, will give the fifth and final concert of its Brooklyn season on the evening of April 4. The series is presented here under the auspices of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences, the Brooklyn Committee and the Brooklyn Philharmonic Society.

This Clipping From
RED BANK, N. J.
STANDARD
MAR 15 1941

Concert to be Held

NEW BRUNSWICK — The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, will appear in the final program of this year's Rutgers Concert Series in Rutgers Gymnasium, Wednesday evening.

Featured with the orchestra will be Rutgers University Glee Club and Princeton University Choir, which accepted an invitation to join the Glee Club for this occasion.

This Clipping From
NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J.
HOME NEWS
MAR 17 1941

Clubs to Sing In Liszt Work

Rutgers, Princeton Groups Plan 'Faust' Symphony With Boston Orchestra

Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will appear in the final program of the 25th anniversary series of Rutgers concerts in the gymnasium April 2. Featured with the orchestra will be the University Glee Club and the Princeton Choir, which accepted an invitation from the local choral unit for this occasion.

Tickets have been placed on sale at the Music House on College avenue. The sale of a limited number of tickets for the postponed program of Nelson Eddy, movie and radio baritone, on April 14 has also been started.

It is in the seldom-performed "Faust" Symphony of Liszt that the two choruses will join the orchestra. The first section deals with Faust, the second with Marguerite and the final, which contains the choral passages of the work, with Mephistopheles.

The Glee Club is rehearsing under the direction of F. Austin Walter. On the day of the concert, the singers will practice with the orchestra in the afternoon in the gymnasium.

The opening selection on the program is Mozart's Symphony 40 in G minor.

The Glee Club will again appear with the orchestra at a repetition of this program in the Boston Symphony's concluding concert of its New York season the following Saturday, April 5 in Carnegie Hall.

This Clipping From SAN DIEGO, CAL.
UNION
MAR 16 194[illegible]

Repetition Explained

In explanation of the oft-repeated performance of the Shostakovitch Fifth Symphony by the Boston Symphony orchestra, Sergei Koussevitzky says he will "keep repeating the music until the critics realize its greatness." Now if an American composer could get a break like that!

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN
MAR 16 1941

Girl Pianist Shows Talent In Town Hall Performance

By GRENA BENNETT

Spring brings its usual crop of blossoming musicians and one of the first to appear was Sylvia Zaremba, 11-year-old pianist, who attracted a large and friendly audience to Town Hall yesterday afternoon. She is a talented, dainty child, remarkably well-grounded for one of her years, and impressed hearers by her facile technical command.

It would be folly to expect individuality or spontaneity in her interpretations which evidently followed faithfully, so far as finger-work and expression are concerned, the instructions of her tutor. But her readings of Bach's F Minor Prelude and Fugue and the A Minor Prelude from the "English" Suite revealed a talent of promise and attainment. In Handel's E Major Theme and Variations she performed its technical exactions with accuracy; using the pedal with taste and effective discrimination; and maintaining the rhythms with metronomic precision.

Other numbers presented consisted of Schumann's "Fable," "Evening" and "In the Night"; Sonatine by Ravel; four pieces by Debussy; and "Maiden's Wish," by Chopin.

• • •

The Boston Symphony, appearing in Carnegie Hall yesterday afternoon, began a diverting program with Mozart's "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik," performed with rare inspiration and sensitive response to the composer's delectable alnguage. Each detail in the score was revealed in tones of great beauty and appeal under the intelligent and eloquent directions of Conductor Serge Koussevitzky. Berezowsky's Third Symphony, which immediately followed, proved to be a well-constructed and ably executed number, the reading notable for co-ordination and homogeneity of the orchestral choirs.

Tonal picturesqueness marked the presentation of Berlioz's "Fantastic" Symphony, in which the bizarre and exotic fabric of the composition was communicated with unquestionable artistry, musicianship and comprehension. The customary capacity audience that patronizes the Bostonians' concerts was present.

Margaret Sullavan is th ine of "Back Street," r its second week at the Memorial Theater.

A Paradox

Writer Hates Writes Abo

("The Sea Wolf" curr
howing at the Metropoli

HOLLYWOOD, March
Robert Rossen, veteran
Bros. writer, was startle
he boss said to him, ow you start work on "
lf'."

"Okay," he answered.
did not show the disma
heart.

He overcome a slight fe
seasickness that began t
him. Rossen had been o
only once in his life
writer still hates the sea

Even today, many yea
the episode, the memor
first sea voyage arouses
tive feeling of distaste.
thought that he would deal with a wild sea voya
as that pictured in th
London novel made him s

He inserted a nice, ne sheet of paper in his typ
Not a wave in it to remi
of the sea.

To Work

He started to write.

"Now is the time for men . . ." He caught before the typewriter e
him in the false paradise

This Clipping From
BROOKLYN, N.Y.
EAGLE
MAR 14 1941

BOSTON SYMPHONY PLAYS MAHLER'S NINTH OPUS

By MILES KASTENDIECK

That the music of Gustav Mahler has been graphically presented for the consideration of New Yorkers this season there is no mistaking. Three vitalizing and impressive performances of his works have been heard within three months, two of them considered his strongest bid for inclusion among the greatest composers. Thus in playing the Ninth Symphony not so long after "Das Lied von der Erde" had been given by Bruno Walter, Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony did their Carnegie Hall audience a great service last night. Whatever the consensus of opinion —and the acceleration of applause was noticeably that in recognition of the performance and for the conductor—the symphony was impressive.

Sixty-three minutes of Mahler is too long, even when he is at his best. In this listener's estimation, the Ninth Symphony is not half so fine a work as "Das Lied von der Erde." Mahler's pre-occupation with the theme of death presents no stumbling block. What is bothersome is his resignation to that theme without expressing a more profound philosophy musically. He leaves as a diffuse an impression of his feelings as he writes loosely-knit music. The paradox is that his long-windedness has enough of tonal attraction because of a complete mastery of orchestration not to be dreary or depressing. There is expressive vitality in this music, which commands attention though it may not touch the heart.

During this hearing it was impossible to shake off the feeling that Mahler owed something to Richard Strauss, especially in the first movement, that he achieved a true peasant atmosphere in the country-dance-like texture of the second, that the last two movements were the best of the symphony with the Adagio the most compelling.

The rest of the program was Russian and decidedly on the brighter side. Moussorgsky's gem-like prelude to "Khovanstchina" gave way to the entertaining Liadov Tone Picture "Baba-Yaga" and the concert ended with Rimsky-Korsakov's well known Capriccio Espagnol. All of these were played in typical Bostonian style, but they were dwarfed by what had gone before and their orchestral color was not bright enough to atone for the solemnity of the Mahler.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
RED BANK, N. J.
STANDARD
MAR 15 1941

Concert to be Held

NEW BRUNSWICK — The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, will appear in the final program of this year's Rutgers Concert Series in Rutgers Gymnasium, Wednesday evening.

Featured with the orchestra will be Rutgers University Glee Club and Princeton University Choir, which accepted an invitation to join the Glee Club for this occasion.

This Clipping From
BROOKLYN, N.Y.
EAGLE
MAR 15 1941

Boston Symphony Heard In Excellent Program

Koussevitzky Plays Beethoven Sixth And Sibelius Fifth at the Academy

By MILES KASTENDIECK

Those orchestral qualities of refinement and virtuosity were exhibited to the greatest degree in the playing of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Academy of Music last night, but the performances were cloaked in a mantle of grayish hue which remained buttoned up during the entire evening. The trouble was chiefly a matter of tempo. Dr. Koussevitzky broadened his allegros almost to the point of making them andantes, so that the ensuing relaxation in the timing and in motivation mitigated whatever drive or color there might have been in the music itself. He did not appear to be keyed up to the vitalizing pitch usually associated with his conducting.

It was a gratifying program from the musical point of view, balancing the classical greatness of Mozart's Overture to "The Magic Flute" and Beethoven's "Pastoral" Symphony with the contemporary greatness of Sibelius Fifth Symphony. Such music carries its own inspiration. That it did not receive the definitive interpretations anticipated must be charged up to the conductor's approach to his concert on this occasion.

The entrancing beauty of the Pastoral Symphony needs no further exposition in written words, but it could have been more captivatingly set forth in performance last night. The serenity of the country scene of the first movement suggested that the day was warm and the atmosphere hazy. The quality of awakening was overcast with drowsiness. Where was the sparkle of the Andante, which depicts the freshness of the scene by the brookside? Where was the joviality of the gathering of country folk? Even the thunderstorm was a mild one. Finally, the Shepherd's Song may have been thankful but it was hardly gladsome. The whole performance spelled a certain weariness.

The heroic music of Sibelius retained its character more through the rhythmic pulsation of the music than the impelling forcefulness of the performance. The playing did carry more intensity and the closing measures of the second movement stirred the emotions to the point where restraining from applause was almost painful. The Andante was beautifully done. But when it came to a shattering statement of the dominating theme of the finale, the horns merely stated the theme, while in the triumphant coda Dr. Koussevitzky pulled his punches, bringing an anti-climax to the final chords. The movement is marked Allegro molto, but last night its tempo was held in so that the inevitability of the finale never came to pass.

All these remarks in the face of superb playing by the orchestra! It just happens that Dr. Koussevitzky has given both the Beethoven and the Sibelius in Brooklyn with more conspicuous success from an interpretative point of view.

This Clipping From
BROOKLYN, N.Y.
EAGLE
MAR 15 1941

Symphony Concert At the Academy Attracts Society

Boxes Occupied by Socially Prominent as Fourth Boston Symphony Recital Is Given

Local music lovers filled the Opera House of the Academy of Music to capacity last night to hear the fourth concert of the 55th season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Brooklyn. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, presented the following program: Overture to "The Magic Flute," by Mozart; Symphony No. 6 in F major, the Pastoral, by Beethoven and the Symphony No. 5 in E flat major, Op. 83, by Sibelius.

Mrs. Frank E. Simmons and Mrs. Maxwell Lester were box hosts to Mr. and Mrs. Harry Spencer, Jacob Klinck and Mr. and Mrs. Norman Elliott.

With Mrs. Dean C. Osborne in her box were Mr. and Mrs. Donald G. C. Sinclair, Mrs. James M. Fawcett, Dr. and Mrs. Frank C. Hamm and Mr. and Mrs. Alfred H. Everson.

Box Holders

Mrs. Benjamin Prince was hostess in a box to Mr. and Mrs. James G. McDonald, Dr. and Mrs. Paul D. Shafer and Rear Admiral and Mrs. James C. Pryor.

The Brooklyn Woman's Club box was occupied by Mrs. Oscar W. Swift, Mrs. Oliver G. Carter, Mrs. Thomas H. McClintock, Mrs. Robert Franklin Ives, Mrs. Frederick W. Burbank, Mrs. Jason Davis, Mrs. Theodore Vosseler and Mrs. Wilson Briggs Zimmer.

With Mrs. Thomas W. Lauderdale in her box were Mr. and Mrs. Russell B. Harding, Mr. and Mrs. Rollin Plumb and Mrs. B. J. Grant.

In the box of the Alumnae Association of Adelphi Academy were Mr. and Mrs. William Slater, Mrs. William B. Parker, Miss Rosalie Parker, Miss Janet Hughes, Miss Gwendolyn Glass and Miss Emma Jessie Ogg.

Other boxes were occupied by the students of the Polytechnic Preparatory County Day School, Brooklyn Friends School and Packer Collegiate Institute.

The final concert of the season will be given on Friday evening, April 4. The concerts are presented under the auspices of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences of which James McDonald is president; the Brooklyn Committee of which Adrian Van Sinderen is chairman, and Mrs. Henry J. Davenport, executive chairman, and the Brooklyn Philharmonic Society of which Dr. R. Huntington Woodman is president.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
BROOKLYN, N. Y.
CITIZEN
MAR 15 1941

Many Attend Boston Symphony Concert; Mrs. Frank Simmons Mrs. Lester, Are Box Hostesses

Mrs. Frank E. Simmons, Mrs. Maxwell Lester, Mrs. Dean C. Osborne, Mrs. Benjamin Prince and Mrs. Thomas Lauderdale, the Alumnae Association of Adelphi Academy, and the Brooklyn Woman's Club wer the boxholders last night for the season's fourth concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Brooklyn Academy of Music.

Other boxes wer occupied by students of the Polytechnic Preparatory Country Day School, Brooklyn Friends School and Packer Collegiate Institute.

The guests of Mrs. Simmons and Mrs. Lester were: Mr. and Mrs. Henry Spencer, Jacob Klinck and Mr. and Mrs. Norman Elliott.

In Mrs. Osborne's box were: Mr. and Mrs. Donald G. C. Sinclair, Mrs. James M Fawcett, Dr. and Mrs. Frank C. Hamm and Mr. and Mrs. Alfred H Everson.

Mrs. Prince entertained Mr. and Mrs. James G. McDonald, Dr. and Mrs. Paul D. Shafer and Rear Admiral and Mrs. James C. Phyor. The box of the Brooklyn Woman's Club was occupied by Mrs. Oscar W. Swift, president of the club; Mrs. Oliver G. Carter, Mrs. Thomas H. McClintock, Mrs. Robert Franklin Ives, Mrs. Frederick W. Burbank, Mrs. Jason Davis, Mrs. Theodore Vosseler and Mrs. Wilson Briggs Zimmer.

Mrs. Lauderdale's box guests included: Mr. and Mrs. Russell Harding, Mr. and Mrs. Rollin Plumb and Mrs. B. J. Grant. In the box of teh Alumnae Association of Adelphi Academy were: Mr. and Mrs. William Slater, Mrs. William B. Parker, Miss Rosalie Parker, Miss Janet Hughes, Miss Gwendolyn Glass and Mis sEmma Jessie Ogg.

A review of the concert will be found in another section of this edition of "The Brooklyn Citizen." The orchestra, led by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, will give the fifth and final concert of its Brooklyn season on the evening of April 4. The series is presented here under the auspices of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences, the Brooklyn Committee and the Brooklyn Philharmonic Society.

This Clipping From
NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J.
HOME NEWS
MAR 17 1941

Clubs to Sing In Liszt Work

Rutgers, Princeton Groups Plan 'Faust' Symphony With Boston Orchestra

Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will appear in the final program of the 25th anniversary series of Rutgers concerts in the gymnasium April 2. Featured with the orchestra will be the University Glee Club and the Princeton Choir, which accepted an invitation from the local choral unit for this occasion.

Tickets have been placed on sale at the Music House on College avenue. The sale of a limited number of tickets for the postponed program of Nelson Eddy, movie and radio baritone, on April 14 has also been started.

It is in the seldom-performed "Faust" Symphony of Liszt that the two choruses will join the orchestra. The first section deals with Faust, the second with Marguerite and the final, which contains the choral passages of the work, with Mephistopheles.

The Glee Club is rehearsing under the direction of F. Austin Walter. On the day of the concert, the singers will practice with the orchestra in the afternoon in the gymnasium.

The opening selection on the program is Mozart's Symphony 40 in G minor.

The Glee Club will again appear with the orchestra at a repetition of this program in the Boston Symphony's concluding concert of its New York season the following Saturday, April 5 in Carnegie Hall.

This Clipping From SAN DIEGO, CAL.
UNION

Repetition Explained

In explanation of the oft-repeated performance of the Shostakovitch Fifth Symphony by the Boston Symphony orchestra, Sergei Koussevitzky says he will "keep repeating the music until the critics realize its greatness." Now if an American composer could get a break like that!

ows Talent Performance

By GRENA BENNETT

Spring brings its usual crop of blossoming musicians and one of the first to appear was Sylvia Zaremba, 11-year-old pianist, who attracted a large and friendly audience to Town Hall yesterday afternoon. She is a talented, dainty child, remarkably well-grounded for one of her years, and impressed hearers by her facile technical command.

It would be folly to expect individuality or spontaneity in her interpretations which evidently followed faithfully, so far as finger-work and expression are concerned, the instructions of her tutor. But her readings of Bach's F Minor Prelude and Fugue and the A Minor Prelude from the "English" Suite revealed a talent of promise and attainment. In Handel's E Major Theme and Variations she performed its technical exactions with accuracy; using the pedal with taste and effective discrimination; and maintaining the rhythms with metronomic precision.

Other numbers presented consisted of Schumann's "Fable," "Evening" and "In the Night"; Sonatine by Ravel; four pieces by Debussy; and "Maiden's Wish," by Chopin.

* * *

The Boston Symphony, appearing in Carnegie Hall yesterday afternoon, began a diverting program with Mozart's "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik," performed with rare inspiration and sensitive response to the composer's delectable ainguage. Each detail in the score was revealed in tones of great beauty and appeal under the intelligent and eloquent directions of Conductor Serge Koussevitzky. Berezowsky's Third Symphony, which immediately followed, proved to be a well-constructed and ably executed number, the reading notable for co-ordination and homogeneity of the orchestral choirs.

Tonal picturesqueness marked the presentation of Berlioz's "Fantastic" Symphony, in which the bizarre and exotic fabric of the composition was communicated with unquestionable artistry, musicianship and comprehension. The customary capacity audience that patronizes the Bostonians' concerts was present.

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL
MAR 16 1941

MUSIC, OLD AND NEW

Editor:

In reply to J. D. Bacon and in defense of Mr. Tebbel, why should the artistry of the Boston Symphony Orchestra be wasted on the three dozen decrepit warhorses which constitute the ordinary symphonic repertory, so well exemplified by this group in its Providence appearances? I gave up my ticket 13 years ago because I got tired of hearing the four Brahms and the four Beethoven symphonies, the Franck symphony, the Freischutz overture, Daphnis and Chloe and the annual All-Wagner Feast.

Mr. Bacon asks for the old and tried. What, again may I inquire, was the matter with the horse-car? And the good old "Spectator!" I bought a copy at the newsstand just the other day, although the man tried his best to sell me some new-fangled journal called "The Saturday Evening Post."

I would be curious to know some of the compositions which Mr. Bacon classifies as "modernistic attempts"; is it Ravel who offends him, or Sibelius, or Stravinsky? Of these common stumbling blocks, I might indicate that the former's Daphnis and Chloe has been the perennial "novelty," wildly acclaimed, of the Boston Orchestra in this town for at least 15 seasons, and should long ago have been set aside for something really worth while, old or new. As to Sibelius, now quite the rage, his Fifth Symphony is a quarter of a century old—hardly new; and the Sibelius Second, which simply stuns the Berkshire audiences these summers, was written in 1902, pretty near to half a century ago. Of Stravinsky, I have only to say that anyone who doesn't recognize even his latest work to be already and admittedly a tried classic should not be writing letters to the editor.

But perhaps Mr. Bacon was referring to such a work as the new Hindemith cello concerto, its ink scarcely dry; this indeed comes under his heading, "modernistic attempts," of probably imaginary worth, mediocre. Who is a man who recommends horse-cars, to pass judgment on Mr. Hindemith's undoubted genius?

I am not quarreling with Mr. Bacon, but with the kind of thinking his letter represents. Why must music, of all the arts and sciences the greatest, be handcuffed, bound and gagged? In all the other arts we demand the latest, the most invigorating thought, new life and progress. In everyday life our machines, telephones, costumes must be streamlined; we demand electric refrigeration and airplanes. A movie three weeks old is out of date. But in music, the pace of 15 miles an hour takes away our breath. This is the lethargic, apathetic, unintellectual kind of thinking which has created the impression that there is only one Fifth Symphony, only one Humoresque, only two Hungarian Dances (Nos. 5 and 6), and only one symphony by Dvorak, namely, the "New World." These things were the stock-in-trade of symphony orchestras 40 years ago. How did they become stock-in-trade? Because they were played, played when they were new, played by and for people who had a little curiosity as to what was going on in the world about them: the Vienna of Mozart, Beethoven and Schubert was alive. And so is the musical world today, more brilliant, more interesting, more stimulating than ever before.

But not in Providence! No; we are to ignore it. The water has been piped up our street, but we must still draw from the well. I take strong exception to such criticism. It is not intelligent. Granted that Beethoven is a master, why serve only caviar? Let's include pea soup, mush, Jersey tomatoes and even some of these vitamins.

Don't forget that we shall never have American music until we deliberately bring up some generations on American music; if we train them to foreign thought, say German classical traditions, they will always think that way. This has been the trouble. We must have more new music, especially by our own American composers, who are as active, talented and learned as any in the world—Harris, Piston, Sessions, Virgil Thomson, Copeland, Quincy Porter and many, many others.

I do not want to hear any more Beethoven until I have heard some Villa-Lobos, some Schoenberg; I do not want to hear any more Brahms until I have heard some Miaskowsky; I do not want to hear any more Sibelius until I have heard at least seven new major American works none of which is more than six months old.

But I shall not hear these in Providence, I know.

DAVID STACKHOUSE.

Providence.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
MAR 17 1941

Boston Group Offers Berezowsky Work

By ROBERT BAGAR.

The Third Symphony of Nicolai Berezowsky was the novelty at the Boston Symphony concert in Carnegie Hall on Saturday afternoon. It was given here for the first time. By no means novel, but of established worth were the two other numbers in the program, the Mozart Eine Kleine Nachtmusik and the Berlioz Symphonie Fantastique.

How the Berezowsky piece will fare is a matter for the future to decide, but it certainly made a strong bid for attention at its initial hearing. The composer possesses the craftsmanship and the musical intelligence to construct a substantial work. He has proved it before and reaffirmed it with this symphony.

There are strength, recognizable aims and realness to it. There are no wasted efforts. Everything counts. Its three movements reflect the thought and labor that went into it. It is intellectual, mostly, and its segments interlink with the preordained smoothness of mathematical equations. One would have given much, however, for even a still, small voice of emotion.

The orchestra played the symphony splendidly.

Elegance preferred and laciness unlimited went into the reading of the charming Mozart serenade. Serge Koussevitzky knows his styles and he functions accordingly. That was also applicable to the delivery of the exciting Berlioz creation where the orchestra flew into Satanic rages or zephyred through peaceful repose with equal conviction.

Sonatine and the Schubert "posthumous" Sonata in B flat major, he showed considerable understanding of his selections.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
MAR 16 1941

Koussevitzky Conducts Work Of Berezowsky

Boston Orchestra Opens Program With Mozart's 'EineKleineNachtmusik'

By Robert Lawrence

Mozart playing of a superb order began yesterday afternoon's concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Carnegie Hall. It has never been the writer's good fortune to hear so exquisitely molded a performance of the "Eine kleine Nachtmusik" as Serge Koussevitzky and his forces delivered on this occasion. The fine-grained tone of the Boston string section—the reticence of Dr. Koussevitzky's conducting—the admirably controlled application of dynamics—gave rise to a reading which proved to be the feature of the afternoon.

Dr. Koussevitzky did not choose to underline the beauties of this score. He was content to let the string serenade speak for itself. Thus, yesterday's audience heard none of the exaggerated retards and precious phrase-molding commonly acclaimed as "Mozart style." It listened, instead, to a straight-forward performance in which both the fortes and pianos were projected on a reduced scale akin to chamber music. The ensemble's tone bore a wonderful transparency at all times, and in the trio of the minuet movement, the players surpassed themselves.

Berezowsky Work Follows

Nicolai Berezowsky's Symphony No. 3, which followed the Mozart, was presented so magnificently that one wondered how it might fare under less impressive conditions. The work bears traces of Stravinsky's later style, and yet reveals a fine and individual musical mind. All three of the movements are well made, and the opening adagio achieves something of eloquence. Mr. Berezowsky, who was present yesterday to take his bow at the conclusion of the symphony, has a firm command of orchestral technique. His music "sounds," and this sound yesterday was a trifle confusing, impelling the listener at times to mistake effect for cause. When considered in retrospect, the score seems more cerebral than emotional, an effort of the will rather than of the imagination. Nevertheless, its high degree of professional skill is to be respected. Although the symphony was first performed five years ago in Rochester and given a subsequent Boston premiere in 1937, with the composer conducting, I believe that yesterday marked its first New York presentation.

Plays Berlioz Symphony

Perhaps the writer had expected too much in advance of a performance which brought the afternoon to a close. Long acquaintance with Boston qualities led me to await an apocalyptic reading of Berlioz's "Fantastic" symphony. It did not come. There were, of course, pages and whole movements of unusual splendor. The "Scène aux Champs" was played with precisely the timbre of which one dreams when studying the works of Berlioz in score; and, from the standpoint of sheer tonal masses, the "Marche au Supplice" proved tremendously effective. I missed, however, in the other movements, that fantasy so inescapably bound up with the score.

If Dr. Koussevitzky had applied to this symphony the same philosophy he brought to the serenade of Mozart—that of letting the music speak for itself—the performance might have been more consistently successful. The secret of Berlioz lies in the music's rhythmic flow, in the use of purely formal means of composition to achieve a romantic end. Dr. Koussevitzky was liable to stretch his tempi yesterday, sentimentalizing the introduction to the opening movement until it lost its unreality. The finale, too, was broadened excessively and lost the diabolical essence so necessary to the music's best effect. When judged by standards other than those of the Boston Symphony, this was a good performance. But when perfection has already been achieved, one persists in a hope for further perfection.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
MAR 16 1941

BEREZOWSKY WORK HEARD IN CONCERT

Koussevitzky Directs Boston Orchestra in Performance of Third Symphony

THE COMPOSER IS PRESENT

He Attends Premiere Here at Carnegie Hall—Mozart and Berlioz Numbers Given

By OLIN DOWNES

Extreme sensitiveness went hand in hand with power and intuition in the performances given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Koussevitzky's direction yesterday afternoon in Carnegie Hall.

The interpretations were notable for what was accomplished with familiar music of strongly contrasted qualities, as also the realization of the thought of a young composer of this period. This composer was Nicolai Berezowski, present in the flesh, to appear after the New York première of his Third Symphony and acknowledge from the stage the prolonged applause which his score elicited from the audience.

This symphony is doubtless the strongest work in that form which Berezosky, born in Leningrad, and now in his forty-first year, has produced. His procedure, which has relation to that of Prokofieff, does not dispense with fundamental scale relationships and harmonies derived from them. It is a further application of old laws of tone-relationship, pointed up by alterations, of harmony and of key-sequence, often very simple, which may give the impression of something wholly unusual.

In fact, more than once, the suspicion is aroused of a composer whose instinct it is to write in plainer fashion than Mr. Berezowsky permits himself; that is to say, of melodic ideas which would progress in quite obvious ways if it were not that the composer thinks it wise to pepper them a little to avoid thought of the commonplace.

Opening Movement Impresses

The opening movement of the symphony made a strong impression yesterday, because o fthe balance of form and the concentration and dramatic tension of the music. It is sinewy, closely bound together, of much rythmic citality; it progresses to its close with striking vigor with inevitability, more especially in the opening movement.

The two later movements might be more convincing with longer acquaintance. They appear to have less inspiration and impulse than the first part; to follow overmuch a preconceived plan and, loftily intended, to be actually trivial in spots, and to smack of midnight oil.

The familiar works were Mozart's "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik" and the Berlioz "Fantastis" Symphony. They served to display the conductor's insight and the versatility of the orchestra. Mozart was performed with a reduced body of players, with lyrical feeling and artistocratic distinction. Such music asks rather to be revealed than interpreted. It is extremely difficult to do well, but when delivered with peerless finish and beauty of style will vindicate itself.

Berlioz Work Performed

Berlioz, on the other hand, must be interpreted. He remains today an astonishing and wild-eyed romantic. He has to be understood and to be taken seriously. Yesterday his music was felt as a fact of epochal genius and not as a mere matter of historical appreciation. Little that the romantics produced is so touching and startlingly original as his opening movement, so tender, melancholy and feverish. It is the voice of the romantic lover, the lovelorn poet, to the life, and one is perpetually surprised at the delicacy and the rare and vivid colors of the orchestra.

The audacity of this music is the greater because it is so simple, so instinctive and unpremeditated. Perhaps, unless it is touched with the living fire, as yesterday, we are not as easily frightened as the audiences of Berlioz' day were with his "March to the Scaffold" and "Witches' Sabbath." Nor does it seem imperative that the musings of the symphony's hero be as prolonged as they are in the "Scene in the Fields."

But Dr. Koussevitzky gave this unprecedented symphony its emotional frame, atmosphere, rhetoric. He made us newly aware of its genius. It told more than all the history books how Berlioz used the orchestra as none before him had dreamed of using it. None had thought of such a pliant, free-rhythmed instrumental speech. None had dreamed that a symphony could become an expression as subjective and introspective as this one.

We speak, here, especially of the earlier movements. The "March to the Scaffold" and the "Witches' Sabbath" were played as they should be, with an extravagance and fantasy that were nightmarish, so that the orchestra croaked and gibbered and howled its parodies. After the finale the audience was cheering.

Coming of Walter Next Season Hailed as Important

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

COMPARED with the New York Philharmonic, or the New York Philharmonic - Symphony, as the Gotham band is now called, the 60-year-old Boston Symphony is but a stripling. The oldest extant orchestra in the United States, the former gave its first concert on Dec. 7, 1842. Next year in honor of this important anniversary it will be led by a brilliant array of guest-conductors, among whom will be Boston's Serge Koussevitzky. Not before has Dr. Koussevitzky conducted any American orchestra save the one to which he came in the fall of 1924.

For two weeks next January Dr. Koussevitzky will lead the Philharmonic, during which period Bruno Walter will appear in Boston as guest. Not since 1923, when he conducted a pair of Symphony concerts has Mr. Walter led an orchestral concert in this city, although week after next we are to hear him in opera when he directs Mozart's "Don Giovanni" in the impending visit of the Metropolitan Company. Mr. Walter's appearance in Symphony Hall promises to be a notable event of the musical season of 1941-42. The last guest-conductor of the Boston Symphony who might be called a topnotcher was Dimitri Mitropoulos, and he came to us the first time as a dark horse.

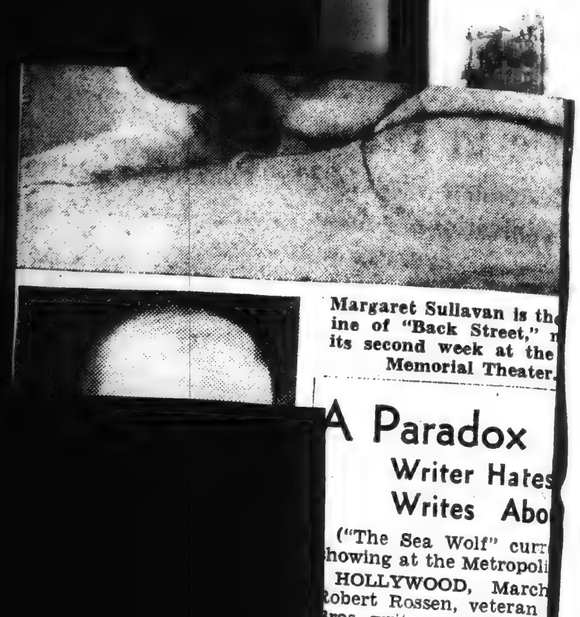
* * * *

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL
MAR 16 1941

Note to J. Bacon Deming: About my criticism of Boston Symphony programs, you don't get the idea. I wouldn't want to be denied the pleasure of hearing Dr. Koussevitzky re-create the great masterpieces. Nor would I like to hear programs largely devoted to contemporary music, a good part of which, I grant you, is trivial and transitory. But how about something more of a balance? It's all standard now, or nearly all. How can an audience grow in appreciation if it hears the same standbys, season after season?

NEAL O'HARA
Says TAKE IT FROM ME

.....Speaking of symphony conductors, Variety says: "Almost all topnotch conductors are regarded as martinets. The attitude of the men of the orchestra varies from bitter hatred to virtual worship." Then of Boston's own leader, it goes on: "Koussevitsky, one of the few leading conductors who is not a martinet, has a unique relationship with his orchestra men. He is reported to be patient and generally kindly during rehearsals, although, like Toscanini and Stokowski, he is a demon for perfection. The men not only respect him—they adore him."....



Margaret Sullavan is th
ine of "Back Street," n
its second week at the Memorial Theater.

A Paradox

Writer Hates Writes Abo

("The Sea Wolf" curr
howing at the Metropoli

HOLLYWOOD, March
Robert Rossen, veteran
Bros. writer, was startle
he boss said to him, ow you start work on "
lf'."

"Okay," he answered.
did not show the disma
heart.

He overcome a slight fe
seasickness that began t
him. Rossen had been o
only once in his life
writer still hates the sea

Even today, many yea
the episode, the memor
first sea voyage arouses
tive feeling of distaste.
thought that he would deal with a wild sea voya
as that pictured in th
London novel made him s

He inserted a nice, nev
sheet of paper in his typ
Not a wave in it to remi
of the sea.

To Work

He started to write.

"Now is the time for men . . ." He caught before the typewriter e
him in the false paradise

This Clipping From
BROOKLYN, N.Y.
EAGLE
MAR 14 1941

BOSTON SYMPHONY PLAYS MAHLER'S NINTH OPUS

By MILES KASTENDIECK

That the music of Gustav Mahler has been graphically presented for the consideration of New Yorkers this season there is no mistaking. Three vitalizing and impressive performances of his works have been heard within three months, two of them considered his strongest bid for inclusion among the greatest composers. Thus in playing the Ninth Symphony not so long after "Das Lied von der Erde" had been given by Bruno Walter, Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony did their Carnegie Hall audience a great service last night. Whatever the consensus of opinion—and the acceleration of applause was noticeably that in recognition of the performance and for the conductor—the symphony was impressive.

Sixty-three minutes of Mahler is too long, even when he is at his best. In this listener's estimation, the Ninth Symphony is not half so fine a work as "Das Lied von der Erde." Mahler's pre-occupation with the theme of death presents no stumbling block. What is bothersome is his resignation to that theme without expressing a more profound philosophy musically. He leaves as a diffuse an impression of his feelings as he writes loosely-knit music. The paradox is that his long-windedness has enough of tonal attraction because of a complete mastery of orchestration not to be dreary or depressing. There is expressive vitality in this music, which commands attention though it may not touch the heart.

During this hearing it was impossible to shake off the feeling that Mahler owed something to Richard Strauss, especially in the first movement, that he achieved a true peasant atmosphere in the country-dance-like texture of the second, that the last two movements were the best of the symphony with the Adagio the most compelling.

The rest of the program was Russian and decidedly on the brighter side. Moussorgsky's gem-like prelude to "Khovanstchina" gave way to the entertaining Liadov Tone Picture "Baba-Yaga" and the concert ended with Rimsky-Korsakov's well known Capriccio Espagnol. All of these were played in typical Bostonian style, but they were dwarfed by what had gone before and their orchestral color was not bright enough to atone for the solemnity of the Mahler.

This Clipping From
BROOKLYN, N.Y.
EAGLE
MAR 15 1941

Boston Symphony Heard In Excellent Program

Koussevitzky Plays Beethoven Sixth And Sibelius Fifth at the Academy

By MILES KASTENDIECK

Those orchestral qualities of refinement and virtuosity were exhibited to the greatest degree in the playing of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Academy of Music last night, but the performances were cloaked in a mantle of grayish blue which remained buttoned up during the entire evening. The trouble was chiefly a matter of tempo. Dr. Koussevitzky broadened his allegros almost to the point of making them andantes, so that the ensuing relaxation in the timing and in motivation mitigated whatever drive or color there might have been in the music itself. He did not appear to be keyed up to the vitalizing pitch usually associated with his conducting.

It was a gratifying program from the musical point of view, balancing the classical greatness of Mozart's Overture to "The Magic Flute" and Beethoven's "Pastoral" Symphony with the contemporary greatness of Sibelius Fifth Symphony. Such music carries its own inspiration. That it did not receive the definitive interpretations anticipated must be charged up to the conductor's approach to his concert on this occasion.

The entrancing beauty of the Pastoral Symphony needs no further exposition in written words, but it could have been more captivatingly set forth in performance last night. The serenity of the country scene of the first movement suggested that the day was warm and the atmosphere hazy. The quality of awakening was overcast with drowsiness. Where was the sparkle of the Andante, which depicts the freshness of the scene by the brookside? Where was the joviality of the gathering of country folk? Even the thunderstorm was a mild one. Finally, the Shepherd's Song may have been thankful but it was hardly gladsome. The whole performance spelled a certain weariness.

The heroic music of Sibelius retained its character more through the rhythmic pulsation of the music than the impelling forcefulness of the performance. The playing did carry more intensity and the closing measures of the second movement stirred the emotions to the point where restraining from applause was almost painful. The Andante was beautifully done. But when it came to a shattering statement of the dominating theme of the finale, the horns merely stated the theme, while in the triumphant coda Dr. Koussevitzky pulled his punches, bringing an anti-climax to the final chords. The movement is marked Allegro molto, but last night its tempo was held in so that the inevitability of the finale never came to pass.

All these remarks in the face of superb playing by the orchestra! It just happens that Dr. Koussevitzky has given both the Beethoven and the Sibelius in Brooklyn with more conspicuous success from an interpretative point of view.

This Clipping From
BROOKLYN, N.Y.
EAGLE
MAR 15 1941

Symphony Concert At the Academy Attracts Society

Boxes Occupied by Socially Prominent as Fourth Boston Symphony Recital Is Given

Local music lovers filled the Opera House of the Academy of Music to capacity last night to hear the fourth concert of the 55th season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Brooklyn. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, presented the following program: Overture to "The Magic Flute," by Mozart; Symphony No. 6 in F major, the Pastoral, by Beethoven and the Symphony No. 5 in E flat major, Op. 83, by Sibelius.

Mrs. Frank E. Simmons and Mrs. Maxwell Lester were box hosts to Mr. and Mrs. Harry Spencer, Jacob Klinck and Mr. and Mrs. Norman Elliott.

With Mrs. Dean C. Osborne in her box were Mr. and Mrs. Donald G. C. Sinclair, Mrs. James M. Fawcett, Dr. and Mrs. Frank C. Hamm and Mr. and Mrs. Alfred H. Everson.

Box Holders

Mrs. Benjamin Prince was hostess in a box to Mr. and Mrs. James G. McDonald, Dr. and Mrs. Paul D. Shafer and Rear Admiral and Mrs. James C. Pryor.

The Brooklyn Woman's Club box was occupied by Mrs. Oscar W. Swift, Mrs. Oliver G. Carter, Mrs. Thomas H. McClintock, Mrs. Robert Franklin Ives, Mrs. Frederick W. Burbank, Mrs. Jason Davis, Mrs. Theodore Vosseler and Mrs. Wilson Briggs Zimmer.

With Mrs. Thomas W. Lauderdale in her box were Mr. and Mrs. Russell B. Harding, Mr. and Mrs. Rollin Plumb and Mrs. B. J. Grant.

In the box of the Alumnae Association of Adelphi Academy were Mr. and Mrs. William Slater, Mrs. William B. Parker, Miss Rosalie Parker, Miss Janet Hughes, Miss Gwendolyn Glass and Miss Emma Jessie Ogg.

Other boxes were occupied by the students of the Polytechnic Preparatory County Day School, Brooklyn Friends School and Packer Collegiate Institute.

The final concert of the season will be given on Friday evening, April 4. The concerts are presented under the auspices of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences of which James McDonald is president; the Brooklyn Committee of which Adrian Van Sinderen is chairman, and Mrs. Henry J. Davenport, executive chairman, and the Brooklyn Philharmonic Society of which Dr. R. Huntington Woodman is president.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
BROOKLYN, N. Y.
CITIZEN
MAR 15 1941

Many Attend Boston Symphony Concert; Mrs. Frank Simmons Mrs. Lester, Are Box Hostesses

Mrs. Frank E. Simmons, Mrs. Maxwell Lester, Mrs. Dean C. Osborne, Mrs. Benjamin Prince and Mrs. Thomas Lauderdale, the Alumnae Association of Adelphi Academy, and the Brooklyn Woman's Club wer the boxholders last night for the season's fourth concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Brooklyn Academy of Music.

Other boxes wer occupied by students of the Polytechnic Preparatory Country Day School, Brooklyn Friends School and Packer Collegiate Institute.

The guests of Mrs. Simmons and Mrs. Lester were: Mr. and Mrs. Henry Spencer, Jacob Klinck and Mr. and Mrs. Norman Elliott.

In Mrs. Osborne's box were: Mr. and Mrs. Donald G. C. Sinclair, Mrs. James M Fawcett, Dr. and Mrs. Frank C. Hamm and Mr. and Mrs. Alfred H Everson.

Mrs. Prince entertained Mr. and Mrs. James G. McDonald, Dr. and Mrs. Paul D. Shafer and Rear Admiral and Mrs. James C. Phyor. The box of the Brooklyn Woman's Club was occupied by Mrs. Oscar W. Swift, president of the club; Mrs. Oliver G. Carter, Mrs. Thomas H. McClintock, Mrs. Robert Franklin Ives, Mrs. Frederick W. Burbank, Mrs. Jason Davis, Mrs. Theodore Vosseler and Mrs. Wilson Briggs Zimmer.

Mrs. Lauderdale's box guests included: Mr. and Mrs. Russell Harding, Mr. and Mrs. Rollin Plumb and Mrs. B. J. Grant. In the box of teh Alumnae Association of Adelphi Academy were: Mr. and Mrs. William Slater, Mrs. William B. Parker, Miss Rosalie Parker, Miss Janet Hughes, Miss Gwendolyn Glass and Mis sEmma Jessie Ogg.

A review of the concert will be found in another section of this edition of "The Brooklyn Citizen." The orchestra, led by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, will give the fifth and final concert of its Brooklyn season on the evening of April 4. The series is presented here under the auspices of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences, the Brooklyn Committee and the Brooklyn Philharmonic Society.

This Clipping From
NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J.
HOME NEWS
MAR 17 1941

Clubs to Sing In Liszt Work

Rutgers, Princeton Groups Plan 'Faust' Symphony With Boston Orchestra

Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will appear in the final program of the 25th anniversary series of Rutgers concerts in the gymnasium April 2. Featured with the orchestra will be the University Glee Club and the Princeton Choir, which accepted an invitation from the local choral unit for this occasion.

Tickets have been placed on sale at the Music House on College avenue. The sale of a limited number of tickets for the postponed program of Nelson Eddy, movie and radio baritone, on April 14 has also been started.

It is in the seldom-performed "Faust" Symphony of Liszt that the two choruses will join the orchestra. The first section deals with Faust, the second with Marguerite and the final, which contains the choral passages of the work, with Mephistopheles.

The Glee Club is rehearsing under the direction of F. Austin Walter. On the day of the concert, the singers will practice with the orchestra in the afternoon in the gymnasium.

The opening selection on the program is Mozart's Symphony 40 in G minor.

The Glee Club will again appear with the orchestra at a repetition of this program in the Boston Symphony's concluding concert of its New York season the following Saturday, April 5 in Carnegie Hall.

This Clipping From SAN DIEGO, CAL.
UNION
MAR 16 194[illegible]

Repetition Explained

In explanation of the oft-repeated performance of the Shostakovitch Fifth Symphony by the Boston Symphony orchestra, Sergei Koussevitzky says he will "keep repeating the music until the critics realize its greatness." Now if an American composer could get a break like that!

...ist Shows Talent In Town Hall Performance

By GRENA BENNETT

Spring brings its usual crop of blossoming musicians and one of the first to appear was Sylvia Zaremba, 11-year-old pianist, who attracted a large and friendly audience to Town Hall yesterday afternoon. She is a talented, dainty child, remarkably well-grounded for one of her years, and impressed hearers by her facile technical command.

It would be folly to expect individuality or spontaneity in her interpretations which evidently followed faithfully, so far as finger-work and expression are concerned, the instructions of her tutor. But her readings of Bach's F Minor Prelude and Fugue and the A Minor Prelude from the "English" Suite revealed a talent of promise and attainment. In Handel's E Major Theme and Variations she performed its technical exactions with accuracy; using the pedal with taste and effective discrimination; and maintaining the rhythms with metronomic precision.

Other numbers presented consisted of Schumann's "Fable," "Evening" and "In the Night"; Sonatine by Ravel; four pieces by Debussy; and "Maiden's Wish," by Chopin.

* * *

The Boston Symphony, appearing in Carnegie Hall yesterday afternoon, began a diverting program with Mozart's "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik," performed with rare inspiration and sensitive response to the composer's delectable alnguage. Each detail in the score was revealed in tones of great beauty and appeal under the intelligent and eloquent directions of Conductor Serge Koussevitzky. Berezowsky's Third Symphony, which immediately followed, proved to be a well-constructed and ably executed number, the reading notable for co-ordination and homogeneity of the orchestral choirs.

Tonal picturesqueness marked the presentation of Berlioz's "Fantastic" Symphony, in which the bizarre and exotic fabric of the composition was communicated with unquestionable artistry, musicianship and comprehension. The customary capacity audience that patronizes the Bostonians' concerts was present.

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL
MAR 16 1941

MUSIC, OLD AND NEW

Editor:

In reply to J. D. Bacon and in defense of Mr. Tebbel, why should the artistry of the Boston Symphony Orchestra be wasted on the three dozen decrepit warhorses which constitute the ordinary symphonic repertory, so well exemplified by this group in its Providence appearances? I gave up my ticket 13 years ago because I got tired of hearing the four Brahms and the four Beethoven symphonies, the Franck symphony, the Freischutz overture, Daphnis and Chloe and the annual All-Wagner Feast.

Mr. Bacon asks for the old and tried. What, again may I inquire, was the matter with the horse-car? And the good old "Spectator!" I bought a copy at the newsstand just the other day, although the man tried his best to sell me some new-fangled journal called "The Saturday Evening Post."

I would be curious to know some of the compositions which Mr. Bacon classifies as "modernistic attempts"; is it Ravel who offends him, or Sibelius, or Stravinsky? Of these common stumbling blocks, I might indicate that the former's Daphnis and Chloe has been the perennial "novelty," wildly acclaimed, of the Boston Orchestra in this town for at least 15 seasons, and should long ago have been set aside for something really worth while, old or new. As to Sibelius, now quite the rage, his Fifth Symphony is a quarter of a century old—hardly new; and the Sibelius Second, which simply stuns the Berkshire audiences these summers, was written in 1902, pretty near to half a century ago. Of Stravinsky, I have only to say that anyone who doesn't recognize even his latest work to be already and admittedly a tried classic should not be writing letters to the editor.

But perhaps Mr. Bacon was referring to such a work as the new Hindemith cello concerto, its ink scarcely dry; this indeed comes under his heading, "modernistic attempts," of probably imaginary worth, mediocre. Who is a man who recommends horse-cars, to pass judgment on Mr. Hindemith's undoubted genius?

I am not quarreling with Mr. Bacon, but with the kind of thinking his letter represents. Why must music, of all the arts and sciences the greatest, be handcuffed, bound and gagged? In all the other arts we demand the latest, the most invigorating thought, new life and progress. In everyday life our machines, telephones, costumes must be streamlined; we demand electric refrigeration and airplanes. A movie three weeks old is out of date. But in music, the pace of 15 miles an hour takes away our breath. This is the lethargic, apathetic, unintellectual kind of thinking which has created the impression that there is only one Fifth Symphony, only one Humoresque, only two Hungarian Dances (Nos. 5 and 6), and only one symphony by Dvorak, namely, the "New World." These things were the stock-in-trade of symphony orchestras 40 years ago. How did they become stock-in-trade? Because they were played, played when they were new, played by and for people who had a little curiosity as to what was going on in the world about them: the Vienna of Mozart, Beethoven and Schubert was alive. And so is the musical world today, more brilliant, more interesting, more stimulating than ever before.

But not in Providence! No; we are to ignore it. The water has been piped up our street, but we must still draw from the well. I take strong exception to such criticism. It is not intelligent. Granted that Beethoven is a master, why serve only caviar? Let's include pea soup, mush, Jersey tomatoes and even some of these vitamins.

Don't forget that we shall never have American music until we deliberately bring up some generations on American music; if we train them to foreign thought, say German classical traditions, they will always think that way. This has been the trouble. We must have more new music, especially by our own American composers, who are as active, talented and learned as any in the world—Harris, Piston, Sessions, Virgil Thomson, Copeland, Quincy Porter and many, many others.

I do not want to hear any more Beethoven until I have heard some Villa-Lobos, some Schoenberg; I do not want to hear any more Brahms until I have heard some Miaskowsky; I do not want to hear any more Sibelius until I have heard at least seven new major American works none of which is more than six months old.

But I shall not hear these in Providence, I know.

DAVID STACKHOUSE.
Providence.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
MAR 17 1941

Boston Group Offers Berezowsky Work

By ROBERT BAGAR.

The Third Symphony of Nicolai Berezowsky was the novelty at the Boston Symphony concert in Carnegie Hall on Saturday afternoon. It was given here for the first time. By no means novel, but of established worth were the two other numbers in the program, the Mozart Eine Kleine Nachtmusik and the Berlioz Symphonie Fantastique.

How the Berezowsky piece will fare is a matter for the future to decide, but it certainly made a strong bid for attention at its initial hearing. The composer possesses the craftsmanship and the musical intelligence to construct a substantial work. He has proved it before and reaffirmed it with this symphony.

There are strength, recognizable aims and realness to it. There are no wasted efforts. Everything counts. Its three movements reflect the thought and labor that went into it. It is intellectual, mostly, and its segments interlink with the preordained smoothness of mathematical equations. One would have given much, however, for even a still, small voice of emotion.

The orchestra played the symphony splendidly.

Elegance preferred and laciness unlimited went into the reading of the charming Mozart serenade. Serge Koussevitzky knows his styles and he functions accordingly. That was also applicable to the delivery of the exciting Berlioz creation where the orchestra flew into Satanic rages or zephyred through peaceful repose with equal conviction.

Sonatine and the Schubert "posthumous" Sonata in B flat major, he showed considerable understanding of his selections.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
MAR 16 1941

Koussevitzky Conducts Work Of Berezowsky

Boston Orchestra Opens Program With Mozart's 'EineKleineNachtmusik'

By Robert Lawrence

Mozart playing of a superb order began yesterday afternoon's concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Carnegie Hall. It has never been the writer's good fortune to hear so exquisitely molded a performance of the "Eine kleine Nachtmusik" as Serge Koussevitzky and his forces delivered on this occasion. The fine-grained tone of the Boston string section—the reticence of Dr. Koussevitzky's conducting—the admirably controlled application of dynamics—gave rise to a reading which proved to be the feature of the afternoon.

Dr. Koussevitzky did not choose to underline the beauties of this score. He was content to let the string serenade speak for itself. Thus, yesterday's audience heard none of the exaggerated retards and precious phrase-molding commonly acclaimed as "Mozart style." It listened, instead, to a straight-forward performance in which both the fortes and pianos were projected on a reduced scale akin to chamber music. The ensemble's tone bore a wonderful transparency at all times, and in the trio of the minuet movement, the players surpassed themselves.

Berezowsky Work Follows

Nicolai Berezowsky's Symphony No. 3, which followed the Mozart, was presented so magnificently that one wondered how it might fare under less impressive conditions. The work bears traces of Stravinsky's later style, and yet reveals a fine and individual musical mind. All three of the movements are well made, and the opening adagio achieves something of eloquence. Mr. Berezowsky, who was present yesterday to take his bow at the conclusion of the symphony, has a firm command of orchestral technique. His music "sounds," and this sound yesterday was a trifle confusing, impelling the listener at times to mistake effect for cause. When considered in retrospect, the score seems more cerebral than emotional, an effort of the will rather than of the imagination. Nevertheless, its high degree of professional skill is to be respected. Although the symphony was first performed five years ago in Rochester and given a subsequent Boston premiere in 1937, with the composer conducting, I believe that yesterday marked its first New York presentation.

Plays Berlioz Symphony

Perhaps the writer had expected too much in advance of a performance which brought the afternoon to a close. Long acquaintance with Boston qualities led me to await an apocalyptic reading of Berlioz's "Fantastic" symphony. It did not come. There were, of course, pages and whole movements of unusual splendor. The "Scène aux Champs" was played with precisely the timbre of which one dreams when studying the works of Berlioz in score; and, from the standpoint of sheer tonal masses, the "Marche au Supplice" proved tremendously effective. I missed, however, in the other movements, that fantasy so inescapably bound up with the score.

If Dr. Koussevitzky had applied to this symphony the same philosophy he brought to the serenade of Mozart—that of letting the music speak for itself—the performance might have been more consistently successful. The secret of Berlioz lies in the music's rhythmic flow, in the use of purely formal means of composition to achieve a romantic end. Dr. Koussevitzky was liable to stretch his tempi yesterday, sentimentalizing the introduction to the opening movement until it lost its unreality. The finale, too, was broadened excessively and lost the diabolical essence so necessary to the music's best effect. When judged by standards other than those of the Boston Symphony, this was a good performance. But when perfection has already been achieved, one persists in a hope for further perfection.

Coming of Walter Next Season Hailed as Important

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

COMPARED with the New York Philharmonic, or the New York Philharmonic - Symphony, as the Gotham band is now called, the 60-year-old Boston Symphony is but a stripling. The oldest extant orchestra in the United States, the former gave its first concert on Dec. 7, 1842. Next year in honor of this important anniversary it will be led by a brilliant array of guest-conductors, among whom will be Boston's Serge Koussevitzky. Not before has Dr. Koussevitzky conducted any American orchestra save the one to which he came in the fall of 1924.

For two weeks next January Dr. Koussevitzky will lead the Philharmonic, during which period Bruno Walter will appear in Boston as guest. Not since 1923, when he conducted a pair of Symphony concerts has Mr. Walter led an orchestral concert in this city, although week after next we are to hear him in opera when he directs Mozart's "Don Giovanni" in the impending visit of the Metropolitan Company. Mr. Walter's appearance in Symphony Hall promises to be a notable event of the musical season of 1941-42. The last guest-conductor of the Boston Symphony who might be called a topnotcher was Dimitri Mitropoulos, and he came to us the first time as a dark horse.

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL
MAR 16 1941

Note to J. Bacon Deming: About my criticism of Boston Symphony programs, you don't get the idea. I wouldn't want to be denied the pleasure of hearing Dr. Koussevitzky re-create the great masterpieces. Nor would I like to hear programs largely devoted to contemporary music, a good part of which, I grant you, is trivial and transitory. But how about something more of a balance? It's all standard now, or nearly all. How can an audience grow in appreciation if it hears the same standbys, season after season?

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
MAR 16 1941

BEREZOWSKY WORK HEARD IN CONCERT

Koussevitzky Directs Boston Orchestra in Performance of Third Symphony

THE COMPOSER IS PRESENT

He Attends Premiere Here at Carnegie Hall—Mozart and Berlioz Numbers Given

By OLIN DOWNES

Extreme sensitiveness went hand in hand with power and intuition in the performances given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Koussevitzky's direction yesterday afternoon in Carnegie Hall.

The interpretations were notable for what was accomplished with familiar music of strongly contrasted qualities, as also the realization of the thought of a young composer of this period. This composer was Nicolai Berezowski, present in the flesh, to appear after the New York première of his Third Symphony and acknowledge from the stage the prolonged applause which his score elicited from the audience.

This symphony is doubtless the strongest work in that form which Berezosky, born in Leningrad, and now in his forty-first year, has produced. His procedure, which has relation to that of Prokofieff, does not dispense with fundamental scale relationships and harmonies derived from them. It is a further application of old laws of tone-relationship, pointed up by alterations, of harmony and of key-sequence, often very simple, which may give the impression of something wholly unusual.

In fact, more than once, the suspicion is aroused of a composer whose instinct it is to write in plainer fashion than Mr. Berezowsky permits himself; that is to say, of melodic ideas which would progress in quite obvious ways if it were not that the composer thinks it wise to pepper them a little to avoid thought of the commonplace.

Opening Movement Impresses

The opening movement of the symphony made a strong impression yesterday, because o fthe balance of form and the concentration and dramatic tension of the music. It is sinewy, closely bound together, of much rythmic citality; it progresses to its close with striking vigor with inevitability, more especially in the opening movement.

The two later movements might be more convincing with longer acquaintance. They appear to have less inspiration and impulse than the first part; to follow overmuch a preconceived plan and, loftily intended, to be actually trivial in spots, and to smack of midnight oil.

The familiar works were Mozart's "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik" and the Berlioz "Fantastis" Symphony. They served to display the conductor's insight and the versatility of the orchestra. Mozart was performed with a reduced body of players, with lyrical feeling and artistocratic distinction. Such music asks rather to be revealed than interpreted. It is extremely difficult to do well, but when delivered with peerless finish and beauty of style will vindicate itself.

Berlioz Work Performed

Berlioz, on the other hand, must be interpreted. He remains today an astonishing and wild-eyed romantic. He has to be understood and to be taken seriously. Yesterday his music was felt as a fact of epochal genius and not as a mere matter of historical appreciation. Little that the romantics produced is so touching and startlingly original as his opening movement, so tender, melancholy and feverish. It is the voice of the romantic lover, the lovelorn poet, to the life, and one is perpetually surprised at the delicacy and the rare and vivid colors of the orchestra.

The audacity of this music is the greater because it is so simple, so instinctive and unpremeditated. Perhaps, unless it is touched with the living fire, as yesterday, we are not as easily frightened as the audiences of Berlioz' day were with his "March to the Scaffold" and "Witches' Sabbath." Nor does it seem imperative that the musings of the symphony's hero be as prolonged as they are in the "Scene in the Fields."

But Dr. Koussevitzky gave this unprecedented symphony its emotional frame, atmosphere, rhetoric. He made us newly aware of its genius. It told more than all the history books how Berlioz used the orchestra as none before him had dreamed of using it. None had thought of such a pliant, free-rhythmed instrumental speech. None had dreamed that a symphony could become an expression as subjective and introspective as this one.

We speak, here, especially of the earlier movements. The "March to the Scaffold" and the "Witches' Sabbath" were played as they should be, with an extravagance and fantasy that were nightmarish, so that the orchestra croaked and gibbered and howled its parodies. After the finale the audience was cheering.

NEAL O'HARA
Says TAKE IT FROM ME

.....Speaking of symphony conductors, Variety says: "Almost all topnotch conductors are regarded as martinets. The attitude of the men of the orchestra varies from bitter hatred to virtual worship." Then of Boston's own leader, it goes on: "Koussevitsky, one of the few leading conductors who is not a martinet, has a unique relationship with his orchestra men. He is reported to be patient and generally kindly during rehearsals, although, like Toscanini and Stokowski, he is a demon for perfection. The men not only respect him—they adore him."....

BURGIN LEADS SYMPHONY

Of Conductors

Stokowski's Resignation Raises Issue of the Great Versus Merely Adequate Conductor

By EDWARD DOWNES

He has already "resigned" so many times from the Philadelphia Orchestra, it is hard to believe that this time Stokowski has made a final break with the organization which he brought to be named among the three greatest in the world. At any rate his announcement this week had an air of greater finality than ever before. If Stokowski does leave the orchestra his loss will be great. But Philadelphia's loss will be greater. Reasons for the conductor's departure are not given. Either, apparently, Stokowski is asking more for his services than the orchestra board is willing to pay, or they consider him difficult to work with, or both. I am not implying that Stokowski has been discharged. There are much subtler ways of getting rid of an artist than that if he has become persona non grata to the powers that be. Besides, it would not redound to the credit of the Phildelphia Orchestra to have it said that they had fired Stokowski.

Whatever the reasons (unless they are utterly fantastic) it seems to me that the Philadelphia Orchestra will be very foolish to let their brilliant conductor go, even though in the past few seasons he has been only guest conductor.

There exists an unfortunate impression in the minds of many boards of orchestras, to say nothing of opera companies, that the difference between a thoroughly competent, routined conductor and the great conductor, is a lot of fol-de-rol, hero-worship and publicity.

Nothing could be a more natural mistake for a board of directors to make, since usually the majority of such a board are musicians only in the amateur sense if at all, and no idea could be more harmful to the orchestra or opera company they control. Often it is a false sense of economy which brings the decision to part company with a great conductor. First, because an artist of lesser reputation will gratefully accept a smaller salary. Second, the lesser artist, not having such a high standard for himself, may not demand so many expensive rehearsals. Finally it will be easier to check any special projects he may have in mind which would cost the organiztion extra money.

Art and Money

Of course what really happens after firing or bringing the inconvenient great conductor to resign, is that the artistic standard of the organization declines, reputation declines, public attendance declines, box-office falls off, financial and social backers are hard to find for mediocre performances, and in the end more money is lost than could have been spent on the most demanding of conductors.

There have been famous examples of this. When Toscanini resigned from the Metropolitan Opera (for reasons never satisfactorily explained), the artistic standards of the "Met" started on a downward coast which lasted nearly twenty years. Toscanini is known to be relentless in his rehearsal demands. After he left, the Metropolitan slipped into a more and more comfortable routine, the machine moved smoothly and economically, boxholders made the pleasant discovery that there were no great deficits to pay—and the artistic results were catastrophic.

Mr. Johnson has struggled nobly since he became general manager of the company, against the dead weight of the past twenty years, and the "Met" is fast recovering its old prestige. The most interesting thing about this recovery is that it has nothing whatsoever to do with the voices on the stage. It has to do first and foremost with the ensemble spirit. And that comes only from adequate rehearsing under a better than competent conductor.

The largest single step the Metropolitan has taken toward its former high standing has been, significantly enough, the engagement this season of Bruno Walter to conduct "Fidelio" "Don Giovanni" and "The Bartered Bride." By common critical consent, both 'Fidelio" and "Don Giovanni" were revealed to New York in their full stature, for the first time in decades, in the full measure of their power and beauty. The Boston performance of "Don Giovanni" with Bruno Walter conducting is one of the most eagerly awaited of the entire Metropolitan visit.

The years when Toscanini was with the New York Philharmonic Symphony were golden. Then suddenly he was gone. Those who valued comfort above art were not sorry to see him go, and he was succeeded by a gifted young man, who found himself distressingly out of his depth in dealing with the Philharmonic and with New York audiences. He is a competent, rather more than competent conductor and undeniably talented. But unfortunately not talented enough. The error of supposing that a well-meaning minor musician can in any way replace a great musician, has seldom been more devastatingly exhibited than in the present plight of the Philharmonic, which shows at the box-office as well as in the columns of the press.

No orchestra can be greater than its conductor. No matter how magnificent an instrument it may be, it will, like any delicate tool, dull with unskillful use. Conductorless orchestras, a passing fad in New York and other cities, showed conclusively the absurdity of the idea that the players alone make the orchestra.

Working Miracles

On the other hand, the speed with which a great conductor can work miracles wherever he takes hold is breathtaking. There are two performances of Strauss's "Der Rosenkavalier" which I shall never forget, because they were conducted by Strauss himself.

The repertory of the Munich Opera I was fairly familiar with, and I especially liked their "Rosenkavalier," which caught the spirit of the work and was infinitely superior to any "Rosenkavalier" I had seen in this country. Only one thing bothered me. Strauss had often spoken of the Mozartean character of "Rosenkavalier," but aside from the duet at the end of the opera most of it seemed to me more like Wagner than Mozart.

Then Strauss came into the orchestra pit, and the whole opera was transformed. The delicacy, precision and lightness of the orchestra were such that at times it was as if a first-rate string quartet had been playing. I have heard "Der Rosenkavalier" many times before and since, but those two performances were the only ones which could compare to Mozart in spirit as well as in weight of sound.

Here in Boston we have seen on a grander scale the beneficial workings of a great conductor. After the difficult years of the first World War, and those immediately succeeding, Serge Koussevitzky brought the Boston Symphony back to its former brilliance as the finest orchestra in the world, and has kept it there.

For the Philadelphia Orchestra I am afraid that the departure of Stokowski bodes no good. He may be difficult to get along with. He probably is. He may indulge now and then in prima donna antics. He may make you squirm with an occasional orgy of bad taste (I have not yet recovered from "Fantasia"). But he is a great artist and the Philadelphia Orchestra will not soon find themselves his equal.

Music Notes

The Boston Symphony will give its 19th pair of concerts of the Friday afternoon and Saturday evening series on March 21 and 22 in Symphony Hall, and will give the last concert, but one, of the Cambridge series on the previous Thursday evening, March 20.

Richard Burgin will conduct the three concerts. Two noted violinists will appear as soloists: Nathan Milstein in Boston and Ruth Posselt in Cambridge.

For the Boston program, Mr. Burgin announces the first performance of the organ "Prelude and Fugue" in C major, No. 17 of Bach, which Serge Koussevitzky has arranged for wind instruments. The Symphony in B flat major of Ernest Chausson will complete the first part of the program. The second part will consist of two works by Igor Stravinsky: his violin concerto which has not been heard here since it was first performed. The closing number will be the suite from "Petrouchka."

At the Cambridge concert, Miss Posselt will be heard in the violin concerto of Walter Piston. The program will also include the Bach-Koussevitsky prelude and fugue in C major, Mendelssohn's "Italian" Symphony, and the "Petrouchka" suite.

Symphony Concert

Milstein Soloist in Stravinsky Concerto—Koussevitzky Transcription of Bach Fugue

A PROGRAM which stretched across three centuries was presented yesterday afternoon by Richard Burgin and the Boston Symphony, while Serge Koussevitzky, who is taking a week's rest from the labors of an arduous season, applauded from his seat in the balcony of Symphony Hall. The soloist was Nathan Milstein, who played a work of which violinists are rather shy: the Stravinsky Concerto in D. The ever-youthful "Petrouchka" music of Stravinsky was the climax of the concert, though the Chausson Symphony in B flat major, one of Mr. Burgin's warhorses, was presented with warmth and affection.

A none too skillful performance of Koussevitzky's own transcription of a Bach Organ Prelude and Fugue in C major opened the program. Yet the transcription itself, for wind and brass instruments, is a masterpiece. Firmly turning his back on the pompous neo-romantic thunders and the offensive rhetoric with which Respighi, Stokowski and a dozen other Bach arrangers have smudged the purity of Bach's musical language, Koussevitzky has listened to the inner spirit of the great Leipzig Cantor, and given it a voice eloquent in its restraint, and as near stylistic perfection as can be expected when a modern orchestra speaks for the 18th century organ.

Throughout, the timbres have the bite and clarity typical of the Baroque organ. Reedy voices predominate: oboes, English horn, bassoons, together with skilfully used flutes and piccolo. The clarinets, practically unknown in Bach's day, are kept carefully in the background, and even the brass is used with rare discretion. Subtly balanced sonorities, a cunning architectural dynamic, result not in a musicological tout de force, but a sensitive, glowing projection of the spirit of Bach into the concert hall.

Mr. Burgin's baton and the playing of the orchestra inclined to be wooden, angular, observant of the letter rather than the spirit of the music.

Chausson Symphony Played

The Chausson Symphony was another story. Lush music it is, with the weaknesses of a too facile eloquence and expansive rather than deep emotion. Yet it is heady music, too: rich in color, with temperamental sweep and the courage of its not very important convictions. Mr. Burgin conducted it the only way it can be conducted: with heart and soul mounting gallantly to each of its many effective climaxes, with honest, unrestrained lyricism.

Like all of Stravinsky's late works, the Violin Concerto is intellectually interesting. The deft hand of a master is visible throughout, obtaining, you feel sure, exactly the effects intended. As Stravinsky himself has said, it is spare and concentrated. The opening Toccata, the final Capriccio have that rythmic vitality which has never deserted Stravinsky, even in his most arid moments.

The final pages contain more than a hint of the remote "Sacre du Printemps." Both first and last movements have a drive and pregnancy of utterance that grip your attention. On the other hand the middle movements, Aria I and Aria II are finicking super-subtleties, interesting perhaps as paper music, but pale and enemic to the ear.

Mr. Milstein played the concerto with apparent zest, enthusiasm and a polished technique. He also played with charm and what emotion the music allowed. His composure was not disturbed even when one of the strings of his violin snapped in mid-movement, necessitating a hasty change of instruments with Mr. Theodorowicz, the concert master. At the close of the concerto he was recalled many times for warm applause.

The gulf which separates "Petrouchka" from the Stravinsky of the Violin Concerto seems today greater than that which separates "Petrouchka" from the Chausson Symphony. But the lasting enthusiasm for "Petrouchka" comes not only from the relative familiarity of its idiom. It springs from the public's sound recognition of the originality, the passion and the compassion of this music, the excitement and vitality of Stravinsky's imagination at a time when his emotions were no less active than his mind.

Excepting only the Bach Prelude and Fugue, "Petrouchka" was the most youthful music of the afternoon and the climax to one of Mr. Burgin's most rewarding concerts.

E. D.

THE BOSTON HERALD 1941

Milstein

nphony

Nathan Milstein, violinist, who will be the soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Stravinsky concerto for violin and orchestra at the Friday afternoon and Saturday evening concerts this week.

BURGIN LEADS SYMPHONY

Of Conductors

Stokowski's Resignation Raises Issue of the Great Versus Merely Adequate Conductor

By EDWARD DOWNES

He has already "resigned" so many times from the Philadelphia Orchestra, it is hard to believe that this time Stokowski has made a final break with the organization which he brought to be named among the three greatest in the world. At any rate his announcement this week had an air of greater finality than ever before. If Stokowski does leave the orchestra his loss will be great. But Philadelphia's loss will be greater. Reasons for the conductor's departure are not given. Either, apparently, Stokowski is asking more for his services than the orchestra board is willing to pay, or they consider him difficult to work with, or both. I am not implying that Stokowski has been discharged. There are much subtler ways of getting rid of an artist than that if he has become persona non grata to the powers that be. Besides, it would not redound to the credit of the Phildelphia Orchestra to have it said that they had fired Stokowski.

Whatever the reasons (unless they are utterly fantastic) it seems to me that the Philadelphia Orchestra will be very foolish to let their brilliant conductor go, even though in the past few seasons he has been only guest conductor.

There exists an unfortunate impression in the minds of many boards of orchestras, to say nothing of opera companies, that the difference between a thoroughly competent, routined conductor and the great conductor, is a lot of fol-de-rol, hero-worship and publicity.

Nothing could be a more natural mistake for a board of directors to make, since usually the majority of such a board are musicians only in the amateur sense if at all, and no idea could be more harmful to the orchestra or opera company they control. Often it is a false sense of economy which brings the decision to part company with a great conductor. First, because an artist of lesser reputation will gratefully accept a smaller salary. Second, the lesser artist, not having such a high standard for himself, may not demand so many expensive rehearsals. Finally it will be easier to check any special projects he may have in mind which would cost the organiztion extra money.

Art and Money

Of course what really happens after firing or bringing the inconvenient great conductor to resign, is that the artistic standard of the organization declines, reputation declines, public attendance declines, box-office falls off, financial and social backers are hard to find for mediocre performances, and in the end more money is lost than could have been spent on the most demanding of conductors.

There have been famous examples of this. When Toscanini resigned from the Metropolitan Opera (for reasons never satisfactorily explained), the artistic standards of the "Met" started on a downward coast which lasted nearly twenty years. Toscanini is known to be relentless in his rehearsal demands. After he left, the Metropolitan slipped into a more and more comfortable routine, the machine moved smoothly and economically, boxholders made the pleasant discovery that there were no great deficits to pay—and the artistic results were catastrophic.

Mr. Johnson has struggled nobly since he became general manager of the company, against the dead weight of the past twenty years, and the "Met" is fast recovering its old prestige. The most interesting thing about this recovery is that it has nothing whatsoever to do with the voices on the stage. It has to do first and foremost with the ensemble spirit. And that comes only from adequate rehearsing under a better than competent conductor.

The largest single step the Metropolitan has taken toward its former high standing has been, significantly enough, the engagement this season of Bruno Walter to conduct "Fidelio" "Don Giovanni" and "The Bartered Bride." By common critical consent, both 'Fidelio" and "Don Giovanni" were revealed to New York in their full stature, for the first time in decades, in the full measure of their power and beauty. The Boston performance of "Don Giovanni" with Bruno Walter conducting is one of the most eagerly awaited of the entire Metropolitan visit.

The years when Toscanini was with the New York Philharmonic Symphony were golden. Then suddenly he was gone. Those who valued comfort above art were not sorry to see him go, and he was succeeded by a gifted young man, who found himself distressingly out of his depth in dealing with the Philharmonic and with New York audiences. He is a competent, rather more than competent conductor and undeniably talented. But unfortunately not talented enough. The error of supposing that a well-meaning minor musician can in any way replace a great musician, has seldom been more devastatingly exhibited than in the present plight of the Philharmonic, which shows at the box-office as well as in the columns of the press.

No orchestra can be greater than its conductor. No matter how magnificent an instrument it may be, it will, like any delicate tool, dull with unskillful use. Conductorless orchestras, a passing fad in New York and other cities, showed conclusively the absurdity of the idea that the players alone make the orchestra.

Working Miracles

On the other hand, the speed with which a great conductor can work miracles wherever he takes hold is breathtaking. There are two performances of Strauss's "Der Rosenkavalier" which I shall never forget, because they were conducted by Strauss himself.

The repertory of the Munich Opera I was fairly familiar with, and I especially liked their "Rosenkavalier," which caught the spirit of the work and was infinitely superior to any "Rosenkavalier" I had seen in this country. Only one thing bothered me. Strauss had often spoken of the Mozartean character of "Rosenkavalier," but aside from the duet at the end of the opera most of it seemed to me more like Wagner than Mozart.

Then Strauss came into the orchestra pit, and the whole opera was transformed. The delicacy, precision and lightness of the orchestra were such that at times it was as if a first-rate string quartet had been playing. I have heard "Der Rosenkavalier" many times before and since, but those two performances were the only ones which could compare to Mozart in spirit as well as in weight of sound.

Here in Boston we have seen on a grander scale the beneficial workings of a great conductor. After the difficult years of the first World War, and those immediately succeeding, Serge Koussevitzky brought the Boston Symphony back to its former brilliance as the finest orchestra in the world, and has kept it there.

For the Philadelphia Orchestra I am afraid that the departure of Stokowski bodes no good. He may be difficult to get along with. He probably is. He may indulge now and then in prima donna antics. He may make you squirm with an occasional orgy of bad taste (I have not yet recovered from "Fantasia"). But he is a great artist and the Philadelphia Orchestra will not soon find themselves his equal.

Music Notes

The Boston Symphony will give its 19th pair of concerts of the Friday afternoon and Saturday evening series on March 21 and 22 in Symphony Hall, and will give the last concert, but one, of the Cambridge series on the previous Thursday evening, March 20.

Richard Burgin will conduct the three concerts. Two noted violinists will appear as soloists: Nathan Milstein in Boston and Ruth Posselt in Cambridge.

For the Boston program, Mr. Burgin announces the first performance of the organ "Prelude and Fugue" in C major, No. 17 of Bach, which Serge Koussevitzky has arranged for wind instruments. The Symphony in B flat major of Ernest Chausson will complete the first part of the program. The second part will consist of two works by Igor Stravinsky: his violin concerto which has not been heard here since it was first performed. The closing number will be the suite from "Petrouchka."

At the Cambridge concert, Miss Posselt will be heard in the violin concerto of Walter Piston. The program will also include the Bach-Koussevitsky prelude and fugue in C major, Mendelssohn's "Italian" Symphony, and the "Petrouchka" suite.

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS. GAZETTE
MAR 20 1941

Conductor

Serge Koussevitzky (above) will conduct Boston Symphony Orchestra Tuesday night in its Auditorium concert.

Concert Tuesday In Auditorium

Boston Symphony Orchestra will be presented in the Auditorium by Worcester Civic Music Association at 8.15 p. m. Tuesday. The concert will be the seventh and final one of the association's eleventh season. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct.

The program will feature works of three composers, Schubert, Prokofieff, and Tchaikowsky. It will open with Schubert's "Unfinished" Symphony in B minor; Allegro moderato and Andante con moto. The Prokofieff compositions will be "Lieutenant Kije," Orchestra Suite, Op. 60; Birth of Kije, Romance, Kije's Wedding, Troika and Burial of Kije.

After an intermission, the orchestra will play Tchaikowsky's Symphony No. 5 in E minor, Op. 64; Andante: Allegro con anima, Andante cantabile, con alcuna licenza, Vlase (Allegro moderato), and Finale (Andante maestoso); Allegro vivace.

This Clipping From
HOLYOKE, MASS. TRANSCRIPT TELEGRAM
MAR 19 1941

KOUSSEVITZKY ARRANGEMENT TO BE PLAYED

BOSTON—For the first time in his 17 years with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Conductor Serge Koussevitzky will have his name on the program this week as arranger-composer, it was learned today. At the Friday and Saturday concerts, Koussevitzky's arrangement of Bach's "Prelude and Fugue in C Major for Organ" will be played by the 20 members of the orchestra's wind instrument section with Assistant Conductor Richard Burgin directing.

Milstein with Symphony

Nathan Milstein, violinist, who will be the soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Stravinsky concerto for violin and orchestra at the Friday afternoon and Saturday evening concerts this week.

Symphony Plays Koussevitzky Arrangement of Bach Prelude

THE BOSTON HERALD, SATURDAY, MARCH 22, 1941

MUSIC

By ALEXANDER WILLIAMS

Symphony Concert

The 19th concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Richard Burgin conducting, was given yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. Nathan Milstein, violinist, was the soloist. The program was as follows:

Prelude and Fugue for organ in C major, No. 17 (transcribed for wind orchestra by Serge Koussevitzky) ... Bach
Symphony in B flat major, Op. 20 ... Chausson
Concerto in D for violin and orchestra ... Stravinsky
Suite from the Ballet "Petrouchka" ... Stravinsky

Mr. Koussevitzky has made a very interesting and successful arrangement of the Bach Prelude and Fugue for an orchestra entirely of wind instruments. As transcriptions go it could be called an object lesson for Mr. Stokowski and others who have worked their naughty will on Bach. It also brings out what is perhaps Mr. Koussevitzky's greatest virtue as a conductor, namely his marvellously sensitive ear for instrumental sonorities.

Listened to purely for sound, this transcription is fascinating. Bach's music, so wonderfully designed for the lovely tone of the organs of his day—quite different from most of our 19th century church organs—is admirably set forth in this orchestral version. Mr. Koussevitzky made the arrangement in 1936, so that he could not have had the excellent modern organ of so-called baroque design in mind as a model for his instrumentation. Nevertheless the result sounds something like Bach when played on the Germanic Museum organ. It is beautifully clear, so that the contrapuntal lines are not obscured by masses of string tone.

The public will probably note that you do not get in this arrangement the massiveness and loud climaxes of certain other versions. This is all to the good, for you do get something like the real Bach. The instruments sound so well together—that again is the gist of the matter. Finally, the transcription served to show what a phenomenally fine band of woodwind and brass instruments we possess here in Boston. At Mr. Burgin's insistence Mr. Koussevitzky bowed deprecatingly from the balcony.

Stravinsky's Violin Concerto may not be quite so good a concerto as those by Prokofieff, Hindemith or Walter Piston, all of which have been heard recently here. But it is still an interesting piece of music. The Toccata and the perky Capriccio are the best movements. The two Arias are an unusual experiment, which is more rewarding to study than to hear. Possibly it is unfair to compare this Concerto with other works in the same field, for it is not like any other.

In it Stravinsky is forever groping and experimenting with various combinations of instruments, timbres and the like. He seems not to care that a soloist is going to have to play it before an audience. "What of it?" might be the motto at the top of the title page. Yet we were glad to hear it; we willingly followed Mr. Stravinsky wherever he would lead. Many critics have been crying out that the later Stravinsky's inspiration and vitality are played out. But even his driest works, of which this is one, bob up again and hold the attention.

Mr. Milstein is one of our best violinists, of whom there is no lack today. (Would that we could change some of them into singers whom we need so badly!) He plays almost as effortlessly as breathing, with good tone and supple rhythm. It was just the playing needed for this Concerto. Mr. Milstein further showed his resourcefulness when he broke a string in the finale. He quickly seized Mr. Theodorowicz's violin and carried on without a hitch. There was much applause at the end.

There is little space to discuss the other music on the program, and in any case they do not require it. We all know and love "Petrouchka" and consequently let nothing mar our enjoyment yesterday. The Chausson Symphony is in its way good to hear, especially the first movement. It is too Wagnerian in spots and of course too much like Franck; but for all that it has its place in the orchestral repertoire.

The concert will be repeated tonight. Next week Mr. Koussevitzky will conduct Mozart's Symphony in G minor and Liszt's Faust Symphony.

EVENING TRANSCRIPT, FRIDAY, MARCH 21, 1941

MUSIC

Symphony

Burgin Conducts Cambridge Concert

Richard Burgin conducted last evening's sound and musicianly, but never very exhilarating, concert by the Boston Symphony in Sanders Theater, the program consisting of the first performance of the Koussevitzky-Bach Prelude and Fugue in C minor, Mendelssohn's "Italian" Symphony, Piston's Violin Concerto with Ruth Posselt as soloist, and the orchestral suite from Stravinsky's "Petrouchka."

Koussevitzky's transcription of the Bach prelude and fugue, scored for only woodwinds and brass, is delightful. The grandiosity encountered in so many other modern Bach orchestrations is happily missing. The voices of the five-part fugue are much more readily followed than in many a more pretentious version. Not only that, but, as Mr. Downes pointed out in his preview of the music in yesterday's Transcript, it comes much closer to the spirit of Bach than the frequent swollen versions of the master we hear today.

Apart from the Bach, the most rewarding performance of the evening was that of the Piston Concerto which the brilliant Miss Posselt played with fine bravura and musicianship. Conductor and orchestra provided an always sympathetic accompaniment. Mr. Piston's music, without being profound, is decidedly appealing with its learning and grace and humor and pleasant emotional content.

Thoughtful as it was, Mr. Burgin's reading of the "Italian" Symphony was on the ponderous side. The first and last movements had more nervous energy than natural exuberance, and the slow movement seemed too little varied. Isn't it time, anyway, that we hear the "Scotch" or "Reformation" Symphony of Mendelssohn rather than the familiar "Italian"?

The "Petrouchka" suite made a stunning close to the concert, even though its bright colors were a little subdued last evening.

M. H.

Milstein Symphony Soloist

By L. A. Sloper

For the nineteenth pair of Boston Symphony concerts, the first of which was given yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky relinquished the baton to Richard Burgin. The conductor was represented, however, by his transcription for wind orchestra of Bach's Organ Prelude and Fugue in C major (No. 17). This is the third time Dr. Koussevitzky has appeared before us as a composer. We had previously heard the Overture he wrote for the orchestra's fiftieth anniversary, and his Doublebass Concerto, in which he played the solo part.

Dr. Koussevitzky, of course, would be the last to pretend that as composer he rivals himself as conductor. But his compositions have been undertaken because of a particular interest; and, given his imagination and his knowledge of the orchestra, it is natural that they should be competently made and worth hearing.

The notable feature of this transcription is its chaste restraint. It might have been expected by some listeners that in view of Dr. Koussevitzky's great reputation as a conductor of romantic music, he would let himself go in the manner of certain other Bach transcribers, and shake the walls. Such listeners would have forgotten that his keen sense of style has made him as famous for his interpretation of classical as of romantic composers. It is not surprising, therefore, to find him employing for this score a modest group of woodwind and brass, and using them with a discretion that preserves the line and emphasizes the structure of the original. If a complaint were to be registered, it might be that there was too much restraint.

Mr. Burgin secured an excellent performance, and the distinguished composer bowed from the balcony in response to the warm applause.

Another exceptional item was Stravinsky's Violin Concerto in D, played this time by Nathan Milstein. The work was played at these concerts nine years ago, for the first time in America. Samuel Dushkin was then the soloist.

It was interesting to hear this concerto again. It represents the composer at the height of his technical brilliance. It is a highly characteristic work, reminiscent of nobody but Stravinsky. The rhythmic pattern is that which has now become so familiar as to constitute a signature. The melodic fragments and the instrumental colors recall the early works like "Petrouchka." The most interesting movement musically is the first. The two "Arias" that follow are rather dry. The last movement is the liveliest, the most readily appealing.

The performance was as brilliant as the score. Mr. Milstein played the difficult solo part with easy mastery, and not even the breaking of a string in the last movement could disconcert him. He quickly exchanged violins with the concertmaster, conferred briefly with Mr. Burgin, and resumed. Mr. Burgin, in his turn, obtained a good performance of the orchestral portion, which is far more than an accompaniment. Only in the last movement was there a little rhythmical uncertainty in the wind choirs.

The other numbers on the program were Chausson's Symphony, eloquently played, and "Petrouchka."

FINE CONCERT AT SYMPHONY

Transcription of Bach Is Applauded

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

Dr. Koussevitzky was present in two capacities at yesterday's Symphony Concert, neither of them his accustomed one. Concert-master, Richard Burgin conducted (for the second time this season) and the conductor-in-chief, as a member of the audience, acknowledged the plaudits bestowed upon his transcription for wind instruments of Bach's Organ Prelude and Fugue in C major, No. 17.

Before commenting upon the new transcription it is in order to mention the other events of the afternoon. Nathan Milstein, violinist of exceptional powers, appeared as soloist in the second Boston performance of Stravinsky's Violin Concerto, which received its American premiere at Symphony Hall on Jan. 1, 1932. Between this concerto and the Bach-Koussevitzky item there came the Symphony of Chausson, of which Mr. Burgin has been the only Symphony Hall exponent since Dr. Koussevitzky's coming, and the concert ended with another Stravinsky piece, the Suite from the ballet, "Petrouchka."

Nor is this the whole of the "news story." In the Finale of the Concerto, Mr. Milstein had the misfortune to break a string. As is customary when such accidents occur, he handed his violin to acting concertmaster, Julius Theodorowicz, who proffered his in return. Then Mr. Theodorowicz and his desk-mate, Robert Gundersen, exchanged fiddles and the latter went to work as repair man. In the meantime, Mr. Burgin had stopped the orchestra and when he had decided upon a suitable place at which to recommence operations the concerto continued on its way. Since Mr. Milstein was continuously engaged from this point until the end he was unable to retrieve his own violin, but he seemed to get along just as well with the borrowed one.

There are two schools of thought upon this matter of transcribing Bach's organ works for orchestra. The purists hold that it should not be done, while the opposition claims that the innate magnificence of the music justifies symphonic treatment and that the majority of listeners will hear these pieces only when thus transformed. Since wind instruments more closely approximate the tone of the organ than do the strings, Dr. Koussevitzky was minded to experiment with a transcription for the former only. The chief impediment to the success of this venture lay in the weakness of his bass. He had a contrabassoon, to be sure, but a bass tuba would have helped. After all, if one is going to orchestrate the Bach organ pieces, the full orchestra will come nearer supplying the effect of a full organ than the woodwinds and brass alone.

Despite the relative weakness of the third and final movement, Chausson's Symphony deserves an occasional hearing. It may derive from Franck and Wagner, but the result is neither Franck nor Wagner, so that the piece fills a niche of its own in the repertory. The performance was a fine one.

To call Stravinsky's Concerto dry is not to say that it is dull. The former term may be applied to champagne and to good Rhine wine. After the heaviness and lushness of Chausson the concerto was singularly refreshing. The work seemed both clearer and more satisfying than when it was heard here before and the performance was certainly a much better one.

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR

BOSTON, FRIDAY, MARCH 21, 1941

The Maestro Relaxes While 'The Band Plays On'

By a Staff Photographer

An Unusual Photographic Shot of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, Conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra

Here Dr. Koussevitzky is seen listening while somebody else conducts. He was caught by the photographer thus relaxing after a tour, while Richard Burgin, Assistant Conductor, was on the podium. Toward the left of Dr. Koussevitzky is Bernard Zighera, first harpist of the Orchestra and conductor of the Zighera Orchestra.

Symphony Plays Koussevitzky Arrangement of Bach Prelude

THE BOSTON HERALD, SATURDAY, MARCH 22, 1941

MUSIC

By ALEXANDER WILLIAMS

Symphony Concert

The 19th concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Richard Burgin conducting, was given yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. Nathan Milstein, violinist, was the soloist. The program was as follows:

Prelude and Fugue for organ in C major, No. 17 (transcribed for wind orchestra by Serge Koussevitzky .... Bach
Symphony in B flat major, Op. 20.Chausson
Concerto in D for violin and orchestra Stravinsky
Suite from the Ballet "Petrouchka" Stravinsky

Mr. Koussevitzky has made a very interesting and successful arrangement of the Bach Prelude and Fugue for an orchestra entirely of wind instruments. As transcriptions go it could be called an object lesson for Mr. Stokowski and others who have worked their naughty will on Bach. It also brings out what is perhaps Mr. Koussevitzky's greatest virtue as a conductor, namely his marvellously sensitive ear for instrumental sonorities.

Listened to purely for sound, this transcription is fascinating. Bach's music, so wonderfully designed for the lovely tone of the organs of his day—quite different from most of our 19th century church organs—is admirably set forth in this orchestral version. Mr. Koussevitzky made the arrangement in 1936, so that he could not have had the excellent modern organ of so-called baroque design in mind as a model for his instrumentation. Nevertheless the result sounds something like Bach when played on the Germanic Museum organ. It is beautifully clear, so that the contrapuntal lines are not obscured by masses of string tone.

The public will probably note that you do not get in this arrangement the massiveness and loud climaxes of certain other versions. This is all to the good, for you do get something like the real Bach. The instruments sound so well together—that again is the gist of the matter. Finally, the transcription served to show what a phenomenally fine band of woodwind and brass instruments we possess here in Boston. At Mr. Burgin's insistence Mr. Koussevitzky bowed deprecatingly from the balcony.

Stravinsky's Violin Concerto may not be quite so good a concerto as those by Prokofieff, Hindemith or Walter Piston, all of which have been heard recently here. But it is still an interesting piece of music. The Toccata and the perky Capriccio are the best movements. The two Arias are an unusual experiment, which is more rewarding to study than to hear. Possibly it is unfair to compare this Concerto with other works in the same field, for it is not like any other.

In it Stravinsky is forever groping and experimenting with various combinations of instruments, timbres and the like. He seems not to care that a soloist is going to have to play it before an audience. "What of it?" might be the motto at the top of the title page. Yet we were glad to hear it; we willingly followed Mr. Stravinsky wherever he would lead. Many critics have been crying out that the later Stravinsky's inspiration and vitality are played out. But even his driest works, of which this is one, bob up again and hold the attention.

Mr. Milstein is one of our best violinists, of whom there is no lack today. (Would that we could change some of them into singers whom we need so badly!) He plays almost as effortlessly as breathing, with good tone and supple rhythm. It was just the playing needed for this Concerto. Mr. Milstein further showed his resourcefulness when he broke a string in the finale. He quickly seized Mr. Theodorowicz's violin and carried on without a hitch. There was much applause at the end.

There is little space to discuss the other music on the program, and in any case they do not require it. We all know and love "Petrouchka" and consequently let nothing mar our enjoyment yesterday. The Chausson Symphony is in its way good to hear, especially the first movement. It is too Wagnerian in spots and of course too much like Franck; but for all that it has its place in the orchestral repertoire.

The concert will be repeated tonight. Next week Mr. Koussevitzky will conduct Mozart's Symphony in G minor and Liszt's Faust Symphony.

EVENING TRANSCRIPT, FRIDAY, MARCH 21, 1941

MUSIC

Symphony

Burgin Conducts Cambridge Concert

Richard Burgin conducted last evening's sound and musicianly, but never very exhilarating, concert by the Boston Symphony in Sanders Theater, the program consisting of the first performance of the Koussevitzky-Bach Prelude and Fugue in C minor, Mendelssohn's "Italian" Symphony, Piston's Violin Concerto with Ruth Posselt as soloist, and the orchestral suite from Stravinsky's "Petrouchka."

Koussevitzky's transcription of the Bach prelude and fugue, scored for only woodwinds and brass, is delightful. The grandiosity encountered in so many other modern Bach orchestrations is happily missing. The voices of the five-part fugue are much more readily followed than in many a more pretentious version. Not only that, but, as Mr. Downes pointed out in his preview of the music in yesterday's Transcript, it comes much closer to the spirit of Bach than the frequent swollen versions of the master we hear today.

Apart from the Bach, the most rewarding performance of the evening was that of the Piston Concerto which the brilliant Miss Posselt played with fine bravura and musicianship. Conductor and orchestra provided an always sympathetic accompaniment. Mr. Piston's music, without being profound, is decidedly appealing with its learning and grace and humor and pleasant emotional content.

Thoughtful as it was, Mr. Burgin's reading of the "Italian" Symphony was on the ponderous side. The first and last movements had more nervous energy than natural exuberance, and the slow movement seemed too little varied. Isn't it time, anyway, that we hear the "Scotch" or "Reformation" Symphony of Mendelssohn rather than the familiar "Italian"?

The "Petrouchka" suite made a stunning close to the concert, even though its bright colors were a little subdued last evening.

M. H.

Milstein Symphony Soloist

By L. A. Sloper

For the nineteenth pair of Boston Symphony concerts, the first of which was given yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky relinquished the baton to Richard Burgin. The conductor was represented, however, by his transcription for wind orchestra of Bach's Organ Prelude and Fugue in C major (No. 17). This is the third time Dr. Koussevitzky has appeared before us as a composer. We had previously heard the Overture he wrote for the orchestra's fiftieth anniversary, and his Doublebass Concerto, in which he played the solo part.

Dr. Koussevitzky, of course, would be the last to pretend that as composer he rivals himself as conductor. But his compositions have been undertaken because of a particular interest; and, given his imagination and his knowledge of the orchestra, it is natural that they should be competently made and worth hearing.

The notable feature of this transcription is its chaste restraint. It might have been expected by some listeners that in view of Dr. Koussevitzky's great reputation as a conductor of romantic music, he would let himself go in the manner of certain other Bach transcribers, and shake the walls. Such listeners would have forgotten that his keen sense of style has made him as famous for his interpretation of classical as of romantic composers. It is not surprising, therefore, to find him employing for this score a modest group of woodwind and brass, and using them with a discretion that preserves the line and emphasizes the structure of the original. If a complaint were to be registered, it might be that there was too much restraint.

Mr. Burgin secured an excellent performance, and the distinguished composer bowed from the balcony in response to the warm applause.

Another exceptional item was Stravinsky's Violin Concerto in D, played this time by Nathan Milstein. The work was played at these concerts nine years ago, for the first time in America. Samuel Dushkin was then the soloist.

It was interesting to hear this concerto again. It represents the composer at the height of his technical brilliance. It is a highly characteristic work, reminiscent of nobody but Stravinsky. The rhythmic pattern is that which has now become so familiar as to constitute a signature. The melodic fragments and the instrumental colors recall the early works like "Petrouchka." The most interesting movement musically is the first. The two "Arias" that follow are rather dry. The last movement is the liveliest, the most readily appealing.

The performance was as brilliant as the score. Mr. Milstein played the difficult solo part with easy mastery, and not even the breaking of a string in the last movement could disconcert him. He quickly exchanged violins with the concertmaster, conferred briefly with Mr. Burgin, and resumed. Mr. Burgin, in his turn, obtained a good performance of the orchestral portion, which is far more than an accompaniment. Only in the last movement was there a little rhythmical uncertainty in the wind choirs.

The other numbers on the program were Chausson's Symphony, eloquently played, and "Petrouchka."

FINE CONCERT AT SYMPHONY

Transcription of Bach Is Applauded

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

Dr. Koussevitzky was present in two capacities at yesterday's Symphony Concert, neither of them his accustomed one. Concert-master, Richard Burgin conducted (for the second time this season) and the conductor-in-chief, as a member of the audience, acknowledged the plaudits bestowed upon his transcription for wind instruments of Bach's Organ Prelude and Fugue in C major, No. 17.

Before commenting upon the new transcription it is in order to mention the other events of the afternoon. Nathan Milstein, violinist of exceptional powers, appeared as soloist in the second Boston performance of Stravinsky's Violin Concerto, which received its American premiere at Symphony Hall on Jan. 1, 1932. Between this concerto and the Bach-Koussevitzky item there came the Symphony of Chausson, of which Mr. Burgin has been the only Symphony Hall exponent since Dr. Koussevitzky's coming, and the concert ended with another Stravinsky piece, the Suite from the ballet, "Petrouchka."

Nor is this the whole of the "news story." In the Finale of the Concerto, Mr. Milstein had the misfortune to break a string. As is customary when such accidents occur, he handed his violin to acting concertmaster, Julius Theodorowicz, who proffered his in return. Then Mr. Theodorowicz and his desk-mate, Robert Gundersen, exchanged fiddles and the latter went to work as repair man. In the meantime, Mr. Burgin had stopped the orchestra and when he had decided upon a suitable place at which to recommence operations the concerto continued on its way. Since Mr. Milstein was continuously engaged from this point until the end he was unable to retrieve his own violin, but he seemed to get along just as well with the borrowed one.

There are two schools of thought upon this matter of transcribing Bach's organ works for orchestra. The purists hold that it should not be done, while the opposition claims that the innate magnificence of the music justifies symphonic treatment and that the majority of listeners will hear these pieces only when thus transformed. Since wind instruments more closely approximate the tone of the organ than do the strings, Dr. Koussevitzky was minded to experiment with a transcription for the former only. The chief impediment to the success of this venture lay in the weakness of his bass. He had a contrabassoon, to be sure, but a bass tuba would have helped. After all, if one is going to orchestrate the Bach organ pieces, the full orchestra will come nearer supplying the effect of a full organ than [illegible] brass

[illegible] a husband who believes in an eye
[illegible]g the other cheek. The meek as [illegible]om the Moon."
[illegible] have captured the [illegible]

term may be applied to champagne and to good Rhine wine. After the heaviness and lushness of Chausson the concerto was singularly refreshing. The work seemed both clearer and more satisfying than when it was heard here before and the performance was certainly a much better one.

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR

BOSTON, FRIDAY, MARCH 21, 1941

The Maestro Relaxes While 'The Band Plays On'

By a Staff Photographer

An Unusual Photographic Shot of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, Conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra

Here Dr. Koussevitzky is seen listening while somebody else conducts. He was caught by the photographer thus relaxing after a tour, while Richard Burgin, Assistant Conductor, was on the podium. Toward the left of Dr. Koussevitzky is Bernard Zighéra, first harpist of the Orchestra and conductor of the Zighéra Orchestra.

As Transcribed by Koussevitzky

Bach Prelude and Fugue In Wind Orchestra Version

By Winthrop P. Tryon

What is a conductor?

A musician who directs the playing of an orchestra.

The question, put to almost any American public school pupil above the sixth grade in these days, would be answered immediately and correctly. The formula could be turned the other way around, too, with an equally certain result, as:

Q. What is the musician who directs the playing of an orchestra called?

A. A conductor.

But there is more to it than that. To ask for a more particular definition would be, in a certain class of cases, to get the response, that a conductor is not only a musician who orders the doings of performers, but also one who arranges for orchestral instruments the works of Bach.

Into this category comes, of a sudden, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, who invites the notice of Boston Symphony audiences this week to a transcription he has written of Bach's Organ Prelude and Fugue in C major, No. 17, scoring the two movements for woodwinds and brasses. Dr. Koussevitzky has distributed the composer's notes amongst a group of 24 executants, which means about one-fourth of the Symphony organization, or all the principal men outside the string and percussion sections—flutists, oboists or English horn players, clarinetists, bassoonists, trumpeters, French horn players, trombonists; and I should say, though I am not positive, the tuba player. He is entrusting interpretation to the assistant conductor, Richard Burgin, he himself taking a respite for the time from duty on the platform.

As to the record of conductors in the arranging field, Leopold Stokowski has probably made more noise there than anybody else. Back in the years when he was guiding concert policies for Philadelphia, he distinguished himself for his versions of Bach; and it was said at one time that he hoped to take the Philadelphia Orchestra to Europe with the idea, for one thing, of showing his prowess abroad as a Bach transcriber.

A matter of safety in the arranging procedure is that a musician employing it puts himself beyond criticism as composer. Especially is this the case when he deals with Bach, whose music cannot be spoilt by any devices of instrumentation, and whose structure cannot be broken down or weakened by any sort of rehandling. The only thing an arranger can be held to account for is a doubtful choice of tone colorings or a misjudged balance of sonorities, as an organist can be called to task for freakish and ill-considered registration. Bach's counterpoint, especially that of his fugues, stands immune to assault and survives uninspired or even careless treatment.

It seems all but unfortunate sometimes that Bach spins his preludes to their logical length, and that for the sake of theoretically correct proportions he uses up the attention of hearers on what is but preparatory. His prelude for the organ piece which Dr. Koussevitzky has chosen to adapt to wind instruments, running to 88 bars, stands a skillful study in design, though it hardly has the significance in a modern view that the figure of 72 bars possesses.

The thing for listeners to do, then, is to save up for the fugue and devote their powers of theme detection to the second part of the work. This will not be difficult, either, if boldly approached. For the main subject of the fugue is a single measure of only nine notes. Upon variations of the little strain the whole fugue rests—a marvel, indeed, of construction, and perhaps recreated in the orchestra form as it never could be on an organ, especially on what is known as a Bach organ, the tone qualities of which must remain more or less constant and often drab.

Youth Conductor

Wheeler Beckett, who will conduct another in the current series of Boston Symphony Youth Concerts next Wednesday afternoon in Symphony Hall.

Final Youth Concert

The Boston Symphony Youth Concerts, Wheeler Beckett, Conductor, sent a class into the world yesterday, at the final meeting of the third season, celebrating the occasion with a program which comprised works by Handel, Schubert, Chabrier, Johann Strauss, and Wagner. A special moment of applause was devoted to the 60 or so Boston Symphony men who play for the young folks, and appreciation was thereby expressed for the high standard of performance which has marked the concerts the past winter. Mr. Beckett proved, by calling for a show of hands, that a considerable proportion of those in the house were listeners of three-year rating, and a still larger proportion of two-year. Presumably the gathering will continue in 1941-42 with a new supply of subscribers entering below to fill the places vacated by graduates.

For according to arrangements, the Youth Concerts attendance consists of school pupils of junior high and advanced high age. The logical activity to follow would be the Monday night or the Tuesday afternoon Boston Symphony course, and at a still maturer time, perhaps, the Saturday nights or Friday afternoons.

In the look ahead, one thing seems certain. Audiences of tomorrow will have put their classic discipline in listening in large measure behind them. They will not have to take elementary lessons in Bach, Beethoven, and Brahms, as their fathers and mothers had to do after growing up. They should be in proper mood, then, for hearing something more or less non-classic; they ought, in fine, to be ready to encourage native composing, and to get American music going on something of an equal footing with music of Europe.

But that remains to be seen. To note a word about yesterday's concert, granted that the Boston Symphony artists did themselves proud, they only succeeded in securing good results because they were brilliantly directed. Mr. Beckett, we may as well begin to acknowledge, is something more than an educational talent and a pedagogical force in the town. He must be counted a conductor of uncommon gifts and an interpreter of original power and insight. The Handel concerto for organ and orchestra which he presented with the solo assistance of E. Power Biggs, organist, is, we may concede, an amusing study on the notes of the cuckoo and the nightingale, written in a light, even if in a pompous, vein. But the Schubert "Unfinished" Symphony is a big piece of music that requires handling in high style. Chabrier's "España" Rhapsody, too, calls, as a problem in rhythm, for something better than free-and-easy pop-concert treatment, if it is going to sound its best. So, furthermore, the Strauss "Blue Danube" Waltz amounts to more than a dance tune, when given the idealistic touch that it needs. Wagner's "Tannhäuser" Overture, again, goes for something more important than a park-band selection when its innate dramatic significance is realized. Mr. Beckett, let us not hesitate to declare, disclosed to his young following the true value of these masterpieces of tone picturing, and made the view of them something to be remembered.

W. P. T.

BOSTON EVENING TRANSCRIPT,

MUSIC

Koussevitzky-Bach

Arrangement of a Bach Fugue That Started In Fun Developed Into Model Transcription

By EDWARD DOWNES

For the first time in the 17 years that Koussevitzky has directed the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Koussevitzky's name will appear, tonight in Cambridge and at the following pair of Friday-Saturday concerts in Boston, not as conductor, but as a contributer to the program. Only once before, under an assumed name (though he was quickly found out) Koussevitzky has been on the composer's end of a Symphony program.

Tonight as well as Friday and Saturday, Dr. Koussevitzky does not conduct, but Richard Burgin, assistant conductor of the orchestra, leads Koussevitzky's own arrangement of a Bach Organ Prelude and Fugue in C major.

The arrangement has an amusing history. A good many months ago Wallace Goodrich, head of the New England Conservatory of Music, came to Koussevitzky with a Bach fugue which he laughingly said was full of "Die Meistersinger." Koussevitzky took the score, saw Mr. Goodrich's point and, in a spirit of fun, said he would orchestrate for their private amusement a parody of the Meistersinger style.

During his summer vacation in Switzerland, Koussevitzky studied the fugue more carefully and fell in love with the music. He made a special study of scoring of that time and of the Mozart period, and the result was not a parody of "Die Meistersinger," but an eminently serious orchestral transcription of the Prelude and Fugue in C.

Reversing the usual order of present-day inflated Bach transcriptions, Koussevitzky has attempted to parallel the purity of Bach's musical thought with a strictly limited orchestral apparatus and purity of scoring. He uses only a small group of wood-wind instruments and brasses, leaves out completely the string tone, which he describes as "too fat" for this music, and needless to say, there is no percussion.

The entire arrangement makes its effect by the skillful use of individual timbres and the carefully blended sonorities of small groups. The result comes curiously close to the color of a baroque organ of Bach's day, and incomparably closer to the spirit of Bach than any Bach arrangement or transcription the writer can remember.

On closer questioning Dr. Koussevitzky admitted that he had made several other transcriptions, particularly from the cantatas, but he does not feel that a conductor should force his own work onto symphony programs while there are so many gifted young composers waiting to be heard. Certainly no one could accuse Koussevitzky of having rushed his own works or arrangements onto his programs. Let us hope he will be less reticent about them in the future.

Beckett Conducts 6th Youth Concert

The sixth and final Youth Concert of this season was given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Wheeler Beckett yesterday afternoon at Symphony Hall. E. Power Biggs, organist, was the soloist in Handel's Concerto No. 13 for organ and orchestra. The other selections on the program were Schubert's "Unfinished" Symphony, "Espana" by Chabrier, "The Beautiful Blue Danube" by Strauss, and the Overture to "Tannhaueser."

Since the season for these concerts is over, it would be appropriate to list the accomplishments that Mr. Beckett achieved. First of all, let us consider the programs. Probably the most notable items were the selections chosen from the Mahler and Bruckner compositions. Music by the masters was in abundance and the musical education of the youngsters was well taken care of in this respect. Secondly, we should allot sufficient praise for the variety in the selections offered the young people. Not always did they prove too commendable but, as a whole, they were instructive.

Now, let us look at the other side of the picture. The masters were properly appreciated and highly applauded. It seems that, in order to prepare the young audience for the music of the future, it would be necessary to give them an inkling of what they will probably hear at the regular symphony concerts. Mr. Beckett did not take this task very much to heart, for the representative modern composers were not played. Those contemporary composers he did include did not seem to make deep impressions on the youngsters.

The members of the orchestra and Mr. Beckett were enthusiastically applauded by the large audience.

H. K.

Music Notes

Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis," unheard here for three years, will be performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky at the Orchestra's Pension Fund Concert on Sunday afternoon, April 27. The Orchestra will be assisted by a large chorus of the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society, prepared by G. Wallace Woodworth. The quartet of soloists will shortly be announced.

MUSIC

SYMPHONY HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Richard Burgin, conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday afternoon, gave the first performance of Serge Koussevitzky's transcription for wind orchestra of the Prelude and Fugue in C major, No. 17, by Bach. This work was introduction to a program that included Chausson's B-flat Symphony, and two Stravinsky pieces: the Violin Concerto, with Nathan Milstein as soloist, and the Suite from "Petrouchka."

This was the third time in Mr. Koussevitzky's 17 years as conductor of the orchestra that his name has appeared on a program as composer or transcriber. In fact, the Prelude and Fugue are his first transcription to be heard here. In October, 1930, toward the beginning of the Boston Symphony's 50th anniversary year, he was represented by an Overture, then labeled "Anonymous." A few seasons later he brought forth his Passacaglia On Russian Themes.

Mr. Koussevitzky made his arrangement in the Summer of 1936, in Val-Mont, Switzerland. Although Mr. Burk specifies in his program notes that 23 instruments are used—including four horns, two trumpets and three trombones—this reviewer though he saw in the ensemble one more clarinet and a third trumpet. As it happens, the theme of the Fugue contains a resemblance to a phrase in the march of the Mastersingers in Wagner's music-drama "The Mastersingers of Nuremberg." A Boston organist also pointed out to me that, toward the end, an inner voice proclaims the sonorous last phrase of that familiar song "The British Grenadier." What would Hitler make of that?

So large a body of wind results in a firm texture and considerable volume of tone when they all play fortissimo. The voices move clearly, except for the bass, which seemed too slight for just balance. The pedal point of the Fugue, for example, one could not hear. We have had all sorts of Bach transcriptions, from the one Alfred Pochon made for string quartet of the Leipsig cantor's C minor Passacaglia, up to the gigantic orchestral monuments of Stokowski, Caillet and Respighi. Mr. Koussevitzky's treatment is certainly most interesting, although the music to which it was applied is not first-rate Bach, and despite the fact that the transcription is perhaps not completely successful. But the idea of arranging the Prelude and Fugue for wind alone is most ingenious, and it produced a homogeneous tone. Mr. Koussevitzky acknowledged applause from his seat in the balcony.

The Stravinsky Violin Concerto was practically a novelty, because it had been played here only once before, in January, nine years ago. Was it worth revival? The question must be answered according to individual taste. This listener thinks it was not. Aside from the very slender solo part, and the grating dissonance of many pages, the Concerto must surely take rank as one of the most trivial compositions ever penned for violin and orchestra. Only in the finale does Stravinsky say anything that has musical value.

Mr. Milstein began his performance with some uncertain intonation, but subsequently showed us, so far as the vehicle permitted, the estimable qualities of his art. The finale was interrupted when a string on Mr. Milstein's violin snapped. Coolly, the soloist handed the instrument to Mr. Theodorowicz, acting concert master, who passed it on to his colleague at the first desk, Mr. Gundersen, to be restrung. Thus the last pages were heard with Mr. Milstein using Mr. Theodorowicz' violin, Mr. Theodorowicz playing on Mr. Gundersen's, and the latter finishing with that of Mr. Milstein. One suspects that the applause following the Concerto was directed more to Mr. Milstein and Mr. Burgin than to Stravinsky.

Mr. Burgin's conducting again exemplified the finesse which his work as orchestral interpreter has gained. Chausson's Symphony, evidently a favorite with him, was nobly done, and "Petrouchka" sounded bright and droll.

Next week Mr. Koussevitzky will conduct the G minor Symphony of Mozart, and the "Faust" Symphony by Liszt, in which the Harvard Glee Club and John L. Priebe, tenor, will assist.—C. W. D.

As Transcribed by Koussevitzky

Bach Prelude and Fugue In Wind Orchestra Version

By Winthrop P. Tryon

What is a conductor?

A musician who directs the playing of an orchestra.

The question, put to almost any American public school pupil above the sixth grade in these days, would be answered immediately and correctly. The formula could be turned the other way around, too, with an equally certain result, as:

Q. What is the musician who directs the playing of an orchestra called?

A. A conductor.

But there is more to it than that. To ask for a more particular definition would be, in a certain class of cases, to get the response, that a conductor is not only a musician who orders the doings of performers, but also one who arranges for orchestral instruments the works of Bach.

Into this category comes, of a sudden, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, who invites the notice of Boston Symphony audiences this week to a transcription he has written of Bach's Organ Prelude and Fugue in C major, No. 17, scoring the two movements for woodwinds and brasses. Dr. Koussevitzky has distributed the composer's notes amongst a group of 24 executants, which means about one-fourth of the Symphony organization, or all the principal men outside the string and percussion sections—flutists, oboists or English horn players, clarinetists, bassoonists, trumpeters, French horn players, trombonists; and I should say, though I am not positive, the tuba player. He is entrusting interpretation to the assistant conductor, Richard Burgin, he himself taking a respite for the time from duty on the platform.

As to the record of conductors in the arranging field, Leopold Stokowski has probably made more noise there than anybody else. Back in the years when he was guiding concert policies for Philadelphia, he distinguished himself for his versions of Bach; and it was said at one time that he hoped to take the Philadelphia Orchestra to Europe with the idea, for one thing, of showing his prowess abroad as a Bach transcriber.

A matter of safety in the arranging procedure is that a musician employing it puts himself beyond criticism as composer. Especially is this the case when he deals with Bach, whose music cannot be spoilt by any devices of instrumentation, and whose structure cannot be broken down or weakened by any sort of rehandling. The only thing an arranger can be held to account for is a doubtful choice of tone colorings or a misjudged balance of sonorities, as an organist can be called to task for freakish and ill-considered registration. Bach's counterpoint, especially that of his fugues, stands immune to assault and survives uninspired or even careless treatment.

It seems all but unfortunate sometimes that Bach spins his preludes to their logical length, and that for the sake of theoretically correct proportions he uses up the attention of hearers on what is but preparatory. His prelude for the organ piece which Dr. Koussevitzky has chosen to adapt to wind instruments, running to 88 bars, stands a skillful study in design, though it hardly has the significance in a modern view that the figure of 72 bars possesses.

The thing for listeners to do, then, is to save up for the fugue and devote their powers of theme detection to the second part of the work. This will not be difficult, either, if boldly approached. For the main subject of the fugue is a single measure of only nine notes. Upon variations of the little strain the whole fugue rests—a marvel indeed, of construction, and perhaps recreated in the orchestra form as it never could be on an organ, especially on what is known as a Bach organ, the tone qualities of which must remain more or less constant and often drab.

Youth Conductor

Wheeler Beckett, who will conduct another in the current series of Boston Symphony Youth Concerts next Wednesday afternoon in Symphony Hall.

Final Youth Concert

The Boston Symphony Youth Concerts, Wheeler Beckett, Conductor, sent a class into the world yesterday, at the final meeting of the third season, celebrating the occasion with a program which comprised works by Handel, Schubert, Chabrier, Johann Strauss, and Wagner. A special moment of applause was devoted to the 60 or so Boston Symphony men who play for the young folks, and appreciation was thereby expressed for the high standard of performance which has marked the concerts the past winter. Mr. Beckett proved, by calling for a show of hands, that a considerable proportion of those in the house were listeners of three-year rating, and a still larger proportion of two-year. Presumably the gathering will continue in 1941-42 with a new supply of subscribers entering below to fill the places vacated by graduates.

For according to arrangements, the Youth Concerts attendance consists of school pupils of junior high and advanced high age. The logical activity to follow would be the Monday night or the Tuesday afternoon Boston Symphony course, and at a still maturer time, perhaps, the Saturday nights or Friday afternoons.

In the look ahead, one thing seems certain. Audiences of tomorrow will have put their classic discipline in listening in large measure behind them. They will not have to take elementary lessons in Bach, Beethoven, and Brahms, as their fathers and mothers had to do after growing up. They should be in proper mood, then, for hearing something more or less non-classic; they ought, in fine, to be ready to encourage native composing, and to get American music going on something of an equal footing with music of Europe.

But that remains to be seen. To note a word about yesterday's concert, granted that the Boston Symphony artists did themselves proud, they only succeeded in securing good results because they were brilliantly directed. Mr. Beckett, we may as well begin to acknowledge, is something more than an educational talent and a pedagogical force in the town. He must be counted a conductor of uncommon gifts and an interpreter of original power and insight. The Handel concerto for organ and orchestra which he presented with the solo assistance of E. Power Biggs, organist, is, we may concede, an amusing study on the notes of the cuckoo and the nightingale, written in a light, even if in a pompous, vein. But the Schubert "Unfinished" Symphony is a big piece of music that requires handling in high style. Chabrier's "España" Rhapsody, too, calls, as a problem in rhythm, for something better than free-and-easy pop-concert treatment, if it is going to sound its best. So, furthermore, the Strauss "Blue Danube" Waltz amounts to more than a dance tune, when given the idealistic touch that it needs. Wagner's "Tannhäuser" Overture, again, goes for something more important than a park-band selection when its innate dramatic significance is realized. Mr. Beckett, let us not hesitate to declare, disclosed to his young following the true value of these masterpieces of tone picturing, and made the view of them something to be remembered.

W. P. T.

BOSTON EVENING TRANSCRIPT,

MUSIC

Koussevitzky-Bach

Arrangement of a Bach Fugue That Started In Fun Developed Into Model Transcription

By EDWARD DOWNES

For the first time in the 17 years that Koussevitzky has directed the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Koussevitzky's name will appear, tonight in Cambridge and at the following pair of Friday-Saturday concerts in Boston, not as conductor, but as a contributer to the program. Only once before, under an assumed name (though he was quickly found out) Koussevitzky has been on the composer's end of a Symphony program.

Tonight as well as Friday and Saturday, Dr. Koussevitzky does not conduct, but Richard Burgin, assistant conductor of the orchestra, leads Koussevitzky's own arrangement of a Bach Organ Prelude and Fugue in C major.

The arrangement has an amusing history. A good many months ago Wallace Goodrich, head of the New England Conservatory of Music, came to Koussevitzky with a Bach fugue which he laughingly said was full of "Die Meistersinger." Koussevitzky took the score, saw Mr. Goodrich's point and, in a spirit of fun, said he would orchestrate for their private amusement a parody of the Meistersinger style.

During his summer vacation in Switzerland, Koussevitzky studied the fugue more carefully and fell in love with the music. He made a special study of scoring of that time and of the Mozart period, and the result was not a parody of "Die Meistersinger," but an eminently serious orchestral transcription of the Prelude and Fugue in C.

Reversing the usual order of present-day inflated Bach transcriptions, Koussevitzky has attempted to parallel the purity of Bach's musical thought with a strictly limited orchestral apparatus and purity of scoring. He uses only a small group of wood-wind instruments and brasses, leaves out completely the string tone, which he describes as "too fat" for this music, and needless to say, there is no percussion.

The entire arrangement makes its effect by the skillful use of individual timbres and the carefully blended sonorities of small groups. The result comes curiously close to the color of a baroque organ of Bach's day, and incomparably closer to the spirit of Bach than any Bach arrangement or transcription the writer can remember.

On closer questioning Dr. Koussevitzky admitted that he had made several other transcriptions, particularly from the cantatas, but he does not feel that a conductor should force his own work onto symphony programs while there are so many gifted young composers waiting to be heard. Certainly no one could accuse Koussevitzky of having rushed his own works or arrangements onto his programs. Let us hope he will be less reticent about them in the future.

Beckett Conducts 6th Youth Concert

The sixth and final Youth Concert of this season was given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Wheeler Beckett yesterday afternoon at Symphony Hall. E. Power Biggs, organist, was the soloist in Handel's Concerto No. 13 for organ and orchestra. The other selections on the program were Schubert's "Unfinished" Symphony, "Espana" by Chabrier, "The Beautiful Blue Danube" by Strauss, and the Overture to "Tannhaueser."

Since the season for these concerts is over, it would be appropriate to list the accomplishments that Mr. Beckett achieved. First of all, let us consider the programs. Probably the most notable items were the selections chosen from the Mahler and Bruckner compositions. Music by the masters was in abundance and the musical education of the youngsters was well taken care of in this respect. Secondly, we should allot sufficient praise for the variety in the selections offered the young people. Not always did they prove too commendable but, as a whole, they were instructive.

Now, let us look at the other side of the picture. The masters were properly appreciated and highly applauded. It seems that, in order to prepare the young audience for the music of the future, it would be necessary to give them an inkling of what they will probably hear at the regular symphony concerts. Mr. Beckett did not take this task very much to heart, for the representative modern composers were not played. Those contemporary composers he did include did not seem to make deep impressions on the youngsters.

The members of the orchestra and Mr. Beckett were enthusiastically applauded by the large audience.

H. K.

Music Notes

Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis," unheard here for three years, will be performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky at the Orchestra's Pension Fund Concert on Sunday afternoon, April 27. The Orchestra will be assisted by a large chorus of the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society, prepared by G. Wallace Woodworth. The quartet of soloists will shortly be announced.

MUSIC

SYMPHONY HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Richard Burgin, conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday afternoon, gave the first performance of Serge Koussevitzky's transcription for wind orchestra of the Prelude and Fugue in C major, No. 17, by Bach. This work was introduction to a program that included Chausson's B-flat Symphony, and two Stravinsky pieces: the Violin Concerto, with Nathan Milstein as soloist, and the Suite from "Petrouchka."

This was the third time in Mr. Koussevitzky's 17 years as conductor of the orchestra that his name has appeared on a program as composer or transcriber. In fact, the Prelude and Fugue are his first transcription to be heard here. In October, 1930, toward the beginning of the Boston Symphony's 50th anniversary year, he was represented by an Overture, then labeled "Anonymous." A few seasons later he brought forth his Passacaglia On Russian Themes.

Mr. Koussevitzky made his arrangement in the Summer of 1936, in Val-Mont, Switzerland. Although Mr. Burk specifies in his program notes that 23 instruments are used—including four horns, two trumpets and three trombones—this reviewer though he saw in the ensemble one more clarinet and a third trumpet. As it happens, the theme of the Fugue contains a resemblance to a phrase in the march of the Mastersingers in Wagner's music-drama "The Mastersingers of Nuremberg." A Boston organist also pointed out to me that, toward the end, an inner voice proclaims the sonorous last phrase of that familiar song "The British Grenadier." What would Hitler make of that?

So large a body of wind results in a firm texture and considerable volume of tone when they all play fortissimo. The voices move clearly, except for the bass, which seemed too slight for just balance. The pedal point of the Fugue, for example, one could not hear. We have had all sorts of Bach transcriptions, from the one Alfred Pochon made for string quartet of the Leipsig cantor's C minor Passacaglia, up to the gigantic orchestral monuments of Stokowski, Caillet and Respighi. Mr. Koussevitzky's treatment is certainly most interesting, although the music to which it was applied is not first-rate Bach, and despite the fact that the transcription is perhaps not completely successful. But the idea of arranging the Prelude and Fugue for wind alone is most ingenious, and it produced a homogeneous tone. Mr. Koussevitzky acknowledged applause from his seat in the balcony.

The Stravinsky Violin Concerto was practically a novelty, because it had been played here only once before, in January, nine years ago. Was it worth revival? The question must be answered according to individual taste. This listener thinks it was not. Aside from the very slender solo part, and the grating dissonance of many pages, the Concerto must surely take rank as one of the most trivial compositions ever penned for violin and orchestra. Only in the finale does Stravinsky say anything that has musical value.

Mr. Milstein began his performance with some uncertain intonation, but subsequently showed us, so far as the vehicle permitted, the estimable qualities of his art. The finale was interrupted when a string on Mr. Milstein's violin snapped. Coolly, the soloist handed the instrument to Mr. Theodorowicz, acting concert master, who passed it on to his colleague at the first desk, Mr. Gundersen, to be restrung. Thus the last pages were heard with Mr. Milstein using Mr. Theodorowicz' violin, Mr. Theodorowicz playing on Mr. Gundersen's, and the latter finishing with that of Mr. Milstein. One suspects that the applause following the Concerto was directed more to Mr. Milstein and Mr. Burgin than to Stravinsky.

Mr. Burgin's conducting again exemplified the finesse which his work as orchestral interpreter has gained. Chausson's Symphony, evidently a favorite with him, was nobly done, and "Petrouchka" sounded bright and droll.

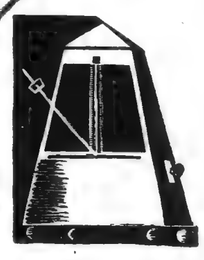
Next week Mr. Koussevitzky will conduct the G minor Symphony of Mozart, and the "Faust" Symphony by Liszt, in which the Harvard Glee Club and John L. Priebe, tenor, will assist.—C. W. D.

This Clipping From
NEW YORKER
NEW YORK, N.Y.

MAR 22 1941

MUSICAL EVENTS

American Music, Assorted



THERE'S been a good representation of American composers, native or naturalized, at the concerts of our symphony orchestras lately, and we might run through the roster and see what the boys are doing. The compositions break down—using the expression in its purely statistical sense, of course—into two divisions: symphonies, and essays based largely on folk music.

In the symphony group, there was Nicolai Berezowsky's third symphony, played by the Boston Symphony, and Bernard Wagenaar's third symphony, introduced by the Philharmonic-Symphony. (This is about symphonies, it seems.) Mr. Berezowsky's third is much the most interesting product I've heard from this gifted musician's catalogue. The first two movements are built around good, honest themes, and make their points without stalling. The third is rather cerebral, with a short conclusion that is a bang-up apotheosis. Somehow, this Big Finish seemed arbitrary; the symphony would have been more logical without a finale in excelsis and in italics. All told, though, this is a substantial work, and it had a stirring showing by Serge Koussevitzky and his men.

Mr. Wagenaar's symphony is sound, concise, and skillful music, more romantic and, to the ear, more conservative than some of his previous offerings. There are a few sardonic touches in the composition, and a moment when jazz looks in but decides not to remain.

MT. HOLLY, N.J
NEWS
3/20/41

110

BOSTON SYMPHONY TO APPEAR AT RUTGERS

The Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitsky will appear in the final program of this year's Rutgers Concert Series in Rutgers Gymnasium on Wednesday evening, April 2, at 8.30 o'clock. Featured with the orchestra will be Rutgers University Glee Club and the Princeton University Choir, which accepted an invitation to join the Glee Club for this occasion.

Highlighting the program will be a performance of the "Faust" Symphony by Franz Liszt. It is in this seldom performed work that the two choruses will join the orchestra. Considered by many to be Liszt's masterpiece, the symphony is composed of three sections. The first deals with Faust, the second with Marguerite and the final, which contains the choral passanges of the work, with Mephistopheles.

The opening selection on the program is Mozart's Symphony No. 40 in G Minor.

The Glee Club will again appear with the orchestra at a repetition of this program in the Boston Symphony's concluding concert of its New York season the following Saturday, April 5, in Carnegie Hall.

Faust Symphony Scheduled

3/22/41

Liszt's "Faust Symphony" will be the principal number by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, which will be given in Symphony Hall next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening.

Liszt's masterpiece is in three movements, "Faust," "Gretchen" and "Mephistopheles." Appended is a finale sung by a male chorus with tenor solo, using words from the second part of Goethe's "Faust" in beatification of womanhood. The Harvard Glee Club and John L. Priebe, tenor, will assist the orchestra.

Before the performance of the "Faust" Symphony, Mozart's Symphony in G minor, K. 550, will be played.

Beethoven Mass For Symphony

BEETHOVEN'S "Missa Solemnis," unheard here for three years, will be performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky at the Orchestra's Pension Fund Concert on Sunday afternoon, April 27. The orchestra will be asisted by the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society.

This Clipping From BALTIMORE, MD.
MORNING SUN
MAR 23 1941

Manhattan Musical

By JOHN ALAN HAUGHTON

NEW YORK.

IT was a well-balanced week, musically speaking, that New York has just had, with excellent concerts and some striking opera, as the latter comes near to its annual finish.

Mr. Koussevitzky brought his Bostonians for a pair of concerts. At the first, he played the interminable Mahler Ninth Symphony, which the few enjoy, but which bores the many. The remainder of the list was of Russian works, the Prelude to Mussorgsky's "Khovantshina," Liadoff's "Baba Yaga" tone poem (Baba Yaga, incidentally, is the child-eating witch with which pre-Soviet Russian children were frightened into good behavior. Perhaps the Ogpu has now taken over her functions!). The program closed with Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Capriccio Espagnole."

Second Program

The second program began with Mozart's charming "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik" and went on to a symphony by Berezoffsky, closing with Berlioz's "Fantastic" Symphony.

The Berezoffsky piece is in the later Stravinsky-Prokofieff idiom and sounds at times as though its composer were just forcing himself into cacophony and strident instrumental combinations that he really did not feel. It was interesting, in a way. The composer, who was present had to take bows. The Berlioz was as it always is, and that means, as you like it or not.

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM
MAR 23 1941

Boston Symphony On Tuesday

70

FINAL CONCERT in this year's fine Civic Music course will be by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, no newcomer to musical Worcester. To many subscribers of the Association's series this is the pinnacle of the year's program. With Serge Koussevitzky for conductor, the world-famous organization of Symphony men has been heard here before "on tour," by thousands from city and county at the equally famous Berkshire festival in the late Summer, under the stars at Stockbridge. (It is amazing, too, what uniformly good weather the orchestra gets for that annual classic.) So on Tuesday night, patrons of the course will assemble for its last concert.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
MAR 23 1941

CONCERT AND OPERA ASIDES

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY and Leopold Stokowski each will serve two-week engagements as guest conductors of the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra next season as part of the orchestra's centennial celebration. Other conductors, besides John Barbirolli, the regular leader, will be Bruno Walter, Dimitri Mitropoulos and Artur Rodzinski, each for four weeks, and Eugene Goossens and Fritz Busch, each to conduct for a fortnight.

Such a star-studded season will certainly be a far cry from the first season of the Philharmonic Society almost 100 years ago. We wonder what the original sixty-three professors of music who founded the society would think of it. Their first season had only three concerts which were given in the fashionable Apollo Rooms on lower Broadway. At these concerts members of the orchestra did their own ushering, the audience sat on benches or pews, and, while the selections were being played, all the instrumentalists except the 'cellists stood.

There was quite a ceremony in connection with the ushering. The ushers were especially chosen for their "appearance and address" and the society provided them with white gloves and long slender white rods as wands of office. They received the subscribers at the door and then escorted them to their places. In the fourth annual report it was recorded, as an instance of economical administration, that the sum saved on gloves over the preceding season was $4.75.

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE
MAR 26 1941

Capacity Audience Hears Boston Symphony Concert

By WALTER W. FARMER

Worcester Civic Music Association presented the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitsky, conductor, in the Auditorium last evening before a capacity audience. The program included Schubert's "Unfinished Symphony;" Prokofieff's Suite "Lieutenant Kije," and Tschaikowsky's "Symphony No. 5 in E minor."

The appearance of this magnificent organization usually compels the reviewer to ransack anew his vocabulary of superlatives, and last night's performance was no exception. Thus, since verbal description falls so far short of an adequate account of the superb qualities of the orchestra, doubtless its countless admirers will not think it too great an exaggeration to exclaim with old Isaac Walton, "Lord, what music hast Thou provided for the saints in Heaven, when Thou affordest bad men such music on earth."

The performance of Schubert's masterpiece suggested to this reviewer the unanswerable question "How could this simple, awkward, kindly man, lacking in worldly wisdom and oppressed by poverty, conceive the marvelous music that is such a revelation of the beauty, tragedy, joy and pathos of life?" Because it is a work of pure genius, the "Unfinished Symphony" stirs the hearts of young and old, and the learned and uncultivated both respond to its message.

Perfect Performance

Thus, since it is futile to attempt to solve the mystery of creative genius, we may be content with Emerson's words, "He builded better than he knew;" or we may compare Schubert with Laurence Binyon's skylark that "poured the wordless wonder of his joy into the empty sky . . . He gave of what he knew not, soaring throat!" Then there was the added inspiration of a performance that seemed perfect in every detail. Especially moving were the moments of hushed stillness so often found in Schubert, when his music alone can fill the breathless pause.

Prokofieff's Suite was composed originally as incidental music for a Russian film that contained both humor and irony. The score is immensely clever and entertaining, and it abounds in surprises and piquant orchestral effects that amuse and startle the listener at the first hearing. The work proved to be an excellent medium for the virtuosity of the orchestra, and it is impossible to imagine a more brilliant performance. Special mention should be made of the remarkable feat performed by a distant trumpeter who was called to the stage by the conductor to acknowledge the insistent applause.

His Own Criticism

It is interesting to recall Tschaikowsky's own description of his Fifth Symphony, apparently written in one of his frequent pessimistic moods: "There is something repellent, something superfluous, patchy and insincere, which the public instinctively recognizes." This appraisal is not verified by the popular acclaim the music has received for almost a generation. There is some difference of opinion whether the "motto" theme, that is heard in the first three movements like the warning voice of Fate, represents the composer's constant fear that his creative power was on the wane. However, it is perhaps more convincing to regard it as a universal experience of all who suffer doubt and uncertainty, that finally is overcome by the overwhelming affirmation of faith that blazes forth triumphantly in the last movement.

The interpretation of this music by the Boston orchestra probably is unequalled in its glowing eloquence by any other orchestra. The conductor and his men were truly inspired, so that the soul of the composer was revealed as a master dramatist of "the human soul in the convulsions of love, joy and fear." It is impossible to enumerate the wealth of memorable features of the performance that compelled the listeners to accord Dr. Koussevitsky and his associates a genuine ovation that resulted in many recalls.

This Clipping From
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD TIMES
MAR 24 1941

Koussevitzky's Bach Applauded

Dr. Koussevitzky has been genially taking a bow this week from his occasionally occupied balcony seat at Boston's Symphony Hall—nay, even advancing to the rail and applauding Richar Burgin, assistant conductor, wh introduced in the Friday and Saturday concerts of the orchestr the transcription for wind instruments from a Bach organ prelude and fugue made in 1936 by the orchestra's leader.

Many streamed in late, as often Saturday night, and missed the charming genuineness of the transferred C major prelude, so germane to its original in tone that one could see the good old Leipzig organist at the keyboard. Frankly, it is too great a responsibility for this audience section to listen in a masterly manner to a massive fugue.

It was nice to read about Chausson, that fine French gentleman and musician, as a night-cap on returning to the temporary pillow local train service obligates, but hearing his symphony in B flat major, for no doubt the first time, we could not really "take to" its almost unrelieved orderiy turbulence. One beautiful, clear run up the strings raised hopes, but it was just a solitaire. At next hearing, one may cry "noble." At first, the main delight was the third movement melody dominated by the trumpet.

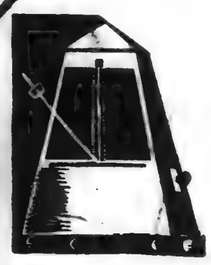
Smart program making, so to set off the labors at stripped conciseness (upon which Stravinsky vaunts himself) against this preceding volume of sound. One goes to hear Stravinsky to get a tonic thrill no other modern can so well effect. With Nathan Milstein, solo violinist, in firm command of his concerto in D it had a sturdy satisfaction. Milstein and Mr. Burgin seemed well pleased with each other. Mr. Burgin conducted the suite from Stravinsky's "Petrouchka" with a sharp vigor that maintained its excitements. Sanroma carried on the tang in his incidental piano solo.

A.C.R.

This Clipping From
NEW YORKER
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MAR 22 1941

MUSICAL EVENTS

American Music, Assorted



THERE'S been a good representation of American composers, native or naturalized, at the concerts of our symphony orchestras lately, and we might run through the roster and see what the boys are doing. The compositions break down—using the expression in its purely statistical sense, of course—into two divisions: symphonies, and essays based largely on folk music.

In the symphony group, there was Nicolai Berezowsky's third symphony, played by the Boston Symphony, and Bernard Wagenaar's third symphony, introduced by the Philharmonic-Symphony. (This is about symphonies, it seems.) Mr. Berezowsky's third is much the most interesting product I've heard from this gifted musician's catalogue. The first two movements are built around good, honest themes, and make their points without stalling. The third is rather cerebral, with a short conclusion that is a bang-up apotheosis. Somehow, this Big Finish seemed arbitrary; the symphony would have been more logical without a finale in excelsis and in italics. All told, though, this is a substantial work, and it had a stirring showing by Serge Koussevitzky and his men.

Mr. Wagenaar's symphony is sound, concise, and skillful music, more romantic and, to the ear, more conservative than some of his previous offerings. There are a few sardonic touches in the composition, and a moment when jazz looks in but decides not to remain.

MT. HOLLY, N.J.
NEWS
3/20/41

110

BOSTON SYMPHONY TO [illegible]PPEAR AT RUTGERS

The Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitsky will appear in the final program of this year's Rutgers Concert Series in Rutgers Gymnasium on Wednesday evening, April 2, at 8.30 o'clock. Featured with the orchestra will be Rutgers University Glee Club and the Princeton University Choir, which accepted an invitation to join the Glee Club for this occasion.

Highlighting the program will be a performance of the "Faust" Symphony by Franz Liszt. It is in this seldom performed work that the two choruses will join the orchestra. Considered by many to be Liszt's masterpiece, the symphony is composed of three sections. The first deals with Faust, the second with Marguerite and the final, which contains the choral passages of the work, with Mephistopheles.

The opening selection on the program is Mozart's Symphony No. 40 in G Minor.

The Glee Club will again appear with the orchestra at a repetition of this program in the Boston Symphony's concluding concert of its New York season the following Saturday, April 5, in Carnegie Hall.

Faust Symphony Scheduled 3/23/41

Liszt's "Faust Symphony" will be the principal number by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, which will be given in Symphony Hall next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening.

Liszt's masterpiece is in three movements, "Faust," "Gretchen" and "Mephistopheles." Appended is a finale sung by a male chorus with tenor solo, using words from the second part of Goethe's "Faust" in beatification of womanhood. The Harvard Glee Club and John L. Priebe, tenor, will assist the orchestra.

Before the performance of the "Faust" Symphony, Mozart's Symphony in G minor, K. 550, will be played.

Beethoven Mass For Symphony

BEETHOVEN'S "Missa Solemnis," unheard here for three years, will be performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky at the Orchestra's Pension Fund Concert on Sunday afternoon, April 27. The orchestra will be assisted by the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society.

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE
MAR 26 1941

Capacity Audience Hears Boston Symphony Concert

By WALTER W. FARMER

Worcester Civic Music Association presented the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitsky, conductor, in the Auditorium last evening before a capacity audience. The program included Schubert's "Unfinished Symphony;" Prokofieff's Suite "Lieutenant Kije," and Tschaikowsky's "Symphony No. 5 in E minor."

The appearance of this magnificent organization usually compels the reviewer to ransack anew his vocabulary of superlatives, and last night's performance was no exception. Thus, since verbal description falls so far short of an adequate account of the superb qualities of the orchestra, doubtless its countless admirers will not think it too great an exaggeration to exclaim with old Isaac Walton, "Lord, what music hast Thou provided for the saints in Heaven, when Thou affordest bad men such music on earth."

The performance of Schubert's masterpiece suggested to this reviewer the unanswerable question "How could this simple, awkward, kindly man, lacking in worldly wisdom and oppressed by poverty, conceive the marvelous music that is such a revelation of the beauty, tragedy, joy and pathos of life?" Because it is a work of pure genius, the "Unfinished Symphony" stirs the hearts of young and old, and the learned and uncultivated both respond to its message.

Perfect Performance

Thus, since it is futile to attempt to solve the mystery of creative genius, we may be content with Emerson's words, "He builded better than he knew;" or we may compare Schubert with Laurence Binyon's skylark that "poured the wordless wonder of his joy into the empty sky . . . He gave of what he knew not, soaring throat!" Then there was the added inspiration of a performance that seemed perfect in every detail. Especially moving were the moments of hushed stillness so often found in Schubert, when his music alone can fill the breathless pause.

Prokofieff's Suite was composed originally as incidental music for a Russian film that contained both humor and irony. The score is immensely clever and entertaining, and it abounds in surprises and piquant orchestral effects that amuse and startle the listener at the first hearing. The work proved to be an excellent medium for the virtuosity of the orchestra, and it is impossible to imagine a more brilliant performance. Special mention should be made of the remarkable feat performed by a distant trumpeter who was called to the stage by the conductor to acknowledge the insistent applause.

His Own Criticism

It is interesting to recall Tschaikowsky's own description of his Fifth Symphony, apparently written in one of his frequent pessimistic moods: "There is something repellent, something superfluous, patchy and insincere, which the public instinctively recognizes." This appraisal is not verified by the popular acclaim the music has received for almost a generation. There is some difference of opinion whether the "motto" theme, that is heard in the first three movements like the warning voice of Fate, represents the composer's constant fear that his creative power was on the wane. However, it is perhaps more convincing to regard it as a universal experience of all who suffer doubt and uncertainty, that finally is overcome by the overwhelming affirmation of faith that blazes forth triumphantly in the last movement.

The interpretation of this music by the Boston orchestra probably is unequalled in its glowing eloquence by any other orchestra. The conductor and his men were truly inspired, so that the soul of the composer was revealed as a master dramatist of "the human soul in the convulsions of love, joy and fear." It is impossible to enumerate the wealth of memorable features of the performance that compelled the listeners to accord Dr. Koussevitsky and his associates a genuine ovation that resulted in many recalls.

This Clipping From
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD TIMES
MAR 24 1941

Koussevitzky's Bach Applauded

Dr. Koussevitzky has been genially taking a bow this week from his occasionally occupied balcony seat at Boston's Symphony Hall—nay, even advancing to the rail and applauding Richar Burgin, assistant conductor, wh introduced in the Friday and Saturday concerts of the orchestra the transcription for wind instruments from a Bach organ prelude and fugue made in 1936 by the orchestra's leader.

Many streamed in late, as often Saturday night, and missed the charming genuineness of the transferred C major prelude, so germane to its original in tone that one could see the good old Leipzig organist at the keyboard. Frankly, it is too great a responsibility for this audience section to listen in a masterly manner to a massive fugue.

It was nice to read about Chausson, that fine French gentleman and musician, as a night-cap on returning to the temporary pillow local train service obligates, but hearing his symphony in B flat major, for no doubt the first time, we could not really "take to" its almost unrelieved orderly turbulence. One beautiful, clear run up the strings raised hopes, but it was just a solitaire. At next hearing, one may cry "noble." At first, the main delight was the third movement melody dominated by the trumpet.

Smart program making, so to set off the labors at stripped conciseness (upon which Stravinsky vaunts himself) against this preceding volume of sound. One goes to hear Stravinsky to get a tonic thrill no other modern can so well effect. With Nathan Milstein, solo violinist, in firm command of his concerto in D it had a sturdy satisfaction. Milstein and Mr. Burgin seemed well pleased with each other. Mr. Burgin conducted the suite from Stravinsky's "Petrouchka" with a sharp vigor that maintained its excitements. Sanroma carried on the tang in his incidental piano solo.

A.C.R.

This Clipping From BALTIMORE, MD.
MORNING SUN
MAR 23 1941

Manhattan Musical

By JOHN ALAN HAUGHTON

New York.

IT was a well-balanced week, musically speaking, that New York has just had, with excellent concerts and some striking opera, as the latter comes near to its annual finish.

Mr. Koussevitzky brought his Bostonians for a pair of concerts. At the first, he played the interminable Mahler Ninth Symphony, which the few enjoy, but which bores the many. The remainder of the list was of Russian works, the Preluds to Mussorgsky's "Khovantshina," Liadoff's "Baba Yaga" tone poem (Baba Yaga, incidentally, is the child-eating witch with which pre-Soviet Russian children were frightened into good behavior. Perhaps the Ogpu has now taken over her functions!). The program closed with Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Capriccio Espagnole."

Second Program

The second program began with Mozart's charming "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik" and went on to a symphony by Berezoffsky, closing with Berlioz's "Fantastic" Symphony.

The Berezoffsky piece is in the later Stravinsky-Prokofieff idiom and sounds at times as though its composer were just forcing himself into cacophony and strident instrumental combinations that he really did not feel. It was interesting, in a way. The composer, who was present had to take bows. The Berlioz was as it always is, and that means, as you like it or not.

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM
MAR 23 1941

Boston Symphony On Tuesday

FINAL CONCERT in this year's fine Civic Music course will be by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, no newcomer to musical Worcester. To many subscribers of the Association's series this is the pinnacle of the year's program. With Serge Koussevitzky for conductor, the world-famous organization of Symphony men has been heard here before "on tour," by thousands from city and county at the equally famous Berkshire festival in the late Summer, under the stars at Stockbridge. (It is amazing, too, what uniformly good weather the orchestra gets for that annual classic.) So on Tuesday night, patrons of the course will assemble for its [illegible] concert.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
MAR 23 1941

CONCERT AND OPERA ASIDES

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY and Leopold Stokowski each will serve two-week engagements as guest conductors of the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra next season as part of the orchestra's centennial celebration. Other conductors, besides John Barbirolli, the regular leader, will be Bruno Walter, Dimitri Mitropoulos and Artur Rodzinski, each for four weeks, and Eugene Goossens and Fritz Busch, each to conduct for a fortnight.

Such a star-studded season will certainly be a far cry from the first season of the Philharmonic Society almost 100 years ago. We wonder what the original sixty-three professors of music who founded the society would think of it. Their first season had only three concerts which were given in the fashionable Apollo Rooms on lower Broadway. At these concerts members of the orchestra did their own ushering, the audience sat on benches or pews, and, while the selections were being played, all the instrumentalists except the 'cellists stood.

There was quite a ceremony in connection with the ushering. The ushers were especially chosen for their "appearance and address" and the society provided them with white gloves and long slender white rods as wands of office. They received the subscribers at the door and then escorted them to their places. In the fourth annual report it was recorded, as an instance of economical administration, that the sum saved on gloves over the preceding season was $4.75.

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM
MAR 26 1941

Boston Symphony In Superb Close

Koussevitzky Hits Peak of Leadership In Final of Local Concert Series

By RAYMOND MORIN

The Boston Symphony Orchestra last night brought to a brilliant close this season's series of Worcester Civic Music Association concerts at the Auditorium. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky was conductor. Richard Burgin was concert-master. It was a concert that will live long in the memories of those who were fortunate enough to attend.

Not having heard in person all of the world's great orchestras, we cannot say that the Boston Symphony Orchestra is unexcelled. But it does seem unlikely that any musical organization could achieve greater precision, accuracy, co-ordination and balance—that greater depth could be given musical scores—that any group of more than 80 musicians could combine their artistic efforts in creating a more unified impression—that any group of artists could be more instilled with a zeal for obeying leadership.

Conductor's Work Inspiring

Dr. Koussevitzky's mastery of his orchestra is as inspiring as it is awe-inspiring. His men do not appear to look to him solely for guidance in rhythmic precision, attacks, sustenance of phrases, or the many other fine points of interpretation. The necessary tenseness for noteworthy execution seems to emanate from him. At all times the strength of his personality dominates the scene. There is as much expression in his hands as there is in his face or gestures.

We were grateful for the non-experimental program. Nor was it a shallow program or over-intellectual. The Schubert "Unfinished Symphony" and the Tchaikowsky "Fifth Symphony" have long since lost the novelty of "newness"—but they have not lost their power. Time being the only judge of art their greatness has been proven. The inclusion of a contemporary work of the merit of Prokofieff's "Lieutenant Kije" was welcomed.

String Work Excellent

Contrary to belief, the "B Minor Symphony" was not Schubert's last work; he lived six years after he abandoned it. From the mysterious foreboding of the opening bars, Dr. Koussevitzky gave the work a clear, unaffected reading. He stressed the superb melodic lyricism without exaggerating it. The string section (whether in quivering accompaniment passages or in pure smooth-flowing melodies) was marvelous. The string section of the Boston Symphony Orchestra makes one of the most beautiful sounds ever heard. The sequential sections in unison were as one performer. The abrupt quiet transitions in the wood-wind and brasses (final sections of the first movement) were exactly true to pitch with few exceptions. The second movement was sheer poetry. Special mention should be made of the "pizzicato" passages of the string section, the beautiful quality of the clarinet and oboe solos, and the clear fullness of the brass division in the climactic portions.

A Russian Master

"Lieutenant Kije" by Prokofieff is a significant contribution to the modern medium of musical expression. It certainly contains a potency of ideas. It has all of the contemporary Russian master's characteristics—vigorous rhythmic treatment, invading startling harmonies, and a certain mysticism. Dr. Koussevitzky has an intimate knowledge of Prokofieff's style having many times conducted while he was soloist. Prokofieff's rigole orchestral suite contains many solo fragments which were beautifully executed by the following—Mr. Molleux, contra bass; Messrs. Voisin and Majer, trumpet; Mr. Tapley, saxophone; Mr. Bedetti, 'cello; Mr. Fiedler, off-stage conductor.

No music is more expressive of these apprehensive and war-torn times than that of Tchaikowsky. In spite of some of their trivial fanfare, his last three symphonies contain all of the resentment, despair, and gleams of hope of a shackled people. Last night's performance of the "Fifth Symphony" was magnificent. The orchestra lingered over its poetry, tore through its rebellious passages, and brought to a high pitch its ponderous climaxes.

3500 Shout 'Bravo'

Dr. Koussevitzky knew Tchaikowsky's Russia (he was 19 when Tchaikowsky died) and to hear him conduct one of these symphonies is a memorable experience. He gives them the fullness of emotionalism. From the sinister entrance of the main theme in the opening bars, the audience was rapturously transported through its pages. The many violent changes of mood were enacted with perfect continuity by Dr. Koussevitzky's remarkable sense of timing and the orchestra's tremendous technical resources which they unreservedly place in their conductor's hands. An ovation was forthcoming and was insistently accorded by 3500 people who added their shouted "bravos" to their applause.

The Worcester Civic Music Association program committee deserves a vote of unstinted praise for the season's brilliant series of concerts. The members of this committee are as follows: Arthur J. Bassett, George Foxhall, Rev. Dr. Thomas S. Roy,, Mrs. Robert S. Illingworth, Miss Saidee Riccius and Mrs. William S. Sargent. Arthur J. Dann is a member of the committee, ex-officio, and Mrs. Leon McDermid is secretary.

THIS CLIPPING FROM

LOOK
DES MOINES, IA.
3/25/41

BOTH JIM AND MARGARET LOVE GOOD MUSIC, attend concerts whenever they think their budget will allow it. Both read a great deal, Jim's preference running toward books, Margaret's toward women's magazines. Margaret belongs to a bridge club which meets once a week, is particularly happy when the club meets at her home, for she is charming and able as a hostess. CONTINUED ON NEXT PAGE

Eliminating Traffic Bottleneck

By a Staff Photographer

Huntington Avenue Underpass

The view shows excavation work on the Huntington Avenue underpass, looking toward the Norway Street end. One of the two cranes and the steam shovel being used in the work are shown. During the last few days workmen have used power drills in excavating the frozen earth. This has not, however, impeded the work and, with prospects good for spring weather, work should go ahead smoothly.

Huntington Ave. Underpass Being Pushed on Schedule

Excavation is going ahead according to schedule on the new Huntington Avenue underpass at Massachusetts Avenue and it should be ready for automobile traffic early in June, officials of the Boston Transit Department said today.

The work is being done with Work Projects Administration labor, and the exact time of opening depends upon the supply of men available during the spring, it was explained.

Excavation of the first half of the underpass, from Norway Street to the center of Massachusetts Avenue, is about completed. In a few days the steam shovel will begin scooping up the roadway in the vicinity of Gainsborough Street, the other end of the underpass.

Dirt from the excavation is being hauled for "storage" to a lot on Columbus Avenue owned by the Boston Elevated Railway. It will be used later in plugging up the subway incline next to the Boston Public Garden on Boylston Street, where the Huntington Avenue carline emerged before the new subway was built.

When excavation is completed, the roadbed in the underpass will be covered with a huge slab of concrete, 20 inches thick near the lowest part of the underpass, and thinner at the two ends. This will give a solid road base on the sandy earth, and will be covered with asphalt or other paving surface.

Sidewalk engineers "supervising" the work have noticed that the Norway Street half of the underpass was dug down to a certain level as far as the center of Massachusetts Avenue; then the steel girders and cement for the bridge at Massachusetts Avenue were installed; and then the underpass was scooped out to a deeper level. By thus doing the excavation in two parts, workmen were enabled to build the bridge for Massachusetts Avenue traffic without having to erect a scaffolding to stand on.

This Clipping From
LOWELL, MASS.
COURIER-CITIZEN
MAR 26 1941

Boston Programs.

At the regular concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Friday afternoon and Saturday evening of this week Dr. Koussevitzky will set forth two symphonies in sharply contrasted moods. The first will be the Mozart in G minor and the second a Faust Symphony of the old Abbe Liszt. In the presentation of the latter the Harvard Glee Club will assist. Wagner, it will be recalled, planned at one time to write a Faust symphony; but all that came of the idea was his Faust Overture.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
POST
MAR 29 1941

Boston Symphony Ends Local Series

Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be heard in Carnegie Hall for the last time this season next Thursday evening and Saturday afternoon. Liszt's "Faust Symphony" will be heard on both programs, with John Priebe as tenor soloist and the Princeton University Chapel Choir and Rutgers University Glee Club.

Koussevitzky will open the Thursday evening performance with his own transcription of Bach's organ prelude and fugue in C major, and Prokofieff's "Lieutenant Kiji" suite. The concert of Saturday afternoon will open with Mozart's Symphony in G minor.

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM
MAR 26 1941

Boston Symphony In Superb Close

Koussevitzky Hits Peak of Leadership In Final of Local Concert Series

By RAYMOND MORIN

The Boston Symphony Orchestra last night brought to a brilliant close this season's series of Worcester Civic Music Association concerts at the Auditorium. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky was conductor. Richard Burgin was concert-master. It was a concert that will live long in the memories of those who were fortunate enough to attend.

Not having heard in person all of the world's great orchestras, we cannot say that the Boston Symphony Orchestra is unexcelled. But it does seem unlikely that any musical organization could achieve greater precision, accuracy, co-ordination and balance—that greater depth could be given musical scores—that any group of more than 80 musicians could combine their artistic efforts in creating a more unified impression—that any group of artists could be more instilled with a zeal for obeying leadership.

Conductor's Work Inspiring

Dr. Koussevitzky's mastery of his orchestra is as inspiring as it is awe-inspiring. His men do not appear to look to him solely for guidance in rhythmic precision, attacks, sustenance of phrases, or the many other fine points of interpretation. The necessary tenseness for noteworthy execution seems to emanate from him. At all times the strength of his personality dominates the scene. There is as much expression in his hands as there is in his face or gestures.

We were grateful for the non-experimental program. Nor was it a shallow program or over-intellectual. The Schubert "Unfinished Symphony" and the Tchaikowsky "Fifth Symphony" have long since lost the novelty of "newness"—but they have not lost their power. Time being the only judge of art their greatness has been proven. The inclusion of a contemporary work of the merit of Prokofieff's "Lieutenant Kije" was welcomed.

String Work Excellent

Contrary to belief, the "B Minor Symphony" was not Schubert's last work; he lived six years after he abandoned it. From the mysterious foreboding of the opening bars, Dr. Koussevitzky gave the work a clear, unaffected reading. He stressed the superb melodic lyricism without exaggerating it. The string section (whether in quivering accompaniment passages or in pure smooth-flowing melodies) was marvelous. The string section of the Boston Symphony Orchestra makes one of the most beautiful sounds ever heard. The sequential sections in unison were as one performer. The abrupt quiet transitions in the wood-wind and brasses (final sections of the first movement) were exactly true to pitch with few exceptions. The second movement was sheer poetry. Special mention should be made of the "pizzicato" passages of the string section, the beautiful quality of the clarinet and oboe solos, and the clear fullness of the brass division in the climactic portions.

A Russian Master

"Lieutenant Kije" by Prokofieff is a significant contribution to the modern medium of musical expression. It certainly contains a potency of ideas. It has all of the contemporary Russian master's characteristics—vigorous rhythmic treatment, invading startling harmonies, and a certain mysticism. Dr. Koussevitzky has an intimate knowledge of Prokofieff's style having many times conducted while he was soloist. Prokofieff's rigole orchestral suite contains many solo fragments which were beautifully executed by the following—Mr. Molleux, contra bass; Messrs. Voisin and Majer, trumpet; Mr. Tapley, saxophone; Mr. Bedetti, 'cello; Mr. Fiedler, off-stage conductor.

No music is more expressive of these apprehensive and war-torn times than that of Tchaikowsky. In spite of some of their trivial fanfare, his last three symphonies contain all of the resentment, despair, and gleams of hope of a shackled people. Last night's performance of the "Fifth Symphony" was magnificent. The orcestra lingered over its poetry, tore through its rebellious passages, and brought to a high pitch its ponderous climaxes.

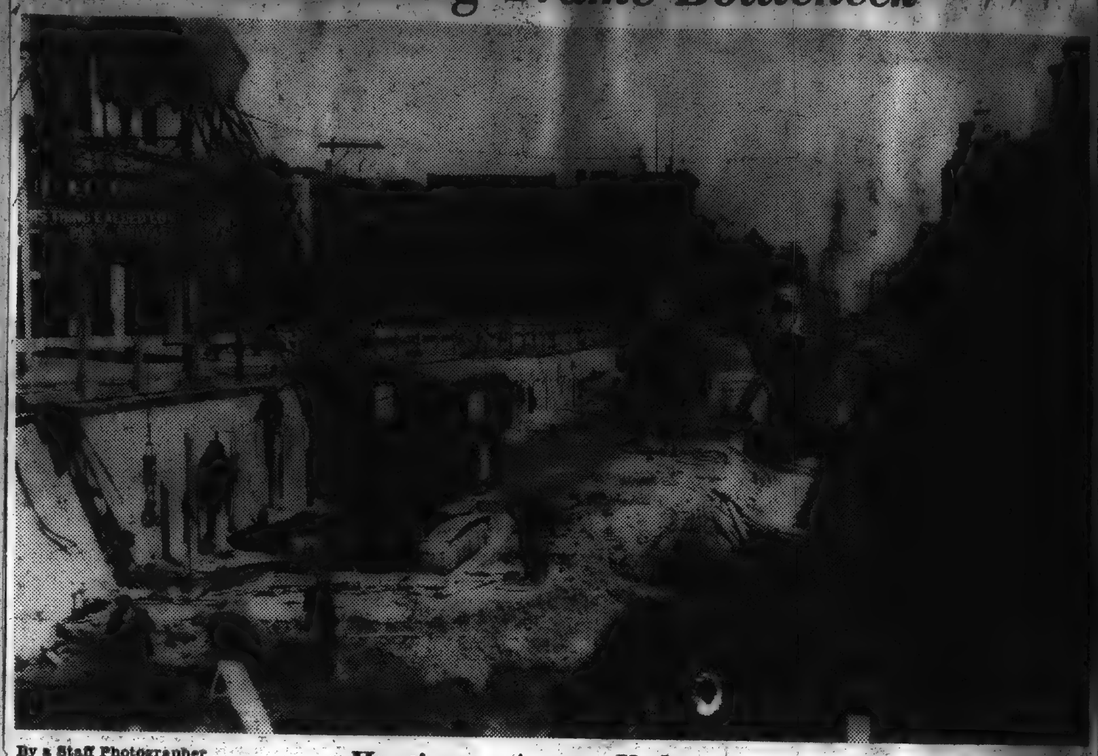
3500 Shout 'Bravo'

Dr. Koussevitzky knew Tchaikowsky's Russia (he was 19 when Tchaikowsky died) and to hear him conduct one of these symphonies is a memorable experience. He gives them the fullness of emotionalism. From the sinister entrance of the main theme in the opening bars, the audience was rapturously transported through its pages. The many violent changes of mood were enacted with perfect continuity by Dr. Koussevitzky's remarkable sense of timing and the orchestra's tremendous technical resources which they unreservedly place in their conductor's hands. An ovation was forthcoming and was insistently accorded by 3500 people who added their shouted "bravos" to their applause.

The Worcester Civic Music Association program committee deserves a vote of unstinted praise for the season's brilliant series of concerts. The members of this committee are as follows: Arthur J. Bassett, George Foxhall, Rev. Dr. Thomas S. Roy, Mrs. Robert S. Illingworth, Miss Saidee Riccius and Mrs. William S. Sargent. Arthur J. Dann is a member of the committee, ex-officio, and Mrs. Leon McDermid is secretary.

MARCH 24, 1941

Eliminating Traffic Bottleneck



By a Staff Photographer

Huntington Avenue Underpass

The view shows excavation work on the Huntington Avenue underpass, looking toward the Norway Street end. One of the two cranes and the steam shovel being used in the work are shown. During the last few days workmen have used power drills in excavating the frozen earth. This has not, however, impeded the work and, with prospects good for spring weather, work should go ahead smoothly.

Huntington Ave. Underpass Being Pushed on Schedule

Excavation is going ahead according to schedule on the new Huntington Avenue underpass at Massachusetts Avenue and it should be ready for automobile traffic early in June, officials of the Boston Transit Department said today.

The work is being done with Work Projects Administration labor, and the exact time of opening depends upon the supply of men available during the spring, it was explained.

Excavation of the first half of the underpass, from Norway Street to the center of Massachusetts Avenue, is about completed. In a few days the steam shovel will begin scooping up the roadway in the vicinity of Gainsborough Street, the other end of the underpass.

Dirt from the excavation is being hauled for "storage" to a lot on Columbus Avenue owned by the Boston Elevated Railway. It will be used later in plugging up the subway incline next to the Boston Public Garden on Boylston Street, where the Huntington Avenue carline emerged before the new subway was built.

When excavation is completed, the roadbed in the underpass will be covered with a huge slab of concrete, 20 inches thick near the lowest part of the underpass, and thinner at the two ends. This will give a solid road base on the sandy earth, and will be covered with asphalt or other paving surface.

Sidewalk engineers "supervising" the work have noticed that the Norway Street half of the underpass was dug down to a certain level as far as the center of Massachusetts Avenue; then the steel girders and cement for the bridge at Massachusetts Avenue were installed; and then the underpass was scooped out to a deeper level. By thus doing the excavation in two parts, workmen were enabled to build the bridge for Massachusetts Avenue traffic without having to erect a scaffolding to stand on.

This Clipping From
LOWELL, MASS.
COURIER-CITIZEN
MAR 26 1941

Boston Programs.

At the regular concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Friday afternoon and Saturday evening of this week Dr. Koussevitzky will set forth two symphonies in sharply contrasted moods. The first will be the Mozart in G minor and the second a Faust Symphony of the old Abbe Liszt. In the presentation of the latter the Harvard Glee Club will assist. Wagner, it will be recalled, planned at one time to write a Faust symphony; but all that came of the idea was his Faust Overture.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
POST
MAR 29 1941

Boston Symphony Ends Local Series

Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be heard in Carnegie Hall for the last time this season next Thursday evening and Saturday afternoon. Liszt's "Faust Symphony" will be heard on both programs, with John Priebe as tenor soloist and the Princeton University Chapel Choir and Rutgers University Glee Club.

Koussevitzky will open the Thursday evening performance with his own transcription of Bach's organ prelude and fugue in C major, and Prokofieff's "Lieutenant Kijl" suite. The concert of Saturday afternoon will open with Mozart's Symphony in G minor.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
LOOK
DES MOINES, IA.
3/25/41

BOTH JIM AND MARGARET LOVE GOOD MUSIC, attend concerts whenever they think their budget will allow it. Both read a great deal, Jim's preference running toward books, Margaret's toward women's magazines. Margaret belongs to a bridge club which meets once a week, is particularly happy when the club meets at her home, for she is charming and able as a hostess. CONTINUED ON NEXT PAGE

Symphony

'Fantastic' Given A Notable Reading

As never before in this concert-goer's experience, the "Fantastic" Symphony by Hector Berlioz was brought to flaming life last evening in Sanders Theater by the Boston Symphony and Dr. Koussevitzky. Not only were new beauties in the famous score disclosed and old ones sharpened, but last night's performance, astonishingly enough, had in it much of the revolutionary spirit that must have startled and thrilled audiences who first heard the work more than a hundred years ago.

At lesser hands many pages of the "Fantastic" these days sound bloated and bombastic and dull. But at Sanders Theater one's attention or sympathy never flagged, not even in the all too often seemingly interminable slow movement which last night was radiant. And in the fourth movement, the "March to the Scaffold," and in the final "witches' Sabbath" where the diabolically transformed theme of "the Beloved" is heard in contrast with the Dies Irae, the conductor and orchestra were at their magnificent best.

Whether or not Dr. Koussevitzky consciously was reading into the work something greater than Berlioz intended, the music last evening sounded infinitely more consequential and universal than the composer's programmed story of a neurotic poet's pursuit of his beloved and his eventual horrible disillusionment would indicate. However that may be, the performance was an affecting and passionate and unforgettable one.

The concert opened with a nobly classic reading of Gluck's Overture to "Iphigenia in Aulis." This was followed by the imaginative, delicate, technically brilliant performance one expects from Dr. Koussevitzky and his men of Ravel's "Mother Goose" Suite. M. H.

SYMPHONY OF FAUST PLAYED

Harvard Singers Assist in Chorus

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

What with "The Marriage of Figaro" at the Metropolitan Thursday night and with "Don Giovanni" scheduled for Monday night there was already quite a bit of Mozart on the cards for Boston, and at the symphony concerts of this week Dr. Koussevitzky is adding more in the shape of the G-minor Symphony, which he now plays more conservatively than he did in days gone by. The other number on the programme for this week was the "Faust" Symphony of Liszt with John Priebe, tenor, and the Harvard Glee Club assisting in the final "Chorus Mysticus."

As one who has always gone for the "Faust" Symphony in a big way, this reviewer is frankly baffled by the fact that the work left him singularly unmoved and unsatisfied yesterday. Somehow it is always hard to get in the mood for a symphony concert during an opera season, even at the beginning of an opera season. That being the case, this reviewer is loth to blame either the "Faust" Symphony or its performance for his almost total lack of response to it on this occasion. It is possible that Dr. Koussevitzky in his search for the ultimate expression had over-refined upon the music. Somehow, it seemed to lack vitality. It is also possible that the piece itself has passed the point where it can make a strong appeal, certain episodes aside, to this particular pair of ears. For time being the case must rest. Perhaps another hearing of the symphony will produce a different set of reactions. The young men of the chorus sang sonorously yesterday and their entrance in the finale was, as always, electrifying. Mr. Priebe's singing of the tenor part was, unfortunately, quite inadequate. His tones were both reedy and throaty, with at times a curious suggestion of falsetto.

From Mozart to Liszt

The Arts in Boston

Two symphonies comprise the program of this week's pair of Boston Symphony concerts, the twentieth of the season. They are Mozart's G minor (K. 550) and Liszt's "A Faust Symphony." In the last section of the Liszt, the orchestra was assisted by the Harvard Glee Club, of which G. Wallace Woodworth is conductor, and John L. Priebe as tenor soloist.

It would be difficult to find two symphonies (accepting Liszt's own term for his work) more unlike. It would be difficult also to find another conductor who could obtain such brilliant performances of two works so diverse in style and mood. From Mozart, the "natural" musician, gay, spontaneous, fastidious even in his moments of melancholy, to Liszt, extremist even in the extravagant expression of exaggerated emotion that is known as nineteenth-century romanticism—what a leap that is. Yet Dr. Koussevitzky turns from one to the other with the greatest aplomb. He understands both; you would think he admired and liked them equally well.

Nevertheless, it was a little hard on Liszt to make him follow Mozart. After the clear, clean, polished art of the one, the excesses of the other seemed particularly banal. Perhaps that is Dr. Koussevitzky's way of telling us that he knows perfectly well how the two composers stand.

Still, it is well that we should hear the "Faust Symphony" now and then. (The last time was four and a half years ago.) We need to be reminded of the importance of Liszt in the history of music; and merely to listen to this symphony is to be told again of the source from which Wagner obtained much of his material, both musical and "ideological." Besides, in one way, Liszt was the better rounded artist; he had at least a wry sense of humor. L. A. S.

MUSIC

Symphony Concert

By ALEXANDER WILLIAMS

The 20th concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conducting, was given yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. Assisting at the end of the Liszt symphony were the Harvard Glee Club, G. Wallace Woodworth, conductor, and John Priebe, tenor. The program was as follows:

Mozart, Symphony ... in G minor, K. 550
Liszt ..... A..... Faust Symphony

Two of the greatest symphonic works of their differing historical periods were offered us on yesterday's program. The one is the perfection of classicism, the other a sprawling monument of romanticism. Some have professed to see indications of the romantic movement in Mozart's G minor Symphony. This notion is an instance of wishful thinking by such as are not content to take Mozart as he is.

Mozart did not write a great deal in minor keys, and when he did he rapidly jumped into the major at the first opportunity. The prevailing minor tonality of this Symphony does create an effect of sadness or wistfulness that is unusual in Mozart. This has led people to read a special message into the music, and so the theory-building goes. Actually the perfect use of all the musical materials and the ideas that are given expression make this Symphony one of the finest in all music.

Mr. Koussevitzky is always good with Mozart. He understands the need for crispness and precision, as well as the desirability of a beautiful singing tone and he gets just these results. The combination is irresistible in the concert hall, and thus the interpretation was cordially applauded yesterday.

Liszt's Faust Symphony is an excessively long work that nevertheless repays playing every so often. Its faults are the overwhelming repetitiousness, whereby the themes are soaked into your consciousness to the point of saturation, and the sentimental apotheosis of the choral conclusion. Its beauties are many, both incidental and in the full-fledged romantic conception of the whole.

Happily nowadays we have progressed some distance from the intellectual criticism of a generation ago, which condemned the whole of Liszt's music with intemperate fury. The trouble has been that we hear the cheaper pieces more often than those of genuine eloquence. There is much in the piano music, the songs and the orchestral works that merit revival. For that reason, if for no other, we stand in Mr. Koussevitzky's debt for having the courage to play the sometimes very boring Faust Symphony.

The Faust legend was dear to the hearts of the romantic composers. All of them seized on it for inspiration to musical creation. Mostly they confined themselves to the more straightforward and less philosophical and mystical first part of Goethe's "Faust." Liszt's setting of the final verses was an afterthought The composer who worked most seriously with the second part was Schumann, and it would be interesting to hear that neglected work of his. There are osme to declare it the finest of all "Faust" music.

The performance of Liszt's Symphony was a remarkable realization of the spirit of the score. Mr. Priebe gave a very good rendering of the tenor solo, which must be uncomfortably high for any voice, and the Harvard Glee Club was a satisfactory chorus.

The concert will be repeated tonight. Next week the orchestra makes its final trip of the season to New York. The 21st concerts will be given on Thursday afternoon, April 10, and Saturday evening, April 12. Vladimir Horowitz will be soloist in Rachmaninoff's 3rd Piano Concerto; and previously Eugene Goosens will conduct his new Symphony.

SYMPHONY HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Mozart's "Great" G minor Symphony and the huge "Faust" Symphony by Liszt constitute the program this week for the concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Liszt's work is presented with the Harvard Glee Club singing the finale on the "Chorus Mysticus" from Goethe's "Faust." The tenor soloist for the same portion is John L. Priebe. Serge Koussevitzky conducts.

The place of the "Faust" Symphony in musical history is not easy to define, for two reasons: First, because its romantic idealism seems naive in the cynical light of the present; second, because the music with its mingling of sincerity and theatricality is so bound up in the character of Liszt himself. Liszt has always been a suspicious character to those of austere mind. They cannot grasp the delicate balance of integrity and showmanship which Liszt must have been. To such people, the one quality denies the other. And since Liszt's music is so much a reflection of himself, the "Faust" Symphony has had its many detractors as well as its fervent admirers.

But as sophisticated persons well know, mixed idealism, pretentious display and outright sensuality are not infrequently what artists are made of. Goethe himself was one such, Wagner another. And there are more who could be named. All this has to be kept in mind unless you are willing to swallow the "Faust" Symphony whole, or to reject it altogether, each of which is a symptom of intellectual limitation.

From the cynical point of view, the whole idea of the "Chorus Mysticus" can seem utter rot. "The Eternal-Womanly draws us above," indeed! ("Us" in this case, being man). No doubt the "Eternal-Womanly" has inspired art, helped man to save his money and be tidy, kept him respectable and diligent, all according to what sort of "Eternal-Womanly" he happened to be exposed. But there is another side to the "Eternal-Womanly," any cynic will tell you, a side that far from drawing man above can drag him down! And so on.

Yet to a complex organism like Liszt, the "Eternal-Womanly" must have been a very real source of inspiration, a benign genii as essential to his spiritual and artistic existence as food, water and air were physical necessities. This understood, the brooding, poetic mysticism of Faust the philosopher, and the shameless strutting of the rejuvenated Faust are great art as Liszt expressed it. So with the radiant loveliness of the movement characterizing Gretchen, and the spectacular grotesquerie of the Goethe-Liszt devil who mocks at all purity. By this reasoning, one reaches the conclusion that the "Faust" Symphony is a masterpiece of its kind.

Mr. Koussevitzky drove the orchestra into a magnificent display of perfection. Their tone was gorgeous. Every measure was emotionally ardent, charged with imagination, and nobly idealized. Which is to say, that the music as Liszt must have conceived it was completely revealed. If one may make a personal admission, this performance was not so moving as other Koussevitzky readings of the work in the past. But it was not the fault of composer, conductor or players. Rather must it be attributed to having heard opera the night before. Opera somehow gives a stimulation that makes pure symphonic music temporarily become tame. Perhaps others in the audience felt the same way.

Yesterday's performance of the Mozart Symphony was perhaps the best Mr. Koussevitzky has achieved here in the last decade. He treated the music simply. There were no personal emotionalizings, no distorting modifications of expression or pace. That is just the way Mozart ought to be played. Then he can speak in his own beautiful, slightly pathetic and irresistible way.

The orchestra goes to New York this coming week. The next Boston concerts will be on Thursday, April 10 (because April 11 is Good Friday), and Saturday, April 12. Eugene Goossens will introduce to Boston his own Symphony. Mr. Koussevitzky will conduct the Third Piano Concerto of Rachmaninoff, with Vladimir Horowitz as soloist. C. W. D.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
MAR 31 1941

GLEE CLUBS HEARD IN JOINT CONCERT

Harvard Group and Radcliffe Choral Society Sing Tallis and Byrd Compositions

STRAUSS WORK IS OFFERED

Excerpt From 'Reine Indigo,' Scene From 'Otello' and 'Rio Grande' by Lambert Given

By OLIN DOWNES

Nothing could have exceeded the good musical manners of the Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society when these two bodies sang music by Tallis, Byrd, Bach and other grave if not reverend signors for the first two-thirds of the program they presented under the leadership of G. Wallace Woodworth last night in Town Hall.

And nothing could have exceeded the contrast between the eminent seriousness and the mouselike discretion with which their masterpieces were discoursed and the joyous release that attended the virtuoso performance of Lambert's capital fooling in his "Rio Grande," when the young ladies and gentlemen let loose in a manner befitting their years, experience and dispositions, as they also did in the highly dramatic delivery of the opening chorus from Verdi's "Otello," and the gay and piquant music of Johann Strauss in the set of choruses, to French text, from the Paris version of his operetta "La Reine Indigo."

Music Is Captivating

This was captivating music, the more so for the demureness, the intense seriousness, indeed the maidenly reserve on the one hand, and the iron resolution of the part of the young men on the other, with which the delectable ditties and "double entendres" were exchanged. You would have said there was nothing in it, as the maidens lowered their lashes, and the young men glared before them, and, anyhow, honi soit qui mal y pense. Delicious words. Delicious music.

But one was fain to believe that two-thirds instead of one-third of the program should have been devoted to this kind of music. For the rest, by all means have them drink deep at the springs of eternal beauty of more serious masters.

Earlier in the evening the two choruses sang alternately and then, together, the noble music of Tallis and Byrd, in a manner that reflected equally their earnestness and their training.

Audience Enthusiastic

The concert was a happy occasion, characterized by the most cordial relations between the performers on the stage and the audience which applauded their efforts so vigorously. When it came to the "Dona nobis pacem" from the Bach B minor Mass, Mr. Woodworth remarked from the stage that a thousand or fifteen hundred singers from the organizations present had had the honor of performing the music under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky in Boston and at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. He requested that the alumni in the audience come forth and sing from the stage with the chorus. Some sixty members of the audience did so.

It is to be remembered that Dr. Woodworth's performers are selected each season from the student body as it comes and goes from the colleges. The wonderful thing about their achievement is the seriousness of their attitude and the results, so creditable under the circumstances, that are gained in the direction of finished and artistic performance. At the same time it is felt by this writer that in much of last night's concert the full capacities of the youthful voices were not realized as they could be without harm, and with more color, contrast and communicativeness.

It is a question of exactly what music should best be studied by choral bodies such as these. Certainly cheap music is not to be desired, but the fire and enthusiasm that the last items on the program aroused said a good deal. It might have been well, too, if one or more of such compositions could have come earlier in the evening. This would have effected a release which the singers, rather overcareful and self-conscious, were some time in attaining.

When they did attain it, the listener realized what good red blood, after all, they did have in their veins. Nor is there to be forgotten, in addition to the singing and the triumphant surmounting by the chorus of all sorts of rhythmic and musical problems involved, the brilliant and masterly playing, by William J. Austin, 1939, of the principal piano part.

It goes without saying that it was not possible to sing excerpts from an operetta by Johann Strauss which ended with the Blue Danube Waltz, to an Offenbachian French text, without an encore. Even then the audience had no intention of leaving the hall.

A "Faust" Symphony

April 4 1941

Dr. Koussevitzky Gives the Liszt Work An Imaginative, Fiery Performance

By MORRIS HASTINGS

If Liszt's "Faust" Symphony must be revived—and almost five years have elapsed since it has been heard hereabouts—it should be played as it was at yesterday afternoon's Boston Symphony concert in Symphony Hall. Returned to his post after a week's absence, Dr. Koussevitzky directed the lengthy score with tremendous ardor and imagination and conviction. As a result, the symphony's finest pages—the marvelous chorus that brings the work to a close, the beautiful passage for strings in the second movement in which the hero's and heroine's themes are interwoven, the diablerie of the Mephistopheles section—these had passion and youth and vision.

Nevertheless, not even this superlative performance could make one oblivious to the dull and swollen pages in the composition. The "Faust" Symphony is a remarkable work for its time. But that time is not ours. In its day, the "Faust" Symphony opened musical windows on new scenes, and Richard Wagner among others profited greatly thereby. The sad thing is, and a frequent tragedy it is with Liszt the composer, that others took the ideas and made more of them than Liszt himself. Generous, romantic, prolific Liszt was, in a sense, the teacher, the others—Wagner and Strauss, to name a few disciples—the artists.

Make no mistake, though, there are wonderful things in the "Faust" Symphony, pages that stand sturdily on their own feet. The entire musical description of Mephistopheles, here depicted as Philip Hale pointed out as "the spirit that denies," is a fantastically clever creation, unquestionably the finest musical portrayal of Satan. How effectively Liszt paints him, merely by distorting brilliantly the themes that earlier in the work have been used to describe Faust. And the "chorus mysticus" that follows, especially when sung with the intensity of the Harvard Glee Club's performance yesterday and with the expressive solo work of tenor John L. Priebe, is exalting music.

The only other composition on the program, Mozart's great G minor Symphony, received a brilliant performance at the hands of Dr. Koussevitzky and his orchestra, but such a report hardly comes under the head of news. In this symphony, more than with most other Mozart symphonies, Dr. Koussevitzky catches the authentic Mozartean serenity and elegance and charm.

The concert will be repeated tonight. The next Boston Symphony concerts occur on Thursday afternoon (by exception), April 10, and Saturday evening, April 12, when Eugene Goossens will direct his own symphony, Opus 58, and Dr. Koussevitzky and Vladimir Horowitz, pianist, will be heard in a performance of Rachmaninov's Third Concerto in D minor.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
APR 6 - 1941

Boston Symphony Plays

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the leadership of Serge Koussevitzky, concluded its New York season yesterday afternoon in Carnegie Hall with a repetition of the program offered Thursday night.

Liszt's "Faust" symphony, performed with the aid of the Princeton University Chapel Choir and the Rutgers University Glee Club, was the feature of the event.

Mozart's G minor symphony received a performance of exquisite finish, of tonal beauty and an interpretation imbued with the essentially tragic spirit of Mozart's masterpiece. Koussevitzky's transcription for wind and brass instruments of Bach's C major Prelude and Fugue for organ also was heard. There was long applause at the end for orchestra and conductor.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
APR 4 - 1941

LISZT'S 'FAUST' LED BY KOUSSEVITZKY

Composer's Symphony Feature of Concert Given by Boston Group at Carnegie Hall

MOZART WORK ALSO HEARD

'Eine Kleine Nachtmusik' and Leader's Transcription of Bach Prelude Presented

By OLIN DOWNES

Liszt's "Faust" Symphony was the predominating feature of the concert given by Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra last night in Carnegie Hall. It will be repeated at the final concert of the Boston Symphony's New York season tomorrow afternoon. The symphony was preceded last night by Mozart's "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik" and by the first performance in New York of Koussevitzky's transcription for wind and brass instruments of Bach's C major Prelude and Fugue for organ.

This transcription is unusual among all others of its kind for what we may term its asceticism. Instead of gorgeously decking out the organ piece with the full panoply of the modern orchestra, Koussevitzky has confined himself to the sonorities of the wind instruments and to a rather severe color scheme. He uses the customary brass choir and an augmented section of woodwind, with an extra bassoon and contra-bassoon, a piccolo, two English horns, a high clarinet and a bass clarinet.

Many Tone-Colors at Disposal

Thus many tone-colors—nearly all of them save the warm and shimmering color of the strings—are at the transcriber's disposal. Doubtless, as his employment, in particular, of the different woodwind sonorities showed, he had in mind the organ tone and the organ's severity if not sameness of color. The rather inflexible character of the woodwind scoring, combined with the more brilliant qualities of brass, made very clear the Bach counterpoint and the linear quality of the music. It was possible, at the same time, to get substantial climaxes. This was using the orchestra to reveal and not conceal the composer's thought.

It was high time that the Faust symphony were heard here. It is not for any conductor and any orchestra. Certainly it is one of the most original symphonic works of the whole romantic period. Liszt may have derived from Berlioz's "Fantastic" symphony, where his methods of transforming themes is concerned. But no other composer shows such an approach to Goethe as Liszt does here, and so true a comprehension of the philosophic as well as the emotional elements of the poem.

Of course if this philosophic bias were all that distinguished the score of the "Faust" symphony it would not have lived. The fact is that Liszt's inspiration is here at its height, and that writing in the melodic vein he has found in his second movement a means of revealing Gretchen with a tenderness and, one would say, fidelity to the original that makes the passage unique in symphonic literature.

Three Character Sketches

This is mentioned at once in connection with the melodic consideration. But Gretchen is not the predominating thought of the symphony, with its three character sketches. The first movement is Faust in many aspects. The last, "Mephistopheles," is Faust with all his motives caricatured and belittled by the "spirit of that denies." And it is an extraordinary achievement.

Then there is the apparition, so to speak, of the Gretchen theme, and the apothesosis that follows, with the chorus and the solo tenor invoking the spirit of the everwomanly that leads upwards and on.

It might have been best if this somewhat showy conclusion had been spared; if, in other words, the Faust symphony had remained in its first form, without the choral finale. But it cannot be denied that this finale is first-class theatre in itself, and last night it made an immense impression, as, indeed, the Faust symphony can hardly fail to do, despite certain weaknesses, when it is approached by a masterful conductor and in a great spirit.

That the performance was brilliant and dramatic would go almost without saying. In the slow movement, difficult to interpret with equal simplicity and feeling, itwas more than that. Liszt strengthened and considerably improved the instrumentation of the "Faust" symphony after its first performance in Weimer in 1857. Dr. Koussevitzky accepted certain of these improvements, or let us say reinforcements, last night. Most of them he rejected, giving us the instrumentation nearly in its first form and making certain cuts.

No Telling Detail Missed

He made a gorgeous sounding piece of it, and missed no telling detail or climax. Whether his tempi were the ideal ones is another question. For the writer the tempo of the first movement was too fast for its best good, especially in such an instance as the announcement of the last of the Faust themes. That proud, swinging phrase lost some of its power and dignity because of the pace.

We also think of somewhat subtler innuendo in passages of the last movement, which was more dramatic than psychological in accent. Whatever the individual reservations might be, the symphony, performed with the aid of the Princeton University Chapel Choir and the Rutgers University Glee Club, gripped the audience which packed the hall for the occasion. The applause for conductor and orchestra was long and loud and was in full tide as the reviewers went their ways.

This Clipping From
BROOKLYN, N.Y.
EAGLE
APR 4 - 1941

1/3

Koussevitzky Gives 'Faust' Symphony

Seldom Performed Work by Liszt Played by Bostonians in Carnegie

By MILES KASTENDIECK

Fortunately Koussevitzky decides every once in a while to do Liszt's Faust Symphony, thus enabling the public to hear "the other side" of the composer. With the Boston Symphony to play it and Koussevitzky to infuse into it all the magic of his conducting, hearing the work becomes even more of an experience when recollected in tranquillity than while listening to a performance such as that given in Carnegie Hall last night.

When the music has rekindled memories of the Faust legend and the story, as conceived by Goethe, comes to life again, it takes little effort to realize that Liszt excelled himself in the creation of this symphony and that perhaps posterity will recognize what his contemporaries would not; simply that he had caught the essential spirit of Faust in music better than any other composer in spite of many measures that the listener could do without in the course of a 70-minute performance. Yet to one saturated with the Faust story, the length of the symphony might not be apparent.

There is no denying the effect of this music. It weaves its romantic spell just as the story has always fired the imagination of writers and composers. Its chief success lies in the musical characterization, in spite of the fact that the repetitious thematic material makes it all so obvious. Faust, Gretchen, Mephistopheles — they are very much present. Even though Liszt never gave the devil a theme, he gave him his due in a manner that an audience should be able to follow for the simple reason that the third section uses the themes so obviously stated in the other movements. Then comes the choral final with its deification of woman's love, a fitting postlude to a masterpiece of its kind.

It was an impressive performance, heightened by the excellent singing of the Princeton University Chapel Choir and the Rutgers University Glee Club. The tenor soloist was John Priebe.

The concert began with an exquisitely modulated performance of Mozart's "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik," followed by Bach's Prelude and Fugue in C (No. 17) arranged for wind orchestra by Koussevitzky himself. The music lent itself to some ingenious contriving on the part of the conductor, resulting in an effective number to show off the virtuosity of the Boston's wind players.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN
APR 4 - 1941

Bostonians Winding Up Local Season

By GRENA BENNETT.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra gave the first of its final pair of local concerts last evening and the patrons paid the usual compliment to the visitors by completely filling Carnegie Hall.

Viennese music having become a temporary vogue, Conductor Serge Koussevitzky began his program with Mozart's "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik" serenade.

No more beautiful nor satisfying interpretation of that work can be conceived, for it was performed with rare grace and delicacy; the instruments fused with faultless blending and balance; the rhythms as firm in outline and tempo as if guided by a metronome.

The quality of tone was luscious and each measure was chiseled with perfect clarity.

Mr. Koussevitzky's name was partnered with that of Bach in his arrangement for wind orchestra of the ancient composer's C major Prelude and Fugue..

The matter of the music was retained, but in the version heard it assumed a rather too intimate and tenuous character for real satisfaction.

The final number was Liszt's "A Faust Symphony in Three Character Pictures," inspired by Goethe's fantastic story. The composition depicted Faust, Gretchen and Mephistopheles, the so-called "musical studies" aiming to delineate the dominating qualities of each character—Faust, by turn yearning, ardent and arrogant; Gretchen, tender, trusting and poignantly passionate; Mephistopheles, a dominating and subtly commanding figure.

These were eloquently expressed in the reading, the music a richly endowed script in which the instrumentalists were aided by John Priebe, tenor, and nearly one hundred singers from the Princeton University Chapel Choir and the Rutgers University Glee Club.

Tomorrow afternoon's program will be devoted to repetitions of the Mozart and Liszt numbers and will bring the current series by the Bostonians to a close.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
POST
APR 4 - 1941

Boston Symphony Plays Fifth Evening Concert

Serge Koussevitsky conducted the Boston Symphony in its fifth evening concert in Carnegie Hall last evening. The program opened with a superlative reading of "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik," the justly-celebrated strings of the Boston Symphony playing like an expanded string quartet.

Next on the program was an arrangement by Mr. Koussevitzky of the Bach prelude and fugue in C major, in which the conductor went Brahms one better by dispensing with strings altogether. The result, though interesting as orchestral acrobatics, suffered from lack of contrast, especially in the fugal section.

After the intermission Mr. Koussevitzky returned to rattle the dry bones of the "Faust" Symphony of Liszt. In this he had the assistance of the Princeton University Chapel Choir and the Rutgers University Glee Club. The nice lady on my left, who had borne the tedium of the Liszt without flinching, remarked as the collegians rose: "Now maybe they're going to sing 'Boola-Boola.'" J. B.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
PM
APR 4 - 1941

The Boston Airs Its Jersey Accent

By HENRY SIMON

On its final pilgrimage to New York this season, the Boston Symphony under Serge Koussevitzky offered last night's Carnegie Hall audience a program that had undergone three changes before the final listing was arrived at. It was compounded of the familiar, the novel and the dramatic.

The familiar was Mozart's Eine Kleine Nachtmusik, a work that stands in danger of sounding hackneyed and heavy when played by a band several times the size Mozart intended. But the lightness of the Boston strings, their bite and the complete freedom from sentimentality in Dr. Koussevitzky's reading made the five-times familiar work sound fresh all over again.

The novel was an orchestration for wind instruments, made by Dr. Koussevitzky, of a C-major Prelude and Fugue by Bach. The program notes called attention to the Prelude's "majestic monotony" (left-handed praise if I ever read it), but Dr. Koussevitzky's skilled manipulation of sound was itself enough to catch the admiring attention of anyone inclined to agree with the notes. The work was originally written for organ; and with the Boston wind virtuosi blowing the pipes, it sounded like a great organ of Bach's own period come to life, each stop—even the pedal notes in the bass—breathing a vitality no single instrument can achieve by itself. Purists might object, but only purists.

The dramatic came in the second half of the program — Liszt's Faust Symphony, which enlisted the services of the Princeton Chapel Choir and the Rutgers Glee Club. They had to sit still in back of the orchestra for over an hour before they came in for a final "Chorus Mysticus." It must have been hot because one of the tenors kept fanning himself with a program.

But that wasn't the dramatic part. The drama came in the music, and made one think what an effective operatic composer Liszt might have been. In separate movements he sketches a philosophical and violently heroic Faust (much more convincing than Gounod's), a sentimentally tuneful Gretchen and a Mephisto who hops all over the place in fiendish glee. The three of them get together in the last movement, and it all ends with that "Chorus Mysticus" intoned over an organ and quiet, shivering orchestral chords. The boys sang Goethe's German with a fine New Jersey accent and earnestness.

It's wonderful romantic operatic music, rather too long and repetitious for the concert hall; but Liszt, half charlatan, half saint, and all virtuoso strode through every measure of it as it was played last night.

A "Faust" Symphony

April 1941

Dr. Koussevitzky Gives the Liszt Work An Imaginative, Fiery Performance

By MORRIS HASTINGS

If Liszt's "Faust" Symphony must be revived—and almost five years have elapsed since it has been heard hereabouts—it should be played as it was at yesterday afternoon's Boston Symphony concert in Symphony Hall. Returned to his post after a week's absence, Dr. Koussevitzky directed the lengthy score with tremendous ardor and imagination and conviction. As a result, the symphony's finest pages—the marvelous chorus that brings the work to a close, the beautiful passage for strings in the second movement in which the hero's and heroine's themes are interwoven, the diablerie of the Mephistopheles section—these had passion and youth and vision.

Nevertheless, not even this superlative performance could make one oblivious to the dull and swollen pages in the composition. The "Faust" Symphony is a remarkable work for its time. But that time is not ours. In its day, the "Faust" Symphony opened musical windows on new scenes, and Richard Wagner among others profited greatly thereby. The sad thing is, and a frequent tragedy it is with Liszt the composer, that others took the ideas and made more of them than Liszt himself. Generous, romantic, prolific Liszt was, in a sense, the teacher, the others—Wagner and Strauss, to name a few disciples—the artists.

Make no mistake, though, there are wonderful things in the "Faust" Symphony, pages that stand sturdily on their own feet. The entire musical description of Mephistopheles, here depicted as Philip Hale pointed out as "the spirit that denies," is a fantastically clever creation, unquestionably the finest musical portrayal of Satan. How effectively Liszt paints him, merely by distorting brilliantly the themes that earlier in the work have been used to describe Faust. And the "chorus mysticus" that follows, especially when sung with the intensity of the Harvard Glee Club's performance yesterday and with the expressive solo work of tenor John L. Priebe, is exalting music.

The only other composition on the program, Mozart's great G minor Symphony, received a brilliant performance at the hands of Dr. Koussevitzky and his orchestra, but such a report hardly comes under the head of news. In this symphony, more than with most other Mozart symphonies, Dr. Koussevitzky catches the authentic Mozartean serenity and elegance and charm.

The concert will be repeated tonight. The next Boston Symphony concerts occur on Thursday afternoon (by exception), April 10, and Saturday evening, April 12, when Eugene Goossens will direct his own symphony, Opus 58, and Dr. Koussevitzky and Vladimir Horowitz, pianist, will be heard in a performance of Rachmaninov's Third Concerto in D minor.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
APR 6 - 1941

Boston Symphony Plays

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the leadership of Serge Koussevitzky, concluded its New York season yesterday afternoon in Carnegie Hall with a repetition of the program offered Thursday night.

Liszt's "Faust" symphony, performed with the aid of the Princeton University Chapel Choir and the Rutgers University Glee Club, was the feature of the event.

Mozart's G minor symphony received a performance of exquisite finish, of tonal beauty and an interpretation imbued with the essentially tragic spirit of Mozart's masterpiece. Koussevitzky's transcription for wind and brass instruments of Bach's C major Prelude and Fugue for organ also was heard. There was long applause at the end for orchestra and conductor.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
APR 4 - 1941

LISZT'S 'FAUST' LED BY KOUSSEVITZKY

Composer's Symphony Feature of Concert Given by Boston Group at Carnegie Hall

MOZART WORK ALSO HEARD

'Eine Kleine Nachtmusik' and Leader's Transcription of Bach Prelude Presented

By OLIN DOWNES

Liszt's "Faust" Symphony was the predominating feature of the concert given by Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra last night in Carnegie Hall. It will be repeated at the final concert of the Boston Symphony's New York season tomorrow afternoon. The symphony was preceded last night by Mozart's "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik" and by the first performance in New York of Koussevitzky's transcription for wind and brass instruments of Bach's C major Prelude and Fugue for organ.

This transcription is unusual among all others of its kind for what we may term its asceticism. Instead of gorgeously decking out the organ piece with the full panoply of the modern orchestra Koussevitzky has confined himself to the sonorities of the wind instruments and to a rather severe color scheme. He uses the customary brass choir and an augmented section of woodwind, with an extra bassoon and contra-bassoon, a piccolo, two English horns, a high clarinet and a bass clarinet.

Many Tone-Colors at Disposal

Thus many tone-colors—nearly all of them save the warm and shimmering color of the strings—are at the transcriber's disposal. Doubtless, as his employment, in particular, of the different woodwind sonorities showed, he had in mind the organ tone and the organ's severity if not sameness of color. The rather inflexible character of the woodwind scoring, combined with the more brilliant qualities of brass, made very clear the Bach counterpoint and the linear quality of the music. It was possible, at the same time, to get substantial climaxes. This was using the orchestra to reveal and not conceal the composer's thought.

It was high time that the Faust symphony were heard here. It is not for any conductor and any orchestra. Certainly it is one of the most original symphonic works of the whole romantic period. Liszt may have derived from Berlioz's "Fantastic" symphony, where his methods of transforming themes is concerned. But no other composer shows such an approach to Goethe as Liszt does here, and so true a comprehension of the philosophic as well as the emotional elements of the poem.

Of course if this philosophic bias were all that distinguished the score of the "Faust" symphony it would not have lived. The fact is that Liszt's inspiration is here at its height, and that writing in the melodic vein he has found in his second movement a means of revealing Gretchen with a tenderness and, one would say, fidelity to the original that makes the passage unique in symphonic literature.

Three Character Sketches

This is mentioned at once in connection with the melodic consideration. But Gretchen is not the predominating thought of the symphony, with its three character sketches. The first movement is Faust in many aspects. The last, "Mephistopheles," is Faust with all his motives caricatured and belittled by the "spirit of that denies." And it is an extraordinary achievement.

Then there is the apparition, so to speak, of the Gretchen theme, and the apotheosis that follows, with the chorus and the solo tenor invoking the spirit of the everwomanly that leads upwards and on.

It might have been best if this somewhat showy conclusion had been spared; if, in other words, the Faust symphony had remained in its first form, without the choral finale. But it cannot be denied that this finale is first-class theatre in itself, and last night it made an immense impression, as, indeed, the Faust symphony can hardly fail to do, despite certain weaknesses, when it is approached by a masterful conductor and in a great spirit.

That the performance was brilliant and dramatic would go almost without saying. In the slow movement, difficult to interpret with equal simplicity and feeling, itwas more than that. Liszt strengthened and considerably improved the instrumentation of the "Faust" symphony after its first performance in Weimer in 1857. Dr. Koussevitzky accepted certain of these improvements, or let us say reinforcements, last night. Most of them he rejected, giving us the instrumentation nearly in its first form and making certain cuts.

No Telling Detail Missed

He made a gorgeous sounding piece of it, and missed no telling detail or climax. Whether his tempi were the ideal ones is another question. For the writer the tempo of the first movement was too fast for its best good, especially in such an instance as the announcement of the last of the Faust themes. That proud, swinging phrase lost some of its power and dignity because of the pace.

We also think of somewhat subtler innuendo in passages of the last movement, which was more dramatic than psychological in accent. Whatever the individual reservations might be, the symphony, performed with the aid of the Princeton University Chapel Choir and the Rutgers University Glee Club, gripped the audience which packed the hall for the occasion. The applause for conductor and orchestra was long and loud and was in full tide as the reviewers went their ways.

This Clipping From
BROOKLYN, N.Y.
EAGLE
APR 4 - 1941

113

Koussevitzky Gives 'Faust' Symphony

Seldom Performed Work by Liszt Played by Bostonians in Carnegie

By MILES KASTENDIECK

Fortunately Koussevitzky decides every once in a while to do Liszt's Faust Symphony, thus enabling the public to hear "the other side" of the composer. With the Boston Symphony to play it and Koussevitzky to infuse into it all the magic of his conducting, hearing the work becomes even more of an experience when recollected in tranquillity than while listening to a performance such as that given in Carnegie Hall last night.

When the music has rekindled memories of the Faust legend and the story, as conceived by Goethe, comes to life again, it takes little effort to realize that Liszt excelled himself in the creation of this symphony and that perhaps posterity will recognize what his contemporaries would not; simply that he had caught the essential spirit of Faust in music better than any other composer in spite of many measures that the listener could do without in the course of a 70-minute performance. Yet to one saturated with the Faust story, the length of the symphony might not be apparent.

There is no denying the effect of this music. It weaves its romantic spell just as the story has always fired the imagination of writers and composers. Its chief success lies in the musical characterization, in spite of the fact that the repetitious thematic material makes it all so obvious. Faust, Gretchen, Mephistopheles—they are very much present. Even though Liszt never gave the devil a theme, he gave him his due in a manner that an audience should be able to follow for the simple reason that the third section uses the themes so obviously stated in the other movements. Then comes the choral final with its deification of woman's love, a fitting postlude to a masterpiece of its kind.

It was an impressive performance, heightened by the excellent singing of the Princeton University Chapel Choir and the Rutgers University Glee Club. The tenor soloist was John Priebe.

The concert began with an exquisitely modulated performance of Mozart's "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik," followed by Bach's Prelude and Fugue in C (No. 17) arranged for wind orchestra by Koussevitzky himself. The music lent itself to some ingenious contriving on the part of the conductor, resulting in an effective number to show off the virtuosity of the Boston's wind players.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN
APR 4 - 1941

Bostonians Winding Up Local Season

By GRENA BENNETT.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra gave the first of its final pair of local concerts last evening and the patrons paid the usual compliment to the visitors by completely filling Carnegie Hall.

Viennese music having become a temporary vogue, Conductor Serge Koussevitzky began his program with Mozart's "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik" serenade.

No more beautiful nor satisfying interpretation of that work can be conceived, for it was performed with rare grace and delicacy; the instruments fused with faultless blending and balance; the rhythms as firm in outline and tempo as if guided by a metronome.

The quality of tone was luscious and each measure was chiseled with perfect clarity.

Mr. Koussevitzky's name was partnered with that of Bach in his arrangement for wind orchestra of the ancient composer's C major Prelude and Fugue..

The matter of the music was retained, but in the version heard it assumed a rather too intimate and tenuous character for real satisfaction.

The final number was Liszt's "A Faust Symphony in Three Character Pictures," inspired by Goethe's fantastic story. The composition depicted Faust, Gretchen and Mephistopheles, the so-called "musical studies" aiming to delineate the dominating qualities of each character—Faust, by turn yearning, ardent and arrogant; Gretchen, tender, trusting and poignantly passionate; Mephistopheles, a dominating and subtly commanding figure.

These were eloquently expressed in the reading, the music a richly endowed script in which the instrumentalists were aided by John Priebe, tenor, and nearly one hundred singers from the Princeton University Chapel Choir and the Rutgers University Glee Club.

Tomorrow afternoon's program will be devoted to repetitions of the Mozart and Liszt numbers and will bring the current series by the Bostonians to a close.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
POST
APR 4 - 1941

Boston Symphony Plays Fifth Evening Concert

Serge Koussevitsky conducted the Boston Symphony in its fifth evening concert in Carnegie Hall last evening. The program opened with a superlative reading of "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik," the justly-celebrated strings of the Boston Symphony playing like an expanded string quartet.

Next on the program was an arrangement by Mr. Koussevitzky of the Bach prelude and fugue in C major, in which the conductor went Brahms one better by dispensing with strings altogether. The result, though interesting as orchestral acrobatics, suffered from lack of contrast, especially in the fugal section.

After the intermission Mr. Koussevitzky returned to rattle the dry bones of the "Faust" Symphony of Liszt. In this he had the assistance of the Princeton University Chapel Choir and the Rutgers University Glee Club. The nice lady on my left, who had borne the tedium of the Liszt without flinching, remarked as the collegians rose: "Now maybe they're going to sing 'Boola-Boola.'" J. B.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
PM
APR 4 - 1941

The Boston Airs Its Jersey Accent

By HENRY SIMON

On its final pilgrimage to New York this season, the Boston Symphony under Serge Koussevitzky offered last night's Carnegie Hall audience a program that had undergone three changes before the final listing was arrived at. It was compounded of the familiar, the novel and the dramatic.

The familiar was Mozart's Eine Kleine Nachtmusik, a work that stands in danger of sounding hackneyed and heavy when played by a band several times the size Mozart intended. But the lightness of the Boston strings, their bite and the complete freedom from sentimentality in Dr. Koussevitzky's reading made the five-times familiar work sound fresh all over again.

The novel was an orchestration for wind instruments, made by Dr. Koussevitzky, of a C-major Prelude and Fugue by Bach. The program notes called attention to the Prelude's "majestic monotony" (left-handed praise if I ever read it), but Dr. Koussevitzky's skilled manipulation of sound was itself enough to catch the admiring attention of anyone inclined to agree with the notes. The work was originally written for organ; and with the Boston wind virtuosi blowing the pipes, it sounded like a great organ of Bach's own period come to life, each stop—even the pedal notes in the bass—breathing a vitality no single instrument can achieve by itself. Purists might object, but only purists.

The dramatic came in the second half of the program—Liszt's Faust Symphony, which enlisted the services of the Princeton Chapel Choir and the Rutgers Glee Club. They had to sit still in back of the orchestra for over an hour before they came in for a final "Chorus Mysticus." It must have been hot because one of the tenors kept fanning himself with a program.

But that wasn't the dramatic part. The drama came in the music, and made one think what an effective operatic composer Liszt might have been. In separate movements he sketches a philosophical and violently heroic Faust (much more convincing than Gounod's), a sentimentally tuneful Gretchen and a Mephisto who hops all over the place in fiendish glee. The three of them get together in the last movement, and it all ends with that "Chorus Mysticus" intoned over an organ and quiet, shivering orchestral chords. The boys sang Goethe's German with a fine New Jersey accent and earnestness.

It's wonderful romantic operatic music, rather too long and repetitious for the concert hall; but Liszt, half charlatan, half saint, and all virtuoso strode through every measure of it as it was played last night.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
SUN
APR 4 - 1941

BOSTONIANS PLAY 'FAUST' SYMPHONY

Princeton-Rutgers Choirs Aid Koussevitzky.

By OSCAR THOMPSON.

It would not do to charge Serge Koussevitzky with discriminating against the percussion. Yet, as unquestionable fact at last night's concert of the Boston Symphony, it was the strings that had Mozart's "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik" to themselves and the winds that were equally exclusive in the playing of the conductor's own transcription of Bach's C-major organ Prelude and Fugue. There was no composition solely for the battery.

Hence, the great roll of the timpani at the close of Liszt's "Faust" Symphony might have been looked upon as in some measure compensatory. It was a good, strong roll, too. Of course, it will not be contended that the "Faust" Symphony is dominated by that roll. Along with the many other instruments of a generously Lisztian ensemble, the scoring makes use of the organ that is permitted no part in the transcribed organ music of Bach. Of more moment is the male chorus, which, with its much-traduced tenor solo, rounds out the last of the three movements.

Last night's chorus was a large one compounded of the Princeton University Chapel Choir and the Rutgers University Glee Club. The soloist was John Priebe. Since for certain listeners the work comes to life—as Wagner said Beethoven's Ninth Symphony did—only with the entrance of the human voice, it should be noted forthwith that the collegiate chorus was better than adequate; and that the young tenor, if not always in the middle of the note, made the grade.

Higher Praise for Orchestra.

Compliments of so mild a flavor would not do for the orchestra. It played superbly throughout the hour and ten minutes that the symphony consumed. If there are those who find the work tediously long and lacking in any very convincing emotional appeal, it must be that they fail to see the great light that surely shines like a beacon before Dr. Koussevitzky. For if ever a leader brought fervor to his task, the Boston generalissimo did in this performance.

Not every one groans under the symphony's amplitude of line. Some, indeed, find in it less cause for restlessness than in the marathon symphonies of Bruckner and Mahler. Of all compositions that stem from Goethe's humanistic epic, it has the most of psychology. For that reason, it probably is closer to Goethe than any other musical score connected with the "Faust" legend. There is robust characterization in the opening "Faust" section, a fragrant mood suggestion in the Gretchen chapter and an abundance of diablerie in the part devoted to Mephistopheles. As a gigantic musical fresco, the work has few companions in symphonic music. But it lacks the pregnancy of fundamental musical ideas that has kept Wagner's "Eine Faust Overture" so much more fresh and vital.

The other music of the evening found the strings and the winds quite as responsive as the timpani proved to be when at long last its opportunity came. This was the last evening concert of the Boston Symphony's Carnegie Hall series and was largely attended.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
APR 5 - 1941

Koussevitzky Directs Boston In Liszt's 'Faust'

Also Conducts Own Version of Bach Organ Prelude at Carnegie Hall Concert

By Jerome D. Bohm

The second and longest half of Serge Koussevitzky's program with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Carnegie Hall Thursday night was given over to Liszt's greatest work, his "Faust" Symphony. Performed with but two brief cuts in the first movement, the symphony required about one hour and ten minutes in the unfolding, yet seldom proved unabsorbing. The composition's three movements were conceived by Lisst as "character pictures" of the three leading figures in the first part of Goethe's tragedy—Faust, Gretchen and Mephistopheles—and into them he has poured his most consistently sincere and imaginative music.

There are moments in the Faust movement in which Lisst does not resist the impulse to be grandiloquent which has vitiated the effectiveness of so many of his products. But these are happily few, and the salient aspects of Faust's nature, his searching after the unattainable, his brooding, passionate longing and amorousness are suggested unerringly.

Portrait of Gretchen

Although Gretchen's character is not exhaustively depicted, Liszt has wholly neglected its more tragic facets. The anguished, betrayed maiden, finally driven to madness and death in prison for the murder of her child, is not suggested. But the innocent, tender, trusting and loving sides of Gretchen are all there, limned with lyric contours of irresistible appeal.

Nowhere else is Lisst's genius so brilliantly revealed as in the Mephistopheles movement in which Faust's every impulse, every trait is caricatured, satirized and distorted. It is in these metamorphoses of the Faust themes that Lisst's ingenuity is most cogently disclosed, from both the inventive and coloristic viewpoints. Here his mastery of instrumentation reaches its apex. The choral finale, a setting of Goethe's "Alles vergangliche, ist nur ein Gleichniss," is imbued with genuine mysticism, and almost wholly free from sentimentality. It was well sung by the Princeton University Chapel Choir and Rutgers University Glee Club, but the tenor solo which forms an integral part thereof was voiced in a throaty, constricted manner and frequently insecure intonation by John Priebe.

Plays Own Bach Arrangement

The interpretation as a whole was a superb one which, if one excepts the closing measures of the Faust movement (in which Mr. Koussevitski ignored Lisst's directions and returned to the slow pace of the movement's opening) fully realized the composer's intentions and was invested with unfailing tonal splendor.

The evening began with a routine performance of Mozart's "Eine kleine Nachtmusik." Mr. Koussevitsky's arrangement for wind instruments only of Bach's Organ Prelude and Fugue in C major, No. 17, followed. This was an interesting transcription in which the conductor's obvious objective to approximate the texture and sonorities of the organ was often achieved. His use of the trumpet as a melodic, agile instrument was quite in the Bach tradition, and he made no attempt to make Bach's rather bucolic, unpretentious music sound like the crack of doom as is often the case with modern adapters of Leipzig Cantor's works.

Boston Symphony Triumph

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
APR 4 - 1941

By ROBERT BAGAR.

The three great characters of Goethe's Faust, as depicted in tone by Franz Lisst, came to glowing life in a magnificent performance of the Faust Symphony by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Carnegie Hall last night. Participating also were the Princeton University Chapel Choir and the Rutgers University Glee Club, besides John Priebe, who sang the tenor solo.

Liszt may not sing of the deeper, the more philosophical implications in the Goethe poem, but he feels the ebb and flow of mighty forces; he makes contrasts of amazing cleverness in his structure of the Goethean figures, and his music catches the sweep of the action—to call it that—with bold and powerful strokes.

Serge Koussevitzky, who conducted, hovered over every phrase, over every accent and cadence of the work like some ministering angel. And rarely, if ever, has the Boston band followed the wishes of its leader with greater fidelity or skill. This was truly a jewel-mechanism orchestra as it functioned last evening, each cog, each wheel in perfect condition.

Mozart's Eine Kleine Nachtmusik opened proceedings, and here, too, the gloss and glisten of the orchestra's playing were a joy. Mr. Koussevitzky's account of the last section of the piece, the Rondo, seemed a bit mannered, but no great harm was done to an otherwise charming reading.

The Bach Prelude and Fugue in C major, No. 17, was sandwiched between the Mozart and Liszt compositions. This was given in a Koussevitzky transcription for wind orchestra. Briefly, it failed to make any impression on one listener. The arrangement obscured Bach's lines and the monotony of the tone was scarcely ever relieved.

The evening's music was received with enthusiasm by a large audience. The bulk of the applause, however, went to the Liszt.

MUSIC NEWS

Walter Damrosch, dean of American conductors, has been added to the list of men who will direct concerts of the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra during its centennial session. Mr. Damrosch will conduct two concerts.

It also was announced today that the Philharmonic-Symphony Society, in negotiating contracts with all of the other conductors who will appear next season, has expressed the wish that each of them choose at least one work by an American composer for presentation during his term with the orchestra. The centennial conductors, in addition to John Barbirolli, regular conductor of the orchestra, and Dr. Damrosch, are Leopold Stokowski, Bruno Walter, Artur Rodzinski, Dimitri Mitropoulos, Serge Koussevitzky, Fritz Busch and Eugene Goossens.

* * *

A newly organized group calling itself the Monte Carlo Opera Company announces a series of performances at the Majestic Theater on April 19, 20, 25, 26 and 27.

Jesus Maria Sanroma, official pianist of the Boston Symphony, will give the final recital in the "Great Piano Classics" series at the Brooklyn Academy of Music on April 22. His recital will take the place of one scheduled to be given by Darius Milhaud and Earl Maiman.

John Barrymore, the actor, will appear with the men of the Philadelphia Orchestra at Robin Hood Dell, Philadelphia, on July 17. He will present a program of poetry and dramatic readings, for which musical backgrounds have been composed.

A concert of Jewish music will be given at the Lexington Avenue Y. M. H. A. tomorrow evening by Boris Schwartz, violinist, Joseph Schwartz, pianist, Mari Barova, contralto, Benjamin Grebany, baritone, and Yussel Beloussoff, 'cellist, used for establis Hebrew children.

The newly organ Ballet, will appear ton Irving High on Sunday evenin

Marian Anders contralto, gives recitals at the Mosque Theater, Newark, N. J., on April 14, and at the County Center, White Plains, on April 18.

The Dance Theater of the Y. M. H. A. will present a recital by Welland Lathrop at the Lexington Avenue Y. M. H. A. on May 18.

On Sunday evening, the Gordon String Quartet will play at the Music School Settlement.

Bertha Schultz, violinist, Olga Sapio, pianist, Theodore Wolf, clarinetist, Pina La Corte, soprano, and Ana Drittel, 'cellist, will appear in joint recital at the Hillside Hollis Hebrew Center on Sunday night.

The Midtown Symphony Orchestra, Zoltan Fekete, conductor, will give a concert at the Ethical Culture Society Auditorium on Tuesday night, April 15.

This Clipping From
NEW YORKER
NEW YORK, N.Y.
APR 12 1941

THE Princeton Chapel Choir and the Rutgers Glee Club came to Carnegie Hall to assist the Boston Symphony and Serge Koussevitzky in Liszt's "Faust" symphony. The young men sang the finale of the long work enthusiastically, and the entire performance was a triumph for all concerned. The symphony has many sorts of interest for students of musical history and for those who enjoy the details of an expansive essay in which Liszt sometimes anticipated composers who were to follow him, and it reveals almost all of his own genius as well as characteristic lapses. For many other concert-goers, though, the symphony doesn't come to life until Mephistopheles arrives with the last movement. One reason may be the stop-go nature of some of the music, there being a good deal of wrestling with restlessness.

Mr. Koussevitzky has joined the C.W.A.B. (Conductors Who Arrange Bach). His first transcription played hereabouts was a setting for wind instruments of a prelude and fugue in C-major for organ, and the scoring suggested skillfully the sound of such an organ as Bach might have played.

This Clipping From DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS
APR 3 - 1941

Music in New York:

Boston Symphony In Carnegie Hall

Special to The News.

NEW YORK, April 2.—Serge Koussevitzky will bring the Boston Symphony Orchestra to Carnegie Hall for a guest appearance Thursday night. Featured on the program will be the conductor's own arrangement of Bach's Prelude and Fugue in C Major, and Liszt's A Faust Symphony in Three Character pictures (after Goethe). Prokoviev's Lieutenant Kije Suite, Opus 60, will complete the concert.

On Thursday, Friday and Saturday evenings Albert Stoessel will conduct performances of an English version of Verdi's opera, Falstaff, at the Juilliard School of Music.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
APR 7 - 1941

Boston Symphony Plays

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the leadership of Serge Koussevitzky, concluded its New York season Saturday afternoon in Carnegie Hall with a program containing a repetition of the principal feature of its concert offered Thursday night: Liszt's Faust symphony, performed with the aid of the Princeton University Chapel Choir and the Rutgers University Glee Club.

Mozart's G minor symphony received a performance of exquisite finish, of tonal beauty and an interpretation imbued with the essential tragic spirt of this consummate masterpiece. This although the mucis was kept within the strictest classical frame. The interpretation, which went so deep to its innermost secret, was achieved with the utmost simplicity—a simplicity difficult to capture in a manner which is not artifice but a supreme achievement of the most conscious and mature art. Needless to say, such a result could not have been achieved with an orchestra less perfect in all its parts or less sensitive to every phase and nuance than the Boston Symphony.

Thus in one concert Dr. Koussevitsky epitomized the beauty of both the classic and romantic periods, in compositions utterly contrasted; an impressive testimony to his esthetic perspective and the catholicity of his taste.

This was the conclusion before a demonstrative audience that packed the hall of what has been the most successful season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra or of any other symphony orchestra of the Winter of 1940-41 in New York City.

O. D.

This Clipping From KALAMAZOO, MICH.
GAZETTE
APR 3 - 1941

Cakes Will Buy Music for the Symphony Orchestra

Cakes will buy music for the Kalamazoo Symphony orchestra—the orchestra hopes.

Mrs. Harry M. Snow, the orchestra's business manager, today announced the symphony would sponsor a bake sale starting at 10:30 a. m. Saturday in the Lew Hubbard store, 117 West Michigan avenue.

Proceeds will go toward paying for the score of the unique symphony, "Peter and the Wolf," by Prokofief, modern Russian composer. Only a few copies of the symphony, which was introduced in the United States two years ago by the Boston Symphony orchestra, was available. The Kalamazoo symphony purchased one a few days ago, although its music budget for the year was exhausted.

"Peter and the Wolf" will be included on the orchestra's program next season, Mrs. Snow said. Miss Lucille Desenberg is in charge of Saturday's you-buy-the-cake-and-we'll-buy-the-music sale.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
SUN
APR 4 - 1941

BOSTONIANS PLAY 'FAUST' SYMPHONY

Princeton-Rutgers Choirs Aid Koussevitzky.

By OSCAR THOMPSON.

It would not do to charge Serge Koussevitzky with discriminating against the percussion. Yet, as unquestionable fact at last night's concert of the Boston Symphony, it was the strings that had Mozart's "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik" to themselves and the winds that were equally exclusive in the playing of the conductor's own transcription of Bach's C-major organ Prelude and Fugue. There was no composition solely for the battery.

Hence, the great roll of the timpani at the close of Liszt's "Faust" Symphony might have been looked upon as in some measure compensatory. It was a good, strong roll, too. Of course, it will not be contended that the "Faust" Symphony is dominated by that roll. Along with the many other instruments of a generously Lisztian ensemble, the scoring makes use of the organ that is permitted no part in the transcribed organ music of Bach. Of more moment is the male chorus, which, with its much-traduced tenor solo, rounds out the last of the three movements.

Last night's chorus was a large one compounded of the Princeton University Chapel Choir and the Rutgers University Glee Club. The soloist was John Priebe. Since for certain listeners the work comes to life—as Wagner said Beethoven's Ninth Symphony did—only with the entrance of the human voice, it should be noted forthwith that the collegiate chorus was better than adequate; and that the young tenor, if not always in the middle of the note, made the grade.

Higher Praise for Orchestra.

Compliments of so mild a flavor would not do for the orchestra. It played superbly throughout the hour and ten minutes that the symphony consumed. If there are those who find the work tediously long and lacking in any very convincing emotional appeal, it must be that they fail to see the great light that surely shines like a beacon before Dr. Koussevitzky. For if ever a leader brought fervor to his task, the Boston generalissimo did in this performance.

Not every one groans under the symphony's amplitude of line. Some, indeed, find in it less cause for restlessness than in the marathon symphonies of Bruckner and Mahler. Of all compositions that stem from Goethe's humanistic epic, it has the most of psychology. For that reason, it probably is closer to Goethe than any other musical score connected with the "Faust" legend. There is robust characterization in the opening "Faust" section, a fragrant mood suggestion in the Gretchen chapter and an abundance of diablerie in the part devoted to Mephistopheles. As a gigantic musical fresco, the work has few companions in symphonic music. But it lacks the pregnancy of fundamental musical ideas that has kept Wagner's "Eine Faust Overture" so much more fresh and vital.

The other music of the evening found the strings and the winds quite as responsive as the timpani proved to be when at long last its opportunity came. This was the last evening concert of the Boston Symphony's Carnegie Hall series and was largely attended.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
APR 5 - 1941

Koussevitzky Directs Boston In Liszt's 'Faust'

Also Conducts Own Version of Bach Organ Prelude at Carnegie Hall Concert

By Jerome D. Bohm

The second and longest half of Serge Koussevitzky's program with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Carnegie Hall Thursday night was given over to Liszt's greatest work, his "Faust" Symphony. Performed with but two brief cuts in the first movement, the symphony required about one hour and ten minutes in the unfolding, yet seldom proved unabsorbing. The composition's three movements were conceived by Liszt as "character pictures" of the three leading figures in the first part of Goethe's tragedy—Faust, Gretchen and Mephistopheles—and into them he has poured his most consistently sincere and imaginative music.

There are moments in the Faust movement in which Liszt does not resist the impulse to be grandiloquent which has vitiated the effectiveness of so many of his products. But these are happily few, and the salient aspects of Faust's nature, his searching after the unattainable, his brooding, passionate longing and amorousness are suggested unerringly.

Portrait of Gretchen

Although Gretchen's character is not exhaustively depicted, Liszt has wholly neglected its more tragic facets. The anguished, betrayed maiden, finally driven to madness and death in prison for the murder of her child, is not suggested. But the innocent, tender, trusting and loving sides of Gretchen are all there, limned with lyric contours of irresistible appeal.

Nowhere else is Liszt's genius so brilliantly revealed as in the Mephistopheles movement in which Faust's every impulse, every trait is caricatured, satirized and distorted. It is in these metamorphoses of the Faust themes that Liszt's ingenuity is most cogently disclosed, from both the inventive and coloristic viewpoints. Here his mastery of instrumentation reaches its apex. The choral finale, a setting of Goethe's "Alles vergangliche, ist nur ein Gleichniss," is imbued with genuine mysticism, and almost wholly free from sentimentality. It was well sung by the Princeton University Chapel Choir and Rutgers University Glee Club, but the tenor solo which forms an integral part thereof was voiced in a throaty, constricted manner and frequently insecure intonation by John Priebe.

Plays Own Bach Arrangement

The interpretation as a whole was a superb one which, if one excepts the closing measures of the Faust movement (in which Mr. Koussevitzki ignored Liszt's directions and returned to the slow pace of the movement's opening) fully realized the composer's intentions and was invested with unfailing tonal splendor.

The evening began with a routine performance of Mozart's "Eine kleine Nachtmusik." Mr. Koussevitzky's arrangement for wind instruments only of Bach's Organ Prelude and Fugue in C major, No. 17, followed. This was an interesting transcription in which the conductor's obvious objective to approximate the texture and sonorities of the organ was often achieved. His use of the trumpet as a melodic, agile instrument was quite in the Bach tradition, and he made no attempt to make Bach's rather bucolic, unpretentious music sound like the crack of doom as is often the case with modern adapters of Leipzig Cantor's works.

Boston Symphony Triumph

By ROBERT BAGAR.

The three great characters of Goethe's Faust, as depicted in tone by Franz Liszt, came to glowing life in a magnificent performance of the Faust Symphony by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Carnegie Hall last night. Participating also were the Princeton University Chapel Choir and the Rutgers University Glee Club, besides John Priebe, who sang the tenor solo.

Liszt may not sing of the deeper, the more philosophical implications in the Goethe poem, but he feels the ebb and flow of mighty forces; he makes contrasts of amazing cleverness in his structure of the Goethean figures, and his music catches the sweep of the action—to call it that—with bold and powerful strokes.

Serge Koussevitzky, who conducted, hovered over every phrase, over every accent and cadence of the work like some ministering angel. And rarely, if ever, has the Boston band followed the wishes of its leader with greater fidelity or skill. This was truly a jewel-mechanism orchestra as it functioned last evening, each cog, each wheel in perfect condition.

Mozart's Eine Kleine Nachtmusik opened proceedings, and here, too, the gloss and glisten of the orchestra's playing were a joy. Mr. Koussevitzky's account of the last section of the piece, the Rondo, seemed a bit mannered, but no great harm was done to an otherwise charming reading.

The Bach Prelude and Fugue in C major, No. 17, was sandwiched between the Mozart and Liszt compositions. This was given in a Koussevitzky transcription for wind orchestra. Briefly, it failed to make any impression on one listener. The arrangement obscured Bach's lines and the monotony of the tone was scarcely ever relieved.

The evening's music was received with enthusiasm by a large audience. The bulk of the applause, however, went to the Liszt.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
APR 4 - 1941

This Clipping From DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS
APR 3 - 1941

Music in New York:

Boston Symphony In Carnegie Hall

Special to The News.

NEW YORK, April 2.—Serge Koussevitzky will bring the Boston Symphony Orchestra to Carnegie Hall for a guest appearance Thursday night. Featured on the program will be the conductor's own arrangement of Bach's Prelude and Fugue in C Major, and Liszt's A Faust Symphony in Three Character pictures (after Goethe). Prokoviev's Lieutenant Kije Suite, Opus 60, will complete the concert.

On Thursday, Friday and Saturday evenings Albert Stoessel will conduct performances of an English version of Verdi's opera, Falstaff, at the Juilliard School of Music.

MUSIC NEWS

Walter Damrosch, dean of American conductors, has been added to the list of men who will direct concerts of the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra during its centennial session. Mr. Damrosch will conduct two concerts.

It also was announced today that the Philharmonic-Symphony Society, in negotiating contracts with all of the other conductors who will appear next season, has expressed the wish that each of them choose at least one work by an American composer for presentation during his term with the orchestra. The centennial conductors, in addition to John Barbirolli, regular conductor of the orchestra, and Dr. Damrosch, are Leopold Stokowski, Bruno Walter, Artur Rodzinski, Dimitri Mitropoulos, Serge Koussevitzky, Fritz Busch and Eugene Goossens.

* * *

A newly organized group calling itself the Monte Carlo Opera Company announces a series of performances at the Majestic Theater on April 19, 20, 25, 26 and 27.

Jesus Maria Sanroma, official pianist of the Boston Symphony, will give the final recital in the "Great Piano Classics" series at the Brooklyn Academy of Music on April 22. His recital will take the place of one scheduled to be given by Darius Milhaud and Earl Maiman.

John Barrymore, the actor, will appear with the men of the Philadelphia Orchestra at Robin Hood Dell, Philadelphia, on July 17. He will present a program of poetry and dramatic readings, for which musical backgrounds have been composed.

A concert of Jewish music will be given at the Lexington Avenue Y. M. H. A. tomorrow evening by Boris Schwartz, violinist, Joseph Schwartz, pianist, Mari Barova, contralto, Benjamin Grebany, baritone, and Evsei Beloussoff, 'cellist, [illegible] used for establish[illegible] Hebrew children.

The newly organi[illegible] Ballet will appear [illegible]ton Irving High [illegible] on Sunday evenin[illegible]

Marian Anders[illegible], contralto, gives recitals at the Mosque Theater, Newark, N. J., on April 14, and at the County Center, White Plains, on April 18.

The Dance Theater of the Y. M. H. A. will present a recital by Welland Lathrop at the Lexington Avenue Y. M. H. A. on May 18.

On Sunday evening, the Gordon String Quartet will play at the Music School Settlement.

Bertha Schultz, violinist, Olga Sapio, pianist, Theodore Wolf, clarinetist, Pina La Corte, soprano, and Ana Drittel, 'cellist, will appear in joint recital at the Hillside Hollis Hebrew Center on Sunday night.

The Midtown Symphony Orchestra, Zoltan Fekete, conductor, will give a concert at the Ethical Culture Society Auditorium on Tuesday night, April 15.

This Clipping From
NEW YORKER
NEW YORK, N.Y.
APR 12 1941

THE Princeton Chapel Choir and the Rutgers Glee Club came to Carnegie Hall to assist the Boston Symphony and Serge Koussevitzky in Liszt's "Faust" symphony. The young men sang the finale of the long work enthusiastically, and the entire performance was a triumph for all concerned. The symphony has many sorts of interest for students of musical history and for those who enjoy the details of an expansive essay in which Liszt sometimes anticipated composers who were to follow him, and it reveals almost all of his own genius as well as characteristic lapses. For many other concert-goers, though, the symphony doesn't come to life until Mephistopheles arrives with the last movement. One reason may be the stop-go nature of some of the music, there being a good deal of wrestling with restlessness.

Mr. Koussevitzky has joined the C.W.A.B. (Conductors Who Arrange Bach). His first transcription played hereabouts was a setting for wind instruments of a prelude and fugue in C-major for organ, and the scoring suggested skillfully the sound of such an organ as Bach might have played.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
APR 7 - 1941

Boston Symphony Plays

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the leadership of Serge Koussevitzky, concluded its New York season Saturday afternoon in Carnegie Hall with a program containing a repetition of the principal feature of its concert offered Thursday night: Liszt's Faust symphony, performed with the aid of the Princeton University Chapel Choir and the Rutgers University Glee Club.

Mozart's G minor symphony received a performance of exquisite finish, of tonal beauty and an interpretation imbued with the essential tragic spirt of this consummate masterpiece. This although the mucis was kept within the strictest classical frame. The interpretation, which went so deep to its innermost secret, was achieved with the utmost simplicity—a simplicity difficult to capture in a manner which is not artifice but a supreme achievement of the most conscious and mature art. Needless to say, such a result could not have been achieved with an orchestra less perfect in all its parts or less sensitive to every phase and nuance than the Boston Symphony.

Thus in one concert Dr. Koussevitsky epitomized the beauty of both the classic and romantic periods, in compositions utterly contrasted; an impressive testimony to his esthetic perspective and the catholicity of his taste.

This was the conclusion before a demonstrative audience that packed the hall of what has been the most successful season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra or of any other symphony orchestra of the Winter of 1940-41 in New York City.

O. D.

This Clipping From KALAMAZOO, MICH.
GAZETTE
APR 3 - 194[illegible]

Cakes Will Buy Music for the Symphony Orchestra

Cakes will buy music for the Kalamazoo Symphony orchestra—the orchestra hopes.

Mrs. Harry M. Snow, the orchestra's business manager, today announced the symphony would sponsor a bake sale starting at 10:30 a. m. Saturday in the Lew Hubbard store, 117 West Michigan avenue.

Proceeds will go toward paying for the score of the unique symphony, "Peter and the Wolf," by Prokofief, modern Russian composer. Only a few copies of the symphony, which was introduced in the United States two years ago by the Boston Symphony orchestra, was available. The Kalamazoo symphony purchased one a few days ago, although its music budget for the vear was exhausted.

"Peter and the Wolf" will be included on the orchestra's program next season, Mrs. Snow said. Miss Lucille Desenberg is in charge of Saturday's you-buy-the-cake-and-we'll-buy-the-music sale.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
SUN
APR 4 - 1941

BOSTONIANS PLAY 'FAUST' SYMPHONY

Princeton-Rutgers Choirs Aid Koussevitzky.

By OSCAR THOMPSON.

It would not do to charge Serge Koussevitzky with discriminating against the percussion. Yet, as unquestionable fact at last night's concert of the Boston Symphony, it was the strings that had Mozart's "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik" to themselves and the winds that were equally exclusive in the playing of the conductor's own transcription of Bach's C-major organ Prelude and Fugue. There was no composition solely for the battery.

Hence, the great roll of the timpani at the close of Liszt's "Faust" Symphony might have been looked upon as in some measure compensatory. It was a good, strong roll, too. Of course, it will not be contended that the "Faust" Symphony is dominated by that roll. Along with the many other instruments of a generously Lisztian ensemble, the scoring makes use of the organ that is permitted no part in the transcribed organ music of Bach. Of more moment is the male chorus, which, with its much-traduced tenor solo, rounds out the last of the three movements.

Last night's chorus was a large one compounded of the Princeton University Chapel Choir and the Rutgers University Glee Club. The soloist was John Priebe. Since for certain listeners the work comes to life—as Wagner said Beethoven's Ninth Symphony did—only with the entrance of the human voice, it should be noted forthwith that the collegiate chorus was better than adequate; and that the young tenor, if not always in the middle of the note, made the grade.

Higher Praise for Orchestra.

Compliments of so mild a flavor would not do for the orchestra. It played superbly throughout the hour and ten minutes that the symphony consumed. If there are those who find the work tediously long and lacking in any very convincing emotional appeal, it must be that they fail to see the great light that surely shines like a beacon before Dr. Koussevitzky. For if ever a leader brought fervor to his task, the Boston generalissimo did in this performance.

Not every one groans under the symphony's amplitude of line. Some, indeed, find in it less cause for restlessness than in the marathon symphonies of Bruckner and Mahler. Of all compositions that stem from Goethe's humanistic epic, it has the most of psychology. For that reason, it probably is closer to Goethe than any other musical score connected with the "Faust" legend. There is robust characterization in the opening "Faust" section, a fragrant mood suggestion in the Gretchen chapter and an abundance of diablerie in the part devoted to Mephistopheles. As a gigantic musical fresco, the work has few companions in symphonic music. But it lacks the pregnancy of fundamental musical ideas that has kept Wagner's "Eine Faust Overture" so much more fresh and vital.

The other music of the evening found the strings and the winds quite as responsive as the timpani proved to be when at long last its opportunity came. This was the last evening concert of the Boston Symphony's Carnegie Hall series and was largely attended.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
APR 5 - 1941

Koussevitzky Directs Boston In Liszt's 'Faust'

Also Conducts Own Version of Bach Organ Prelude at Carnegie Hall Concert

By Jerome D. Bohm

The second and longest half of Serge Koussevitzky's program with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Carnegie Hall Thursday night was given over to Liszt's greatest work, his "Faust" Symphony. Performed with but two brief cuts in the first movement, the symphony required about one hour and ten minutes in the unfolding, yet seldom proved unabsorbing. The composition's three movements were conceived by Liszt as "character pictures" of the three leading figures in the first part of Goethe's tragedy—Faust, Gretchen and Mephistopheles—and into them he has poured his most consistently sincere and imaginative music.

There are moments in the Faust movement in which Liszt does not resist the impulse to be grandiloquent which has vitiated the effectiveness of so many of his products. But these are happily few, and the salient aspects of Faust's nature, his searching after the unattainable, his brooding, passionate longing and amorousness are suggested unerringly.

Portrait of Gretchen

Although Gretchen's character is not exhaustively depicted, Liszt has wholly neglected its more tragic facets. The anguished, betrayed maiden, finally driven to madness and death in prison for the murder of her child, is not suggested. But the innocent, tender, trusting and loving sides of Gretchen are all there, limned with lyric contours of irresistible appeal.

Nowhere else is Liszt's genius so brilliantly revealed as in the Mephistopheles movement in which Faust's every impulse, every trait is caricatured, satirized and distorted. It is in these metamorphoses of the Faust themes that Liszt's ingenuity is most cogently disclosed, from both the inventive and coloristic viewpoints. Here his mastery of instrumentation reaches its apex. The choral finale, a setting of Goethe's "Allies vergangliche, ist nur ein Gleichniss," is imbued with genuine mysticism, and almost wholly free from sentimentality. It was well sung by the Princeton University Chapel Choir and Rutgers University Glee Club, but the tenor solo which forms an integral part thereof was voiced in a throaty, constricted manner and frequently insecure intonation by John Priebe.

Plays Own Bach Arrangement

The interpretation as a whole was a superb one which, if one excepts the closing measures of the Faust movement (in which Mr. Koussevitzki ignored Liszt's directions and returned to the slow pace of the movement's opening) fully realized the composer's intentions and was invested with unfailing tonal splendor.

The evening began with a routine performance of Mozart's "Eine kleine Nachtmusik." Mr. Koussevitzky's arrangement for wind instruments only of Bach's Organ Prelude and Fugue in C major, No. 17, followed. This was an interesting transcription in which the conductor's obvious objective to approximate the texture and sonorities of the organ was often achieved. His use of the trumpet as a melodic, agile instrument was quite in the Bach tradition, and he made no attempt to make Bach's rather bucolic, unpretentious music sound like the crack of doom as is often the case with modern adapters of Leipzig Cantor's works.

Boston Symphony Triumph

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
APR 4 - 1941

By ROBERT BAGAR.

The three great characters of Goethe's Faust, as depicted in tone by Franz Liszt, came to glowing life in a magnificent performance of the Faust Symphony by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Carnegie Hall last night. Participating also were the Princeton University Chapel Choir and the Rutgers University Glee Club, besides John Priebe, who sang the tenor solo.

Liszt may not sing of the deeper, the more philosophical implications in the Goethe poem, but he feels the ebb and flow of mighty forces; he makes contrasts of amazing cleverness in his structure of the Goethean figures, and his music catches the sweep of the action—to call it that—with bold and powerful strokes.

Serge Koussevitzky, who conducted, hovered over every phrase, over every accent and cadence of the work like some ministering angel. And rarely, if ever, has the Boston band followed the wishes of its leader with greater fidelity or skill. This was truly a jewel-mechanism orchestra as it functioned last evening, each cog, each wheel in perfect condition.

Mozart's Eine Kleine Nachtmusik opened proceedings, and here, too, the gloss and glisten of the orchestra's playing were a joy. Mr. Koussevitzky's account of the last section of the piece, the Rondo, seemed a bit mannered, but no great harm was done to an otherwise charming reading.

The Bach Prelude and Fugue in C major, No. 17, was sandwiched between the Mozart and Liszt compositions. This was given in a Koussevitzky transcription for wind orchestra. Briefly, it failed to make any impression on one listener. The arrangement obscured Bach's lines and the monotony of the tone was scarcely ever relieved.

The evening's music was received with enthusiasm by a large audience. The bulk of the applause, however, went to the Liszt.

MUSIC NEWS

Walter Damrosch, dean of American conductors, has been added to the list of men who will direct concerts of the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra during its centennial session. Mr. Damrosch will conduct two concerts.

It also was announced today that the Philharmonic-Symphony Society, in negotiating contracts with all of the other conductors who will appear next season, has expressed the wish that each of them choose at least one work by an American composer for presentation during his term with the orchestra. The centennial conductors, in addition to John Barbirolli, regular conductor of the orchestra, and Dr. Damrosch, are Leopold Stokowski, Bruno Walter, Artur Rodzinski, Dimitri Mitropoulos, Serge Koussevitzky, Fritz Busch and Eugene Goossens.

* * *

A newly organized group calling itself the Monte Carlo Opera Company announces a series of performances at the Majestic Theater on April 19, 20, 25, 26 and 27.

Jesus Maria Sanroma, official pianist of the Boston Symphony, will give the final recital in the "Great Piano Classics" series at the Brooklyn Academy of Music on April 22. His recital will take the place of one scheduled to be given by Darius Milhaud and Earl Maiman.

John Barrymore, the actor, will appear with the men of the Philadelphia Orchestra at Robin Hood Dell, Philadelphia, on July 17. He will present a program of poetry and dramatic readings, for which musical backgrounds have been composed.

A concert of Jewish music will be given at the Lexington Avenue Y. M. H. A. tomorrow evening by Boris Schwartz, violinist, Joseph Schwartz, pianist, Mari Barova, contralto, Benjamin Grebany, baritone, and Evsei Beloussoff, 'cellist. Proceeds will be used for establishing a camp for Hebrew children.

The newly organized Chicago Polish Ballet will appear at the Washington Irving High School Auditorium on Sunday evening, April 20.

Marian Anderson, Negro contralto, gives recitals at the Mosque Theater, Newark, N. J., on April 14, and at the County Center, White Plains, on April 18.

The Dance Theater of the Y. M. H. A. will present a recital by Welland Lathrop at the Lexington Avenue Y. M. H. A. on May 18.

On Sunday evening, the Gordon String Quartet will play at the Music School Settlement.

Bertha Schultz, violinist, Olga Sapio, pianist, Theodore Wolf, clarinetist, Pina La Corte, soprano, and Ana Drittel, 'cellist, will appear in joint recital at the Hillside Hollis Hebrew Center on Sunday night.

The Midtown Symphony Orchestra, Zoltan Fekete, conductor, will give a concert at the Ethical Culture Society Auditorium on Tuesday night, April 15.

This Clipping From
NEW YORKER
NEW YORK, N.Y.
APR 12 1941

THE Princeton Chapel Choir and the Rutgers Glee Club came to Carnegie Hall to assist the Boston Symphony and Serge Koussevitzky in Liszt's "Faust" symphony. The young men sang the finale of the long work enthusiastically, and the entire performance was a triumph for all concerned. The symphony has many sorts of interest for students of musical history and for those who enjoy the details of an expansive essay in which Liszt sometimes anticipated composers who were to follow him, and it reveals almost all of his own genius as well as characteristic lapses. For many other concert-goers, though, the symphony doesn't come to life until Mephistopheles arrives with the last movement. One reason may be the stop-go nature of some of the music, there being a good deal of wrestling with restlessness.

Mr. Koussevitzky has joined the C.W.A.B. (Conductors Who Arrange Bach). His first transcription played hereabouts was a setting for wind instruments of a prelude and fugue in C-major for organ, and the scoring suggested skillfully the sound of such an organ as Bach might have played.

This Clipping From DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS
APR 3 - 1941

Music in New York:

Boston Symphony In Carnegie Hall

Special to The News.

NEW YORK, April 2.—Serge Koussevitzky will bring the Boston Symphony Orchestra to Carnegie Hall for a guest appearance Thursday night. Featured on the program will be the conductor's own arrangement of Bach's Prelude and Fugue in C Major, and Liszt's A Faust Symphony in Three Character pictures (after Goethe). Prokoviev's Lieutenant Kije Suite, Opus 60, will complete the concert.

On Thursday, Friday and Saturday evenings Albert Stoessel will conduct performances of an English version of Verdi's opera, Falstaff, at the Juilliard School of Music.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
APR 7 - 1941

Boston Symphony Plays

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the leadership of Serge Koussevitzky, concluded its New York season Saturday afternoon in Carnegie Hall with a program containing a repetition of the principal feature of its concert offered Thursday night: Liszt's Faust symphony, performed with the aid of the Princeton University Chapel Choir and the Rutgers University Glee Club.

Mozart's G minor symphony received a performance of exquisite finish, of tonal beauty and an interpretation imbued with the essential tragic spirt of this consummate masterpiece. This although the mucis was kept within the strictest classical frame. The interpretation, which went so deep to its innermost secret, was achieved with the utmost simplicity—a simplicity difficult to capture in a manner which is not artifice but a supreme achievement of the most conscious and mature art. Needless to say, such a result could not have been achieved with an orchestra less perfect in all its parts or less sensitive to every phase and nuance than the Boston Symphony.

Thus in one concert Dr. Koussevitsky epitomized the beauty of both the classic and romantic periods, in compositions utterly contrasted; an impressive testimony to his esthetic perspective and the catholicity of his taste.

This was the conclusion before a demonstrative audience that packed the hall of what has been the most successful season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra or of any other symphony orchestra of the Winter of 1940-41 in New York City.

O. D.

This Clipping From KALAMAZOO, MICH.
GAZETTE
APR 3 - 194

[illegible] Symphony Orchestra

Mrs. Harry M. Snow, the orchestra's business manager, today announced the symphony would sponsor a bake sale starting at 10:30 a. m. Saturday in the Lew Hubbard store, 117 West Michigan avenue.

Proceeds will go toward paying for the score of the unique symphony, "Peter and the Wolf," by Prokofief, modern Russian composer. Only a few copies of the symphony, which was introduced in the United States two years ago by the Boston Symphony orchestra, was available. The Kalamazoo symphony purchased one a few days ago, although its music budget for the vear was exhausted.

"Peter and the Wolf" will be included on the orchestra's program next season, Mrs. Snow said. Miss Lucille Desenberg is in charge of Saturday's you-buy-the-cake-and-we'll-buy-the-music sale.

This Clipping From
BROOKLYN, N.Y.
EAGLE
APR 5 - 1941

115

Society Fills Academy as Boston Symphony Concludes Concert Here

By HELEN BROWN
Society Editor

Playing to a house which included many enthusiastic standees, the Boston Symphony Orchestra last night brought its 55th season in Brooklyn to a brilliant close. The program, account of which appears on the theater page of today's Eagle, was well received by the large audience.

Society occupied the boxes as usual. Mrs. Frederick D. MacKay entertained the following guests in her box: The Rev. John Howard Melish, Mrs. Edward M. Fuller, Mr. and Mrs. William C. Greenwood, Mr. and Mrs. Burt F. Nichols and Mrs. Seymour K. Fuller.

Mrs. Dean C. Osborne had as her box guests: Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Fawcett, Mr. and Mrs. Donald G. C. Sinclair, Mrs. James M. Fawcett, Mrs. Herman Selig and Mark Dalton.

Mrs. Benjamin Prince, who entertained at a dinner party preceding the concert, had as her box guests: Dr. and Mrs. John Howland Lathrop, Mrs. Karp Mikhalenkoff, Eugene W. Bolling, Walter Golde and James McDonald.

Brooklyn Woman's Club Box

The box of the Brooklyn Woman's Club was occupied by: Oscar W. Swift, Mrs. Oliver G. Carter, Mrs. Thomas H. McClintock, Mrs. Robert Franklin Ives, Mrs. Frederick W. Burbank, Mrs. Jason Davis, Mrs. Theodore Vosseler and Mrs. Wilson Briggs Zimmer.

In the box of the Alumnae Association of Adelphi Academy were Miss Emma Jessie Ogg, Mr. and Mrs. William B. Parker and Mr. and Mrs. William Slater.

Mrs. Thomas W. Lauderdale entertained the following box guests: Mr. and Mrs. James N. Currie, Mrs. George W. Felter, Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Alfred and Mrs. Frederick H. Paine. A party from Fort Hamilton occupied the Army-Navy box.

Students in Attendance

The remaining boxes were occupied by students of the Brooklyn Friends School, Poly Prep Country Day School and the Packer Collegiate Institute.

Officers of the Brooklyn Committee for the 1940-41 season included: Mrs. Walter Truslow, chairman of boxes; Mrs. Edward C. Blum, Mrs. William H. Good, vice chairmen; Mrs. M. Preston Goodfellow, chairman of the membership committee, and Mrs. Stewart Pratt, chairman of the Junior League committee.

The season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Brooklyn is presented under the auspices of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences, of which James G. McDonald is president, the Brooklyn Committee, of which Adrian Van Sinderen is chairman, and Mrs. Henry J. Davenport is executive chairman, and the Brooklyn Philharmonic Society, of which Dr. R. Huntington Woodman is chairman.

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL
APR 9 - 1941
This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN
APR 9 - 1941

MUSIC

Boston Symphony Offers Season's Final Concert at Metropolitan.

By G. Y. LOVERIDGE

The Boston Symphony Orchestra brought its Providence season to an end last night in Metropolitan Theatre. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky presided. The audience was numerous and responsive.

Schubert, Prokofieff, and Sibelius were heard from, in the "Unfinished" symphony, the "Lieutenant Kije" suite, and the second symphony, in D major.

The concert worked up from dull virtuosity, or virtuoso dullness, to a climax of power and brilliance. Schubert's "Unfinished" has been heard so many times, and so magnificently delivered, that it takes a superb performance to make an impression nowadays. Neither Dr. Koussevitzky nor the orchestra seemed up to that sort of performance. There was, of course, the suavity and the control and the precision that are so characteristic of the orchestra and so admirable in themselves, but there was little of the fine light of imagination and lyric ardor enriching the voices.

Perhaps the orchestra is a bit tired of Schubert's "Unfinished," which might well be so without implying disrespect for the composer or serious waning of affection for the music. At any rate, conductor and orchestra seemed to turn with relish to the witty and lively devices of Prokofieff in his biography of the imaginary lieutenant. Nobody has arisen to claim that this is great music, as far as we know, but it is entertaining, buoyant, even strangely touching at the last, when one considers that Prokofieff is, after all, only killing off somebody who never existed. The reading and the playing of this work was crisp and spirited. There were a number of good solo performances, of which those by the off-stage trumpet and the leader of the string-bases were selected by Dr. Koussevitzky for particular commendation. The audience applauded without stint.

However hard Dr. Koussevitzky works during the season and during the last concert of the season, he always manages to have a reserve of energy for the very last portion of the program, the portion that is calculated to lift one over the long, arid stretch that lies between the end of this season and the beginning of the next. This reserve he devoted with magnificent effect to the Sibelius second. It produced the sensation that Casey would have produced if he hadn't struck out that time.

The individual shreds and patches of which Sibelius contrives his musical garments were displayed in splendid colors by the various sections and soloists of the orchestra, and Dr. Koussevitzky followed the pattern with excitement and assurance. When he arrived at the final stages, when the brass was hot and the drums were beating an inexorable rhythm, when the intellect and the emotions were so marvelously balanced and blended, the music set one free from place and time, as art yearns to do and we yearn to have it.

* * *

THIS CLIPPING FROM
BROOKLYN, N. Y.
CITIZEN
APR 5

Music I

Boston Symphony Orchestra Concludes Season at Academy

Highlight of Program Tschaikowsky's Fifth; Koussevitzky Conducts

By PAUL J. BROWN

The Boston Symphony Orchestra last night concluded its five-concert 1940-41 series at the Brooklyn Academy when the orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky, presented a program of very high merit. The concert was applauded vigorously by a capacity audience, although as it was the season's farewell performance, it was obvious that the applause was meant for past as well as present satisfaction.

The program opened with Schubert's B minor (Unfinished) Symphony, and the orchestra presented the two movements of that work which has come to seem an integral as well as a beautiful and melodic whole not only with the sentimental reverence usually accorded it but with skillful and proper restraint. The second work was Prokofieff's "Lieutenant Kije" Orchestral Suite, which was derived from the incidental music written eight years ago for a Soviet film that was shown just for a brief while in this country under a different name. The suite is replete with humor and fantasy and unusual patterns.

The highlight of the program was also its most substantial offering, the Fifth Symphony by Tchaikowsky. There was no doubt remaining after Mr. Koussevitzky had interpreted and conducted the Fifth last night that it is a masterwork not only of the Russian composer but of all composers.

This Clipping From
BROOKLYN, N.Y.
EAGLE
APR 5 - 1941

Symphony Winds Up Season Colorfully

Bostonians Make Final Appearance For This Season at the Academy

By MILES KASTENDIECK

High-quality ingredients like Schubert's Symphony in B Minor and the Tchaikowsky Fifth Symphony together with a dash of very mild bitters in Prokofieff's "Lieutenant Kije" Suite made a smooth mixture for the season's final concert of the Boston Symphony at the Academy of Music last night. Conductor and orchestra, in excellent form, played superbly, giving of their best throughout the evening. No finer orchestral playing could be imagined.

As Koussevitzky interpreted Schubert's thrice-familiar "Unfinished" it was possible to sit back and bask in the lush quality of orchestral tone created with the utmost delicacy yet devoid of presiousness. The spontaneous flow of melody carried its mesmerizing spell and the pristine glory of this hackneyed music returned to charm the audience anew. The atmosphere was charged with the essence of romanticism.

Of course, Prokofieff is a specialty with Koussevitzky and "Lieutenant Kije" must be one of his favorites among the composer's works. How otherwise could the conductor's ability to bring out just the right degree of droll quality in the music be explained? He communicates Prokofieff's sly sense of humor skillfully in highlighting the out-and-out spoofing in which the composer quite frankly indulges. Few composers have succeeded as well in writing witty music; few conductors bring it out as well.

For sheer dramatic effectiveness, the performance of the Tchaikowsky was one of the finest that Koussevitzky has ever conducted here. He built up each climax with exciting tonal modulation, but even more admirable were the decrescendos. Yet with due respect to the magnificence of the performance, it moved with considerably more deliberation than necessary. In broadening his tempos, Koussevitzky weakened some of the virility of the work, bringing almost too much of a contrast when he whipped up the orchestra for the final vivace. At best, the matter of tempo is a debatable question, but the tendency to broaden his Andantes is not diminishing with the years. The observation was almost lost in the onrush of the finale which surely must have stirred every listener intent on the drama unfolding before him. But it is an old story that when Koussevitzky is visibly aroused, the orchestra responds with the most astounding results. Last night the effect was tremendous.

This Clipping From
BROOKLYN, N.Y.
EAGLE
APR 2 - 1941
DOWNTOWN

Boston Symphony Plays Here Friday

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give the fifth and concluding concert of its current Brooklyn season Friday evening at 8:30 o'clock in the Academy of Music.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the organization, will lead the orchestra in the Unfinished Symphony in B minor, by Franz Schubert; "Lieutenant Kije," orchestral suite by Serge Prokofieff, and the Symphony No. 5 in E minor, by Tchaikovsky.

The Brooklyn series is held under the joint auspices of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences, the Brooklyn Philharmonic Society, and a Brooklyn committee. The Institute announces that only standing room will be available for the concert.

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL
APR 6 - 1941

MUSIC and MUSICIANS

By JOHN TEBBEL

DR. KOUSSEVITZKY'S offerings for the Boston Symphony's final Providence concert Tuesday night are a model of program making. Whether this is a result of my missionary work last month in behalf of more representative programs, I couldn't say. Probably it is not, because the orchestra is currently playing the scheduled numbers elsewhere.

At least the three pieces constitute the first really balanced program we have had this season. First comes Schubert's "Unfinished," representing the old, tried, true and familiar. Then the "Lieutenant Kije" suite of Prokofieff, contemporary but not modern in its composition and heard infrequently, which is an advantage of itself. Finally the Sibelius second symphony, a familiar contemporary work already accepted in the standard repertoire.

David Stackhouse, who is a penetrating, informed critic of this column, may object that there is no new music to interest those in the audience to whom Prokofieff and Sibelius are an old story. I grant it, but for Boston Symphony programs in Providence he may be willing to admit that Tuesday night's schedule is a distinct improvement.

Myself, I'm pretty happy about it.

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE
APR 9 - 1941

A music critic observes that the Boston Symphony Orchestra is inevitably associated with its great conductor, Koussevitzky. "Koussevitzky is the Boston Symphony and the Boston Symphony is Koussevitzky," he says. In other words, just another name band.

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN
APR 5 - 1941

MUSIC

Boston Symphony to Give Season's Final Concert Tuesday Evening.

The last concert of the Providence season by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be given on Tuesday night in Metropolitan Theatre. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct. The program: Schubert's "Unfinished" symphony, Prokofieff's "Lieutenant Wije" suite, Sibelius's second symphony, in D major.

This Clipping From
BROOKLYN, N.Y.
EAGLE
APR 5 - 1941

115

Society Fills Academy as Boston Symphony Concludes Concert Here

By HELEN BROWN
Society Editor

Playing to a house which included many enthusiastic standees, the Boston Symphony Orchestra last night brought its 55th season in Brooklyn to a brilliant close. The program, account of which appears on the theater page of today's Eagle, was well received by the large audience.

Society occupied the boxes as usual. Mrs. Frederick D. MacKay entertained the following guests in her box: The Rev. John Howard Melish, Mrs. Edward M. Fuller, Mr. and Mrs. William C. Greenwood, Mr. and Mrs. Burt F. Nichols and Mrs. Seymour K. Fuller.

Mrs. Dean C. Osborne had as her box guests: Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Fawcett, Mr. and Mrs. Donald G. C. Sinclair, Mrs. James M. Fawcett, Mrs. Herman Selig and Mark Dalton.

Mrs. Benjamin Prince, who entertained at a dinner party preceding the concert, had as her box guests: Dr. and Mrs. John Howland Lathrop, Mrs. Karp Mikhalenkoff, Eugene W. Bolling, Walter Golde and James McDonald.

Brooklyn Woman's Club Box

The box of the Brooklyn Woman's Club was occupied by: Oscar W. Swift, Mrs. Oliver G. Carter, Mrs. Thomas H. McClintock, Mrs. Robert Franklin Ives, Mrs. Frederick W. Burbank, Mrs. Jason Davis, Mrs. Theodore Vosseler and Mrs. Wilson Briggs Zimmer.

In the box of the Alumnae Association of Adelphi Academy were Miss Emma Jessie Ogg, Mr. and Mrs. William B. Parker and Mr. and Mrs. William Slater.

Mrs. Thomas W. Lauderdale entertained the following box guests: Mr. and Mrs. James N. Currie, Mrs. George W. Felter, Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Alfred and Mrs. Frederick H. Paine. A party from Fort Hamilton occupied the Army-Navy box.

Students in Attendance

The remaining boxes were occupied by students of the Brooklyn Friends School, Poly Prep Country Day School and the Packer Collegiate Institute.

Officers of the Brooklyn Committee for the 1940-41 season included: Mrs. Walter Truslow, chairman of boxes; Mrs. Edward C. Blum, Mrs. William H. Good, vice chairmen; Mrs. M. Preston Goodfellow, chairman of the membership committee, and Mrs. Stewart Pratt, chairman of the Junior League committee.

The season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Brooklyn is presented under the auspices of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences, of which James G. McDonald is president, the Brooklyn Committee, of which Adrian Van Sinderen is chairman, and Mrs. Henry J. Davenport is executive chairman, and the Brooklyn Philharmonic Society, of which Dr. R. Huntington Woodman is chairman.

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL
APR 9 - 1941

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN
APR 9 - 1941

MUSIC

Boston Symphony Offers Season's Final Concert at Metropolitan.

By G. Y. LOVERIDGE

The Boston Symphony Orchestra brought its Providence season to an end last night in Metropolitan Theatre. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky presided. The audience was numerous and responsive.

Schubert, Prokofieff, and Sibelius were heard from, in the "Unfinished" symphony, the "Lieutenant Kije" suite, and the second symphony, in D major.

The concert worked up from dull virtuosity, or virtuoso dullness, to a climax of power and brilliance. Schubert's "Unfinished" has been heard so many times, and so magnificently delivered, that it takes a superb performance to make an impression nowadays. Neither Dr. Koussevitzky nor the orchestra seemed up to that sort of performance. There was, of course, the suavity and the control and the precision that are so characteristic of the orchestra and so admirable in themselves, but there was little of the fine light of imagination and lyric ardor enriching the voices.

Perhaps the orchestra is a bit tired of Schubert's "Unfinished," which might well be so without implying disrespect for the composer or serious waning of affection for the music. At any rate, conductor and orchestra seemed to turn with relish to the witty and lively devices of Prokofieff in his biography of the imaginary lieutenant. Nobody has arisen to claim that this is great music, as far as we know, but it is entertaining, buoyant, even strangely touching at the last, when one considers that Prokofieff is, after all, only killing off somebody who never existed. The reading and the playing of this work was crisp and spirited. There were a number of good solo performances, of which those by the off-stage trumpet and the leader of the string-bases were selected by Dr. Koussevitzky for particular commendation. The audience applauded without stint.

However hard Dr. Koussevitzky works during the season and during the last concert of the season, he always manages to have a reserve of energy for the very last portion of the program, the portion that is calculated to lift one over the long, arid stretch that lies between the end of this season and the beginning of the next. This reserve he devoted with magnificent effect to the Sibelius second. It produced the sensation that Casey would have produced if he hadn't struck out that time.

The individual shreds and patches of which Sibelius contrives his musical garments were displayed in splendid colors by the various sections and soloists of the orchestra, and Dr. Koussevitzky followed the pattern with excitement and assurance. When he arrived at the final stages, when the brass was hot and the drums were beating an inexorable rhythm, when the intellect and the emotions were so marvelously balanced and blended, the music set one free from place and time, as art yearns to do and we yearn to have it.

* * *

THIS CLIPPING FROM
BROOKLYN, N. Y.
CITIZEN
APR 5

Music Notes

Boston Symphony Orchestra Concludes Season at Academy

Highlight of Program Tschaikowsky's Fifth; Koussevitzky Conducts

By PAUL J. BROWN

The Boston Symphony Orchestra last night concluded its five-concert 1940-41 series at the Brooklyn Academy when the orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky, presented a program of very high merit. The concert was applauded vigorously by a capacity audience, although as it was the season's farewell performance, it was obvious that the applause was meant for past as well as present satisfaction.

The program opened with Schubert's B minor (Unfinished) Symphony, and the orchestra presented the two movements of that work which has come to seem an integral as well as a beautiful and melodic whole not only with the sentimental reverence usually accorded it but with skillful and proper restraint. The second work was Prokofieff's "Lieutenant Kije" Orchestral Suite, which was derived from the incidental music written eight years ago for a Soviet film that was shown just for a brief while in this country under a different name. The suite is replete with humor and fantasy and unusual patterns.

The highlight of the program was also its most substantial offering, the Fifth Symphony by Tchaikowsky. There was no doubt remaining after Mr. Koussevitzky had interpreted and conducted the Fifth last night that it is a masterwork not only of the Russian composer but of all composers.

This Clipping From
BROOKLYN, N.Y.
EAGLE
APR 5 - 1941

Winds Up ... fully

...earance

...emy

...ubert's Symphony in ... Symphony together with ... Prokofieff's "Lieutenant Kije" ... for the season's final concert ... at the Academy of Music last night. ...estra, in excellent form, played superbly, ... throughout the ... orchestral playing imagined.

Koussevitzky interpreted Schubert's thrice-familiar "Unfinished" it was possible to sit back and bask in the lush quality of orchestral tone created with the utmost delicacy yet devoid of presiousness. The spontaneous flow of melody carried its mesmerizing spell and the pristine glory of this hackneyed music returned to charm the audience anew. The atmosphere was charged with the essence of romanticism.

Of course, Prokofieff is a specialty with Koussevitzky and "Lieutenant Kije" must be one of his favorites among the composer's works. How otherwise could the conductor's ability to bring out just the right degree of droll quality in the music be explained? He communicates Prokofieff's sly sense of humor skillfully in highlighting the out-and-out spoofing in which the composer quite frankly indulges. Few composers have succeeded as well in writing witty music; few conductors bring it out as well.

For sheer dramatic effectiveness, the performance of the Tchaikowsky was one of the finest that Koussevitzky has ever conducted here. He built up each climax with exciting tonal modulation, but even more admirable were the decrescendos. Yet with due respect to the magnificence of the performance, it moved with considerably more deliberation than necessary. In broadening his tempos, Koussevitzky weakened some of the virility of the work, bringing almost too much of a contrast when he whipped up the orchestra for the final vivace. At best, the matter of tempo is a debatable question, but the tendency to broaden his Andantes is not diminishing with the years. The observation was almost lost in the onrush of the finale which surely must have stirred every listener intent on the drama unfolding before him. But it is an old story that when Koussevitzky is visibly aroused, the orchestra responds with the most astounding results. Last night the effect was tremendous.

This Clipping From
BROOKLYN, N.Y.
EAGLE
APR 2 - 1941

DOWNTOWN

Boston Symphony Plays Here Friday

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give the fifth and concluding concert of its current Brooklyn season Friday evening at 8:30 o'clock in the Academy of Music.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the organization, will lead the orchestra in the Unfinished Symphony in B minor, by Franz Schubert; "Lieutenant Kije," orchestral suite by Serge Prokofieff, and the Symphony No. 5 in E minor, by Tchaikovsky.

The Brooklyn series is held under the joint auspices of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences, the Brooklyn Philharmonic Society, and a Brooklyn committee. The Institute announces that only standing room will be available for the concert.

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL
APR 6 - 1941

MUSIC and MUSICIANS

By JOHN TEBBEL

DR. KOUSSEVITZKY'S offerings for the Boston Symphony's final Providence concert Tuesday night are a model of program making. Whether this is a result of my missionary work last month in behalf of more representative programs, I couldn't say. Probably it is not, because the orchestra is currently playing the scheduled numbers elsewhere.

At least the three pieces constitute the first really balanced program we have had this season. First comes Schubert's "Unfinished," representing the old, tried, true and familiar. Then the "Lieutenant Kije" suite of Prokofieff, contemporary but not modern in its composition and heard infrequently, which is an advantage of itself. Finally the Sibelius second symphony, a familiar contemporary work already accepted in the standard repertoire.

David Stackhouse, who is a penetrating, informed critic of this column, may object that there is no new music to interest those in the audience to whom Prokofieff and Sibelius are an old story. I grant it, but for Boston Symphony programs in Providence he may be willing to admit that Tuesday night's schedule is a distinct improvement.

Myself, I'm pretty happy about it.

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE
APR 9 - 1941

A music critic observes that the Boston Symphony Orchestra is inevitably associated with its great conductor, Koussevitzky. "Koussevitzky is the Boston Symphony and the Boston Symphony is Koussevitzky," he says. In other words, just another name band.

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN
APR 5 - 1941

MUSIC

Boston Symphony to Give Season's Final Concert Tuesday Evening.

The last concert of the Providence season by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be given on Tuesday night in Metropolitan Theatre. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct. The program: Schubert's "Unfinished" symphony, Prokofieff's "Lieutenant Wije" suite, Sibelius's second symphony, in D major.

Vladimir Horowitz, distinguished pianist, who will be the soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Symphony Hall on Thursday afternoon and Saturday evening, playing in Rachmaninoff's Third Piano Concerto.

THE BOSTON HERALD, FRIDAY, APRIL 11, 1941

Audience Applauds Eugene Goo

Preview of Easter Fashions Is Staged in Symphony Hall

Mrs. George D. Aldrich, Mrs. Russell Burrage, Mrs. Renouf Russell in Chic Gathering

By ALISON ARNOLD

When Easter dawns on Sunday, it will contrast with the traditional quietude of Holy Week, which, of course, has had few social activities. However, at the regular Symphony Concert, held yesterday afternoon instead of today, many distinguished patrons gave an impromptu preview of Easter fashions. Encouraged by yesterday's clear sunlight and balmy breezes, these ladies paraded new color combinations and accessories, especially hats riotously adorned with flowers, feathers and veils.

There was unusual inteerst in the concert since Eugene Goossens of the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra appeared as guest conductor, and Vladimir Horowitz, celebrated pianist, was the guest soloist. Both artists received thunderous ovations. Mr. Goossens conducted the first Boston performance of his Symphony, Op. 58, as well as Mozart's "Overture to 'The Marriage of Figaro.'" Mr. Horowitz played Rachmaninoff's "Concerto in D minor No. 3 for Pianoforte with Orchestra, Op. 30." Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducted the orchestra.

A chic member of the large audience was Mrs. George D. Aldrich, who has recently returned from New York. Her navy frock was topped by a sable jacket, an dher pillbox hat, trimmed with pink roses, was tied under the chin with navy veiling. Very striking was her hat-box shaped navy bag, which might well have held a miniature chapeau. She attended with her mother, Mrs. Russell Burrage, who also wore navy, a brimmed hat brightened by starched white pique, and orchids.

There were many mother-and-daughter pairs in the enthusiastic throng. Mrs. Renouf Russell came with Mrs. Roger W. Cutler, Jr., and Mrs. Hugh Bancroft was accompanied by Mrs. William C. Cox. The latter looked trim with white carnations on her black suit, and a black-winged white straw hat. Mrs. Dudley L. Pickman sat with her blonde, bare-headed daughter, Miss Lucy Cochrane, who wore a blue wool coat lined with a blue silk print to match her frock.

Mrs. Ronald Lyman pinned deep red roses on her navy costume to match the ribbon bows on her navy hat, and Mrs. Richard Saltonstall, just back from Arizona, wore a cinnamon ensemble, her hat feathered in green. Mrs. Albert C. Burrage, Jr., was smart in a brown tailleur, with a spice brown straw hat and matching leather accessories.

Others we noted were Mrs. S. Huntington Wolcott, her navy suit [illegible] chocked [illegible]gue, [illegible]fer-[illegible]alley [illegible]ush-by a [illegible]ings; [illegible], Mrs. Louis Frothingham, Mrs. William Dana Orcutt, Mrs. Gordon Prince, Mrs. Christian A. Herter, Mrs. Robert Treat Paine, who sat with Mrs. Francis G. Shaw, and Mrs. J. Lewis Bremer, wearing a yellow flowered toque and white orchid corsage with her brown ensemble.

A mustard and white print frock and matching hat trimmed with yellow quills was worn by Mrs. William B. Long, and Mrs. Sheldon Wardwell appeared in a modish costume. With her fluffy gray fur jacket and Delft blue gown, she wore a matching blue veiled hat, crowned with a cluster of purple feathers. Still others present were Mrs. Edgar U. Wrightington, just back from a southern sojourn; Mrs. Alfred McIntyre, Mrs. John Lavalle, Mrs. Arthur Beale, Mr. Bancroft Davis, Mrs. John M. Abbot, Mrs. Alexander Steinert and her daughter, Mrs. Samuel Newman; and Mrs. Malcolm Bradley French, whose wine hat was veiled and feathered in geranium rose.

Mrs. Charles Kinkade and Mrs. Nicholas Danforth looked like twins with their navy ensembles, red hats and large red bags, Mrs. Kinkade's emblazoned with a gold eagle. Also attending were Mrs. Richard K. Thorndike, Jr, Mrs. Charles E. Mason, Jr., Mrs Lawrence Lowell Reeve, who wore a boutonniere of white clover with her black coat; Mrs. Benjamin Huntington, in gray wool and a brown felt hat trimmed with a coronet of gray and white feathers; Miss Peggy Parker, and bare-headed Miss Margarett McKean.

From the debutante set were Miss Polly Faulkner with a cluster of blue hyacinths and pink veiling topping her gray frock; Miss Elizabeth Sears, her black ribbon hat adorned with two large pink roses; Miss Polly Curtis, in a navy ensemble with white hyacinths on her tiny hat; and Miss Priscilla Blumer. Miss Katharine Ladd matched her red, white and blue striped turban with a striped bag, and Miss Anne Phillips' pink straw hat was trimmed with violets.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
LOWELL, MASS.
SUNDAY TELEGRAM
APR 6 - 1941

HOROWITZ SYMPHONY SOLOIST THIS WEEK

The reappearance of Vladimir Horowitz as soloist, and the first performance hereabouts of a new Symphony by Eugene Goossens, the composer conducting, will be the features of the next pair of concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to be given in Symphony Hall on Thursday afternoon, April 10, and Saturday evening, April 12, the matinee being advanced from the usual Friday.

Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the Third Piano Concerto of Rachmaninoff while Horowitz plays this brilliant piece with which he made his notable Boston debut as soloist with this Orchestra in 1928. The famous pianist made a second appearance with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the spring of 1931 in the First Concerto of Tchaikovsky. After a period of retirement, he resumed his career last season when his artistry was praised as even finer than before. The Symphony of Eugene Goossens was completed in the summer of 1939 and first performed at the concerts of the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra of which he is the regular conductor. It was performed in the present year by the Philharmonic Symphony in New York. Mr. Goossens will conduct as an introductory number the Overture to Mozart's "The Marriage of Figaro."

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR APRIL 9,

Goossens and His New Symphony

Cincinnati Conductor To Be Guest

By Winthrop P. Tryon

"But you came to the United States as a composer, Mr. Goossens."

"No; I came as a conductor. You recall that I started the Rochester Philharmonic Orchestra going for George Eastman."

"Quite true; and still you were known in the United States at the time as a composer, and you had to prove yourself at conducting."

"Perhaps so. I had been represented, too, on an orchestral program, had I not, in Chicago as far back as 1919?"

That is how far an inquirer got with Eugene Goossens, conductor of the Cincinnati Orchestra, meeting him the other morning at Symphony Hall after a rehearsal which he directed of his Symphony, Opus 58. The intention was to discount the disability Mr. Goossens is supposed to labor under of being a conductor who dares compose and who ventures to ask the public to give attention to what he has written. He declined, however, to be regarded as anything but what his American record of seasons past has shown him. He is a conductor, and he will take the consequences.

* * *

Very well, then. He has come to town, all the same, not only to lead the Boston Symphony in its program of Thursday afternoon and Saturday evening, but, more important, to bring to notice here the new work, which he has already tried on his home audience in Cincinnati, and which he has had John Barbirolli test at the Philharmonic-Symphony concerts in New York.

If rehearsals really indicated anything, The Symphony, Opus 58, could be set down now as a brilliant example of the big form in which all composers aspire to excel. But rehearsals are notoriously deceptive. It takes regular performance before a house to determine merits; and Mr. Goossens is so mistrustful that he refuses even to accept the outcome of early presentations, no matter how favorable they may be.

"Ten years' time," he declared, "is wanted to show whether a piece of music possesses any quality or not. If by and by they ask about that symphony of Goossens and say that they would like to hear it once more, I shall know I have written something. Until then, I must take it for what the critics find it; and so far hardly encouraging—the effort of a conductor who composes."

So the policy that Serge Koussevitzky long ago instituted for the Boston Symphony goes on. Music of the day is brought out and given a chance. If people who hear it in the 'forties remember it until the 'fifties and call it back again, the repertory is enriched by an item. If they forget it, no harm done. The practice here and now of listening and judging certainly cultivates the national wit and helps America's artistic position in the world.

* * *

The symphony is freshly done, the ink is only a year settling into the manuscript, and revision remains possible. These first goings-over may prompt something in that line. To glance at notations on the cover, the work is scored for all ordinary instruments—strings, woods, and brasses—and for a large force of percussion. To look up from the book, the Symphony Hall platform is completely filled with players. But it must be remembered that in these days of skilful scoring, a large instrumental aggregation does not necessarily mean due sonority. To listen a spell, when the organ is added for the concluding measures of the work—the grand coda—the effect is of fullness and volume, but by no means of noise. A review from the beginning ordered, the first movement, after giving every instrument a chance to speak, ends in quiet, far-off tones that are almost short of audible.

Something says that while this music is conceived on a grand plan, it is succinct in general expression and cheerful everywhere in mood.

A cursory turning of the leaves in the orchestra library at rehearsal intermission reveals a construction in four movements: (1) Andante, leading the Allegro; (2) Andante espressivo ma con moto; (3) Divertimento (amounting to a scherzo); (4) Finale.

George MacLean

Eugene Goossens

To conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in his own First Symphony at the concerts of Thursday afternoon and Saturday evening.

This Clipping From CINCINNATI, O.
ENQUIRER
APR 11 1941

Goossens Conducts Own Work Played By Boston Symphony

SPECIAL DISPATCH TO THE ENQUIRER.

Boston, Mass., April 10—Eugene Goossens, conductor of the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra, was guest director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra here today. He led the orchestra in the first performance in this city of his own symphony.

Following is the comment of the Boston Herald's music critic:

Eugene Goossens, the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra's distinguished conductor, led the Boston Symphony today in a vigorous performance of Mozart's familiar overture, and then proceeded to disclose to us his own latest work on a large scale.

This proved to be a mixed blessing. On the one hand we could be reasonably certain that the symphony would be revealed to us clearly and with the authority of a composer who is also a trained conductor behind it. On the other, we cannot own to any great enthusiasm. Its main fault is the monotony of the composer's imagination. The second movement's ideas are very much like those of the first. The Divertimento does not wander far afield, after starting out bravely enough. With the finale we are back where we started, and this undeniably makes for dullness.

There are several effective pages in the score, notably the conclusion of the first movement. Always there is mechanical skill. Mr. Goossens is at the least a workman who knows his craft and is too clever to be inept or ever as boring as some of the academic symphonies which have been brought to our attention in recent years.

But what he has to say is definitely circumscribed. You get a modicum of starkness, a compensating dose of lushness, here some sober counterpoint, anon some dance-like bits. It has all been carefully planned before; and after a while the music simply ceases to interest you. The third movement did earnestly seek to offer some variety, but the experiment was not as successful as when the composer was on his own home ground. This was the first performance in Boston, and Mr. Goossens was received cordially.

Vladimir Horowitz, distinguished pianist, who will be the soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Symphony Hall on Thursday afternoon and Saturday evening, playing in Rachmaninoff's Third Piano Concerto.

THE BOSTON HERALD, FRIDAY, APRIL 11, 1941

Audience Applauds Eugene Goo

Preview of Easter Fashions Is Staged in Symphony Hall

Mrs. George D. Aldrich, Mrs. Russell Burrage, Mrs. Renouf Russell in Chic Gathering

By ALISON ARNOLD

When Easter dawns on Sunday, it will contrast with the traditional quietude of Holy Week, which, of course, has had few social activities. However, at the regular Symphony Concert, held yesterday afternoon instead of today, many distinguished patrons gave an impromptu preview of Easter fashions. Encouraged by yesterday's clear sunlight and balmy breezes, these ladies paraded new color combinations and accessories, especially hats riotously adorned with flowers, feathers and veils.

There was unusual inteerst in the concert since Eugene Goossens of the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra appeared as guest conductor, and Vladimir Horowitz, celebrated pianist, was the guest soloist. Both artists received thunderous ovations. Mr. Goossens conducted the first Boston performance of his Symphony, Op. 58, as well as Mozart's "Overture to 'The Marriage of Figaro.'" Mr. Horowitz played Rachmaninoff's "Concerto in D minor No. 3 for Pianoforte with Orchestra, Op. 30." Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducted the orchestra.

A chic member of the large audience was Mrs. George D. Aldrich, who has recently returned from New York. Her navy frock was topped by a sable jacket, an dher pillbox hat, trimmed with pink roses, was tied under the chin with navy veiling. Very striking was her hat-box shaped navy bag, which might well have held a miniature chapeau. She attended with her mother, Mrs. Russell Burrage, who also wore navy, a brimmed hat brightened by starched white pique, and orchids.

There were many mother-and-daughter pairs in the enthusiastic throng. Mrs. Renouf Russell came with Mrs. Roger W. Cutler, Jr., and Mrs. Hugh Bancroft was accompanied by Mrs. William C. Cox. The latter looked trim with white carnations on her black suit, and a black-winged white straw hat. Mrs. Dudley L. Pickman sat with her blonde, bare-headed daughter, Miss Lucy Cochrane, who wore a blue wool coat lined with a blue silk print to match her frock.

Mrs. Ronald Lyman pinned deep red roses on her navy costume to match the ribbon bows on her navy hat, and Mrs. Richard Saltonstall, just back from Arizona, wore a cinnamon ensemble, her hat feathered in green. Mrs. Albert C. Burrage, Jr., was smart in a brown tailleur, with a spice brown straw hat and matching leather accessories.

Others we noted were Mrs. S. Huntington Wolcott, her navy suit piped with navy and white checked taffeta; Mrs. Phineas Shaw Sprague, Mrs. Theodore E. Brown, Mrs. Pierpont Stackpole, lilies-of-the-valley on her black hat; Mrs. Robert Cushman, her black gown accented by a purple hat flaunting pink wings; Mrs. Wallace Goodrich, Mrs. Louis Frothingham, Mrs. William Dana Orcutt, Mrs. Gordon Prince, Mrs. Christian A. Herter, Mrs. Robert Treat Paine, who sat with Mrs. Francis G. Shaw, and Mrs. J. Lewis Bremer, wearing a yellow flowered toque and white orchid corsage with her brown ensemble.

A mustard and white print frock and matching hat trimmed with yellow quills was worn by Mrs. William B. Long, and Mrs. Sheldon Wardwell appeared in a modish costume. With her fluffy gray fur jacket and Delft blue gown, she wore a matching blue veiled hat, crowned with a cluster of purple feathers. Still others present were Mrs. Edgar U. Wrightington, just back from a southern sojourn; Mrs. Alfred McIntyre, Mrs. John Lavalle, Mrs. Arthur Beale, Mr. Bancroft Davis, Mrs. John M. Abbot, Mrs. Alexander Steinert and her daughter, Mrs. Samuel Newman; and Mrs. Malcolm Bradley French, whose wine hat was veiled and feathered in geranium rose.

Mrs. Charles Kinkade and Mrs. Nicholas Danforth looked like twins with their navy ensembles, red hats and large red bags, Mrs. Kinkade's emblazoned with a gold eagle. Also attending were Mrs. Richard K. Thorndike, Jr, Mrs. Charles E. Mason, Jr., Mrs Lawrence Lowell Reeve, who wore a boutonniere of white clover with her black coat; Mrs. Benjamin Huntington, in gray wool and a brown felt hat trimmed with a coronet of gray and white feathers; Miss Peggy Parker, and bare-headed Miss Margarett McKean.

From the debutante set were Miss Polly Faulkner with a cluster of blue hyacinths and pink veiling topping her gray frock; Miss Elizabeth Sears, her black ribbon hat adorned with two large pink roses; Miss Polly Curtis, in a navy ensemble with white hyacinths on her tiny hat; and Miss Priscilla Blumer. Miss Katharine Ladd matched her red, white and blue striped turban with a striped bag, and Miss Anne Phillips' pink straw hat was trimmed with violets.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
LOWELL, MASS.
SUNDAY TELEGRAM
APR 6 - 1941

HOROWITZ SYMPHONY SOLOIST THIS WEEK

The reappearance of Vladimir Horowitz as soloist, and the first performance hereabouts of a new Symphony by Eugene Goossens, the composer conducting, will be the features of the next pair of concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to be given in Symphony Hall on Thursday afternoon, April 10, and Saturday evening, April 12, the matinee being advanced from the usual Friday.

Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the Third Piano Concerto of Rachmaninoff while Horowitz plays this brilliant piece with which he made his notable Boston debut as soloist with this Orchestra in 1928. The famous pianist made a second appearance with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the spring of 1931 in the First Concerto of Tchaikovsky. After a period of retirement, he resumed his career last season when his artistry was praised as even finer than before. The Symphony of Eugene Goossens was completed in the summer of 1939 and first performed at the concerts of the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra of which he is the regular conductor. It was performed in the present year by the Philharmonic Symphony in New York. Mr. Goossens will conduct as an introductory number the Overture to Mozart's "The Marriage of Figaro."

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR APRIL 9,

Goossens and H

Cincinnati Conductor To Be Guest

By Winthrop P. Tryon

"But you came to the United States as a composer, Mr. Goossens."

"No; I came as a conductor. You recall that I started the Rochester Philharmonic Orchestra going for George Eastman."

"Quite true; and still you were known in the United States at the time as a composer, and you had to prove yourself at conducting."

"Perhaps so. I had been represented, too, on an orchestral program, had I not, in Chicago as far back as 1919?"

That is how far an inquirer got with Eugene Goossens, conductor of the Cincinnati Orchestra, meeting him the other morning at Symphony Hall after a rehearsal which he directed of his Symphony, Opus 58. The intention was to discount the disability Mr. Goossens is supposed to labor under of being a conductor who dares compose and who ventures to ask the public to give attention to what he has written. He declined, however, to be regarded as anything but what his American record of seasons past has shown him. He is a conductor, and he will take the consequences.

* * *

Very well, then. He has come to town, all the same, not only to lead the Boston Symphony in its program of Thursday afternoon and Saturday evening, but, more important, to bring to notice here the new work, which he has already tried on his home audience in Cincinnati, and which he has had John Barbirolli test at the Philharmonic-Symphony concerts in New York.

If rehearsals really indicated anything, The Symphony, Opus 58, could be set down now as a brilliant example of the big form in which all composers aspire to excel. But rehearsals are notoriously deceptive. It takes regular performance before a house to determine merits; and Mr. Goossens is so mistrustful that he refuses even to accept the outcome of early presentations, no matter how favorable they may be.

"Ten years' time," he declared, "is wanted to show whether a piece of music possesses any quality or not. If by and by they ask about that symphony of Goossens and say that they would like to hear it once more, I shall know I have written something. Until then, I must take it for what the critics find it; and so far hardly encouraging—the effort of a conductor who composes."

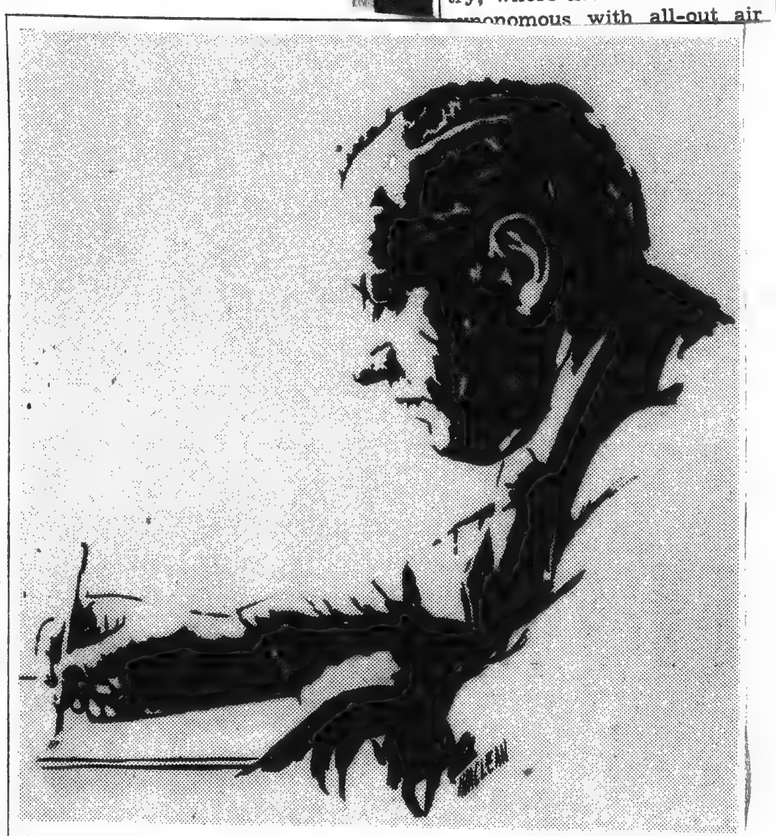
So the policy that Serge Koussevitzky long ago instituted for the Boston Symphony goes on. Music of the day is brought out and given a chance. If people who hear it in the 'forties remember it until the 'fifties and call it back again, the repertory is enriched by an item. If they forget it, no harm done. The practice here and now of listening and judging certainly cultivates the national wit and helps America's artistic position in the world.

* * *

The symphony is freshly done, the ink is only a year settling into the manuscript, and revision remains possible. These first goings-over may prompt something in that line. To glance at notations on the cover, the work is scored for all ordinary instruments—strings, woods, and brasses—and for a large force of percussion. To look up from the book, the Symphony Hall platform is completely filled with players. But it must be remembered that in these days of skilful scoring, a large instrumental aggregation does not necessarily mean due sonority. To listen a spell, when the organ is added for the concluding measures of the work—the grand coda—the effect is of fullness and volume, but by no means of noise. A review from the beginning ordered, the first movement, after giving every instrument a chance to speak, ends in quiet, far-off tones that are almost short of audible.

Something says that while this music is conceived on a grand plan, it is succinct in general expression and cheerful everywhere in mood.

A cursory turning of the leaves in the orchestra library at rehearsal intermission reveals a construction in four movements: (1) Andante, leading the Allegro; (2) Andante espressivo ma con moto; (3) Divertimento (amounting to a scherzo); (4) Finale.



George MacLean

Eugene Goossens

To conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in his own First Symphony at the concerts of Thursday afternoon and Saturday evening.

Nazis Smas

LONDON, April 9 (AP)—Cov try, whose name has now beco eponomous with all-out air

This Clipping From CINCINNATI, O.
ENQUIRER
APR 11 1941

Goossens Conducts Own Work Played By Boston Symphony

SPECIAL DISPATCH TO THE ENQUIRER.

Boston, Mass., April 10—Eugene Goossens, conductor of the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra, was guest director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra here today. He led the orchestra in the first performance in this city of his own symphony.

Following is the comment of the Boston Herald's music critic:

Eugene Goossens, the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra's distinguished conductor, led the Boston Symphony today in a vigorous performance of Mozart's familiar overture, and then proceeded to disclose to us his own latest work on a large scale.

This proved to be a mixed blessing. On the one hand we could be reasonably certain that the symphony would be revealed to us clearly and with the authority of a composer who is also a trained conductor behind it. On the other, we cannot own to any great enthusiasm

Its main fault is the monotony of the composer's imagination. The second movement's ideas are very much like those of the first. The Divertimento does not wander far afield, after starting out bravely enough. With the finale we are back where we started, and this undeniably makes for dullness.

There are several effective pages in the score, notably the conclusion of the first movement. Always there is mechanical skill. Mr. Goossens is at the least a workman who knows his craft and is too clever to be inept or ever as boring as some of the academic symphonies which have been brought to our attention in recent years.

But what he has to say is definitely circumscribed. You get a modicum of starkness, a compensating dose of lushness, here some sober counterpoint, anon some dance-like bits. It has all been carefully planned before; and after a while the music simply ceases to interest you. The third movement did earnestly seek to offer some variety, but the experiment was not as successful as when the composer was on his own home ground. This was the first performance in Boston, and Mr. Goossens was received cordially.

Horowitz Symphony Soloist

Pianist Receives Ovation; Goossens Leads New Symphony

By L. A. Sloper

Two distinguished guests returned to participate yesterday in the presentation of the twenty-first program of the Boston Symphony season. Eugene Goossens, conductor of the Cincinnati Orchestra, directed the Overture to Mozart's "Marriage of Figaro" and his own new Symphony, Op. 58. Vladimir Horowitz was soloist in Rachmaninoff's Third Piano Concerto, with Dr. Koussevitzky conducting. The program will be repeated Saturday evening in Symphony Hall.

Mr. Goossens is a familiar figure on the podium of Symphony Hall, having conducted the Boston Orchestra three times before. He obtained a lively performance of the Overture. On this occasion the interest of his visit centered of course in the symphony, which is his first, although he is well established as composer in other forms.

* * *

In his very witty program note to this symphony, Mr. Goossens insists amusingly on its freedom from any literary or descriptive ideas. Yet, he adds, if people will attach some programmatic meaning to the movements of this work, "who am I that I should deprive them of their private interpretative joys? Certainly not if it should render the music more palatable to them!"

Nevertheless, in his analysis, the composer describes one of his two "motto" themes as "menacing" and "sinister," the other as "wistful" and "plaintive." With this encouragement, plus the fact that the work was written largely in the summer of 1939 in England, one may easily discover in the first movement a reflection of the troubled times, and in the other three the symphonically concomitant pastoral, jovial, and triumphant moods.

* * *

Moreover, the music by its nature lends itself to such an interpretation. The style is that of neo-Celtic, post-French, British impressionism. In other words, it belongs to a school much given to pictorial music, and its idiom is difficult to dissociate from literary ideas. But since the composer did not intend this effect, it is possible that the association is only in the ear of the listener.

For the rest, the symphony eschews "modernist" harmonic and rhythmic extravagances, employs methods long accepted, and is altogether a workmanlike job. The composer had the co-operation of the orchestra, which joined the audience in acclaiming him.

Mr. Horowitz had been long absent from Symphony Hall. He was last heard with the Boston orchestra 10 years ago. He had made his debut here three years before that, when he used the same concerto he played yesterday. The triumph of that first occasion was repeated yesterday. The pleasure of the audience was expressed not only by loud handclapping, but by shouting and stamping; and the orchestra was hardly less enthusiastic.

* * *

This ovation was well deserved. Thirteen years is a long time in the concert world, and memory may falter; but yesterday's performance seemed to this reviewer far more impressive than the former one. The pianist appears to have matured musically. Today he has not only the dazzling technique of old, but a new musical penetration and interpretive expression. He has delicacy and poetry as well as brilliance and power.

Dr. Koussevitzky's sympathetic insight and the eloquence of the superb orchestra supplied an orchestral accompaniment that matched the solo part to make a wholly memorable performance.

George MacLean

Vladimir Horowitz

Piano soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra this afternoon and Saturday evening.

Vladimir Horowitz

Soloist with the Boston Symphony this evening in the Third Piano Concerto of Serge Rachmaninoff.

MUSIC

SYMPHONY HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Vladimir Horowitz played Rachmaninoff's Third Piano Concerto magnificently at the Boston Symphony concert yesterday afternoon. That is the word, and no other. His performance, and the long, noisy applause that followed, were among the most impressive moments of the Symphony season. They put far, far into the background the entire first part of the concert, when Eugene Goossens conducted the Overture to Mozart's "The Marriage of Figaro" and then introduced his own ponderous Symphony to Boston.

Not for 10 years had Mr. Horowitz been soloist with the Boston Symphony. But in the audience were many who remembered his electrifying interpretation of the Tchaikovsky B-flat minor Concerto at a pair of concerts in the Friday-Saturday series. A decade has, if anything, ripened the art of Mr. Horowitz, a fact noted at his recital here in February of 1940, when he returned to Boston after several years of absence.

With Serge Koussevitzky conducting the orchestra and Mr. Horowitz at the piano, Rachmaninoff's D-minor Concerto was subjected to one of those beautiful and thrilling re-creations as necromantic as they are hard to describe. Such terms as "the grand style," "stupendous technic," "intensity," "rich, clear tone" do convey an idea of what it was like. But they cannot communicate the actual sensation of keenness and vitality in Mr. Horowitz' playing, nor the sensitive adjustment between piano and orchestra.

Virtuosity has been damned again and again as a base manifestation of the musical art. It naturally all depends upon the virtuoso, and to what uses his powers are put. In this case, virtuosity was the medium for exhibiting beauty, great art and utmost musicianship. For all that the Concerto itself is a great show, and that yesterday's performance was spectacular, what counted most of all—for musicians and listeners alike—was the music. And when that happens, a great miracle of art is wrought.

Mr. Horowitz and Mr. Koussevitzky, both applying handkerchiefs to perspiring faces, were greeted at the end with handclapping, stamping and cheers. Presently the orchestra was bidden to rise, and the demonstration began all over again.

Mr. Goossens' Symphony, designated his Opus 58, is his first essay in the form. It has no "program." Scored for an enormous orchestra, it must be a happy hunting ground for whose who delight in finding reminiscences. One thought of Strauss, Debussy, Vaughan, Williams and various others until, finally, the Symphony appeared a compendium of styles as well as a gigantic bore.

The afternoon concert this week was shifted to Thursday because today is Good Friday. The evening concert will, as usual, be given Saturday. Next week's program will be as follows: Aaron Copland: "Quiet City"; Howard Hanson: "Romantic" Symphony; Wagner: Overture to "The Flying Dutchman," Prelude to "Parsifal," Overture to "Tannhaeuser."—C. W. D.

MUSIC

Boston Herald April 11

Goossens Symphony

Composer Directs His Own Work with Boston Symphony; Horowitz in Rachmaninoff Concerto

By EDWARD DOWNES

As guest of the Boston Symphony, Eugene Goossens conducted the first performance here of his First Symphony, yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. From a purely objective point of view Mr. Goossens' Symphony, which was finished last year, is an excellent piece of work. The craftsmanship is more than solid, it is extremely skillful. Thematically there is an impressive unity which runs through the four movements, and though the instrumental apparatus demanded is rather enormous, there are only brief moments when the scoring seems actually redundant. The style is truly symphonic, that is, the themes are cleverly transformed homophonically, contrapuntally, harmonically rhythmically. It all appears and indeed is logical. The fact that the composer uses an antiquated musical idiom need not, in itself, disturb anyone unduly. It must be remembered that Sebastian Bach, in his later years, was considered completely old hat by most of the younger men growing up about him. Those younger men have since been forgotten

What then was the matter? For the symphony did not really come off in spite of the tremendous tonal impact of its finale with six trumpets and organ. The language this symphony speaks is clearly derivative. It reminds you of no one in particular (not even Mr. Goossens himself) but of a great many late romantic composers in general. It comes perhaps nearest to Mahler, in his more restrained moments. Now in itself there is nothing reprehensible in this particular musical language, but it seems strange that a composer of Mr. Goossens' youth should feel at home in it. Men of a generation earlier than Mr. Goossens still managed to use it convincingly. Goossens' mastery of the orchestra and its resources is so great that he manages to make this idiom superficially convincing, but inwardly it does not ring true.

All matters of style and technique aside, the music itself, the emotional urge, the spirit of the work, or whatever you choose to call it, seemed of a lesser man than Mr. Goossens has revealed himself to be in other compositions. A work of the length of a symphony, unless it is particularly witty, or has some light trick of charm, must have something important to say if it is not to fall flat.

Though Mr. Goossens, laudably enough, has waited long to write a symphony, until he felt that what he had in mind could only be expressed in symphonic terms, there are things he might have learned in just trying to write a symphony, which could have served him in good stead here. The value of a ruthless pruning might have been one of these. But in spite of this symphony, one looks forward to Mr. Goossens's next.

The guest conductor opened the program with Mozart's Overture to "The Marriage of Figaro" in a version to which we have become all too accustomed with our big modern symphony orchestras. It was big and brilliant and bustling and far from the Mozart spirit. The tempo was a shade too fast, and a body of strings, at least twice as large as it should have been, completely swallowed up the poor little wood-winds for which Mozart wrote with such fetching grace and skill.

Dazzling Concerto

After the intermission Vladmir Horowitz and Serge Koussevitzky gave a dazzling performance of Rachmaninoff's Third Piano Concerto in D minor. Horowitz is far from a mere virtuoso. He has brilliance and technique to spare. But his brilliance is always a musical brilliance, not just mechanical glitter. His technique is so fine and so artistically used, you can forget ten agile fingers hammering the ivories under the immediate impression that the composer himself is speaking. That is the highest compliment which can be paid any technique.

Tremendous emotional drive, wonderful elasticity of phrase, sensitive tonal coloring and a subtle dynamic chiaroscuro informed his performance yesterday. There was no denial of planistic virtuosity. On the contrary, Horowitz gloried in it. But his musical impulse was even stronger, and carried everything before it. Dr. Koussevitzky directed with dramatic fervor and understaning. Teamwork between the two was exemplary. Altogether this was one of the finest concerto performances we have heard here in many a month—in its own way, as masterly as if the composer himself had sat at the piano.

At the close of the concerto there were cheers and torrents of applause for soloist, conductor and the orchestra itself.

MUSIC

By ALEXANDER WILLIAMS

Symphony Concert

The 21st concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitsky and Eugene Goossens conducting, was given yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. Vladimir Horowitz, pianist, was the soloist. The program was as follows:

Mozart ...Overture to "The Marriage of Figaro"
Goossens.....Symphony Op. 58
Rachmaninoff...Piano Concerto in D minor No. 3 Op. 30

Mr. Eugene Goossens, the Cincinnati Orchestra's distinguished conductor, led the Boston Symphony yesterday in a vigorous performance of Mozart's familiar overture and then proceeded to disclose to us his own latest work on a large scale. This proved to be a mixed blessing. On the one hand we could be reasonably certain that the Symphony would be revealed to us clearly and with the authority of a composer who is also a trained conductor behind it. On the other, we cannot own to any great enthusiasm for the work itself.

Its main fault is the monotony of the composer's imagination. The second movement's ideas are very much like those of the first. The Divertimento does not wander far afield, after starting out bravely enough. With the finale we are back where we started, and this undeniably makes for dullness.

There are some effective pages in the score, notably the conclusion of the first movement. Always there is mechanical skill. Mr. Goossens is at the least a workman who knows his craft and is too clever to be inept or ever as boring as some of the academic symphonies which have been brought to our attention in recent years.

But what he has to say is definitely circumscribed. You get a modicum of starkness, a compensating dose of lushness, here some sober counterpoint, anon some dance-like bits. It has all been carefully planned before; and after a while the music simply ceases to interest you. The third movement did earnestly seek to offer some variety, but the experiment was not as successful as when the composer was on his own home ground. This was the first performance in Boston, and Mr. Goossens was cordially received.

After the intermission Mr. Koussevitzky returned to his own post and offered the Third Rachmaninoff Piano Concerto with Mr. Horowitz as soloist as the "bonne bouche" of the program. When Rachmaninoff himself plays this work—or any of his other music—he imparts a rather world-weary dignity to it, which is far from unattractive.

Mr. Horowitz plays it probably more brilliantly and with the idea of extracting the last ounce of effect that the music holds. It is thus a performance of more energy, perhaps of more vitality. No one need commit himself on the opinion that it is either better or worse, for it is merely different. It was played with all Mr. Horowitz's effortless technique, with grace and with power. It struck us that both he and Mr. Koussevitzky secured a magnificently orchestral interpretation. That is to say, the Concerto sounded bigger and more virile. Mr. Rachmaninoff himself would have imparted to it, we imagine, more nostalgic charm and languor. All this smacks of hair-splitting—let it rest that Mr. Horowitz won a richly-deserved ovation.

The concert will be repeated tomorrow night. Next week the program is as follows: Aaron Copland's "Quiet City"; Howard Hanson's 2nd Symphony; Wagner's Overtures to "The Flying Dutchman," "Parsifal" and "Tannhaeuser."

ing. We had a sample of that leanness yesterday in Eugene Goossens' outwardly effective (in spots) but essentially derivitive and frequently reminiscent Symphony, which its composer conducted here for the first time. But for compensation we are constantly being taught new meanings of the word virtuosity. Not only our orchestras but our soloists perform feats which once might have seemed incredible. This reviewer cannot report on Liszt and Rubinstein, but he did hear the giants of the next generation of pianists, and while these men were not without their points, their technical accomplishments were puny in comparison with the sort of playing that so excited yesterday's audience.

These same 13 years which have left Mr. Horowitz in the full possession of his remarkable powers have taken their toll of Rachmaninoff's Concerto, even though the latter seemed a work of heaven-sent inspiration after the strivings of Mr. Goossens. At least, Mr. Rachmaninoff is a creative personality with a style not to be confused with that of any other composer. And only those who possess such individuality of utterance can work successfully in the larger musical forms. This D-minor Concerto is not so well sustained as its immediate predecessor. The musical interest often flags and wanes. But Mr. Rachmaninoff always did know the trick of a rousing finish, in which a theme, both lyric and propulsive, is made to sound forth in the full splendor of an orchestra, or orchestra plus pianist. Even in a mediocre performance an effect is certain to be made. In a performance such as the one now under consideration there will inevitably be answering cheers and the stamping of feet.

By way of beginning, Mr. Goossens elicited from the orchestra, with full complement of strings, an inflated performance of Mozart's Overture to "The Marriage of Figaro," which only the other evening had sounded in its rightful voice at the Metropolitan Theatre. After all, our huge modern orchestras are really only proper to the pieces that were designed for them.

Horowitz Symphony Soloist

Pianist Receives Ovation; Goossens Leads New Symphony

By L. A. Sloper

Two distinguished guests returned to participate yesterday in the presentation of the twenty-first program of the Boston Symphony season. Eugene Goossens, conductor of the Cincinnati Orchestra, directed the Overture to Mozart's "Marriage of Figaro" and his own new Symphony, Op. 58. Vladimir Horowitz was soloist in Rachmaninoff's Third Piano Concerto, with Dr. Koussevitzky conducting. The program will be repeated Saturday evening in Symphony Hall.

Mr. Goossens is a familiar figure on the podium of Symphony Hall, having conducted the Boston Orchestra three times before. He obtained a lively performance of the Overture. On this occasion the interest of his visit centered of course in the symphony, which is his first, although he is well established as composer in other forms.

* * *

In his very witty program note to this symphony, Mr. Goossens insists amusingly on its freedom from any literary or descriptive ideas. Yet, he adds, if people will attach some programmatic meaning to the movements of this work, "who am I that I should deprive them of their private interpretative joys? Certainly not if it should render the music more palatable to them!"

Nevertheless, in his analysis, the composer describes one of his two "motto" themes as "menacing" and "sinister," the other as "wistful" and "plaintive." With this encouragement, plus the fact that the work was written largely in the summer of 1939 in England, one may easily discover in the first movement a reflection of the troubled times, and in the other three the symphonically concomitant pastoral, jovial, and triumphant moods.

* * *

Moreover, the music by its nature lends itself to such an interpretation. The style is that of neo-Celtic, post-French, British impressionism. In other words, it belongs to a school much given to pictorial music, and its idiom is difficult to dissociate from literary ideas. But since the composer did not intend this effect, it is possible that the association is only in the ear of the listener.

For the rest, the symphony eschews "modernist" harmonic and rhythmic extravagances, employs methods long accepted, and is altogether a workmanlike job. The composer had the co-operation of the orchestra, which joined the audience in acclaiming him.

Mr. Horowitz had been long absent from Symphony Hall. He was last heard with the Boston orchestra 10 years ago. He had made his debut here three years before that, when he used the same concerto he played yesterday. The triumph of that first occasion was repeated yesterday. The pleasure of the audience was expressed not only by loud handclapping, but by shouting and stamping; and the orchestra was hardly less enthusiastic.

* * *

This ovation was well deserved. Thirteen years is a long time in the concert world, and memory may falter; but yesterday's performance seemed to this reviewer far more impressive than the former one. The pianist appears to have matured musically. Today he has not only the dazzling technique of old, but a new musical penetration and interpretive expression. He has delicacy and poetry as well as brilliance and power.

Dr. Koussevitzky's sympathetic insight and the eloquence of the superb orchestra supplied an orchestral accompaniment that matched the solo part to make a wholly memorable performance.

George MacLean

Vladimir Horowitz

Piano soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra this afternoon and Saturday evening.

Vladimir Horowitz

Soloist with the Boston Symphony this evening in the Third Piano Concerto of Serge Rachmaninoff.

MUSIC

SYMPHONY HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Vladimir Horowitz played Rachmaninoff's Third Piano Concerto magnificently at the Boston Symphony concert yesterday afternoon. That is the word, and no other. His performance, and the long, noisy applause that followed, were among the most impressive moments of the Symphony season. They put far, far into the background the entire first part of the concert, when Eugene Goossens conducted the Overture to Mozart's "The Marriage of Figaro" and then introduced his own ponderous Symphony to Boston.

Not for 10 years had Mr. Horowitz been soloist with the Boston Symphony. But in the audience were many who remembered his electrifying interpretation of the Tchaikovsky B-flat minor Concerto at a pair of concerts in the Friday-Saturday series. A decade has, if anything, ripened the art of Mr. Horowitz, a fact noted at his recital here in February of 1940, when he returned to Boston after several years of absence.

With Serge Koussevitzky conducting the orchestra and Mr. Horowitz at the piano, Rachmaninoff's D-minor Concerto was subjected to one of those beautiful and thrilling re-creations as necromantic as they are hard to describe. Such terms as "the grand style," "stupendous technic," "intensity," "rich, clear tone" do convey an idea of what it was like. But they cannot communicate the actual sensation of keenness and vitality in Mr. Horowitz' playing, nor the sensitive adjustment between piano and orchestra.

Virtuosity has been damned again and again as a base manifestation of the musical art. It naturally all depends upon the virtuoso, and to what uses his powers are put. In this case, virtuosity was the medium for exhibiting beauty, great art and utmost musicianship. For all that the Concerto itself is a great show, and that yesterday's performance was spectacular, what counted most of all—for musicians and listeners alike—was the music. And when that happens, a great miracle of art is wrought.

Mr. Horowitz and Mr. Koussevitzky, both applying handkerchiefs to perspiring faces, were greeted at the end with handclapping, stamping and cheers. Presently the orchestra was bidden to rise, and the demonstration began all over again.

Mr. Goossens' Symphony, designated his Opus 58, is his first essay in the form. It has no "program." Scored for an enormous orchestra, it must be a happy hunting ground for whose who delight in finding reminiscences. One thought of Strauss, Debussy, Vaughan, Williams and various others until, finally, the Symphony appeared a compendium of styles as well as a gigantic bore.

The afternoon concert this week was shifted to Thursday because today is Good Friday. The evening concert will, as usual, be given Saturday. Next week's program will be as follows: Aaron Copland: "Quiet City"; Howard Hanson: "Romantic" Symphony; Wagner: Overture to "The Flying Dutchman," Prelude to "Parsifal," Overture to "Tannhaeuser."—C. W. D.

MUSIC

Goossens Symphony

Composer Directs His Own Work with Boston Symphony; Horowitz in Rachmaninoff Concerto

By EDWARD DOWNES

As guest of the Boston Symphony, Eugene Goossens conducted the first performance here of his First Symphony, yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. From a purely objective point of view Mr. Goossens' Symphony, which was finished last year, is an excellent piece of work. The craftsmanship is more than solid, it is extremely skillful. Thematically there is an impressive unity which runs through the four movements, and though the instrumental apparatus demanded is rather enormous, there are only brief moments when the scoring seems actually redundant. The style is truly symphonic, that is, the themes are cleverly transformed homophonically, contrapuntally, harmonically rhythmically. It all appears and indeed is logical. The fact that the composer uses an antiquated musical idiom need not, in itself, disturb anyone unduly. It must be remembered that Sebastian Bach, in his later years, was considered completely old hat by most of the younger men growing up about him. Those younger men have since been forgotten

What then was the matter? For the symphony did not really come off in spite of the tremendous tonal impact of its finale with six trumpets and organ. The language this symphony speaks is clearly derivative. It reminds you of no one in particular (not even Mr. Goossens himself) but of a great many late romantic composers in general. It comes perhaps nearest to Mahler, in his more restrained moments. Now in itself there is nothing reprehensible in this particular musical language, but it seems strange that a composer of Mr. Goossens' youth should feel at home in it. Men of a generation earlier than Mr. Goossens still managed to use it convincingly. Goossens' mastery of the orchestra and its resources is so great that he manages to make this idiom superficially convincing, but inwardly it does not ring true.

All matters of style and technique aside, the music itself, the emotional urge, the spirit of the work, or whatever you choose to call it, seemed of a lesser man than Mr. Goossens has revealed himself to be in other compositions. A work of the length of a symphony, unless it is particularly witty, or has some light trick of charm, must have something important to say if it is not to fall flat.

Though Mr. Goossens, laudably enough, has waited long to write a symphony, until he felt that what he had in mind could only be expressed in symphonic terms, there are things he might have learned in just trying to write a symphony, which could have served him in good stead here. The value of a ruthless pruning might have been one of these. But in spite of this symphony, one looks forward to Mr. Goossens's next.

The guest conductor opened the program with Mozart's Overture to "The Marriage of Figaro" in a version to which we have become all too accustomed with our big modern symphony orchestras. It was big and brilliant and bustling and far from the Mozart spirit. The tempo was a shade too fast, and a body of strings at least twice as large as it should have been, completely swallowed up the poor little wood-winds for which Mozart wrote with such fetching grace and skill.

Dazzling Concerto

After the intermission Vladmir Horowitz and Serge Koussevitzky gave a dazzling performance of Rachmaninoff's Third Piano Concerto in D minor. Horowitz is far from a mere virtuoso. He has brilliance and technique to spare. But his brilliance is always a musical brilliance, not just mechanical glitter. His technique is so fine and so artistically used, you can forget ten agile fingers hammering the ivories under the immediate impression that the composer himself is speaking. That is the highest compliment which can be paid any technique.

Tremendous emotional drive, wonderful elasticity of phrase, sensitive tonal coloring and a subtle dynamic chiaroscuro informed his performance yesterday. There was no denial of pianistic virtuosity. On the contrary, Horowitz gloried in it. But his musical impulse was even stronger, and carried everything before it. Dr. Koussevitzky directed with dramatic fervor and understaning. Teamwork between the two was exemplary. Altogether this was one of the finest concerto performances we have heard here in many a month—in its own way, as masterly as if the composer himself had sat at the piano.

At the close of the concerto there were cheers and torrents of applause for soloist, conductor and the orchestra itself.

MUSIC

By ALEXANDER WILLIAMS

Symphony Concert

The 21st concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky and Eugene Goossens conducting, was given yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. Vladimir Horowitz, pianist, was the soloist. The program was as follows:

Mozart ...Overture to "The Marriage of Figaro"
Goossens.....Symphony Op. 58
Rachmaninoff...Piano Concerto in D minor No. 3 Op. 30

Mr. Eugene Goossens, the Cincinnati Orchestra's distinguished conductor, led the Boston Symphony yesterday in a vigorous performance of Mozart's familiar overture and then proceeded to disclose to us his own latest work on a large scale. This proved to be a mixed blessing. On the one hand we could be reasonably certain that the Symphony would be revealed to us clearly and with the authority of a composer who is also a trained conductor behind it. On the other, we cannot own to any great enthusiasm for the work itself.

Its main fault is the monotony of the composer's imagination. The second movement's ideas are very much like those of the first. The Divertimento does not wander far afield, after starting out bravely enough. With the finale we are back where we started, and this undeniably makes for dullness.

There are some effective pages in the score, notably the conclusion of the first movement. Always there is mechanical skill. Mr. Goossens is at the least a workman who knows his craft and is too clever to be inept or ever as boring as some of the academic symphonies which have been brought to our attention in recent years.

But what he has to say is definitely circumscribed. You get a modicum of starkness, a compensating dose of lushness, here some sober counterpoint, anon some dance-like bits. It has all been carefully planned before; and after a while the music simply ceases to interest you. The third movement did earnestly seek to offer some variety, but the experiment was not as successful as when the composer was on his own home ground. This was the first performance in Boston, and Mr. Goossens was cordially received.

After the intermission Mr. Koussevitzky returned to his own post and offered the Third Rachmaninoff Piano Concerto with Mr. Horowitz as soloist as the "bonne bouche" of the program. When Rachmaninoff himself plays this work—or any of his other music—he imparts a rather world-weary dignity to it, which is far from unattractive.

Mr. Horowitz plays it probably more brilliantly and with the idea of extracting the last ounce of effect that the music holds. It is thus a performance of more energy, perhaps of more vitality. No one need commit himself on the opinion that it is either better or worse, for it is merely different. It was played with all Mr. Horowitz's effortless technique, with grace and with power. It struck us that both he and Mr. Koussevitzky secured a magnificently orchestral interpretation. That is to say, the Concerto sounded bigger and more virile. Mr. Rachmaninoff himself would have imparted to it, we imagine, more nostalgic charm and languor. All this smacks of hair-splitting—let it rest that Mr. Horowitz won a richly-deserved ovation.

The concert will be repeated tomorrow night. Next week the program is as follows: Aaron Copland's "Quiet City"; Howard Hanson's 2nd Symphony; Wagner's Overtures to "The Flying Dutchman," "Parsifal" and "Tannhaeuser."

ing. We had a sample of that leanness yesterday in Eugene Goossens' outwardly effective (in spots) but essentially derivitive and frequently reminiscent Symphony, which its composer conducted here for the first time. But for compensation we are constantly being taught new meanings of the word virtuosity. Not only our orchestras but our soloists perform feats which once might have seemed incredible. This reviewer cannot report on Liszt and Rubinstein, but he did hear the giants of the next generation of pianists, and while these men were not without their points, their technical accomplishments were puny in comparison with the sort of playing that so excited yesterday's audience.

These same 13 years which have left Mr. Horowitz in the full possession of his remarkable powers have taken their toll of Rachmaninoff's Concerto, even though the latter seemed a work of heaven-sent inspiration after the strivings of Mr. Goossens. At least, Mr. Rachmaninoff is a creative personality with a style not to be confused with that of any other composer. And only those who possess such individuality of utterance can work successfully in the larger musical forms. This D-minor Concerto is not so well sustained as its immediate predecessor. The musical interest often flags and wanes. But Mr. Rachmaninoff always did know the trick of a rousing finish, in which a theme, both lyric and propulsive, is made to sound forth in the full splendor of an orchestra, or orchestra plus pianist. Even in a mediocre performance an effect is certain to be made. In a performance such as the one now under consideration there will inevitably be answering cheers and the stamping of feet.

By way of beginning, Mr. Goossens elicited from the orchestra, with full complement of strings, an inflated performance of Mozart's Overture to "The Marriage of Figaro," which only the other evening had sounded in its rightful voice at the Metropolitan Theatre. After all, our huge modern orchestras are really only proper to the pieces that were designed for them.

Horowitz Symphony Soloist

Pianist Receives Ovation; Goossens Leads New Symphony

By L. A. Sloper

Two distinguished guests returned to participate yesterday in the presentation of the twenty-first program of the Boston Symphony season. Eugene Goossens, conductor of the Cincinnati Orchestra, directed the Overture to Mozart's "Marriage of Figaro" and his own new Symphony, Op. 58. Vladimir Horowitz was soloist in Rachmaninoff's Third Piano Concerto, with Dr. Koussevitzky conducting. The program will be repeated Saturday evening in Symphony Hall.

Mr. Goossens is a familiar figure on the podium of Symphony Hall, having conducted the Boston Orchestra three times before. He obtained a lively performance of the Overture. On this occasion the interest of his visit centered of course in the symphony, which is his first, although he is well established as composer in other forms.

* * *

In his very witty program note to this symphony, Mr. Goossens insists amusingly on its freedom from any literary or descriptive ideas. Yet, he adds, if people will attach some programmatic meaning to the movements of this work, "who am I that I should deprive them of their private interpretative joys? Certainly not if it should render the music more palatable to them!"

Nevertheless, in his analysis, the composer describes one of his two "motto" themes as "menacing" and "sinister," the other as "wistful" and "plaintive." With this encouragement, plus the fact that the work was written largely in the summer of 1939 in England, one may easily discover in the first movement a reflection of the troubled times, and in the other three the symphonically concomitant pastoral, jovial, and triumphant moods.

* * *

Moreover, the music by its nature lends itself to such an interpretation. The style is that of neo-Celtic, post-French, British impressionism. In other words, it belongs to a school much given to pictorial music, and its idiom is difficult to dissociate from literary ideas. But since the composer did not intend this effect, it is possible that the association is only in the ear of the listener.

For the rest, the symphony eschews "modernist" harmonic and rhythmic extravagances, employs methods long accepted, and is altogether a workmanlike job. The composer had the co-operation of the orchestra, which joined the audience in acclaiming him.

Mr. Horowitz had been long absent from Symphony Hall. He was last heard with the Boston orchestra 10 years ago. He had made his debut here three years before that, when he used the same concerto he played yesterday. The triumph of that first occasion was repeated yesterday. The pleasure of the audience was expressed not only by loud handclapping, but by shouting and stamping; and the orchestra was hardly less enthusiastic.

* * *

This ovation was well deserved. Thirteen years is a long time in the concert world, and memory may falter; but yesterday's performance seemed to this reviewer far more impressive than the former one. The pianist appears to have matured musically. Today he has not only the dazzling technique of old, but a new musical penetration and interpretive expression. He has delicacy and poetry as well as brilliance and power.

Dr. Koussevitzky's sympathetic insight and the eloquence of the superb orchestra supplied an orchestral accompaniment that matched the solo part to make a wholly memorable performance.

George MacLean

Vladimir Horowitz

Piano soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra this afternoon and Saturday evening.

Vladimir Horowitz

Soloist with the Boston Symphony this evening in the Third Piano Concerto of Serge Rachmaninoff.

MUSIC

SYMPHONY HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Vladimir Horowitz played Rachmaninoff's Third Piano Concerto magnificently at the Boston Symphony concert yesterday afternoon. That is the word, and no other. His performance, and the long, noisy applause that followed, were among the most impressive moments of the Symphony season. They put far, far into the background the entire first part of the concert, when Eugene Goossens conducted the Overture to Mozart's "The Marriage of Figaro" and then introduced his own ponderous Symphony to Boston.

Not for 10 years had Mr. Horowitz been soloist with the Boston Symphony. But in the audience were many who remembered his electrifying interpretation of the Tchaikovsky B-flat minor Concerto at a pair of concerts in the Friday-Saturday series. A decade has, if anything, ripened the art of Mr. Horowitz, a fact noted at his recital here in February of 1940, when he returned to Boston after several years of absence.

With Serge Koussevitzky conducting the orchestra and Mr. Horowitz at the piano, Rachmaninoff's D-minor Concerto was subjected to one of those beautiful and thrilling recreations as necromantic as they are hard to describe. Such terms as "the grand style," "stupendous technic," "intensity," "rich, clear tone" do convey an idea of what it was like. But they cannot communicate the actual sensation of keenness and vitality in Mr. Horowitz' playing, nor the sensitive adjustment between piano and orchestra.

Virtuosity has been damned again and again as a base manifestation of the musical art. It naturally all depends upon the virtuoso, and to what uses his powers are put. In this case, virtuosity was the medium for exhibiting beauty, great art and utmost musicianship. For all that the Concerto itself is a great show, and that yesterday's performance was spectacular, what counted most of all—for musicians and listeners alike—was the music. And when that happens, a great miracle of art is wrought.

Mr. Horowitz and Mr. Koussevitzky, both applying handkerchiefs to perspiring faces, were greeted at the end with handclapping, stamping and cheers. Presently the orchestra was bidden to rise, and the demonstration began all over again.

Mr. Goossens' Symphony, designated his Opus 58, is his first essay in the form. It has no "program." Scored for an enormous orchestra, it must be a happy hunting ground for whose who delight in finding reminiscences. One thought of Strauss, Debussy, Vaughan, Williams and various others until, finally, the Symphony appeared a compendium of styles as well as a gigantic bore.

The afternoon concert this week was shifted to Thursday because today is Good Friday. The evening concert will, as usual, be given Saturday. Next week's program will be as follows: Aaron Copland: "Quiet City"; Howard Hanson: "Romantic" Symphony; Wagner: Overture to "The Flying Dutchman," Prelude to "Parsifal," Overture to "Tannhaeuser."—C. W. D.

MUSIC

Goossens Symphony

Composer Directs His Own Work with Boston Symphony; Horowitz in Rachmaninoff Concerto

By EDWARD DOWNES

As guest of the Boston Symphony, Eugene Goossens conducted the first performance here of his First Symphony, yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. From a purely objective point of view Mr. Goossens' Symphony, which was finished last year, is an excellent piece of work. The craftsmanship is more than solid, it is extremely skillful. Thematically there is an impressive unity which runs through the four movements, and though the instrumental apparatus demanded is rather enormous, there are only brief moments when the scoring seems actually redundant. The style is truly symphonic, that is, the themes are cleverly transformed homophonically, contrapuntally, harmonically rhythmically. It all appears and indeed is logical. The fact that the composer uses an antiquated musical idiom need not, in itself, disturb anyone unduly. It must be remembered that Sebastian Bach, in his later years, was considered completely old hat by most of the younger men growing up about him. Those younger men have since been forgotten.

What then was the matter? For the symphony did not really come off in spite of the tremendous tonal impact of its finale with six trumpets and organ. The language this symphony speaks is clearly derivative. It reminds you of no one in particular (not even Mr. Goossens himself) but of a great many late romantic composers in general. It comes perhaps nearest to Mahler, in his more restrained moments. Now in itself there is nothing reprehensible in this particular musical language, but it seems strange that a composer of Mr. Goossens' youth should feel at home in it. Men of a generation earlier than Mr. Goossens still managed to use it convincingly. Goossens' mastery of the orchestra and its resources is so great that he manages to make this idiom superficially convincing, but inwardly it does not ring true.

All matters of style and technique aside, the music itself, the emotional urge, the spirit of the work, or whatever you choose to call it, seemed of a lesser man than Mr. Goossens has revealed himself to be in other compositions. A work of the length of a symphony, unless it is particularly witty, or has some light trick of charm, must have something important to say if it is not to fall flat.

Though Mr. Goossens, laudably enough, has waited long to write a symphony, until he felt that what he had in mind could only be expressed in symphonic terms, there are things he might have learned in just trying to write a symphony, which could have served him in good stead here. The value of a ruthless pruning might have been one of these. But in spite of this symphony, one looks forward to Mr. Goossens's next.

The guest conductor opened the program with Mozart's Overture to "The Marriage of Figaro" in a version to which we have become all too accustomed with our big modern symphony orchestras. It was big and brilliant and bustling and far from the Mozart spirit. The tempo was a shade too fast, and a body of strings at least twice as large as it should have been, completely swallowed up the poor little wood-winds for which Mozart wrote with such fetching grace and skill.

Dazzling Concerto

After the intermission Vladmir Horowitz and Serge Koussevitzky gave a dazzling performance of Rachmaninoff's Third Piano Concerto in D minor. Horowitz is far from a mere virtuoso. He has brilliance and technique to spare. But his brilliance is always a musical brilliance, not just mechanical glitter. His technique is so fine and so artistically used, you can forget ten agile fingers hammering the ivories under the immediate impression that the composer himself is speaking. That is the highest compliment which can be paid any technique.

Tremendous emotional drive, wonderful elasticity of phrase, sensitive tonal coloring and a subtle dynamic chiaroscuro informed his performance yesterday. There was no denial of pianistic virtuosity. On the contrary, Horowitz gloried in it. But his musical impulse was even stronger, and carried everything before it. Dr. Koussevitzky directed with dramatic fervor and understaning. Teamwork between the two was exemplary. Altogether this was one of the finest concerto performances we have heard here in many a month—in its own way, as masterly as if the composer himself had sat at the piano.

At the close of the concerto there were cheers and torrents of applause for soloist, conductor and the orchestra itself.

MUSIC

Minn., hospital in 1938, applied for a marriage license today.

The President's eldest son said they would be married in a civil ceremony early next week, possibly Tuesday. The date depends on his mother's ability to attend.

In New York, Mrs. Roosevelt said the wedding probably would be Monday.

"I shall be surprised if it is Tuesday," she added.

Roosevelt said it had not been decided who would officiate. The ceremony will be performed either at the home of Miss Schneider's mother, Mrs. Agnes Schneider, or at that of a friend.

Asked if he had considered a White House wedding, he said he preferred to follow the custom of having it at the bride's home.

There will be no honeymoon. Roosevelt explained, because he has standby orders from the marine corps, in which he is a reserve captain on active duty at San Diego.

He and his bride will make their home in San Diego.

In view of Miss Schneider's mem-

Nantasket-Boston Line to Resume

Definite assurances that the Nantasket-Boston Steamboat Company would resume operations this year between Boston, Pemberton and Nantasket, starting late next month were given yesterday as stockholders met in the Hull municipal building for a re-organization meeting. The announcement was made by Andrew F. Pope, town clerk of Hull and manager of the Hull municipal electric light plant, who was elected treasurer and general manager of the line.

The other officers elected were: John R. Wheeler of Hull, president; Mayo Shattuck of Hingham, clerk and counsel; Frank P. Wright, president of the Rockland Trust Company, vice-president; and a board of directors including, Wheeler, Wright, Pope, Clarence V. Nightingale, Hull

PIANIST STIRS HUB AUDIENCE

Horowitz's Playing Causes Frenzied Cheering

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

History repeated itself at yesterday afternoon's Symphony concert, put forward a day because of Good Friday. The second part of the programme brought Vladimir Horowitz as soloist in the Third Pianoforte Concerto of Rachmaninoff, the piece in which he was introduced to Boston on March 16, 1928, when the then little known Russian was but 23. Mr. Horowitz created a sensation at that time and he created a sensation yesterday, inciting a usually staid and largely feminine audience to the kind of frenzy that some people mistakenly believe to be peculiar to sporting events.

It was recorded 13 years ago that the audience "rose to its feet, stamped and cheered, banged its vacated seats and recalled Mr. Horowitz times without number." If this early occasion was by a narrow margin the more exciting of the two, it was only because Mr. Horowitz's extraordinary virtuosity was something not before experienced and hence the more breathtaking and electrifying. In 13 years we have learned what to expect from him, even if he was in enforced retirement for a few of them. In much the same way we have grown accustomed to the virtuosity of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and to the prowess of Dr. Koussevitzky. However, every now and then we are shaken out of this complacency, and yesterday afternoon was a case in point.

This particular present is a bit lean on the creative side, musically speaking. We had a sample of that leanness yesterday in Eugene Goossens' outwardly effective (in spots) but essentially derivitive and frequently reminiscent Symphony, which its composer conducted here for the first time. But for compensation we are constantly being taught new meanings of the word virtuosity. Not only our orchestras but our soloists perform feats which once might have seemed incredible. This reviewer cannot report on Liszt and Rubinstein, but he did hear the giants of the next generation of pianists, and while these men were not without their points, their technical accomplishments were puny in comparison with the sort of playing that so excited yesterday's audience.

These same 13 years which have left Mr. Horowitz in the full possession of his remarkable powers have taken their toll of Rachmaninoff's Concerto, even though the latter seemed a work of heaven-sent inspiration after the strivings of Mr. Goossens. At least, Mr. Rachmaninoff is a creative personality with a style not to be confused with that of any other composer. And only those who possess such individuality of utterance can work successfully in the larger musical forms. This D-minor Concerto is not so well sustained as its immediate predecessor. The musical interest often flags and wanes. But Mr. Rachmaninoff always did know the trick of a rousing finish, in which a theme, both lyric and propulsive, is made to sound forth in the full splendor of an orchestra, or orchestra plus pianist. Even in a mediocre performance an effect is certain to be made. In a performance such as the one now under consideration there will inevitably be answering cheers and the stamping of feet.

By way of beginning, Mr. Goossens elicited from the orchestra, with full complement of strings, an inflated performance of Mozart's Overture to "The Marriage of Figaro," which only the other evening had sounded in its rightful voice at the Metropolitan Theatre. After all, our huge modern orchestras are really only proper to the pieces that were designed for them.

News of Orchestras

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give next week the final pair of concerts in the Monday evening-Tuesday afternoon supplementary series. The program will consist of Mozart's Symphony in G minor, Prokofieff's orchestral suite, "Lieutenant Kijé," and the Second Symphony of Sibelius.

At the Friday and Saturday concerts of next week Dr. Koussevitzky will present Aaron Copland's "Quiet City" for the first time in Boston. The score was written last summer at Tanglewood on themes used by Mr. Copland in incidental music for Irwin Shaw's play of the same name. The other items of the program will be Howard Hanson's Second Symphony, written for the orchestra's 50th season, and three Wagner excerpts, Overture to "The Flying Dutchman," Prelude to "Parsifal," and Overture to "Tannhäuser."

* * *

Native Works Played

The Boston Symphony Orchestra ranks second among American orchestras in number of Amer[illegible] works played last season, and third in percentage. The Detroit Orchestra leads in the number of American works, and Detroit and Indianapolis in percentage. Detroit heard 23 American works, Boston, 13, and Indianapolis 9. The figures are taken from a survey by the National Music Council.

* * *

This Clipping From
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
MERCURY

APR 16 1941

Sibelius In Unmatched Performance

Monthly Series of Boston Symphony Closes on Second

The last concert in the monthly paired Monday-Tuesday series of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was heard yesterday. Under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, it was made a memorable occasion through its substance, contrasts and superb performance by the orchestra. The program was the Mozart G minor symphony; Prokofieff's orchestral Suite Op. 60—"Lieutenant Kiji"—and the Sibelius No. 2 in D major, Op. 43.

It seemed a finer, more luminous playing of the Mozart, particularly in the Andante movement than when the same symphony was given a few weeks ago in the regular series. To a hearer of today, the power of the work must be estimated only relatively to its period, but its style, grace and integrity of design were revealed as Mozart might have rejoiced to hear it.

Even if one failed to read carefully the description of the five sections of the suite Prokofieff has made from his incidental music to a Soviet film comedy based upon an anecdote of a polite covering of an error by the Czar Paul I, the gay, carefree music spoke enjoyably for itself. There were several solo sections including a double bass passage, and saxophone and tuba contributed to the insouciant joys of the score. Off stage, a cornet fanfare intimates the military birth of the imaginary Kije and he grows to man's estate by fife and drum.

The Romance, Wedding and Troika sections reveal Kije as a faithless fellow whose Burial in the fifth section is still far from gloomy. Here he fades by off stage cornet again into the land of fancy whence he was summoned. A delightful musical joke for a sultry April afternoon.

Contrasted with the classical Mozart, Sibelius bore one along on a noble flood of sound. Both wrote honestly from genuine inspiration, yet Mozart pleases the mind by polished perfections; Sibelius sweeps the soul by his instinctive revelation of rugged strengths. Disclaim it as he may, Finland's airs and Finland's forests and Finlands ice fields cracking magnificently have wrought themselves into this Symphony of the Winds, as this hearer always thinks of the overpowering Second.

What orchestra but that before Dr. Koussevitzky could enrich the figure of a few repeated notes in the Vivacissimo with so varied dynamic expression. None but brasses with a beauty of tone like those of the Boston orchestra could so stirringly rise to climax. The last few minutes of the Finale one lived the music bodily even as it seemed to enthrall with its grandeur the figure of the conductor. Never has he so brought forth the ineffable glory that is inherent in this movement. The full choir of flutes and associated woodwinds came magically clear through the tonal mass which mounted unbelievably till one could shout at finish over the glory of a great orchestra voicing the spirit of a land told in a mood of exaltation.

A. C. R.

Four Concerts By Boston Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, will close its series of Monday evening and Tuesday afternoon concerts in the coming week, and will likewise give the 22d of the series of 24 on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening.

For the Friday and Saturday concerts, Mr. Koussevitzky announces the first performance hereabouts of Aaron Copland's "Quiet City" for trumpet and English horn with string orchestra. Mr. Copland wrote his orchestral score at Tanglewood last summer after the close of the Berkshire Music Center. He used themes which he had written for a stage presentation of the same name of a play by Irwin Shaw. Howard Hanson's Symphony No. 2 will also be played. This Symphony was composed for the Boston Symphony Orchestra on its 50th anniversary and was included upon a special program of American music at the beginning of last season. The second portion of the program will consist of excerpts from Richard Wagner: namely, the Overture to "The Flying Dutchman"; the Prelude to "Parsifal," and the Overture to "Tannhauser."

The program for the Symphony concerts of the coming Monday, April 14, and Tuesday, April 15, will be as follows: "Mozart's Symphony in G Minor, Prokofieff's Orchestral Suite "Lieutenant Kije" and the Second Symphony of Sibelius. Prokofieff's score was derived from incidental music which he wrote for a Russian film of that name. The Suite, however, is entirely rewritten.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

APR 13 1941

Boston Symphony

Two American works, Aaron Copland's "Quiet City" for trumpet, English horn and strings, and Howard Hanson's second ("Romantic") Symphony, will be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in its home concerts of next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening in Symphony Hall. Serge Koussevitzky will close the program with three Wagner preludes.

Berkshire Festival Programs Given

Serge Koussevitzky announces the programs for each of the three weeks which will comprise the Berkshire Symphonic Festival of 1941 and which will consist of nine concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, July 31-Aug. 17. The concerts will be given in the Shed at Tanglewood, Lenox, Miss., the summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. There will be three concerts each week—Thursday evening, Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon. The music to be played will be as follows:

FIRST WEEK (JULY 31-AUG. 3)
Haydn.....Symphony in G major, No. 88
Beethoven.....Symphony No. 3, "Eroica"
Schubert..Symphony in B minor, "Unfinished."
Mendelssohn.....''Italian'' Symphony
Brahms.....Symphony No. 4, in E minor
Shostakovitch.....Symphony No. 5
Beethoven.....''Leonore'' No. 3
Debussy.....Three Nocturnes: ''Clouds,'' ''Festivals,'' ''Sirens.''
Villa Lobos.....Chorus No. 10
Copland.....''Quiet City''
Hindemith.....Concerto for Violoncello
SECOND WEEK (AUG. 7-AUG. 10)
Mozart....Requiem, Symphony in C major, Symphony in A major.
(In commemoration of the 150th anniversary of Mozart's death.)
Beethoven.....Symphony No. 5 in C minor
Berlioz.....''Fantastic'' Symphony
Hanson.....Symphony No. 2, ''Romantic''
Brahms..Piano Concerto in B flat major, No. 2.
Debussy.....''La Mer''
THIRD WEEK (AUG. 14-17)
Beethoven.....''Missa Solemnis''
Tchaikovsky.....Symphony No. 5
Sibelius.....Symphony No. 6
Vaughan Williams..''A London Symphony''
Wagner..Prelude and Love-Death, ''Tristan and Isolde,'' Prelude to ''Die Meistersinger von Nurnberg.''
Strauss..'.....''Death and Transfiguration'
Barber.....Violin Concerto
Piston.....''The Incredible Flutist''

MUSIC

Monday Symphony

By ALEXANDER WILLIAMS

The final concert in the Monday evening series by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting, was given last night in Symphony Hall. The program was as follows:

Symphony in G minor, K. 550.....Mozart
''Lieutenant Kije,'' Orchestral Suite Op. 60.....Prokofieff
Symphony No. 2 in D major Op. 43.Sibelius

The regulars at the Monday-Tuesday concerts would probably be tempted to describe last night's program as about the best ever and quite to their taste. And indeed it is hard to see how anyone could dispute that opinion. Perhaps the Sibelius No. 2 has been overplayed for many of us; but a subscriber who only attends six concerts a year in Symphony Hall would not agree.

The first part of the program was at any rate a complete contrast. This is a Mozart year—the 150th anniversary of his death—and it is fitting that we should be reminded of his three greatest symphonies. It is a matter of taste which you prefer, but the G minor is possibly the most original or rather the most forward-looking. Even that statement is open to contradiction, for the introduction of the E flat Symphony is very like Beethoven. At least the G minor has aroused more discussion, and it is, of course, less sunny than is Mozart's wont. We have always maintained that Mr. Koussevitzky is an admirably sympathetic conductor of Mozart. He secures a combination of brilliance and exquisite taste that is quite irresistible.

Prokofieff's "Lieutenant Kije" is a very amusing suite. It was undoubtedly tossed off for the purposes of the film and then polished to its present ironic perfection. If not "great" music in the accepted sense of that much abused adjective, it is frankly the best of musical entertainment. Actually it provides some ticklish moments for the instrumental soloists; and for that reason Mr. Koussevitzky summoned the musicians to their feet each time he came out in response to the applause of the audience. "Lieutenant Kije" has been recorded by the Boston Symphony, but it is one of those pieces that gains a good deal if you can see as well as hear the orchestra.

The concert, it may be added, will be repeated this afternoon.

Symphony

Koussevitzky Ends Monday Concerts

That sky-storming, exultant chant of Sibelius' youth, his Second Symphony in D minor, furnished both climax and finale to the Boston Symphony's brief Monday subscription series, last night in Symphony Hall. The program, which opened with Mozart's G minor Symphony, continuing with the adroit persiflage of Prokofieff's Suite, "Lieutenant Kije," is repeated this afternoon under the baton of Serge Koussevitzky. Thus three of Dr. Koussevitzky's most distinguished interpretations, and a model of program-building combined to bring the miniature season to a brilliant close.

Whether Dr. Koussevitzky's mood, or that of the listener had changed from ten days ago when he played the Mozart symphony, is hard to say. But last night the first movement seemed more hurried, and therefore to have lost something of it intensity. The remaining movements were achieved, as before, a wonderful balance between the dark emotions so rare in Mozart, his more familiar, restrained melancholy, and the delicate, sensuous glow of the Andante. The cunning balance of timbres, transparent orchestral sonorities, took their rightful place as details of a masterly performance.

Prokofieff's Suite after the music he wrote to the Russian film, "Lieutenant Kije," is flimsy stuff at second hearing, but so witty is the orchestra with which Prokofieff unfolds the story of his ephemeral hero, that it is emphatically worth performing.

Sibelius Second Symphony is a thrice-familiar triumph of Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony. Enthusiastic subscribers were still cheering and stamping their thanks as reviewers left the hall.

E. D.

APRIL 15, 1941

Final Monday Symphony

Sibelius Second Offered For Rousing Conclusion

A coda is desirable for a music season no less than for an individual piece of music, and for a series of concerts no less than for a work performed at a given concert. A better choice for a finale to the Monday evening and Tuesday afternoon meetings of Boston Symphony Orchestra patrons could hardly have been made than the Symphony No. 2, in D major, of Sibelius, with which Dr. Serge Koussevitzky wound up proceedings at Symphony Hall last night.

The Second Symphony of Sibelius consists wholly of coda; that explains the matter. From the first note, it is preparing for a big close. It never settles down to the four-movement plan with any sort of classic compulsion. It never quite accepts the allegro idea, never confidently becomes andante, never betakes itself to giocose, but constantly maintains a majestic mood, always approaching a grand triumphal outburst, which it reaches, at last, in a fashion gradiose to the last degree. The composition stands, truly, a great, perhaps unsurpassed, study in orchestral rhetoric. Without being in the least rude, or bombastic, it exults and leaps from ecstasy to ecstasy until nothing remains to be done. The top rung of climax is attained, the brasses have sounded their loudest, and the drums have beaten their heaviest.

Farewell, then, to 1940-41 for the Monday nights. But something at this time transpired besides the jubilant sonorities of Sibelius. Some sentiment of a warm sort came to notice in a presentation of Mozart's Symphony in G minor, and plenty of humor sparkled in a reading of the "Lieutenant Kijé" Orchestral Suite of Prokofieff. Could not Dr. Koussevitzky have let the occasion pass with a routine handling of Mozart? Not at all. Nor could his men. The interpretation was one of the sort in which the man of the baton and the instrumentalists contribute about 50-50; he does half and they half. Old classics ought to be treated that way—not over-conducted. Let string quartet methods, as far as may be, prevail.

Regarding Prokofieff, we may lightly pass him off as an advanced member of the Rimsky-Korsakoff school and so in a measure discount his originality. But set his rating where we will, he gets Russian humor into music after a surpassing fashion. He brings orchestral writing back into the literary realm, where the symphonic poem composers had it, ignoring, happily, the abstract affectations of many of his fellow-moderns.

W. P. T.

Josephine Rossi

Rose Dirman

Soprano soloist in the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Pension Fund Concert performance of "Missa Solemnis" at Symphony Hall Sunday afternoon, April 27.

Except for a recent performance of the Mozart G minor in the regular Friday-Saturday concerts, this greatly beloved work of the composer (whose 150 anniversary of death is this year being observed) has not been played in Symphony Hall for some years.

The orchestral suite Prokofieff has made about an imaginary officer created to save embarrassment to a royal blunderer has much of the originality and good spirits of his "Peter and the Wolf."

The Tuesday afternoon commuters' matinee" at the special hour of 3, is arranged to convenience out-of-town attendance.

This Clipping From
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
MERCURY

APR 12 1941

Commuters Season Ends Tuesday

Mozart, Prokofieff, Brahms for Boston Symphony Program

For the closing of the paired concerts of the Monday-Tuesday monthly series by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Seige Koussevitzky, conductor, has chosen this program: Mozart-Symphony in G minor (Koechel No. 550); Prokofieff—"Lieutenant Kije," Orchestral Suite, op. 60; Brahms—Symphony No. 2 in D major, op. 73.

In the First Balcony Gallery of Symphony Hall, the current exhibit is of 101 American Prints, representing three centuries of print making. The assembly, originally made for the American National Committee of Engraving, was under the direction of its president, John Taylor Arms. Mr. Arms, himself a leading etcher of this country, spent many Summers at Salter's Point in the first decade of this century.

Another name of local connection in the show of single examples of famous print makers is that of Ernest Haskell, a cousin of Mrs. Andrew G. Pierce Jr.

The exhibit goes on a South American tour after it leaves Boston.

A. C. R.

REDUCTION

RATIO

18x

2.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

PM-MGP 13″x18″
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

200 mm

150 mm

100 mm

A4

A5

A3

1.0

1.1

1.25

1.4

1.6

1.8

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.5 mm

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century

A&P

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

4.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

3.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

3.0 mm

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR, BOSTON, THURSDAY, APRIL 17, 1941

A New Work From Aaron Copland

His 'Quiet City' Scheduled On Week's Symphony Program

By Winthrop P. Tryon

What the representation of a musical idea comes about at this week's concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, in a little, 10-minute study by an American composer. A work in the small hardly associates itself with grandiloquent modern times, but here we have one—a piece requiring little more than half a platform of players for its performance, and gaining, as its title hints, very slight place—"Quiet City," for English horn, trumpet, and strings, by Aaron Copland.

At first thought, anyone could reasonably remark that a fancy of the sort does not fall into the orchestral category at all, and could point upon Dr. Koussevitzky and quiz on the appropriateness of his putting into his program "Quiet City." For is it music, consider music?

Surely, the two wind instruments do, in a way, form a melodic line along with a string instrument of the violin, viola, or the same time, the ultimate purpose of the composer is plain. The English horn and the trumpet may be said to stand for all the woods and all the brasses. They are, in a fair view of the case, two grand choirs reduced to a pair of voices.

Another way of explaining the matter, we have here a condensation of the orchestral story from early civilized times. Curious tone and pastoral melody of the double-reed English horn tell of the Greek contribution to instrumentation. Ordered sound and a lyric melody of the trumpet sing the Roman contribution. Over the harmony of the bowed instruments brings to the mind of the listener the Medieval and the Renaissance eras and completes the record up to latter days.

A strange moment of contemplation this piece offers of one who has been through the modern musical mill and who has had every experience an American man of music can enjoy. Successful as a student, taught in Europe, acclaimed as a youthful talent on return to the United States, approved as a mature composer, and honored with educational appointments, he settles down to the simplest kind of an expression of himself. It is as though he had got such an abundance of instruction and opportunity that he had determined to find the common denominator of it all and get things down to their lowest terms and their final analysis.

"Big symphonies are all right," he seems to observe, "but who has told more in an hour with all the means of sonority available than I can tell in a sixth of the time with a mere outline of an orchestra?"

Action begins in the strings, mild in manner. The English horn speaks; then the trumpet, at first outright and then in echo. Greek and Roman hold deliberate conversation. Remarkable that either of the single voices equals in power the whole body of strings with seven double basses as foundation. The trumpet, its bell plugged with the mute, has a passage, again sounding first near and then afar. To close, the two classic principals hold a duet, the Medieval company standing by and encouraging.

"Quiet City" bears date of 1940, and seems to count as a product of the Berkshire summer academic doings of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Perhaps the thing could not have been imagined or accomplished in any other locality but that from which it arises. Mr. Copland, as a practical musician, recognizes that not all orchestras have an English horn player, and accordingly he has written in his score an alternative oboe arrangement of the double-reed part.

Next Week's Symphony

Benjamin Britten's Variations for String Orchestra on a Theme by Frank Bridge will be presented by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky at next week's pair of Boston Symphony concerts, the last but one of the season. The work contains eight variations and a fugued finale. The other items of the program will be Schumann's Fourth Symphony, in D minor, Falla's Suite from "El Amor Brujo," and Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel."

SHOW HONORS TO CONDUCTOR

Orchestra and Audience Rise to New American

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

Serge Koussevitzky, who became an American citizen last Wednesday, conducted compositions by two fellow-Americans, Aaron Copland's "Quiet City," and Howard Hanson's "Romantic" Symphony, at the Symphony Concert of yesterday afternoon. When the conductor first came upon the stage the orchestra stood and applauded and the audience, many members of which may not have known what all the fuss was about, applauded much more heartily than usual.

After the intermission Dr. Koussevitzky led his men through three Wagnerian introductions, the Overture to "The Flying Dutchman," the Prelude to "Parsifal," and the Overture to Tannhaeuser." His grandiose reading of the "Tannhaeuser" Overture's closing pages won him another ovation, although the real climax, not only of the Wagner, but of the entire concert, was the singularly impressive performance of the "Parsifal" Prelude.

"The Flying Dutchman" Overture had stirring moments, such as the electrifying opening, but taken as a whole, it was a bit studied and self-conscious; also uncomfortably brassy in spots. It would not be strictly accurate to say that Dr. Koussevitzky is a great interpreter of Wagner—or that he is not. He is likely to prove one and quite as likely not to. The up-and-down-ness of his Wagner yesterday was a case in point.

Getting back to Messrs. Copland and Hanson, the former's "Quiet City," scored for trumpet, English horn and strings, is drawn from music for a stage play (by Irwin Shaw) but stands very well by itself, while Mr. Hanson's Second Symphony sounds much of the time like the score for a movie which does not exist. It might also be said of "Quiet City," heard yesterday for the first time in Boston, that it is very nice as far as it goes but doesn't go very far. It is mostly mood, yet there is in it a fine and sensitive quality and there is a climax of considerable intensity. Incidentally, it offered Mr. Mager and Mr. Speyer, particularly the former, a fine opportunity to shine. Dr. Koussevitzky had them both rise in acknowledgment of the applause.

THIS CLIPPING FROM SAN RAFAEL, CALIF.
INDEPENDENT
APR 10 41

This Clipping From
SAN MATEO, CALIF.
TIMES & NEWS LEADER
APR 17 1941

THIS CLIPPING FROM
BROOKFIELD, MO.
DAILY ARGUS
APR 24 [illegible]

This Clipping From MILWAUKEE, WIS.
POST
APR 21 1941

THIS CLIPPING FROM MONTROSE, COLO.
PRESS
1941

This Clipping From MILWAUKEE, WIS.
JOURNAL
APR 2 - 1941

Conductor Hails Citizenship

Boston, Mass.—(U.P.)—Serge Koussevitzky, Russian born conductor of the Boston symphony orchestra, celebrated his becoming a United States citizen by presenting a special program of American music.

THE BOSTON HERALD, SATURDAY, APRIL 19, 1941

Copeland, Hanson and Wagener Compositions on Afternoon Symphony Program

MUSIC

Symphony Concert

By ALEXANDER WILLIAMS

The 22nd concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting, was given yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. The program was as follows:

Copeland..."Quiet City" for trumpet, English horn and strings
Hanson.....Symphony No. 2, "Romantic"
Wagner.....Overture to "The Flying Dutchman"
Wagner.....Prelude to "Parsifal"
Wagner.....Overture to "Tannhaeuser"

We have had a good deal of music this season that has sought to express the spirit of a city—Vaughn-Williams's London Symphony, Delius's Paris and now Mr. Copeland's "Quiet City," which is presumably New York. It is a short piece and was derived from some music he wrote for a play by Irwin Shaw. The curious combination of solo trumpet and English horn (ably played yesterday by Messrs. Mager and Speyer) and a string orchestra is employed.

Mr. Copeland seems in his recent work to have turned his back on his earliest music which so aggressively eschewed charm. "Quiet City" has an idea behind it and some originality. Yet it remains a not very effective piece as it stands. It would be interesting to know if the composer honestly feels that he has clearly conveyed what he had in mind. To use the piece seemed amorphous.

If Mr. Koussevitzky is affectionately termed the "godfather of American music," certainly Howard Hanson is its enthusiastic big brother. No one is more energetic than he in whooping up the cause, introducing the other members of the family and praising them behind their backs to unsympathetic strangers. Unfortunately the big brother himself has found time to compose on a large scale, and in view of all that he has done for American music it would naturally be a gross discourtesy not to play his works frequently.

Again unfortunately, they do not merit amiable treatment. The 2nd Symphony, to be sure, is not nearly so bad as the 3rd, which Mr. Koussevitzky so earnestly fostered last season. On the other hand it is not, except for the first movement, much good. If Mr. Hanson had a spark of originality or even his fair share of that much despised quality, cleverness, a lot could be forgiven him.

In a sense he has cleverness, but it consists in his being able to copy pretty faithfully. With the 2nd Symphony he has spiked one of our best critical guns by himself pointing to it as "romantic," but that doesn't make the music any fresher.

The first movement is effective and not uninteresting in a by-gone manner. The second movement seemed to us very stale and tedious. The last movement is the poorest of all, because it depends for its climax on hauling back material from the first, material moreover that had been amply worked over at the time.

"Why then the applause?" asks the reader who liked the symphony. There are two reasons for this. First, the music is juicy and easy on the ear harmonically, for all its loudness. Second, the work received a surpassingly fine and intense performance under Mr. Koussevitzky's direction. Do but life the veils of conventional harmony and inspired interpretation, however, and you will behold the faded imitation within. Every so often Mr. Koussevitzky must say to himself: "Come, it is high time I played some Wagner. I'll just give up half a program to him next week. That ought to satisfy them." Maybe this practice does succeed in pacifying the Wagnerians, who as a rule have short tempers. Yesterday we must confess that, far fro mrighting the balance of a dull concert, the Wagner items plunged it further into boredom.

We cannot put our finger on just what it is about Mr. Koussevitzky's interpretations of Wagner that fails to be electrifying. Possibly it is that he tries too hard, that he is impatient with the music for not being more brilliant and as a result coaxes it out of shape.

Incidentally why may we not hear the Venusberg music alone? It can be so played, even though the beginning is a little awkward. It was, of course, written in Wagner's mature style and subsequently by him pinned on to that absurd Salvation Army hymn that does such laborious duty in "Tannhaeuser."

Next week let us hope for better luck with the following program: Benjamin Britten's Variations for string orchestra on a theme of Frank Bridge; Schumann's 4th Symphony (not the 2nd as announced); Falla's Suite from "El Amor Brujo"; Strauss's "Till Eulenspiegel."

SYMPHONY CONCERT

Koussevitzky Leads Two American Works in His First Concert As An American Citizen

By EDWARD DOWNES

An even warmer welcome than usual greeted Serge Koussevitzky as he stepped upon the platform of Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon: as one man the orchestra rose to its feet and the tapping of violin bows was drowned by clapping and stamping from the audience. For this was a Koussevitzky debut—the first concert which he has conducted in this country as a full-fledged American citizen. The applause was not only for Koussevitzky, the musician, whom Boston has long affectionately regarded as its own, it was also for Koussevitzky, the man, who has now taken the last symbolic step proclaiming his own affection and faith in the country and the community of his adoption.

The first half of the program was given over, appropriately enough, to American compositions, and it reminded us once more that Koussevitzky has not waited for his final papers to make himself the leading conductor of our country in the protection and encouragement of American composers.

Aaron Copland's new short piece, "Quiet City," had not been heard in Boston. It was arranged last summer at "Panglewood" (another link to Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony) from incidental music to the play, "Quiet City," by Irwin Shaw, and had its first concert performance last January in New York. The play, writes Mr. Copland, "called for music evocative of the nostalgia and inner distress of a society profoundly aware of its own insecurity," and was a realistic fantasy on the night-thoughts of many different kinds of people in a great city.

It is indeed imaginative and evocative music, but nevertheless simple, straightforward and to the point. How much emotion Mr. Copland intended to put into it, or how much emotion it actually conveys, is difficult to say at first hearing. The initial impression was more of fantasy than feeling, but that has happened before with music which later revealed the strongest emotional drive. "Quiet City" should be heard again.

Romantic Symphony Again

Howard Hanson's "Romantic" Symphony, which followed the Copland piece, is a work for which the writer, after repeated hearings and with the best will in the world, can muster no enthusiasm. It has, of course, its moments of broad and effective melody, the orchestration is colorful and expertly handled, there are trenchant and dramatic rhythmic figures. Mr. Hanson has excellent material, but it is what he does with that material, the development of his ideas, which sounds hopelessly derivative and unimaginative.

There were several opprotunities to hear this symphony last season and, being quite obviously convinced of its worth, Koussevitzky presents it to his public again for reconsideration. Personally I dislike it. But what would we think of a conductor who did not maintain his own faith in the face of any amount of journalistic mutterings and disaffection? And so with all heart, we say—more power to him!

After the intermission came three popular Wagner selections: the Overture to "The Flying Dutchman," the Prelude to "Parsifal" and the Overture to "Tannhaeuser" in the Dresden version. There was more of tonal splendor than intellectual subtlety in Koussevitzky's "Dutchman." Perhaps a faster tempo at the outset and greater emphasis of nuance would have changed this. The "Parsifal" Prelude did not achieve a true mystical atmosphere until the middle part describing the suffering of Amfortas. Similarly in the "Tannhaeuser" Overture the pious song of the pilgrims, with which it opens, was less convincing than the unholy fascinations of the Venusberg and the struggle and final reconciliation of the two elements, which is the essence of the entire opera.

MUSIC

SYMPHONY HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Aaron Copland's "Quiet City" was played for the first time in Boston yesterday at the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The work stood first on a program that contained the "Romantic" Symphony by Howard Hanson and three Wagner excerpts: the Overture to "The Flying Dutchman," the Prelude to "Parsifal" and the Overture to "Tannhaeuser." Serge Koussevitzky conducted.

Taken as a whole this was one of the least effective programs Mr. Koussevitzky has given us. Copland's new music proved well worth hearing, but the Symphony of Hanson, with all its sentimental lushness, is second rate and the operatic excerpts proved a rather indigestible chunk of Wagner. Do not misunderstand. As a devout Wagnerian this reviewer always welcomes his music, but two overtures and a prelude lumped together are scarcely an artistic choice, especially when the solemnities of "Parsifal" are squeezed between the virile fury of "The Flying Dutchman" and "Tannhaeuser."

"Quiet City" is oddly but very cleverly scored for solo English horn and trumpet against a background of massed strings. The combination is fascinating. It produces some lovely sounds. Mr. Copland's writing is neat, spare, comfortably between harmonic richness and dissonance. "Quiet City" is, of course, a concert work, intended to be heard for and by itself, although the material is based on themes used by Mr. Copland in his incidental score (for trumpet, clarinet, saxophone and piano) to the stage play "Quiet City," by Irwin Shaw.

Yet Mr. Copland wrote what is essentially theatre music, a score of mood and feeling. Not that it fails to make effect as an abstract symphonic piece, because it does to a degree. But through its course one had the constant impression of how superbly it could emphasize the action of a play.

Mr. Copland would surely have been pleased had he been present yesterday to hear the virtuoso performance and brilliant interpretation. Mr. Speyer's playing of the English horn, and that of Mr. Mager in the trumpet part, were splendid.

Little can be written of Hanson's "Romantic" Symphony not already put in print. The score is competently written for large orchestra, but trivial in ideas and notably derivative. Sentimentality rules most of the time, reminding you of Vernon Blackburn's declaration that a tune is a melody become overripe. Due to Mr. Koussevitzky's intense reading, and the fine caliber of the orchestra, the Symphony was given a specious brilliance, another example of music being made to sound better than it actually is.

Of the Wagner group, this reviewer enjoyed best the "Parsifal" Prelude. The two overtures were fussed over and blown up almost to the point of distortion.

Mr. Koussevitzky received a gracious and prolonged welcome when he first appeared upon the stage, no doubt in recognition of his newly acquired American citizenship. The orchestra rose to greet him and the audience applauded even more than usual. The tribute was appropriate, and served to emphasize the esteem with which he is regarded.

Next week the program will be: Benjamin Britten: Variations for strings on a Theme by Frank Bridge; Schumann: Fourth Symphony (Mr. Koussevitzfiy has substituted the Fourth for the Schumann Second announced in the program book); Manuel de Falla: Suite from "Love the Sorcerer"; Strauss: "Till Eulenspiegel."—C. W. D.

REDUCTION

RATIO

14x

PM-MGP 13″x18″
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

200 mm

150 mm

100 mm

A5

A4

A3

1.0

1.1

1.25

1.4

1.6

1.8

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

1.0 mm

1.5 mm

2.0 mm

2.5 mm

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century

A&P

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR, BOSTON, THURSDAY, APRIL 17, 1941

A New Work From Aaron Copland

His 'Quiet City' Scheduled On Week's Symphony Program

By Winthrop P. Tryon

Vignette representation of a musical idea comes about at this week's concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, in a little, 10-minute study by an American composer. A work in the small hardly associates itself with grandiloquent modern times, but here we have one—a piece requiring little more than half a platform of players for its performance, and making, as its title hints, very slight noise—"Quiet City," for English horn, trumpet, and strings, by Aaron Copland.

At first thought, anyone could reasonably remark that a fancy of this sort does not fall into the orchestral category at all, and could call out upon Dr. Koussevitzky and question the appropriateness of his letting into his program the "Quiet City." For is it not, in truth, chamber music?

Admittedly, the two wind instruments do, in a way, form a light ensemble along with a group of instruments of the violin family. At the same time, the symphonic purpose of the composition is plain. The English horn and the trumpet may be said to stand for all the woods and all the brasses. They are, in a fair view of the case, two grand choirs reduced to a pair of voices.

Another way of explaining the matter, we have here a condensation of the orchestral story from early civilized times. Curious tone and pastoral melody of the double-reed English horn tell of the Greek contribution to instrumental music. Ordered sound and militant melody of the trumpet sum up the Roman contribution. Then the harmony of the bowed instruments brings to the mind of the listener the Medieval and the Renaissance eras and completes the record up to latter days.

A strange moment of contemplation this piece offers of one who has been through the modern musical mill and who has had every experience an American man of music can enjoy. Successful as a student, taught in Europe, acclaimed as a youthful talent on return to the United States, approved as a mature composer, and honored with educational appointments, he settles down to the simplest kind of an expression of himself. It is as though he had got such an abundance of instruction and opportunity that he had determined to find the common denominator of it all and get things down to their lowest terms and their final analysis.

"Big symphonies are all right," he seems to observe, "but who has told more in an hour with all the means of sonority available than I can tell in a sixth of the time with a mere outline of an orchestra?"

Action begins in the strings, mild in manner. The English horn speaks; then the trumpet, at first outright and then in echo. Greek and Roman hold deliberate conversation. Remarkable that either of the single voices equals in power the whole body of strings with seven double basses as foundation. The trumpet, its bell plugged with the mute, has a passage, again sounding first near and then afar. To close, the two classic principals hold a duet, the Medieval company standing by and encouraging.

"Quiet City" bears date of 1940, and seems to count as a product of the Berkshire summer academic doings of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Perhaps the thing could not have been imagined or accomplished in any other locality but that from which it arises. Mr. Copland, as a practical musician, recognizes that not all orchestras have an English horn player, and accordingly he has written in his score an alternative oboe arrangement of the double-reed part.

Next Week's Symphony

Benjamin Britten's Variations for String Orchestra on a Theme by Frank Bridge will be presented by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky at next week's pair of Boston Symphony concerts, the last but one of the season. The work contains eight variations and a fugued finale. The other items of the program will be Schumann's Fourth Symphony, in D minor, Falla's Suite from "El Amor Brujo," and Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel."

SHOW HONORS TO CONDUCTOR

Orchestra and Audience Rise to New American

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

Serge Koussevitzky, who became an American citizen last Wednesday, conducted compositions by two fellow-Americans, Aaron Copland's "Quiet City," and Howard Hanson's "Romantic" Symphony, at the Symphony Concert of yesterday afternoon. When the conductor first came upon the stage the orchestra stood and applauded and the audience, many members of which may not have known what all the fuss was about, applauded much more heartily than usual.

After the intermission Dr. Koussevitzky led his men through three Wagnerian introductions, the Overture to "The Flying Dutchman," the Prelude to "Parsifal," and the Overture to Tannhaeuser." Hs grandiose reading of the "Tannhaeuser" Overture's closing pages won him another ovation, although the real climax, not only of the Wagner, but of the entire concert, was the singularly impressive performance of the "Parsifal" Prelude.

"The Flying Dutchman" Overture had stirring moments, such as the electrifying opening, but taken as a whole, it was a bit studied and self-conscious; also uncomfortably brassy in spots. It would not be strictly accurate to say that Dr. Koussevitzky is a great interpreter of Wagner—or that he is not. He is likely to prove one and quite as likely not to. The up-and-down-ness of his Wagner yesterday was a case in point.

Getting back to Messrs. Copland and Hanson, the former's "Quiet City," scored for trumpet, English horn and strings, is drawn from music for a stage play (by Irwin Shaw) but stands very well by itself, while Mr. Hanson's Second Symphony sounds much of the time like the score for a movie which does not exist. It might also be said of "Quiet City," heard yesterday for the first time in Boston, that it is very nice as far as it goes but doesn't go very far. It is mostly mood, yet there is in it a fine and sensitive quality and there is a climax of considerable intensity. Incidentally, it offered Mr. Mager and Mr. Speyer, particularly the former, a fine opportunity to shine. Dr. Koussevitzky had them both rise in acknowledgment of the applause.

THIS CLIPPING FROM SAN RAFAEL, CALIF.
INDEPENDENT
APR 10 1941
This Clipping From
SAN MATEO, CALIF.
TIMES & NEWS LEADER
APR 17 1941
THIS CLIPPING FROM
BROOKFIELD, MO.
DAILY ARGUS
APR 24 1941
This Clipping From MILWAUKEE, WIS.
POST
APR 21 1941
THIS CLIPPING FROM MONTROSE, COLO.
PRESS
APR 2 1941

This Clipping From MILWAUKEE, WIS.
JOURNAL
APR 2 - 1941

Conductor Hails Citizenship

Boston, Mass.—(U.P.)—Serge Koussevitzky, Russian born conductor of the Boston symphony orchestra, celebrated his becoming a United States citizen by presenting a special program of American music.

THE BOSTON HERALD, SATURDAY, APRIL

Copeland, Hanson and Wagener Compositions o

MUSIC

Symphony Concert

By ALEXANDER WILLIAMS

The 22nd concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting, was given yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. The program was as follows:

Copeland..."Quiet City" for trumpet, English horn and strings
Hanson....Symphony No. 2, "Romantic"
Wagner....Overture to "The Flying Dutchman"
Wagner.....Prelude to "Parsifal"
Wagner.....Overture to "Tannhaeuser"

We have had a good deal of music this season that has sought to express the spirit of a city—Vaughn-Williams's London Symphony, Delius's Paris and now Mr. Copeland's "Quiet City," which is presumably New York. It is a short piece and was derived from some music he wrote for a play by Irwin Shaw. The curious combination of solo trumpet and English horn (ably played yesterday by Messrs. Mager and Speyer) and a string orchestra is employed.

Mr. Copeland seems in his recent work to have turned his back on his earliest music which so aggressively eschewed charm. "Quiet City" has an idea behind it and some originality. Yet it remains a not very effective piece as it stands. It would be interesting to know if the composer honestly feels that he has clearly conveyed what he had in mind. To use the piece seemed amorphous.

If Mr. Koussevitzky is affectionately termed the "godfather of American music," certainly Howard Hanson is its enthusiastic big brother. No one is more energetic than he in whooping up the cause, introducing the other members of the family and praising them behind their backs to unsympathetic strangers. Unfortunately the big brother himself has found time to compose on a large scale, and in view of all that he has done for American music it would naturally be a gross discourtesy not to play his works frequently.

Again unfortunately, they do not merit amiable treatment. The 2nd Symphony, to be sure, is not nearly so bad as the 3rd, which Mr. Koussevitzky so earnestly fostered last season. On the other hand it is not, except for the first movement, much good. If Mr. Hanson had a spark of originality or even his fair share of that much despised quality, cleverness, a lot could be forgiven him.

In a sense he has cleverness, but it consists in his being able to copy pretty faithfully. With the 2nd Symphony he has spiked one of our best critical guns by himself pointing to it as "romantic," but that doesn't make the music any fresher.

The first movement is effective and not uninteresting in a by-gone manner. The second movement seemed to us very stale and tedious. The last movement is the poorest of all, because it depends for its climax on hauling back material from the first, material moreover that had been amply worked over at the time.

"Why then the applause?" asks the reader who liked the symphony. There are two reasons for this. First, the music is juicy and easy on the ear harmonically, for all its loudness. Second, the work received a surpassingly fine and intense performance under Mr. Koussevitzky's direction. Do but life the veils of conventional harmony and inspired interpretation, however, and you will behold the faded imitation within.

Every so often Mr. Koussevitzky must say to himself: "Come, it is high time I played some Wagner. I'll just give up half a program to him next week. That ought to satisfy them." Maybe this practice does succeed in pacifying the Wagnerians, who as a rule have short tempers. Yesterday we must confess that, far fro mrighting the balance of a dull concert, the Wagner items plunged it further into boredom.

We cannot put our finger on just what it is about Mr. Koussevitzky's interpretations of Wagner that fails to be electrifying. Possibly it is that he tries too hard, that he is impatient with the music for not being more brilliant and as a result coaxes it out of shape.

Incidentally why may we not hear the Venusberg music alone? It can be so played, even though the beginning is a little awkward. It was, of course, written in Wagner's mature style and subsequently by him pinned on to that absurd Salvation Army hymn that does such laborious duty in "Tannhaeuser."

Next week let us hope for better luck with the following program: Benjamin Britten's Variations for string orchestra on a theme of Frank Bridge; Schumann's 4th Symphony (not the 2nd as announced); Falla's Suite from "El Amor Brujo"; Strauss's "Till Eulenspiegel."

SYMPHONY CONCERT

Koussevitzky Leads Two American Works in His First Concert As An American Citizen

By EDWARD DOWNES

An even warmer welcome than usual greeted Serge Koussevitzky as he stepped upon the platform of Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon: as one man the orchestra rose to its feet and the tapping of violin bows was drowned by clapping and stamping from the audience. For this was a Koussevitzky debut—the first concert which he has conducted in this country as a full-fledged American citizen. The applause was not only for Koussevitzky, the musician, whom Boston has long affectionately regarded as its own, it was also for Koussevitzky, the man, who has now taken the last symbolic step proclaiming his own affection and faith in the country and the community of his adoption.

The first half of the program was given over, appropriately enough, to American compositions, and it reminded us once more that Koussevitzky has not waited for his final papers to make himself the leading conductor of our country in the protection and encouragement of American composers.

Aaron Copland's new short piece, "Quiet City," had not been heard in Boston. It was arranged last summer at "Tanglewood" (another link to Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony) from incidental music to the play, "Quiet City," by Irwin Shaw, and had its first concert performance last January in New York. The play, writes Mr. Copland, "called for music evocative of the nostalgia and inner distress of a society profoundly aware of its own insecurity," and was a realistic fantasy on the night-thoughts of many different kinds of people in a great city.

It is indeed imaginative and evocative music, but nevertheless simple, straightforward and to the point. How much emotion Mr. Copland intended to put into it, or how much emotion it actually conveys, is difficult to say at first hearing. The initial impression was more of fantasy than feeling, but that has happened before with music which later revealed the strongest emotional drive. "Quiet City" should be heard again.

Romantic Symphony Again

Howard Hanson's "Romantic" Symphony, which followed the Copland piece, is a work for which the writer, after repeated hearings and with the best will in the world, can muster no enthusiasm. It has, of course, its moments of broad and effective melody, the orchestration is colorful and expertly handled, there are trenchant and dramatic rhythmic figures. Mr. Hanson has excellent material, but it is what he does with that material, the development of his ideas, which sounds hopelessly derivative and unimaginative.

There were several opprotunities to hear this symphony last season and, being quite obviously convinced of its worth, Koussevitzky presents it to his public again for reconsideration. Personally I dislike it. But what would we think of a conductor who did not maintain his own faith in the face of any amount of journalistic mutterings and disaffection? And so with all heart, we say—more power to him!

After the intermission came three popular Wagner selections: the Overture to "The Flying Dutchman," the Prelude to "Parsifal" and the Overture to "Tannhaeuser" in the Dresden version. There was more of tonal splendor than intellectual subtlety in Koussevitzky's "Dutchman." Perhaps a faster tempo at the outset and greater emphasis of nuance would have changed this. The "Parsifal" Prelude did not achieve a true mystical atmosphere until the middle part describing the suffering of Amfortas. Similarly in the "Tannhaeuser" Overture, the pious song of the pilgrims, with which it opens, was less convincing than the unholy fascinations of the Venusberg and the struggle and final reconciliation of the two elements, which is the essence of the entire opera.

MUSIC

SYMPHONY HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Aaron Copland's "Quiet City" was played for the first time in Boston yesterday at the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The work stood first on a program that contained the "Romantic" Symphony by Howard Hanson and three Wagner excerpts: the Overture to "The Flying Dutchman," the Prelude to "Parsifal" and the Overture to "Tannhaeuser." Serge Koussevitzky conducted.

Taken as a whole this was one of the least effective programs Mr. Koussevitzky has given us. Copland's new music proved well worth hearing, but the Symphony of Hanson, with all its sentimental lushness, is second rate and the operatic excerpts proved a rather indigestible chunk of Wagner. Do not misunderstand. As a devout Wagnerian this reviewer always welcomes his music, but two overtures and a prelude lumped together are scarcely an artistic choice, especially when the solemnities of "Parsifal" are squeezed between the virile fury of "The Flying Dutchman" and "Tannhaeuser."

"Quiet City" is oddly but very cleverly scored for solo English horn and trumpet against a background of massed strings. The combination is fascinating. It produces some lovely sounds. Mr. Copland's writing is neat, spare, comfortably between harmonic richness and dissonance. "Quiet City" is, of course, a concert work, intended to be heard for and by itself, although the material is based on themes used by Mr. Copland in his incidental score (for trumpet, clarinet, saxophone and piano) to the stage play "Quiet City," by Irwin Shaw.

Yet Mr. Copland wrote what is essentially theatre music, a score of mood and feeling. Not that it fails to make effect as an abstract symphonic piece, because it does to a degree. But through its course one had the constant impression of how superbly it could emphasize the action of a play.

Mr. Copland would surely have been pleased had he been present yesterday to hear the virtuoso performance and brilliant interpretation. Mr. Speyer's playing of the English horn, and that of Mr. Mager in the trumpet part, were splendid.

Little can be written of Hanson's "Romantic" Symphony not already put in print. The score is competently written for large orchestra, but trivial in ideas and notably derivative. Sentimentality rules most of the time, reminding you of Vernon Blackburn's declaration that a tune is a melody become overripe. Due to Mr. Koussevitzky's intense reading, and the fine caliber of the orchestra, the Symphony was given a specious brilliance, another example of music being made to sound better than it actually is.

Of the Wagner group, this reviewer enjoyed best the "Parsifal" Prelude. The two overtures were fussed over and blown up almost to the point of distortion.

Mr. Koussevitzky received a gracious and prolonged welcome when he first appeared upon the stage, no doubt in recognition of his newly acquired American citizenship. The orchestra rose to greet him and the audience applauded even more than usual. The tribute was appropriate, and served to emphasize the esteem with which he is regarded.

Next week the program will be: Benjamin Britten: Variations for strings on a Theme by Frank Bridge; Schumann: Fourth Symphony (Mr. Koussevitzfiy has substituted the Fourth for the Schumann Second announced in the program book); Manuel de Falla: Suite from "Love the Sorcerer"; Strauss: "Till Eulenspiegel."—C. W. D.

ONITOR, BOSTON, THURSDAY, APRIL 17, 1941

From Aaron Copland

119

THE BOSTON HERALD, SATURDAY, APRIL 19, 1941

Copeland, Hanson and Wagener Compositions on Afternoon Symphony Program

MUSIC

Symphony Concert

By ALEXANDER WILLIAMS

The 22nd concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting, was given yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. The program was as follows:

Copeland..."Quiet City" for trumpet, English horn and strings
Hanson.....Symphony No. 2, "Romantic"
Wagner..Overture to "The Flying Dutchman"
Wagner.....Prelude to "Parsifal"
Wagner.....Overture to "Tannhaeuser"

We have had a good deal of music this season that has sought to express the spirit of a city—Vaughn-Williams's London Symphony, Delius's Paris and now Mr. Copeland's "Quiet City," which is presumably New York. It is a short piece and was derived from some music he wrote for a play by Irwin Shaw. The curious combination of solo trumpet and English horn (ably played yesterday by Messrs. Mager and Speyer) and a string orchestra is employed.

Mr. Copeland seems in his recent work to have turned his back on his earliest music which so aggressively eschewed charm. "Quiet City" has an idea behind it and some originality. Yet it remains a not very effective piece as it stands. It would be interesting to know if the composer honestly feels that he has clearly conveyed what he had in mind. To use the piece seemed amorphous.

If Mr. Koussevitzky is affectionately termed the "godfather of American music," certainly Howard Hanson is its enthusiastic big brother. No one is more energetic than he in whooping up the cause, introducing the other members of the family and praising them behind their backs to unsympathetic strangers. Unfortunately the big brother himself has found time to compose on a large scale, and in view of all that he has done for American music it would naturally be a gross discourtesy not to play his works frequently.

Again unfortunately, they do not merit amiable treatment. The 2nd Symphony, to be sure, is not nearly so bad as the 3rd, which Mr. Koussevitzky so earnestly fostered last season. On the other hand it is not, except for the first movement, much good. If Mr. Hanson had a spark of originality or even his fair share of that much despised quality, cleverness, a lot could be forgiven him.

In a sense he has cleverness, but it consists in his being able to copy pretty faithfully. With the 2nd Symphony he has spiked one of our best critical guns by himself pointing to it as "romantic," but that doesn't make the music any fresher.

The first movement is effective and not uninteresting in a by-gone manner. The second movement seemed to us very stale and tedious. The last movement is the poorest of all, because it depends for its climax on hauling back material from the first, material moreover that had been amply worked over at the time.

"Why then the applause?" asks the reader who liked the symphony. There are two reasons for this. First, the music is juicy and easy on the ear harmonically, for all its loudness. Second, the work received a surpassingly fine and intense performance under Mr. Koussevitzky's direction. Do but life the veils of conventional harmony and inspired interpretation, however, and you will behold the faded imitation within.

Every so often Mr. Koussevitzky must say to himself: "Come, it is high time I played some Wagner. I'll just give up half a program to him next week. That ought to satisfy them." Maybe this practice does succeed in pacifying the Wagnerians, who as a rule have short tempers. Yesterday we must confess that, far fro mrighting the balance of a dull concert, the Wagner items plunged it further into boredom.

We cannot put our finger on just what it is about Mr. Koussevitzky's interpretations of Wagner that fails to be electrifying. Possibly it is that he tries too hard, that he is impatient with the music for not being more brilliant and as a result coaxes it out of shape.

Incidentally why may we not hear the Venusberg music alone? It can be so played, even though the beginning is a little awkward. It was, of course, written in Wagner's mature style and subsequently by him pinned on to that absurd Salvation Army hymn that does such laborious duty in "Tannhaeuser."

Next week let us hope for better luck with the following program: Benjamin Britten's Variations for string orchestra on a theme of Frank Bridge; Schumann's 4th Symphony (not the 2nd as announced); Falla's Suite from "El Amor Brujo"; Strauss's "Till Eulenspiegel."

SYMPHONY CONCERT

Koussevitzky Leads Two American Works in His First Concert As An American Citizen

By EDWARD DOWNES

An even warmer welcome than usual greeted Serge Koussevitzky as he stepped upon the platform of Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon: as one man the orchestra rose to its feet and the tapping of violin bows was drowned by clapping and stamping from the audience. For this was a Koussevitzky debut—the first concert which he has conducted in this country as a full-fledged American citizen. The applause was not only for Koussevitzky, the musician, whom Boston has long affectionately regarded as its own, it was also for Koussevitzky, the man, who has now taken the last symbolic step proclaiming his own affection and faith in the country and the community of his adoption.

The first half of the program was given over, appropriately enough, to American compositions, and it reminded us once more that Koussevitzky has not waited for his final papers to make himself the leading conductor of our country in the protection and encouragement of American composers.

Aaron Copland's new short piece, "Quiet City," had not been heard in Boston. It was arranged last summer at "Tanglewood" (another link to Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony) from incidental music to the play, "Quiet City," by Irwin Shaw, and had its first concert performance last January in New York. The play, writes Mr. Copland, "called for music evocative of the nostalgia and inner distress of a society profoundly aware of its own insecurity," and was a realistic fantasy on the night-thoughts of many different kinds of people in a great city.

It is indeed imaginative and evocative music, but nevertheless simple, straightforward and to the point. How much emotion Mr. Copland intended to put into it, or how much emotion it actually conveys, is difficult to say at first hearing. The initial impression was more of fantasy than feeling, but that has happened before with music which later revealed the strongest emotional drive. "Quiet City" should be heard again.

Romantic Symphony Again

Howard Hanson's "Romantic" Symphony, which followed the Copland piece, is a work for which the writer, after repeated hearings and with the best will in the world, can muster no enthusiasm. It has, of course, its moments of broad and effective melody, the orchestration is colorful and expertly handled, there are trenchant and dramatic rhythmic figures. Mr. Hanson has excellent material, but it is what he does with that material, the development of his ideas, which sounds hopelessly derivative and unimaginative.

There were several opprotunities to hear this symphony last season and, being quite obviously convinced of its worth, Koussevitzky presents it to his public again for reconsideration. Personally I dislike it. But what would we think of a conductor who did not maintain his own faith in the face of any amount of journalistic mutterings and disaffection? And so with all heart, we say—more power to him!

After the intermission came three popular Wagner selections: the Overture to "The Flying Dutchman," the Prelude to "Parsifal" and the Overture to "Tannhaeuser" in the Dresden version. There was more of tonal splendor than intellectual subtlety in Koussevitzky's "Dutchman." Perhaps a faster tempo at the outset and greater emphasis of nuance would have changed this. The "Parsifal" Prelude did not achieve a true mystical atmosphere until the middle part describing the suffering of Amfortas. Similarly in the "Tannhaeuser" Overture, the pious song of the pilgrims, with which it opens, was less convincing than the unholy fascinations of the Venusberg and the struggle and final reconciliation of the two elements, which is the essence of the entire opera.

MUSIC

SYMPHONY HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Aaron Copland's "Quiet City" was played for the first time in Boston yesterday at the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The work stood first on a program that contained the "Romantic" Symphony by Howard Hanson and three Wagner excerpts: the Overture to "The Flying Dutchman," the Prelude to "Parsifal" and the Overture to "Tannhaeuser." Serge Koussevitzky conducted.

Taken as a whole this was one of the least effective programs Mr. Koussevitzky has given us. Copland's new music proved well worth hearing, but the Symphony of Hanson, with all its sentimental lushness, is second rate and the operatic excerpts proved a rather indigestible chunk of Wagner. Do not misunderstand. As a devout Wagnerian this reviewer always welcomes his music, but two overtures and a prelude lumped together are scarcely an artistic choice, especially when the solemnities of "Parsifal" are squeezed between the virile fury of "The Flying Dutchman" and "Tannhaeuser."

"Quiet City" is oddly but very cleverly scored for solo English horn and trumpet against a background of massed strings. The combination is fascinating. It produces some lovely sounds. Mr. Copland's writing is neat, spare, comfortably between harmonic richness and dissonance. "Quiet City" is, of course, a concert work, intended to be heard for and by itself, although the material is based on themes used by Mr. Copland in his incidental score (for trumpet, clarinet, saxophone and piano) to the stage play "Quiet City," by Irwin Shaw.

Yet Mr. Copland wrote what is essentially theatre music, a score of mood and feeling. Not that it fails to make effect as an abstract symphonic piece, because it does to a degree. But through its course one had the constant impression of how superbly it could emphasize the action of a play.

Mr. Copland would surely have been pleased had he been present yesterday to hear the virtuoso performance and brilliant interpretation. Mr. Speyer's playing of the English horn, and that of Mr. Mager in the trumpet part, were splendid.

Little can be written of Hanson's "Romantic" Symphony not already put in print. The score is competently written for large orchestra, but trivial in ideas and notably derivative. Sentimentality rules most of the time, reminding you of Vernon Blackburn's declaration that a tune is a melody become overripe. Due to Mr. Koussevitzky's intense reading, and the fine caliber of the orchestra, the Symphony was given a specious brilliance, another example of music being made to sound better than it actually is.

Of the Wagner group, this reviewer enjoyed best the "Parsifal" Prelude. The two overtures were fussed over and blown up almost to the point of distortion.

Mr. Koussevitzky received a gracious and prolonged welcome when he first appeared upon the stage, no doubt in recognition of his newly acquired American citizenship. The orchestra rose to greet him and the audience applauded even more than usual. The tribute was appropriate, and served to emphasize the esteem with which he is regarded.

Next week the program will be: Benjamin Britten: Variations for strings on a Theme by Frank Bridge; Schumann: Fourth Symphony (Mr. Koussevitzfiy has substituted the Fourth for the Schumann Second announced in the program book); Manuel de Falla: Suite from "Love the Sorcerer"; Strauss: "Till Eulenspiegel."—C. W. D.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN
APR 17 1941

120

Sworn in as U. S. Citizens

(Wide World Photo)

Photo shows Dr Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, with Mrs Koussevitzky, left, and Miss Olga Naoumoff, his niece, in the Federal building at Boston, where all three yesterday were sworn in as United States citizens. This picture was taken when their final papers were filed in February.

Boston, April 16—(AP)—Dr Serge Koussevitzky, internationally known conductor and leader of the Boston Symphony orchestra, became an American citizen today.

He was sworn in by Federal Court Judge George C. Sweeney, along with his wife, Natalie, and his secretary Olga Naoumoff.

Koussevitzky, a native of Russia took out his first papers in 1935 and his final papers only recently. At that time he said it was a "great day" for him as this was the only country left in which there was freedom of expression in music and art.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
APR 17 1941

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT
APR 17 1941

This Clipping From
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
APR 17 1941

BROOKLINE, MASS
CHRONICLE
4/17/41

Koussevitzkys Become American Citizens

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky of Brookline, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra; his wife, Natalie, and their niece, Olga Naumoff, became American citizens Wednesday. The oath was administered the family by Arthur B. Grandison, naturalization examiner, before Judge George C. Sweeney at the Federal Building in Boston. Natives of Russia, Dr. and Mrs. Koussevitzky have been in this country seventeen years and residents of Brookline for ten years. Dr. Koussevitzky was greatly impressed by the oath of citizenship and after the ceremony remarked: "I am sorry I didn't do this earlier."

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN
APR 17 1941

This Clipping From MEMPHIS, TENN.
PRESS-SCIMITAR
APR 15 1941

This Clipping From
NEWARK, N. J.
STAR-LEDGER
APR 18 1941

This Clipping From
WILLIMANTIC, CONN.
CHRONICLE
APR 17 1941

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
APR 17 1941

This Clipping From PORTLAND, ME.
PRESS HERALD
APR 17 1941

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
NEWS
APR 17 1941

This Clipping From
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD TIMES
APR 17 1941

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
APR 17 1941

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN
APR 16 1941

This Clipping From DETROIT, MICH.
TIMES
APR 18 1941

This Clipping From
KEENE, N. H.
SENTINEL
APR 17 1941

DR. KOUSSEVITZKY FAMOUS ORCHESTRA CONDUCTOR, SURPRISED

Musicians at Rehearsal Rise As One Man and Play "Star Spangled Banner"

Boston, Apr. 17, (AP)—Unlike the leader of a schoolboy orchestra, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, world-famous conductor of the Boston symphony, generally knows what to expect when he raises his baton at rehearsal

But he had a surprise today, for the big 100-per cent-American-Citizen orchestra rose as one man and played the Star Spangled Banner.

Koussevitzky, a native of Russia, his wife and his secretary, became American citizens yesterday.

The noted leader told his men that he regretted he had not become a citizen sooner, but that his ultimate decision to give up Russian and forego French citizenship, for which he was eligible, in favor of becoming an American arose from slowly-arrived-at, deep conviction. He said he hoped he would be a good

THIS CLIPPING FROM NASHUA, N. H.
TELEGRAPH
APR 17 1941

THIS CLIPPING FROM MONTPELIER, VT.
ARGUS
APR 17 1941

This Clipping From
NEWPORT, R. I.
NEWS
APR 17 1941

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
APR 18 1941

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
APR 18 1941

THIS CLIPPING FROM
GREENFIELD, MASS.
RECORDER-GAZETTE
APR 17 1941

This Clipping From
ST. ALBANS, VT.
MESSENGER
APR 17 1941

This Clipping From
SANTA MONICA, CAL.
OUTLOOK
APR 18 1941

Farmer-Musician Gets Job As Caretaker

LENOX, Mass. (U.P.) — On the theory, perhaps, that music hath charms to soothe the eglantine, Conductor Serge Koussevitzky of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has hired Robert Richardson, a cornet-playing farmer, as superintendent of his Lenox estate.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT
APR 26 1941

New Citizens

It is pleasant to welcome still another distinguished foreigner, Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, into the United States citizenship that has just been granted him. The occasion is a reminder of the value of the privileges that most of us have won by the mere accident of being born in this country. Too often, we take our precious prerogatives as a matter of course, forgetting, until perhaps the example of a man like Dr. Koussevitsky reminds us, how fortunate we are to have been born where we were.

But Dr. Koussevitsky's citizenship is also a reminder of the debt the United States owes to those who have come to this country and have won the privilege that he has just gained. There are truly great names on the list, but for every Koussevitsky or Einstein or Pons, there are thousands of newly made citizens whose lives may win them no distinction but who have none the less valuable contributions to make to the country of their adoption. The country is what it is today very largely because of the immigrants of the past, and those who are being admitted into citizenship now will help to frame the future.

As a group, there is no more loyal body in the country than those who have sought and won their citizenship. They often know better than do the native-born citizens what this country means, for they have lived in other lands where the ideals that the United States stands for are not tolerated. They become citizens, eager to share in the responsiblities as well as the privileges of citizenship. Their enthusiasm is one resource that the country cannot afford not to utilize.

This Clipping From
DAYTON, OHIO
SUNDAY JOURNAL HERALD
APR 27 1941

Koussevitzky Becomes American

By Pierre Key

NEW YORK, April 26.

What a privilege, nowadays, to be living in these United States. A still greater privilege is in being a citizen, even though it be attained through the naturalization route.

Serge Koussevitzky became one of us a few days ago. He voiced a fitting appreciation upon receiving his final papers, in Boston. The next day, at the start of rehearsal, the greeting given him by his players must have brought tears to his eyes. Rising from their seats they played "The Star Spangled Banner."

Koussevitzky has made the Boston symphony one of the greatest of world symphony orchestras; in the opinion of many it is the world's first orchestra.

The way was prepared for him by Pierre Monteux, his predecessor, but it was Koussevitzky who did the moulding, the smoothing, the integration of the various qualities of his men which finally has made them so responsive to the Koussevitzky demands.

Like Sir Thomas Beecham's, the Koussevitzky gestures are frequently puzzling to one seated in the auditorium. His frequent tapping of his right foot can be annoying to some. But he gets results, which is the thing that counts.

dozen other leaders. It probably won't help the playing qualities of this orchestra; but it the other big-money artists are Dorothy Maynor, Grace Mo

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
APR 17 1941

'Star Spangled Banner' Played As Surprise for Koussevitzky

Special to THE EAGLE

BOSTON.—Serge Koussevitzky stepped to the podium in Symphony Hall at rehearsal this morning, his face beaming with pleasure. Of course he knew what the Boston Symphony Orchestra would play.

The 100-per-cent-American-citizen orchestra however knew better and crossed him up. As one man, the 110 musicians rose and played "The Star Spangled Banner."

Koussevitzky, a native of Russia, his wife, Mrs. Natalie Koussevitzky and his secretary, became American citizens yesterday. The secretary is Miss Olga Naumoff, Mrs. Koussevitzky's niece.

The noted leader told his men that he regretted he had not become a citizen sooner, but that his ultimate decision to give up Russian and forego French citizenship, for which he was eligible, in favor of becoming an American arose from slowly-arrived-at deep conviction. He said he hoped he would be a good citizen.

Dr. and Mrs. Koussevitzky and Miss Naumoff became citizens at a special session of the naturalization court conducted by Federal Judge George C. Sweeney.

Maxwell Lamb, chief examiner of the Naturalization Bureau, moved for the admission. Arthur B. Grandison, clerk of the court, administered the oath and George E. Judd, manager of the orchestra, and J. M. Burk, of the orchestra staff, were the witnesses. The special session was held at the request of Mrs. Koussevitzky, who appeared in court with a cane. Dr. and Mrs. Koussevitzky and Miss Naumoff were born in Russia.

Dr. Koussevitzky was so impressed with the words of the oath of allegiance to the United States that he requested a copy of it. Mr. Grandison gave him the typed copy that he had read in administering

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN
APR 17 1941

Sworn in as U. S. Citizens

(Wide World Photo)

Photo shows Dr Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, with Mrs Koussevitzky, left, and Miss Olga Naoumoff, his niece, in the Federal building at Boston, where all three yesterday were sworn in as United States citizens. This picture was taken when their final papers were filed in February.

Boston, April 16—(AP)—Dr Serge Koussevitzky, internationally known conductor and leader of the Boston Symphony orchestra, became an American citizen today.

He was sworn in by Federal Court Judge George C. Sweeney, along with his wife, Natalie, and his secretary Olga Naoumoff.

Koussevitzky, a native of Russia took out his first papers in 1935 and his final papers only recently. At that time he said it was a "great day" for him as this was the only country left in which there was freedom of expression in music and art.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
APR 17 1941

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT
APR 17 1941

This Clipping From
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
APR 17 1941

This Clipping From
KEENE, N. H.
SENTINEL
APR 17 1941

DR. KOUSSEVITZKY FAMOUS ORCHESTRA CONDUCTOR, SURPRISED

Musicians at Rehearsal Rise As One Man and Play "Star Spangled Banner"

Boston, Apr. 17, (AP)—Unlike the leader of a schoolboy orchestra, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, world-famous conductor of the Boston symphony, generally knows what to expect when he raises his baton at rehearsal.

But he had a surprise today, for the big 100-per cent-American-Citizen orchestra rose as one man and played the Star Spangled Banner.

Koussevitzky, a native of Russia, his wife and his secretary, became American citizens yesterday.

The noted leader told his men that he regretted he had not become a citizen sooner, but that his ultimate decision to give up Russian and forego French citizenship, for which he was eligible, in favor of becoming an American arose from slowly-arrived-at, deep conviction. He said he hoped he would be a good

THIS CLIPPING FROM NASHUA, N. H.
TELEGRAPH
APR 17 1941

THIS CLIPPING FROM MONTPELIER, VT.
ARGUS
APR 17 1941

This Clipping From
NEWPORT, R. I.
NEWS
APR 17 1941

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
APR 18 1941

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
APR 18 1941

THIS CLIPPING FROM
GREENFIELD, MASS.
RECORDER-GAZETTE
APR 17 1941

This Clipping From
ST. ALBANS, VT.
MESSENGER
APR 17 1941

This Clipping From
SANTA MONICA, CAL.
OUTLOOK
APR 18 1941

Farmer-Musician Gets Job As Caretaker

LENOX, Mass. (U.P.) — On the theory, perhaps, that music hath charms to soothe the eglantine, Conductor Serge Koussevitzky of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has hired Robert Richardson, a cornet-playing farmer, as superintendent of his Lenox estate.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT
APR 26 1941

New Citizens

It is pleasant to welcome still another distinguished foreigner, Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, into the United States citizenship that has just been granted him. The occasion is a reminder of the value of the privileges that most of us have won by the mere accident of being born in this country. Too often, we take our precious prerogatives as a matter of course, forgetting, until perhaps the example of a man like Dr. Koussevitsky reminds us, how fortunate we are to have been born where we were.

But Dr. Koussevitsky's citizenship is also a reminder of the debt the United States owes to those who have come to this country and have won the privilege that he has just gained. There are truly great names on the list, but for every Koussevitsky or Einstein or Pons, there are thousands of newly made citizens whose lives may win them no distinction but who have none the less valuable contributions to make to the country of their adoption. The country is what it is today very largely because of the immigrants of the past, and those who are being admitted into citizenship now will help to frame the future.

As a group, there is no more loyal body in the country than those who have sought and won their citizenship. They often know better than do the native-born citizens what this country means, for they have lived in other lands where the ideals that the United States stands for are not tolerated. They become citizens, eager to share in the responsibilities as well as the privileges of citizenship. Their enthusiasm is one resource that the country cannot afford not to utilize.

BROOKLINE, MASS
CHRONICLE
4/17/41

Koussevitzkys Become American Citizens

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky of Brookline, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra; his wife, Natalie, and their niece, Olga Naumoff, became American citizens Wednesday. The oath was administered the family by Arthur B. Grandison, naturalization examiner, before Judge George C. Sweeney at the Federal Building in Boston. Natives of Russia, Dr. and Mrs. Koussevitzky have been in this country seventeen years and residents of Brookline for ten years. Dr. Koussevitzky was greatly impressed by the oath of citizenship and after the ceremony remarked: "I am sorry I didn't do this earlier."

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN
APR 17 1941

This Clipping From MEMPHIS, TENN.
PRESS-SCIMITAR
APR 15 1941

This Clipping From
NEWARK, N. J.
STAR-LEDGER
APR 18 1941

This Clipping From
WILLIMANTIC, CONN.
CHRONICLE
APR 17 1941

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
APR 17 1941

This Clipping From
PORTLAND, ME.
PRESS HERALD
APR 17 1941

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
NEWS
APR 17 1941

This Clipping From
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD TIMES
APR 17 1941

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
APR 17 1941

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN
APR 16 1941

This Clipping From DETROIT, MICH.
TIMES
APR 18 1941

This Clipping From
DAYTON, OHIO
SUNDAY JOURNAL HERALD
APR 27 1941

Koussevitzky Becomes American

By Pierre Key

NEW YORK, April 26.

What a privilege, nowadays, to be living in these United States. A still greater privilege is in being a citizen, even though it be attained through the naturalization route.

Serge Koussevitzky became one of us a few days ago. He voiced a fitting appreciation upon receiving his final papers, in Boston. The next day, at the start of rehearsal, the greeting given him by his players must have brought tears to his eyes. Rising from their seats they played "The Star Spangled Banner."

Koussevitzky has made the Boston symphony one of the greatest of world symphony orchestras; in the opinion of many it is the world's first orchestra.

The way was prepared for him by Pierre Monteux, his predecessor, but it was Koussevitzky who did the moulding, the smoothing, the integration of the various qualities of his men which finally has made them so responsive to the Koussevitzky demands.

Like Sir Thomas Beecham's, the Koussevitzky gestures are frequently puzzling to one seated in the auditorium. His frequent tapping of his right foot can be annoying to some. But he gets results, which is the thing that counts.

dozen other leaders. It probably won't help the playing qualities of this orchestra; but [illegible] the other big-money artists are Dorothy Maynor, Grace Mo[illegible]

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
APR 17 1941

'Star Spangled Banner' Played As Surprise for Koussevitzky

Special to THE EAGLE

BOSTON.—Serge Koussevitzky stepped to the podium in Symphony Hall at rehearsal this morning, his face beaming with pleasure. Of course he knew what the Boston Symphony Orchestra would play.

The 100-per-cent-American-citizen orchestra however knew better and crossed him up. As one man, the 110 musicians rose and played "The Star Spangled Banner."

Koussevitzky, a native of Russia, his wife, Mrs. Natalie Koussevitzky and his secretary, became American citizens yesterday. The secretary is Miss Olga Naumoff, Mrs. Koussevitzky's niece.

The noted leader told his men that he regretted he had not become a citizen sooner, but that his ultimate decision to give up Russian and forego French citizenship, for which he was eligible, in favor of becoming an American arose from slowly-arrived-at deep conviction. He said he hoped he would be a good citizen.

Dr. and Mrs. Koussevitzky and Miss Naumoff became citizens at a special session of the naturalization court conducted by Federal Judge George C. Sweeney.

Maxwell Lamb, chief examiner of the Naturalization Bureau, moved for the admission. Arthur B. Grandison, clerk of the court, administered the oath and George E. Judd, manager of the orchestra, and J. M. Burk, of the orchestra staff, were the witnesses. The special session was held at the request of Mrs. Koussevitzky, who appeared in court with a cane. Dr. and Mrs. Koussevitzky and Miss Naumoff were born in Russia.

Dr. Koussevitzky was so impressed with the words of the oath of allegiance to the United States that he requested a copy of it. Mr. Grandison gave him the typed copy that he had read in administering the oath.

Camp Edwards' Soldier Band To Follow Koussevitzky Baton

News of defense and military activity in New England today:

Patriot—Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, goes to Camp Edwards to lead the soldiers' band of the 180th Field Artillery in a special concert, May 6.

Battleground—Most of Cape Cod is becoming a pseudo battleground. Extensive unit and regimental maneuvers are taking place every day now, spreading farther and farther abroad from Camp Edwards. Old "salts" on the Cape are getting used to seeing soldiers anywhere at almost any time of day.

Doings at Dennis — A typical defense day on the Cape: The first battalion of the 180th Field Artillery (450 men) are conducting a tactical problem of defense to prevent the landing of "enemy" invaders along the shore between Dennis and Truro. Last night the troops bivouacked at Dennis, leaving at dawn today to take positions among the dunes and rolling hills.

Defense School—With an eye to military defense, the Maine Senate has enacted an emergency measure authorizing incorporation of the Maine Vocational School.

The measure, which listed several prominent Maine citizens as incorporators, was passed yesterday in anticipation of receipt of Federal funds.

The bill would establish a school to train young persons in defense activities.

At Groton—Keel-laying ceremonies for the submarine Albacore were held at the Electric Boat Company's shipyard yesterday in Groton, Conn.

Navy and company officials watched the placing of welded plates on blocks in what will be the amidships section of the submersible.

Six other submarines are now under construction on ways at the plant and still two others are being made ready for delivery.

New Commander in Boston—The War Department announces at Washington assignment of Brig. Gen. Kenneth I. Blood to command Boston Harbor Defenses at Fort Banks. He now is in the office of the Chief of Coast Artillery in the capital.

Koussevitsky to Lead an Army Band

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will make a trip this Tuesday to Camp Edwards and while there will lead the 180th Field Artillery Band in Weber's Overture to "Oberon." This band, whose regular leader is Chester Whiting of Malden, is considered the best in the camp. This will obviously be an amusing experience all round, both for the members of the band and the new American citizen, Serge Koussevitzky.

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE
APR 22 1941

Koussevitzky Will Lead Band In Camp Concert

CAMP EDWARDS, April 22 (INS) — Serge Koussevitzky, world famous conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, today was scheduled to lead the 180th Field Artillery Regimental Band in an exhibition concert, May 6.

This was arranged by Warrant Officer Chester Whiting, Medford, leader of the band, a friend of Koussevitzky.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
APR 28 1941

Dr. Koussevitzky To Visit Edwards

BOSTON.—Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will inspect Camp Edwards, May 6, and conduct the 180th Field Artillery Band.

He is to be the guest of Col. John J. Agnew, commanding officer of the regiment. Accompanying the conductor will be his wife and niece, Miss Olga Naumoff, who with him took their oaths as American citizens several days ago.

Dr. Koussevitzky and his party will be escorted to Camp Edwards by Lt. Robert W. Stewart. They will have lunch with Gen. Roger W. Eckfeldt, commander of the 26th Division, followed by inspection of the hospital service club and the camp area in general. A division band parade will be held in the conductor's honor. Col. Agnew will be host at dinner. The concert at which Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct will be held at 7.30 in the evening.

THE NEWS OF THE WORLD OF MUSIC

By WARREN STOREY SMITH

The Concerts

This Friday and Saturday evening, under the direction of Hugh Ross, the New England College Festival will take place at Durham, N. H. The now ubiquitous Mozart will be represented on Saturday by the Mass in F.

The Symphony Orchestra's Monday evening and Tuesday afternoon series concludes this week with Mozart's Symphony in G minor, Sibelius' Second and Prokofieff's "Lieutenant Kije" Suite. On Friday afternoon and Saturday evening Dr. Koussevitzky will introduce to us Aaron Copland's "Quiet City" Suite, and the balance of the programme falls to Hanson's "Romantic" Symphony and the Overtures to Wagner's "Flying Dutchman," "Parsifal" and "Tannhaeuser."

Berkshire Festival

The season of music festivals is about to begin and each mail brings some preliminary announcement. The nine concerts of the Boston Symphony's Berkshire Festival, which extend from July 31 through Aug. 17, will more than ever before deserve their title. Besides the inevitable standard symphonies and other repertory pieces, which form the backbone of the Tanglewood concerts, Dr. Koussevitzky will present two major choral works, Mozart's Requiem and Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis." Room will be found for the shorter "Chorus No. 10" of the Brazilian Villa-Lobos, heard here a few weeks ago, and the rarely heard "Sirens" of Debussy with women's chorus, will be performed along with the other two Nocturnes.

It is right that the Berkshire Festival should honor the American composer. Certain years, one piece has sufficed. Next August there will come Hanson's "Romantic" Symphony; Copland's Suite, "Quiet City"; Walter Piston's "The Incredible Flutist" and possibly the Violin Concerto of Samuel Barber. Another Violin Concerto, that of Paul Hindemith, is certain to be heard and another novelty for the festival will be the Fifth Symphony of Shostakovitch.

THIS CLIPPING FROM QUINCY, MASS.
PATRIOT LEDGER
APR 11 1941

Voted Contra-Bass Soloist To Appear in O.E.S. Concert

LUDWIG JUHT

Quincy chapter, O. E. S., is presenting a concert of high merit Wednesday evening in Quincy Masonic temple. Mrs. Hildur C. Sipprelle, worthy matron, long identified with Boston musical circles, has secured the aid of Ludwig Juht to assist in arranging the program.

Mr. Juht is a noted contra-bass soloist with the Boston Symphony orchestra. His contra-bass is a genuine Francesco Ruggeri (Cermona) built in 1679 and was owned by the royal house of Windsor in England at one time.

Assisting artists are Amanda Juht, soprano; Norman Soderstjerna, violinist, Sophia Stromberg, accompanist, and Mrs. Agnes Ruggles Allen, organist of the chapter. The concert will start promptly at 8:15 o'clock.

"Who's Who Today," 1937 says, "Ludwig Juht, contra-bass soloist, composer and teacher in Boston, was born in Estonia, 1894. Studied trumpet with his father, Karel Juht; flute, trombine and clarinet; contra-bass with Prof. Bech, St. Petersburg, Russia, and Prof. P. Juon, Berlin. Played wind instruments in various orchestras. Contra-bass soloist, 1916-18, Helsingfors Symphony orchestra; member and soloist, Estonia Symphony orchestra, 1918-20; Estonia Opera, 1927-30. Concerts in London, Berlin, Paris, Helsingfors, Estonia, Latvia, Litvonia, Germany, 1918-34. Professor of contra-bass, conservatory, Latvia, 1932-34. Member Boston Symphony Orchestra since 1934; soloist, playing "Concerto for Double-Bass," Dr. Koussevitzky composer and director, 1935. Radio and concert appearances, New York and New England. Recital with Prof. A. Lemba for birthday festival of President of Estonia, 1935. Transcribed for contra-bass, compositions by Mozart, Beethoven, Bach, Bruch, Eccles, Corelli."

SATURDAY EVE. POST
PHILA., PA.
5/5/41

"3249 West Forty-third Street and tune in the Boston Symphony."

Monitor apr 22/41

Camp Edwards' Soldier Band To Follow Koussevitzky Baton

News of defense and military activity in New England today:

Patriot—Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, goes to Camp Edwards to lead the soldiers' band of the 180th Field Artillery in a special concert, May 6.

Battleground—Most of Cape Cod is becoming a pseudo battleground. Extensive unit and regimental maneuvers are taking place every day now, spreading farther and farther abroad from Camp Edwards. Old "salts" on the Cape are getting used to seeing soldiers anywhere at almost any time of day.

Doings at Dennis—A typical defense day on the Cape: The first battalion of the 180th Field Artillery (450 men) are conducting a tactical problem of defense to prevent the landing of "enemy" invaders along the shore between Dennis and Truro. Last night the troops bivouacked at Dennis, leaving at dawn today to take positions among the dunes and rolling hills.

Defense School—With an eye to military defense, the Maine Senate has enacted an emergency measure authorizing incorporation of the Maine Vocational School.

The measure, which listed several prominent Maine citizens as incorporators, was passed yesterday in anticipation of receipt of Federal funds.

The bill would establish a school to train young persons in defense activities.

At Groton—Keel-laying ceremonies for the submarine Albacore were held at the Electric Boat Company's shipyard yesterday in Groton, Conn.

Navy and company officials watched the placing of welded plates on blocks in what will be the amidships section of the submersible.

Six other submarines are now under construction on ways at the plant and still two others are being made ready for delivery.

New Commander in Boston—The War Department announces at Washington assignment of Brig. Gen. Kenneth I. Blood to command Boston Harbor Defenses at Fort Banks. He now is in the office of the Chief of Coast Artillery in the capital.

Koussevitsky to Lead an Army Band

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will make a trip this Tuesday to Camp Edwards and while there will lead the 180th Field Artillery Band in Weber's Overture to "Oberon." This band, whose regular leader is Chester Whiting of Malden, is considered the best in the camp. This will obviously be an amusing experience all round, both for the members of the band and the new American citizen, Serge Koussevitzky.

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE
APR 22 1941

Koussevitzky Will Lead Band In Camp Concert

CAMP EDWARDS, April 22 (INS) — Serge Koussevitzky, world famous conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, today was scheduled to lead the 180th Field Artillery Regimental Band in an exhibition concert, May 6.

This was arranged by Warrant Officer Chester Whiting, Medford, leader of the band, a friend of Koussevitzky.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
APR 28 1941

Dr. Koussevitzky To Visit Edwards

BOSTON.—Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will inspect Camp Edwards, May 6, and conduct the 180th Field Artillery Band.

He is to be the guest of Col. John J. Agnew, commanding officer of the regiment. Accompanying the conductor will be his wife and niece, Miss Olga Naumoff, who with him took their oaths as American citizens several days ago.

Dr. Koussevitzky and his party will be escorted to Camp Edwards by Lt. Robert W. Stewart. They will have lunch with Gen. Roger W. Eckfeldt, commander of the 26th Division, followed by inspection of the hospital service club and the camp area in general. A division band parade will be held in the conductor's honor. Col. Agnew will be host at dinner. The concert at which Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct will be held at 7.3 in the evening.

THE NEWS OF THE WORLD OF MUSIC

By WARREN STOREY SMITH

The Concerts

This Friday and Saturday evening, under the direction of Hugh Ross, the New England College Festival will take place at Durham, N. H. The now ubiquitous Mozart will be represented on Saturday by the Mass in F.

The Symphony Orchestra's Monday evening and Tuesday afternoon series concludes this week with Mozart's Symphony in G minor, Sibelius' Second and Prokofieff's "Lieutenant Kije" Suite. On Friday afternoo and Saturday evening Dr. Koussevitzky will introduce to us Aaron Copl "Quiet City" Suite, and the balance of the programme falls to H "Romantic" Symphony and the Overtures to Wagner's "Flyi "Parsifal" and "Tannhaeuser."

Berkshire Festival

The season of music festivals is about t some preliminary announcement. The ni phony's Berkshire Festival, which ext will more than ever before dese standard symphonies and other of the Tanglewood concerts works, Mozart's Requie be found for the shorte heard here a few weeks with women's chorus, will b

It is right that the Be composer. Certain years, one come Hanson's "Romantic" Sy Walter Piston's "The Incredible of Samuel Barber. Another Violi certain to be heard and another nove Symphony of Shostakovitch.

THIS CLIPPING FROM QUINCY, MASS.
PATRIOT LEDGER
APR 11 1941

121

Voted Contra-Bass Soloist To Appear in O.E.S. Concert

LUDWIG JUHT

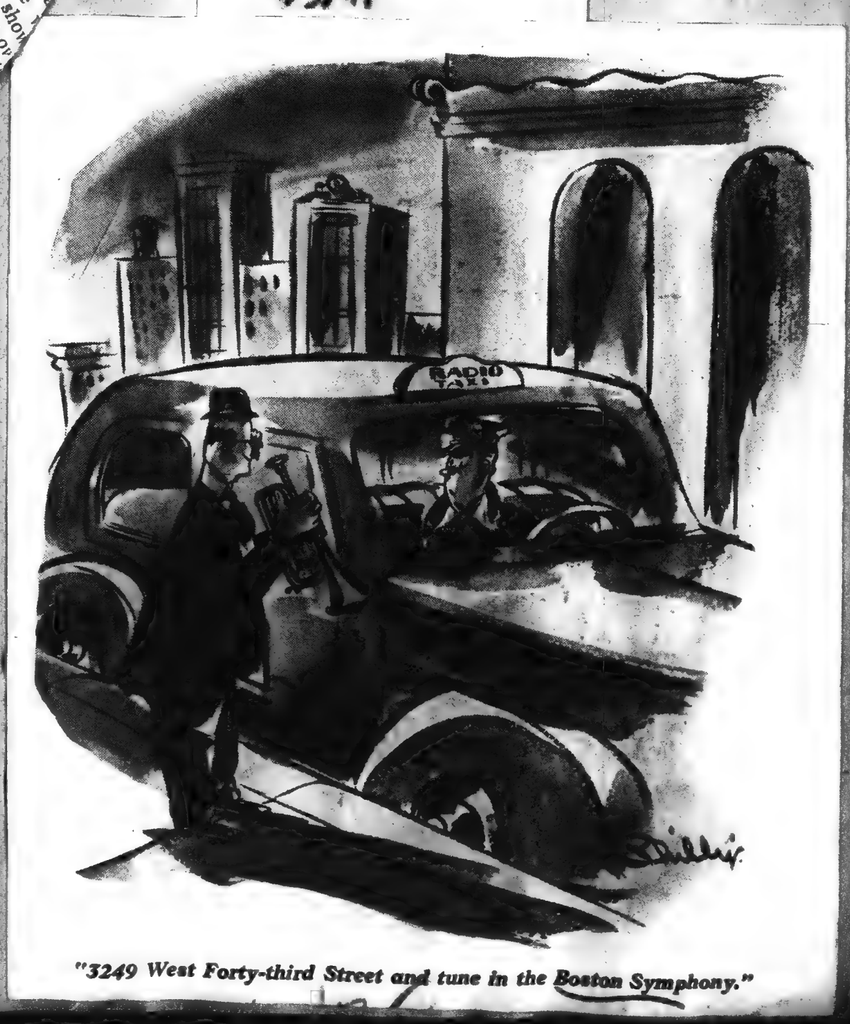
Quincy chapter, O. E. S., is presenting a concert of high merit Wednesday evening in Quincy Masonic temple. Mrs. Hildur C. Sipprelle, worthy matron, long identified with Boston musical circles, has secured the aid of Ludwig Juht to assist in arranging the program.

Mr. Juht is a noted contra-bass soloist with the Boston Symphony orchestra. His contra-bass is a genuine Francesco Ruggeri (Cermona) built in 1679 and was owned by the royal house of Windsor in England at one time.

Assisting artists are Amanda Juht, soprano; Norman Sodersjerna, violinist, Sophia Stromberg, accompanist, and Mrs. Agnes Ruggles Allen, organist of the chapter. The concert will start promptly at 8:15 o'clock.

"Who's Who Today," 1937 says, "Ludwig Juht, contra-bass soloist, composer and teacher in Boston, was born in Estonia, 1894. Studied trumpet with his father, Karel Juht; flute, trombine and clarinet; contra-bass with Prof. Bech, St. Petersburg, Russia, and Prof. P. Juon, Berlin. Played wind instruments in various orchestras. Contra-bass soloist, 1916-18, Helsingfors Symphony orchestra; member and soloist, Estonia Symphony orchestra, 1918-20; Estonia Opera, 1927-30. Concerts in London, Berlin, Paris, Helsingfors, Estonia, Latvia, Litvonia, Germany, 1918-34. Professor of contra-bass, conservatory, Latvia, 1932-34. Member Boston Symphony Orchestra since 1934; soloist, playing "Concerto for Double-Bass," Dr. Koussevitzky composer and director, 1935. Radio and concert appearances, New York and New England. Recital with Prof. A. Lemba for birthday festival of President of Estonia, 1935. Transcribed for contra-bass, compositions by Mozart, Beethoven, Bach, Bruch, Eccles, Corelli."

SATURDAY EVE. POST
PHILA., PA.
5/5/41



"3249 West Forty-third Street and tune in the Boston Symphony."

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR, BOSTON, MONDAY, APRIL 7, 1941

Maurice Seymour

Hertha Glaz

Contralto soloist in the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Pension Fund Concert performance of Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis" at Symphony Hall, Sunday afternoon, April 27.

MISSA SOLEMNIS TO BE REVIVED

Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis" will be revived after three years and performed at the Spring Pension Fund Concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Sunday afternoon, April 27th.

Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the combined forces of the Boston Symphony orchestra, the Harvard Glee club and the Radcliffe Choral Society (prepared by G. Wallace Woodworth) and the following quartette of soloists: Rose Dirman, soprano; Hertha Glaz, contralto; John Priebe, tenor; Julius Huehn, bass.

The "Missa Solemnis" occupied Beethoven intermittently from 1818 to the middle of 1823, the period in which he was at the height of his powers. It was designed to commemorate the installation of his aristocratic pupil, Rudolph, Archduke of Austria, as

THIS CLIPPING FROM
LOWELL, MASS.
SUNDAY TELEGRAM
APR 27 1941

MISSA SOLEMNIS AT TOMORROW'S CONCERT

Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis" will be performed at Symphony Hall tomorrow afternoon at 3:30. At this, the Spring Pension Fund concert of the Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky will conduct. on an extended stage, the orchestra, the combined forces of the Harvard Glee club and the Radcliffe Choral Society (prepared by G. Wallace Woodworth), and the following quartette of soloists: Rose Dirman, soprano; Hertha Glaz, contralto; John Friebe, tenor; Julius Huehn, bass. The performance of the Mass will be prefaced by the Organ Prelude and Fugue of Bach in C major, which Dr. Koussevitzky has transcribed for wind instruments, and which will have its first performances here as interpreted by the transcriber.

BOSTON TRAVELER, MONDAY, APRIL 7, 1941

CONTRALTO—Bertha Glaz, who will appear as soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis" Sunday afternoon, April 27, for the orchestra's Pension Fund Concert.

'Missa Solemnis' Revived For Pension Fund Concert

Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis" will be revived after three years and performed at the Spring Pension Fund Concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Sunday afternoon, April 27th.

Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the combined forces of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society (prepared by G. Wallace Woodworth) and the following quartette of soloists: Rose Dirman, soprano; Hertha Glaz, contralto; John Priebe, tenor; Julius Huehn, bass.

The "Missa Solemnis" occupied Beethoven intermittently from 1818 to the middle of 1823, the period in which he was at the height of his powers. It was designed to commemorate the installation of his aristocratic pupil, Rudolph, Archduke of Austria, as an Archbishop. So engrossed was the composer with the implications of his text, that the ceremony was long past before it was finished, and the "Missa Solemnis" became a moving work of art exceeding the confines of any church ritual.

Before the performance of the Mass, Serge Koussevitzky will conduct his transcription for wind orchestra of Bach's Organ Prelude and Fugue in C, No. 17. This will be the first hearing in Boston of the transcription under his own direction.

This Clipping From
LOWELL, MASS.
LEADER
APR 9 - 1941

Soloists for the performance of Beethoven's "Missa Solemnists" for the benefit of the pension fund of the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Sunday, April 27, will be Rose Dirman, soprano; Hertha Glaz, contralto; John Priebe, tenor, and Julius Huehn, bass.

Delar

Julius Huehn

Baritone soloist in the performance of Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis" to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the Pension Fund, Sunday afternoon, April 27, in Symphony Hall.

BOSTON EVENING TRANSCRIPT, SATURDAY, APRIL 19, 1941

BEETHOVEN MISSA SOLEMNIS APRIL 27

Three of the soloists who will take part in the Boston Symphony Orchestra performance of Beethoven's Missa Solemnis on Sunday, April 27, for the benefit of the Orchestra's Pension Fund. They are, left to right: Rose Dirman, soprano; Julius Huehn, baritone of the Metropolitan Opera, and Hertha Glatz, soprano. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct.

This Clipping From TULSA, OKLA.
WORLD
APR 13 1941

ANOTHER WONDERFUL work of Beethoven has had something of a compromise recording, but unavoidably this time. The "Missa Solemnis" is so tremendous that a performance solely for recording purposes would be economically unjustifiable; and the intricate problems of getting this mighty music for orchestra, chorus, and solo voices on discs have been solved with surprising success in Victor sets M-758 (first half, $6.50) and M-758 (second half, $6.50). Sergei Koussevitzky's dramatic yet devout interpretation is a truly great one; the Boston Symphony plays superbly, as it always does; and the chorus, made up of the Harvard Glee club and Radclyffe Choral society, sings magnificently. The soloists do not compare with those of Toscanini's broadcast just before New Years', but they are competent.

Victor held this recording up for almost two years, probably dubious of the financial risk; but there were so many demands for its release—mine was one of them—that it has been made available. And every one who wants to know the Himalayan peaks of music should buy it if he can, not only for the rich experience of coming to know the music better, but to encourage the recording of other great large-scale works.

THE BOSTON HERALD, SUNDAY, APRIL 13, 1941

Rose Dirman, contralto soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis," which will be presented at Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, April 27, for the benefit of the orchestra's pension fund.

123

This Clipping From
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
MERCURY
APR 12 1941

Radcliffe girls are shown examining some of the ancient church music such as Beethoven studied in preparation for composing his Mass. The page is dated 1563. So primitive is the system of notation that the girls, expert at reading present notation, were stumped. Left to right: Grace Anne Hubbard, '42, Patricia Hubbard, '43, Belmont; Margaret Burk, '41, Boston; Mabel Bouldry, '42, Roslindale. Miss Burk is majoring in music. She is the daughter of John N. Burk, who compiles the historical and descriptive notes for the programs of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

* * *

Radcliffe Group to Sing At Boston Symphony Concert

An extra fillip was given Wednesday to the busy and exciting hours which are being experienced this month by the Radcliffe Choral Society in preparation for their share in the Pension Fund concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to be given on Sunday afternoon, April 27. To these young singers, joined with the Harvard Glee Club, is to fall the honor of taking part with the orchestra in the performance of one of the greatest and most difficult of all musical masterpieces — Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis."

Already informed in a general way concerning the ancient historical background of the five-part sacred cantata which the mass represents musically, a group of the girls got down to some particulars. They were shown materials from an exhibit in Symphony Hall which traces the course of more than 2,000 years of musical development leading up to Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis."

First, the girls hovered over a page of music from an old choir book. The date 1563 was on the leaf, which was of parchment, two feet wide and 2½ feet long. A good square inch was the size of each musical note, and the letters of the sacred text were three inches high. From such pages, the girls learned, an entire choir would sing in olden times—one choir book on a lofty lecturn sufficing for all. The Radcliffe choristers, who must excell in reading music, were however unable to give voice to the ancient notes. But they were impressed by the fact that the old system indicated by the page represented the nearest to perfection which musicians up to that time had achieved in about 500 years of experimentation after development of the musical staff to fix the pitch of notes.

Then came examples of the transition from hand-wrought to printed notation. These consisted of two volumes from early publishers of music—one dated Venice, 1611; one, Paris, 1671. The covers were of weed bound in heavy leather, with metal reinforcements. Although the books were large by today's standards, the pages were only about one quarter the size of the parchment first examined. Such volumes as these, it was pointed out, preserved the ancient sacred melodies which Beethoven studied in preparing himself to compose the "Missa Solemnis." Among his papers had been found the memorandum, "In order to write true church music . . . look through all of the monastic church chorals."

When the Radcliffe Choral Society rehearses the masterwork, in innumerable training sessions with G. Wallace Woodworth, they see only the vocal staves, and a piano accompaniment. This week they were shown the full orchestral score which Serge Koussevitzky will use in the actual performance. The music for each section of the women's choir and the men's, music for four soloists, and for every instrument of the orchestra, was laid out in stave piled on stave. They realized what a long way not only music, but the means of noting it down, had come from the time of the old parchment, up to that massive orchestral score!

The young singers had a new visioning of all that lay behind the pages of music over which they are toiling for the performance of April 27 and an impetus to return to the task with a new reverence.

THE BOSTON HERALD, SUNDAY, APRIL 27, 1941

Symphony in Final Concerts

Missa Solemnis At Symphony Hall Today

Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis" was the music of the dedicatory program of Symphony Hall in 1900. Serge Koussevitzky revived it at the Centennial of the Composer in 1927 and has since performed it on two occasions at Symphony Hall. Beethoven's dramatic and deeply moving score will again be heard. The performances will take place in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, April 27. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the choruses of Harvard and Radcliffe in conjunction with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and the following quartet of soloists will assist: Rose Dirman, Soprano; Hertha Olas, Contralto; John Priebe, Tenor; Julius Huehn, Bass.

The "Missa Solemnis" occupied Beethoven for nearly four years while he was also at work on his Ninth Symphony. Vincent d'Indy bespoke a general opinion when he wrote "We stand in the presence of one of the greatest masterworks in the realm of music." As the full implication of the text absorbed him, the composer transcended the bounds and the letter of churchly ritual.

As a prefatory number Mr. Koussevitzky will give the first Boston hearing as interpreted by himself of his own transcription for wind orchestra of Bach's Organ Prelude and Fugue in G, No. 17.

Hertha Glaz, contralto soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra's presentation of Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis" to be given this afternoon at Symphony Hall for the orchestra's Pension Fund.

This Clipping From
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
MERCURY
APR 28 1941

This Clipping From
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD TIMES
APR 28 1941

Mass Sung For Pension Fund

A performance of Beethoven's Missa Solemnis—such as was given this glorious work by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society yesterday afternoon under the final direction of Serge Koussevitzky—should not pass without some small tribute even from a city like ours whence attendance is possible.

The mere sight of the enlarged stage, tiered with young women and young men singers; the necessary rearrangement of instruments (massing richly the double basses close on the right), the slow-progressed entry of Dr. Koussevitzky; the four soloists taking their places well among the first line of singers—all these infrequent arrangements had an excitement of their own.

Then the Kyrie entrances—brilliant with the women, low half voice from the men, gave an opening thrill. That this was not felt throughout the mass in no way diminishes the laurels of the singers; theirs was a supreme crescendo, an endurance through taxing vocalism. If neither chorus nor soloists communicated emotion, they were presenting a masterpiece of strong technical demands.

There were passages of delicate beauty from the instruments; fine blendings of soloists with the singers behind them—Rose Dirman, soprano; Hertha Glaz, a contralto of clear effective timbre for such work rather than warmth; the sometimes tight, sometimes lovely tenor of John Priebe; above all, the towering Julius Huehn who made the one interpretive offering in his share of the Agnus Dei. Only to rejoice in his noble tones was worth all the effort to attend.

In whole, one was held and reverently excited, though an earlier performance in recollection seems of greater perfection, of more sympathetic interpretation.

The recently-performed transcription by Dr. Koussevitzky of a Bach Prelude and Fugue for woodwinds preceded the mass. The Prelude seemed this time over-pierced by the brasses; as before, the Fugue came to the ear in more integrity of organ technique—quite remarkable in its similitude and will always be a welcome number, giving Boston a feeling of superiority over Philadelphia in such arrangements.

A.C.B.

SYMPHONY OF VOICES

(Photos by Wide World)

Expressive music might well be the title for these excellent action pictures of Serge Koussevitzky during rehearsal of the Harvard and Radcliffe music clubs. Of him it has frequently been said that he can get more out of untrained voices than any other conductor. He welds a chorus into one voice and the results are as remarkable as those achieved by his orchestra.

Music Clubs To Present Beethoven's Solemn Mass

By TOM O'SULLIVAN

This piece was intended originally as a tribute to the Radcliffe Choral Society and the Harvard Glee Club and was to have been an enlarged advance notice of their concert Sunday afternoon with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Symphony Hall. The event, an annual one, will benefit the orchestra's pension fund.

The college clubs will present Beethoven's difficult "Missa Solemnis" and it was around this work and the accomplishments of the musical groups during the year that this story was to have been written.

ENTHUSIATIC NOTE

But, if now and then an enthusiastic note about Serge Koussevitzky, the orchestra's eminent conductor, creeps in we ask the indulgence of the reader. Such is the personality of the man that it is difficut, even in this case, to make him secondary. As far as we are concerned he stole the show again.

This story dates back to a few days ago when Koussevitzky came to Harvard's Sever Hall to lead one of the last rehearsals of the piece. It was a warm spring night and the Harvard yard was a pleasant spot. Students ambled slowly along the hallowed walks, seemingly reluctant to get to their studies.

But here and there groups of boys aand girls hurried along to Sever Hall and their conversation turned, not on the season or its promise, but to the fact that Koussevitzky was to direct them that night. They had been rehearsing for months, and tonight they were to hear the "master's" verdict of their efforts.

Hardly had the last student been seated in the small amphitheater, whose chairs have been scarred through close association with generations of Harvard men, than a slight, gray-haired beaming man entered and made his way rapidly down the steep aisle to the platform. It was Koussevitzky and the ovation he received from the more than 250 eager young students must have thrilled him more than the acclaim of a concert audience. The applause rose and fell for two minutes and it filled the hall, swept out the open windows into the yard and then carried on to Harvard square to be lost in the din of the traffic.

PLEASED SMILE

A pleased smile crossed his face as he bowed courtly to the right, to the center, then to the left. That formality dispensed with, he was at once ready for the task at hand.

"It is very warm," he said hesitantly, awaiting the reaction of his audience which was not long in coming in the form of a whoop of delight and more cheers, then he doffed his suit coat and was prepared to go to work. And work he did for the next two hours, pausing but briefly a few times to mop his perspiring face with his handkerchief.

Much of the preliminary work had already been done in the preceding months by Prof. G. Wallace Woodworth, director of both musical clubs and chairman of the music department at Harvard. Long hours of arduous, painstaking effort had gone into these rehearsals for this, one of the most difficult of pieces, and Koussevitzky at once showed his pleasure at the results.

Frequently during the night his "Good," "Wonderful," rose above the massed voices. But, while he was quick to praise, he was even quicker to criticize, for that was his role.

At times the basses threatened to drown out the others and he had to caution them to be "Softer, softer." Then, again, the tenors did not have the power or the expression that he frequently wanted and he must stop, explain what he had in mind, then go back over the number.

"VERY TIRED"

As if to explain what he thought might have been interpreted by his young singers as a bit of perversity when he halted them at one point and grimaced in marked dislike for the singing, he said, "I am very tired. We, the orchestra, rehearsed for three hours this afternoon and it was a most difficult piece."

Always he tempered his criticism with a note of humor, a bit of pleasantry. The expression in parts of the "Credo" were not to his liking and he explained his ideas thusly:

"To make beauty you must think beautiful things. Think beauty and the results will be beautiful. Do not strain. Let the notes come out naturally." When he got the desired results on the next try his reward to them was a big smile and a "See, what did I tell you? You were all thinking of beautiful things."

Frequently, during the night, he took the tenors to task but he was quick to sense, at one point, that he was singling them out too often. It was during the "Credo" number when the tenors must burst forth in a pean of joy at the news of the Lord's resurrection.

His audience laughed as he halted this number.

"Really, gentlemen," the conductor said to the tenors, "that was wonderful. It was really wonderful. But it must be extraordinary. Extraordinary exultation." The next try, evidently, was just that because he beamed his praise in the direction of this group, then continued with the number.

ACCOMPANISTS

Below his stand two students "filled in" for the orchestra and supplied the accompaniment for the chorus. Unerringly they furnished the exact touch and returned time and again to the proper place in the music as a number had to be gone o'er. Blushing we are forced to admit that for some inexplicable reason we failed to learn their names. They deserve more than this anonymous bit of mention for their efforts.

Sunday afternoon, in the sacred precincts of Symphony Hall, the results of all these rehearsals will bear fruit at the formal concert. No student is downhearted that all these months of labor will end with but one presentation of this number which they have so painstakingly practised all this time. During the year the Harvard Glee Club has given 33 concerts in many parts of the country. But all of these appearances have been only preliminary to Sunday.

The students have faithfully attended rehearsals, for absence from more than one quarter of the three-from the club. And attendance cards which must be turned in are the only guide the leaders follow in determining who shall sing. The concert is a fitting conclusion to their work.

(Monday: The new boathouse on the Charles and the ambitious plans of the sponsor's for this summer's activities.)

Symphony, Harvard, Radcliffe Give Pension Fund Concert

THE BOSTON HERALD, MONDAY, APRIL 28, 1941

MUSIC

Pension Fund Concert

By ALEXANDER WILLIAMS

The 91st pension fund concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was given yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. Serge Koussevitzky conducted the orchestra and the choruses of the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society, who had been trained by G. Wallace Woodworth. The soloists were Rose Dirman, soprano; Hertha Glaz, contralto; John Priebe, tenor; Julius Huehn, bass. The program was as follows:

Prelude and Fugue for organ in C major No. 17, transcribed for wind orchestra by Serge Koussevitzky.....Bach
Missa Solemnis in D major, Op. 123 Beethoven

Even though it added to the length of a fairly heavy afternoon's program, we were glad of the opportunity to hear Mr. Koussevitzky's arrangement of the Bach Prelude and Fugue again. As a matter of fact it ought to be played all over the country as a model of how this sort of thing should be done. There are quite a number of musicians, notably Mr. Stokowski, who should be tied down to a chair and made to listen to this transcription. After this experience we trust that they would have the good taste to go home and burn their own efforts in the same field.

The point is, merely, that Mr. Koussevitzky has had the humility to think of Bach first and his own glory as transcriber second. His arrangement for wind instruments gives one the feeling of the beautifully voiced organs of Bach's time. These have been admirably reconstructed in recent years in this country, and there is no longer much excuse, beyond that of wanton musical sport, to dress Bach's organ music in outlandish orchestration. Mr. Koussevitzky has a wonderful ear for sonorities and has consequently and unerringly made an enchanting orchestral version of this by no means famous Prelude and Fugue.

We regret to report that there does not seem to be a real popular demand for performances of the Missa Solemnis. There were quantities of empty seats yesterday and that, too, with the first seven rows taken out for the enlarged stage. It must be painful for Mr. Koussevitzky and all the others concerned in the performance, which demands so much work in preparation, to realize how little the music itself appears to attract the general public. It is not the length that is the trouble, for we will wager that either the B minor Mass or the St. Matthew Passion would fill the hall in a twinkling. To complain of trends in public taste is not our concern here, and we shall leave it at that. But the whole problem is one that could do with some serious study.

As to the performance itself yesterday, it left something to be desired. The best aspect of it was the quartet of soloists. It is all important in the Missa Solemnis that these four singers should be good not only individually, but also as an ensemble. Miss Dirman and Miss Glaz and Messrs. Priebe and Huehn seemed to us to have carried out their roles yesterday exceedingly well. Indeed, we should be willing to say that they are, taken as a whole, the best soloists in the Mass that we happen to have heard.

On the other hand we have certainly heard the Boston Symphony play and the Harvard and Radcliffe choruses sing better than they did frequently yesterday afternoon. It was not, then, quite as good a performance as we heard here a few years ago. It was, of course, creditable, but just not inspiring.

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR, BOSTON, MONDAY, APRIL 28, 1941

'Missa' Solemnis at Symphony Hall

Beethoven Music Heard At Pension Fund Concert

By L. A. Sloper

Beethoven's great Missa Solemnis was presented yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall at the ninety-first Pension Fund Concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Dr. Koussevitzky conducting. The orchestra was assisted by the Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society, of which G. Wallace Woodworth is conductor; by a quartet consisting of Rose Dirman, soprano, Hertha Glaz, contralto, John Priebe, tenor, and Julius Huehn, bass, and by E. Power Biggs, organist.

The Mass was preceded by the first performance under Dr. Koussevitzky's baton of his transcription for wind instruments of Bach's Prelude and Fugue in C major (No. 17), which was introduced in March by Mr. Burgin. The repetition confirmed the original impression that this is a faithful representation of Bach's musical thought. It was interesting to observe that under Dr. Koussevitzky's direction the transcription took on rather more emotional quality than it had revealed under Mr. Burgin's. There was noticeable, too, at times, a less than complete balance among the instrumental voices; due probably in part to the difference in body of tone of the several instruments, and partly to the fact that for the choral concert the orchestra was seated on a level. Nevertheless, the transcription is admirable for its clarity and for its restraint.

The performance of the Mass was particularly welcome at this time for its strong affirmation of faith in the ultimate establishment of a rightly founded peace. There is a special significance for today in the Agnus Dei, with its sudden military incursion overcome in the end by spiritual power.

The performance as a whole possessed a noble exaltation, as a performance of this work always must when it enlists, in addition to a devoted conductor and a superb orchestra, the aid of the fresh and eager young voices so ably prepared by Mr. Woodworth. If there were moments when, in response to the demands of the composer, the tone was a little strained, these were more than compensated for by the general vigor and ardor of the singing.

The soloists were all adequate to their tasks—which, in view of the difficulty of the music, is high praise. On the whole, the distaff side of the quartet had rather the better of it. Miss Dirman and Miss Glaz were both new to Boston, and both made a good impression. Miss Dirman has a voice of exceptional power, as was almost startlingly demonstrated by the impact of her first "Kyrie," and thereafter she was able to make herself heard above any volume of tone. Miss Glaz, although her voice had at times a hard edge, was free of the tremolo that so often mars the work of contraltos in this type of work, and she sang with great expressiveness. Mr. Huehn and Mr. Priebe sang with their usual competence.

The orchestra of course distinguished itself, and Dr. Koussevitzky directed the ensemble with his invariable enthusiasm. His reading of the score, now well established and familiar, is marked by dramatic power as much as by devotional expression. Both qualities are without doubt inherent in the music.

At the end, the audience, which left many seats vacant, gave an ovation to all concerned in the performance.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN. TIMES
APR 29 1941

Boston Symphony Works Well with College Singers

The Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky presented Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis" with the assistance of the Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society for the 91st Pension Fund Concert at Symphony Hall, Boston, Sunday afternoon.

The soloists were Rose Dirman, soprano, Hertha Glaz, contralto, John Priebe, tenor, and Julius Huehn, bass. The organ part was played by E. Power Biggs.

Throughout the "Missa," the chorus and conductor gave the impression they thoroughly enjoyed working with each other. The result was naturally a brilliant and stirring performance.

Literal Interpretation

Dr. Koussevitzky interpreted the score literally, insisting, especially with the soloists, that each mark of expression should come at its appropriate moment. At the same time he brought out the dynamic and dramatic quality of the sudden changes from fortissimo to piano which are an integral part of the "Missa," and succeeded in preventing these transitions from acquiring an overtheatrical character.

The Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society, trained to a high degree of fluency by their conductor, Prof. G. Wallace Woodworth of Harvard, mastered with ease the many difficult passages in the extreme upper and lower registers. The soprano section of the Radcliffe Choral Society is particularly to be congratulated on the unusually clear and affecting tone they achieved in "Kyrie Eleison" and "Agnus Dei."

Prayer Number Stirring

For the audience the most moving phrase was the concluding "dona nobis pacem" of the "Agnus Dei," marked in the score by Beethoven as a prayer for inner and outward peace. After the joyful introduction of the prayer by the sopranos of the chorus, the orchestra provided an ominous contrast in a succession of warlike drum rolls and trumpet calls. This military background was effectively followed by the double fugal development of the "dona nobis pacem" theme by the sopranos and basses. After the reintroduction of the "Agnus Dei" by the soloists, the chorus and orchestra attained a final majestic statement of the prayer for peace.

Among the other high points in the concert was the intricate and yet clear relationship maintained in Beethoven's involved setting of the introductory "Kyrie Eleison."

In the "Gloria" an unusual sonority and clarity were attained by the chorus and orchestra in the "Gloria in excelsis Deo" and "domine Deus, Rex coelestis" passages. A rather average group of soloists gave an uninspired performance of the "gratias agimus tibi," but made up for this by their singing of the "amen."

Accurate Singing

In the "Credo" the majestic first theme and the exciting development by chorus and orchestra of the "sedet ad dexterum Patris" were particularly noteworthy. The "Et vitam venturi," often called the most difficult passage in all choral music, was sung accurately and will a full and easy tone.

The orchestral "Praeludium," violin obbligato intended by Beethoven to accompany the elevation of the Host, was well and sensitively done.

The sincerity of this performance was in large part due to the unusually keen and sympathetic relationship that existed between chorus, orchestra and conductor, and to their capable and musicianly interpretation of one of the great works of choral literature.

As an introduction to the concert Dr. Koussevitzky offered an excellent rendition of his setting of Bach's Organ Prelude and Fugue in C (No. 17) for wind instruments.

J. ... Jr.

PRESENT MASS OF BEETHOVEN

Symphony Plays in Aid of Pension Fund

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

In aid of its pension fund, the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday afternoon presented Beethoven's Missa Solemnis. Again, the Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society served as chorus and the solo singers were Rose Dirman, soprano; Hertha Glaz, contralto; John Priebe, tenor, and Julius Huehn, bass. Dr. Koussevitzky's transcription for wind orchestra of Bach's Organ Prelude and Fugue in C major, No. 17, which received its first performance at a pair of symphony concerts a few weeks ago with Mr. Burgin conducting, preceded the mass.

Even with a greatly enlarged stage, there were still empty seats in Symphony Hall yesterday. No longer is Beethoven's much debated composition an unfamiliar experience here. Revived by Dr. Koussevitzky for the Beethoven Festival of 1927, it was performed at a pension fund concert in the spring of 1938 and repeated at a pair of symphony concerts the following December. Much of the music is hard going for all concerned, and the work can never have the general appeal of the B minor mass of Bach.

Because these two are the most celebrated concert versions of the mass, comparison between them seems inevitable. With Bach, and quite naturally, the chorus is the centre of interest, with Beethoven it is the orchestra. Like Schumann's orchestration, Beethoven's vocal writing is by no means all inept and unsatisfactory. It is sometimes impressive, sometimes highly imaginative, sometimes exciting. But the most treasurable portions of the Missa Solemnis are such things as the introduction, the two interludes in the gloria and, above all, the ineffably beautiful prelude to the benedictus.

There was another reason for this reaction to the work yesterday. The orchestra was the Boston Symphony; the

GLOBE—MONDAY, APRIL 28, 1941

MUSIC

SYMPHONY HALL

"Missa Solemnis"

Great art is a light of hope and faith in this darkening world. Such was the thought recurring through the afternoon as a superb performance of Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis" traversed its course at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon. So long as there are free people to sing and play the "Missa Solemnis," the B minor Mass of Bach, the "St. Matthew Passion" and other great choral-orchestral works one could mention, the race is not consigned to irretrievable barbarism.

Beethoven's majestic expression of religious feeling was presented for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's pension fund. Serge Koussevitzky conducted. The choruses were the Radcliffe Choral Society and the Harvard Glee Club, who had been trained by G. Wallace Woodworth. The four soloists were Rose Dirman, soprano; Hertha Glaz, contralto; John Priebe, tenor, and Julius Huehn, bass. E. Power Biggs was the organist.

Most in the large audience must have realized what the performance represented in devoted hard work, and in the singular musical resources which it is the blessed good fortune of Boston to enjoy. Those who may have been hearing the "Missa Solemnis" for the first time must also have recognized instinctively its gigantic stature, its phenomenal intensity. Both its grandeur and the more modest beauty of the quieter pages exert a humbling influence upon people who listen with both their ears and hearts. The mighty affirmations of the Gloria and Credo are a vast embodiment of human faith and hope. So, too, is there an indescribable rapture in those moments when the voices first enter at the beginning of "Et Incarnatus Est" and the Sanctus.

The "Missa Solemnis" is of so extreme and consistent difficulty that only a great orchestra, more than adequate soloists and carefully prepared choruses can cope successfully with it. That yesterday's performance was more moving than printed words can indicate is sufficient acknowledgment of the efforts of all.

Small matters, of the rounding of a phrase, a pianissimo too soft to be audible, may be set down as shortcomings in the chorus. The most exacting may claim that an ff in the score produced more volume than pure resonance. Even that point is not wholly tenable, considering Beethoven's merciless demands for tone and yet more tone.

Miss Dirman's clear, round voice is remarkably well suited to the soprano part. Mr. Priebe was, as usual, most reliable, and Mr. Huehn was satisfactory. Miss Glaz (who, like Miss Dirman, was appearing for the first time with the Boston Symphony, is vocally less equipped for the work. She sang ardently, but many of her tones were hard.

The afternoon began with Mr. Koussevitzky's transcription for wind instruments of the Bach Organ Prelude and Fugue in C major, No. 17, which Richard Burgin had introduced here some weeks ago. Hearing the transcription for the first time under the direction of Mr. Koussevitzky, one was more impressed by its fine qualities. The tone was firm, compact and brilliant. No one could suggest that the transcription is too elaborate or too big for Bach's original ideas. Yet some of the inner voices, especially when entrusted to instruments of relatively small carrying power like the flutes and bassoons, were less clear than was desirable.

The ovation that burst when the "Missa" was finished followed the pattern of all such at pension fund concerts. Mr. Koussevitzky was the object of noisy and continuing applause, and so was Mr. Woodworth, who appeared on the stage. And it goes without saying that choruses, orchestra and soloists were all intended to share it.—C. W. D.

Pension Fund Concert Is Memorable Success

Radcliffe Choral Society, Harvard Singers Aid

The Pension Fund Concert which Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducts each Spring is always an occasion of musical importance, and yesterday afternoon's concert added another memorable one to a distinguished list. The four soloists, Rose Dirman, Hertha Glaz, John Priebe and Julius Huehn, the Boston Symphony Orchestra and members of the Radcliffe Choral Society and the Harvard Glee Club all contributed to a distinctive performance of Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis."

Snapshots in the large audience: Post debutante Cynthia Sortwell chatting with a friend on the steps of Symphony before going in to put on her gown to sing with the Radcliffe group, her becoming tweed hat of the same plaid as her beige and brown coat. . . . Pretty Katharine Putnam, who also sang, joining her mother, Mrs. George Putnam, during intermission, blonde Katharine's dress a nice navy wool, and Mrs. Putnam in a good-looking suit of navy with a straw to match. . . . Mr. and Mrs. F. Murray Forbes Jr., the former Elizabeth Livermore, in an effective suit of cherry and brown. . . . Debutante Helen Knowles, her brown head bare above a jonquil color dress. . . . Mr. and Mrs. G. Wallace Woodworth, the former going to the stage after the concert to acknowledge the roar of applause that greeted him as conductor of the college choruses, and Mrs. Woodworth watching in slim black. . . . Elliott Forbes and his fiancee, Kathleen Allen, the latter in a nice blue tweed coat with a matching hat. . . . Carl Dreyfus Jr. watching from a balcony row. . . . Miss Mary Churchill Small, Mrs. Louis H. Hough (Kate-Alden Gandy), Mr. and Mrs. John Ohl, Faith Kidder, following the score from an orchestra seat. . . . Mr. and Mrs. Edward Ropes, Harold Winchester and many more.

Missa Solemnis

Suggestions for Improving Its Text — Some Misconceptions of Beethoven's Masterpiece

By EDWARD DOWNES

WITH ineffable consistency, there comes to us from Nazi Germany the suggestion that the ritual texts of church music be reformed to fit the spirit of the times (read: "the Nazi spirit"). One of the newer lights of European musical life, Hermann Stephani, speaking in poor Robert Schumann's "Zeitschrift fuer Musik," protests, with enchanting patronage, that Mozart's Requiem Mass, for example, really ought not to fall into disuse, simply because of certain "unmodern" passages in its text! And he points out to us how easily the text of the Mass can be cleansed and "gleichgeschaltet" (co-ordinated) with "modern" Nazi thought. The offending passages, of course, are those which refer to Jewish persons or places: "Deus in Sion," "hic in Jerusalem," "quam olim Abrahae," and so on.

What a pity Dr. Koussevitzky cannot be made to see the Nazi point of view! There would still be time, before tomorrow afternoon's performance of the Beethoven Missa Solemnis, to conceal the Jewish grandparent of the Christian Mass, and correct the text of the Sanctus. "Dominus Deus Sabaoth" could be changed so simply to "Dominus Deus omnipotens" — or at least that is the suggestion of the "Neue Zeitschrift."

Accustomed as we are to such Nazi brain-storms, one pauses amazed at each such revelation of the now ruling German mentality. It is easy to imagine what Beethoven, the hater of tyrants, who hymned the brotherhood of man in his Ninth Symphony, would have thought of the Nazis and all their ideological baggage.

It was with profound humility and deepest Christian faith that Beethoven approached the task of composing his Missa Solemnis. Not only did he study older styles of religious composition, he studied the text of the Mass reverently, in intimate detail, absorbed each nuance of its meaning, observed how that meaning had been expressed by his predecessors, and weighed carefully his own relation to that great body of tradition.

Then, like all great artists before him and after, he built on that tradition, expanding and transforming it, but preserving its essential spirit and thought. Like all great works of art, the Missa Solemnis acquired a life of its own and grew to a size and form, which Beethoven himself could not have predicted and which were a continual surprise to him. The result was a Mass which appears much more unorthodox than it really is.

"From the heart—may it go to the heart" was the moving inscription which Beethoven wrote on the first page, and this line has helped foster the impression that the Missa Solemnis is a strictly personal confession, perhaps more pantheistic than Christian, uttered in a free, fantastic musical language. This is far from true. Both stylistically and formally there is more tradition in the Missa Solemnis than casual listening or superficial study might reveal. From his own sketchbooks we know that Beethoven intended to write "real church music."

Just how literally Beethoven subscribed to church dogma we do not know, nor would it necessarily solve our problem if we did. "Religion and thorough-bass are closed subjects and should be argued no further," he pronounced in one of his semi-serious moods. Though he was born a Catholic, Beethoven was not a churchgoer and religious as he was, he probably interpreted church doctrine according to his own broad lights.

Originally planned to celebrate the elevation of his pupil, Archduke Rudolph, to the Archbishopric of Olmuetz, the Missa Solemnis outgrew its composer's conception, took twice as long to write as he had expected, and was not completed until 1823. Beethoven was in financial need at the time and he tried to get subscribers for the publication of the score at 50 ducats a head. A series of dignified but still rather touching letters to many European courts and prominent musicians brought meager response. Hoping to obtain his support at the court of Weimar, Beethoven wrote to the revered Geheimrat Goethe, whom he had met years before and many of whose poems he set to music. Goethe never even bothered to answer.

Only parts of the Missa Solemnis were performed in Vienna during the composer's lifetime, and it was not until the second half of the 19th century that it began to be widely understood.

Then, as now, it was the drama of the Agnus Dei which attracted most attention and was regarded as being farthest from the spirit of the Catholic mass. Prim scholars from Beethoven's day to ours have rapped him on the knuckles for interpreting the plea, "Dona nobis pacem," as a "prayer for outward as well as inward peace."

The passage is one of the most moving in all religious music. The prayer for peace is interrupted by the approach of drums and trumpets. The orchestra shudders. In rising anxiety the alto solo calls upon the "Lamb of God, who taketh away the sins of the world." The tenor solo echoes her call, "Lamb of God, have pity upon us." The trumpets blare out in full fury and the soprano voice rises to a cry of fright: "Lamb of God, give us, give us peace." Chorus and soli are overwhelmed with terror.

But the danger passes and peace returns. Suddenly the drums and trumpets return with shattering impact. The prayer of the chorus is more fervid till finally a more beatific peace returns, the calm before the final triumphant proclamation of peace has an almost mystic depth and eloquence.

BOSTON EVENING TRANSCRIPT

MUSIC

Beethoven Mass

Moving Performance for Symphony Pension Fund; Huberman in Benefit

By EDWARD DOWNES

A dramatic and deeply moving performance of Beethoven's Missa Solemnis was presented under the baton of Serge Koussevitzky in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon for the Pension Fund of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The giant work requires a gigantic musical apparatus which included, in this case, not only the Boston Symphony (plus organ), but Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society (both prepared by G. Wallace Woodworth), Rose Dirman, soprano, Hertha Glatz, contralto, John Priebe, tenor, and Julius Huehn, bass, as soloists.

Incredibly, the house was not sold out. To judge by the immense and enthusiastic audiences which attend the regular Boston Symphony concerts, one would suppose Boston's musical public to feel an endless debt of gratitude to each of the great corps of musicians who, week for week, year for year, give us so much beauty and make Boston the great musical city that it is. Yet when given the opportunity not only to demonstrate that gratitude, but to hear the Mass which Beethoven himself called his greatest work, and to hear it played by the greatest orchestra in the world, led by one of the greatest of living conductors, we leave close to 200 empty seats. Why? In New York, where it is next to impossible to obtain a seat to a Boston Symphony concert, that performance would probably have filled Carnegie Hall at least twice. It should have filled Symphony Hall three times over.

For it was a great performance. It had the splendor of imagination which fired Beethoven's own thought. It had the grand line and the breadth of utterance which only an overwhelming declaration of faith can command. It had the soul-searching intensity of a composer and a conductor, to whom religion could never be a simple formula. It was replete with the drama inherent in its ancient text.

Musical peaks of the afternoon came in the intimate mystical opening of the Sanctus, the anguished appeal "Miserere nobis" (of the Agnus Dei), where Hertha Glatz distinguished herself, the serene Benedictus, the remendous affirmation of the Credo. But there is little space, nor any useful purpose in a long recital of details.

Chorus versus Orchestra

Though one would deny no single member the privilege of singing the Missa Solemnis, the choral mass used yesterday was sometimes overpowering, even against the Boston Symphony. Considering Beethoven's fiendishly instrumental manner of writing for voices, their performance, for a non-professional chorus, seemed little short of miraculous. And they sang with contagious enjoyment of the music.

Finest of the soloists was Julius Heuhn, whose growth as an artist and singer is more evident each season. Richard Burgin contributed the masterly violin solo of the Sanctus.

The Mass was preceded by Dr. Koussevitzky's own arrangement of a Bach organ prelude and fugue in C which is a model of its kind. Putting Bach before Koussevitzky and a sense of style before a sense of circus, Koussevitzky shames the bombastic perversions of Bach which have long been rampant in our concert halls. His subtle ear for sonorous balances is evident both in the score and his conducting of it.

Huberman in Benefit

Another concert, by an artist who has been too long absent from Boston, was given for the benefit of Pioneers of Palestine last night in Jordan Hall. Bronislaw Huberman, always a great musician, frequently a great executant, was happily in top form.

His program opened with a magnificently virile performance of the Handel D major Sonata for violin. Few are the musicians in any branch of the art who have such a grasp of the Handelian style, such rythmic vitality, such commanding sweep of phrase, such a fluid melodic arch, such a fleet and sensitive wit.

Mr. Huberman has been known to play sadly out of tune, to draw an eccentric bow. One would not have known it last night. The Cesar Franck Sonata, which can have in it so much of the scented boudoir, he played with a directness and strength of emotion which reminded you of the storm and majesty which is in this music too. In spite of tempi which were sometimes too aggressive, the whole was proportioned, the detail apt.

One of the tests of a great musician is his ability to make a hackneyed w exciting wit tricks. This i berman acco ple, straigh ance of the certo. Bruch "Kol Nidri, "Fountain of violinist's ow a Chopin W completed his accompanist kine.

Thirty Works For Festival In Berkshires

Koussevitzky Announces Repertoire for Eighth Annual Summer Series

Thirty works or excerpts have been announced for the nine programs to be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky's direction in the eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. The list for Series A, on Thursday and Saturday nights and Sunday afternoon, July 31, Aug. 2 and 3, is:

Haydn, Symphony in G, No. 88; Beethoven, "Eroica" Symphony; Schubert, Unfinished Symphony; Mendelssohn, "Italian" Symphony; Brahms, Symphony No. 4; Shostakovitch, Symphony No. 5; Debussy, Nuages, Fetes, Sirenes.

Music of Mozart will be featured in Series B, on Thursday and Saturday nights and Sunday afternoons, Aug. 7, 9 and 10. The programs will include:

Mozart, Requiem, Symphonies in C major and A major; Beethoven, Symphony No. 5; Berlioz, "Fantastic" Symphony; Hanson, "Romantic" Symphony; Brahms, Piano concerto No. 2; Debussy, La Mer.

Works to be heard in Series C, on Thursday and Saturday nights and Sunday afternoon, Aug. 14, 16 and 17, are:

Beethoven, Missa Solemnis; Tchaikovsky, Symphony No. 5; Sibelius, Symphony No. 6; Vaughan Williams, A London Symphony; Wagner, Prelude and Liebestod from "Tristan und Isolde," Prelude to "Die Meistersinger"; Strauss, Death and Transfiguration; Barber, Violin concerto; Piston, The Incredible Flutist.

This will be the fifth festival at Tanglewood, the fourth in the Music Shed, and the sixth with the participation of the Boston Symphony. Further information is obtainable either from the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Stockbridge, Mass., or from its New York office at 113 West Fifty-seventh Street.

This Clipping From PORTLAND, ME.
EXPRESS
APR 22 1941

400 Signed Up Early In Drive

Workers in the 1941-42 Portland Community Concert Association membership campaign today began the second day of the week-long drive with 400 members already signed up. 50 more than were reported near the end of the first drive four years ago.

A goal of 1,700 members has been set, according to Mrs. Langdon T. Thaxter, membership chairman, who also announced that the grand prize for turning in the most subscriptions will be admission to a Boston Symphony Orchestra Concert, with transportation paid.

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR,

Art at Symphony Hall

4-29-41

By Dorothy Adlow

A selection of oils and water colors by outstanding painters of New England will be on view in the large gallery at Symphony Hall during the last of the season's regular concerts,

There have been of late several such group displays in town. Yet on two are alike. The latitude is great, preferences vary, and each exhibition seems to favor a certain group or style. Symphony Hall shows breadth and liberalism in its exhibition, an attitude in keeping with its musical programs.

The pictures now on view encompass considerable range. While one or two are dispatched in conventional style, most of them reveal some departure or other. What is evident in the variations is a conviction on the part of the painters. They seem confident of the methods employed; there is a positiveness in pattern and brushstroke. If there is any doubt expressed, it relates to ideas, to the strains and tensions implicit in the modern world.

While such a group working hereabouts a dozen years ago would have painted lyrically, exultantly, we find today that a solemn and sober mood lies over many canvases. The young painters particularly are seeking the appropriate symbol, the pictorial equivalent which will express their apprehension. It is not surprising to find them key down their palettes to foreboding shadows, employ stark contrasts, roughen, or sharpen, or polish surfaces so that there is either a primitive crudity, or a machine-like finish. To whatever extremes they go, they tend to get away from the forms favored in more balanced and pacific teims.

There are, to be sure, in the Symphony Hall exhibition pictures of cheerful mood, and multicolored palette, like the still-life by Yvonne Twining, in which craftsmanship is the primary issue, the canvas by Aimee Lamb, a bit of genre; or Polly Thayer's "Willows,"; or F. L. Spalding's "Dahlias." There is the Riviera scene of Charles Hovey Pepper and the Quebec views by Harold Rotenberg, both interesting for atmospheric quality.

It is the pictures by Peter Paul Dubanewicz, Cary Pickhardt, William H. Littlefield, Philip Malicoat, and Karl Zerbe which promote the mood of meditation. These are all artists who are serious, curious, introspective.

Other exhibitors who add to the breadth of the display are Ture Bengtz, Ruth Perry, Patrick Morgan, Susumu Hirota, Gertrude Fiske, George Marinko. The last is a very gifted artist from Waterbury, Conn., who comes to notice for the first time.

Missa Solemnis

Suggestions for Improving Its Text—Some Misconceptions of Beethoven's Masterpiece

By EDWARD DOWNES

WITH ineffable consistency, there comes to us from Nazi Germany the suggestion that the ritual texts of church music be reformed to fit the spirit of the times (read: "the Nazi spirit"). One of the newer lights of European musical life, Hermann Stephani, speaking in poor Robert Schumann's "Zeitschrift fuer Musik," protests, with enchanting patronage, that Mozart's Requiem Mass, for example, really ought not to fall into disuse, simply because of certain "unmodern" passages in its text! And he points out to us how easily the text of the Mass can be cleansed and "gleichgeschaltet" (co-ordinated) with "modern" Nazi thought. The offending passages, of course, are those which refer to Jewish persons or places: "Deus in Sion," "hic in Jerusalem," "quam olim Abrahae," and so on.

What a pity Dr. Koussevitzky cannot be made to see the Nazi point of view! There would still be time, before tomorrow afternoon's performance of the Beethoven Missa Solemnis, to conceal the Jewish grandparent of the Christian Mass, and correct the text of the Sanctus. "Dominus Deus Sabaoth" could be changed so simply to "Dominus Deus omnipotens"—or at least that is the suggestion of the "Neue Zeitschrift."

Accustomed as we are to such Nazi brain-storms, one pauses amazed at each such revelation of the now ruling German mentality. It is easy to imagine what Beethoven, the hater of tyrants, who hymned the brotherhood of man in his Ninth Symphony, would have thought of the Nazis and all their ideological baggage.

It was with profound humility and deepest Christian faith that Beethoven approached the task of composing his Missa Solemnis. Not only did he study older styles of religious composition, he studied the text of the Mass reverently, in intimate detail, absorbed each nuance of its meaning, observed how that meaning had been expressed by his predecessors, and weighed carefully his own relation to that great body of tradition.

Then, like all great artists before him and after, he built on that tradition, expanding and transforming it, but preserving its essential spirit and thought. Like all great works of art, the Missa Solemnis acquired a life of its own and grew to a size and form, which Beethoven himself could not have predicted and which were a continual surprise to him. The result was a Mass which appears much more unorthodox than it really is.

"From the heart—may it go to the heart" was the moving inscription which Beethoven wrote on the first page, and this line has helped foster the impression that the Missa Solemnis is a strictly personal confession, perhaps more pantheistic than Christian, uttered in a free, fantastic musical language. This is far from true. Both stylistically and formally there is more tradition in the Missa Solemnis than casual listening or superficial study might reveal. From his own sketchbooks we know that Beethoven intended to write "real church music."

Just how literally Beethoven subscribed to church dogma we do not know, nor would it necessarily solve our problem if we did. "Religion and thorough-bass are closed subjects and should be argued no further," he pronounced in one of his semi-serious moods. Though he was born a Catholic, Beethoven was not a churchgoer and religious as he was, he probably interpreted church doctrine according to his own broad lights.

Originally planned to celebrate the elevation of his pupil, Archduke Rudolph, to the Archbishopric of Olmuetz, the Missa Solemnis outgrew its composer's conception, took twice as long to write as he had expected, and was not completed until 1823. Beethoven was in financial need at the time and he tried to get subscribers for the publication of the score at 50 ducats a head. A series of dignified but still rather touching letters to many European courts and prominent musicians brought meager response. Hoping to obtain his support at the court of Weimar, Beethoven wrote to the revered Geheimrat Goethe, whom he had met years before and many of whose poems he set to music. Goethe never even bothered to answer.

Only parts of the Missa Solemnis were performed in Vienna during the composer's lifetime, and it was not until the second half of the 19th century that it began to be widely understood.

Then, as now, it was the drama of the Agnus Dei which attracted most attention and was regarded as being farthest from the spirit of the Catholic mass. Prim scholars from Beethoven's day to ours have rapped him on the knuckles for interpreting the plea, "Dona nobis pacem," as a "prayer for outward as well as inward peace."

The passage is one of the most moving in all religious music. The prayer for peace is interrupted by the approach of drums and trumpets. The orchestra shudders. In rising anxiety the alto solo calls upon the "Lamb of God, who taketh away the sins of the world." The tenor solo echoes her call, "Lamb of God, have pity upon us." The trumpets blare out in full fury and the soprano voice rises to a cry of fright: "Lamb of God, give us, give us peace." Chorus and soli are overwhelmed with terror.

But the danger passes and peace returns. Suddenly the drums and trumpets return with shattering impact. The prayer of the chorus is more fervid till finally a more beatific peace returns, the calm before the final triumphant proclamation of peace has an almost mystic depth and eloquence.

BOSTON EVENING TRANSCRIPT

MUSIC

Beethoven Mass

Moving Performance for Symphony Pension Fund; Huberman in Benefit

By EDWARD DOWNES

A dramatic and deeply moving performance of Beethoven's Missa Solemnis was presented under the baton of Serge Koussevitzky in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon for the Pension Fund of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The giant work requires a gigantic musical apparatus which included, in this case, not only the Boston Symphony (plus organ), but Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society (both prepared by G. Wallace Woodworth), Rose Dirman, soprano, Hertha Glatz, contralto, John Priebe, tenor, and Julius Huehn, bass, as soloists.

Incredibly, the house was not sold out. To judge by the immense and enthusiastic audiences which attend the regular Boston Symphony concerts, one would suppose Boston's musical public to feel an endless debt of gratitude to each of the great corps of musicians who, week for week, year for year, give us so much beauty and make Boston the great musical city that it is. Yet when given the opportunity not only to demonstrate that gratitude, but to hear the Mass which Beethoven himself called his greatest work, and to hear it played by the greatest orchestra in the world, led by one of the greatest of living conductors, we leave close to 200 empty seats. Why? In New York, where it is next to impossible to obtain a seat to a Boston Symphony concert, that performance would probably have filled Carnegie Hall at least twice. It should have filled Symphony Hall three times over.

For it was a great performance. It had the splendor of imagination which fired Beethoven's own thought. It had the grand line and the breadth of utterance which only an overwhelming declaration of faith can command. It had the soul-searching intensity of a composer and a conductor, to whom religion could never be a simple formula. It was replete with the drama inherent in its ancient text.

Musical peaks of the afternoon came in the intimate mystical opening of the Sanctus, the anguished appeal "Miserere nobis" (of the Agnus Dei), where Hertha Glatz distinguished herself, the serene Benedictus, the remendous affirmation of the Credo. But there is little space, nor any useful purpose in a long recital of details.

Chorus versus Orchestra

Though one would deny no single member the privilege of singing the Missa Solemnis, the choral mass used yesterday was sometimes overpowering, even against the Boston Symphony. Considering Beethoven's fiendishly instrumental manner of writing for voices, their performance, for a non-professional chorus, seemed little short of miraculous. And they sang with contagious enjoyment of the music.

Finest of the soloists was Julius Heuhn, whose growth as an artist and singer is more evident each season. Richard Burgin contributed the masterly violin solo of the Sanctus.

The Mass was preceded by Dr. Koussevitzky's own arrangement of a Bach organ prelude and fugue in C which is a model of its kind. Putting Bach before Koussevitzky and a sense of style before a sense of circus, Koussevitzky shames the bombastic perversions of Bach which have long been rampant in our concert halls. His subtle ear for sonorous balances is evident both in the score and his conducting of it.

Huberman in Benefit

Another concert, by an artist who has been too long absent from Boston, was given for the benefit of Pioneers of Palestine last night in Jordan Hall. Bronislaw Huberman, always a great musician, frequently a great executant, was happily in top form.

His program opened with a magnificently virile performance of the Handel D major Sonata for violin. Few are the musicians in any branch of the art who have such a grasp of the Handelian style, such rythmic vitality, such commanding sweep of phrase, such a fluid melodic arch, such a fleet and sensitive wit.

Mr. Huberman has been known to play sadly out of tune, to draw an eccentric bow. One would not have known it last night. The Cesar Franck Sonata, which can have in it so much of the scented boudoir, he played with a directness and strength of emotion which reminded you of the storm and majesty which is in this music too. In spite of tempi which were sometimes too aggressive, the whole was proportioned, the detail apt.

One of the tests of a great musician is his ability to make a hackneyed work sound new and exciting without resorting to tricks. This is just what Mr. Huberman accomplished in a simple, straightforward performance of the Mendelssohn Concerto. Bruch's arrangement of "Kol Nidri," Szymanowski's "Fountain of Arethusa" and the violinist's own arrangement of a Chopin Waltz and Mazurka completed his list. The skillful accompanist was Boris Roubakine.

Thirty Works For Festival In Berkshires

Koussevitzky Announces Repertoire for Eighth Annual Summer Series

Thirty works or excerpts have been announced for the nine programs to be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky's direction in the eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. The list for Series A, on Thursday and Saturday nights and Sunday afternoon, July 31, Aug. 2 and 3, is:

Haydn, Symphony in G, No. 88; Beethoven, "Eroica" Symphony; Schubert, Unfinished Symphony; Mendelssohn, "Italian" Symphony; Brahms, Symphony No. 4; Shostakovitch, Symphony No. 5; Debussy, Nuages, Fetes, Sirenes.

Music of Mozart will be featured in Series B, on Thursday and Saturday nights and Sunday afternoons, Aug. 7, 9 and 10. The programs will include:

Mozart, Requiem, Symphonies in C major and A major; Beethoven, Symphony No. 5; Berlioz, "Fantastic" Symphony; Hanson, "Romantic" Symphony; Brahms, Piano concerto No. 2; Debussy, La Mer.

Works to be heard in Series C, on Thursday and Saturday nights and Sunday afternoon, Aug. 14, 16 and 17, are:

Beethoven, Missa Solemnis; Tchaikovsky, Symphony No. 5; Sibelius, Symphony No. 6; Vaughan Williams, A London Symphony; Wagner, Prelude and Liebestod from "Tristan und Isolde," Prelude to "Die Meistersinger"; Strauss, Death and Transfiguration; Barber, Violin concerto; Piston, The Incredible Flutist.

This will be the fifth festival at Tanglewood, the fourth in the Music Shed, and the sixth with the participation of the Boston Symphony. Further information is obtainable either from the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Stockbridge, Mass., or from its New York office at 113 West Fifty-seventh Street.

This Clipping From PORTLAND, ME.
EXPRESS
APR 22 1941

400 Signed Up Early In Drive

Workers in the 1941-42 Portland Community Concert Association membership campaign today began the second day of the week-long drive with 400 members already signed up 50 more than were reported near the end of the first drive four years ago.

A goal of 1,700 members has been set, according to Mrs. Langdon T. Thaxter, membership chairman, who also announced that the grand prize for turning in the most subscriptions will be admission to a Boston Symphony Orchestra Concert, with transportation paid.

...AY, APRIL 29, 194...
MONITOR,

Midweek

A pair of bowlers living in paint-...umbus, Ohio, will cycle to Los...geles to compete in the Women's ...ternational Bowling Congress ...ning May 15 at Vogue Bowl... They are Nellie Jo Gill and Eleanor ...ion. . . . A Caddie Benefit ...rnament, held at Wilshire ...ntry Club to help bolster the ...eted caddies' fund, drew more ...250 entries. Frank Lubin, who ...he 20th Century-Fox basket-...rs to a national championship ...nver, was awarded the Helms ...dation "Athlete of the Month" ...rch honor. . . . With an eye ...future and to help young-...launch themselves on ... the Ice-Capades of 1941 ...old an audition April 30 in which ...wood, where the show is now ...

A. S., 3d.

gout

...he Red Sox regulars were ... Di Maggio, Ted Williams ...e. Mike Ryba was throw-... it very far.

...sure, in the ...hibition pic-...d, and multi-...he still-life by ...nary issue, the ...amb, a bit of ...Thayer's "Wil-...palding's "Dah-...Riviera scene of ...epper and the ... Harold Roten-...sting for atmos-

...res by Peter Paul ...y Pickhardt, Wil-...d, Philip Malicoat, ...which promote the ...tion. These are all ...e serious, curious,

Other exhibitors who add to the breadth of the display are Ture Bengtz, Ruth Perry, Patrick Morgan, Susumu Hirota, Gertrude Fiske, George Marinko. The last is a very gifted artist from Waterbury, Conn., who comes to notice for the first time.

--MUSIC NOTES

Symphony Concert

Koussevitzky Directs Brilliant Performances of New Works by Barber and Benjamin Britten

HALF of yesterday's Boston Symphony program, and the most arresting half at that, was the work of a young Briton and a young American. Benjamin Britten, 27-year-old Englishman, whose Variations for String Orchestra opened the concert with a blaze of virtuosity, is relatively unfamiliar here. Thirty-one-year-old Samuel Barber of New York, whose Essay for Orchestra so captivated Dr. Koussevitsky that he played it twice in succession on yesterday's program, is one of the least pretentious, most gifted of rising American composers.

Widely as their temperaments diverge, these two men have precious qualities in common. Briton is the more spectacular, Barber perhaps more serious. But the musical speech of both flows with a joyous ease, complete honesty and lack of affectation, and it flows because each of them has something real to say. There is nothing doctrinaine about this music. Gone is the tortured self-consciousness of a generation which had to free itself over-ripe romantic tradition. Gone, the grim determination to establish a new "ism" with which to outface an older one. There is no longer any need for it.

The generation of Mr. Barber and Mr. Britten never had to sow any wild oats either of the atonal or neo-classical sort. You do not sow wild oats if you are born into complete freedom. They leave that to the bad boys of Stravinsky's age.

Not for many years—even before the present war started—has a voice spoken from the European continent with the freshness and naivete, the primal musical urge of these young men. By this I do not mean to imply that the two works, which the Boston Symphony played for the first time yesterday, are immortal masterpieces. They are eloquent music, wrought with all the zest of youth—the kind of music which, high as it stands, promises greater things to come.

Variations by Britten

Britten's ten Variations (seven of which were performed yesterday) are built around a theme of his colleague and teacher, Frank Bridge. Their titles: Adagio, March, Romance, Aria Italiana, Bourree Classique, Chant, Fugue and Finale, might suggest an out-worn ecclecticism, but this ecclecticism is aonly skin-deep. Mr. Britten's thought and styleare his own. His writing for the strings are bold and original. His fertile invention ranges from an alomst Rossinian wit in the Aria Italiana, to the vigorous sweep of his Introduction, the impudent dexterity of a highly unorthodox fugue, and the pensive song of the Finale.

It is not easy to know how much of the superb effect this performance made is due to the composer and how much to Dr. Koussevitzky's strings, which were at their inimitable best. In any case these variations and other works of Britten should figure again and soon on Symphony programs.

Barber's Essay

Samuel Barber's Essay for Orchestra is soberer music and possibly, after further hearings, it would prove of finer fiber. If its orchestra garb is less glittering, the emotion it conveys is deeper and stronger. It is closely knit, and for all its brevity, a weightier work than Mr. Barber's popular Overture to "The School for Scandal" which Dr. Koussevitzky produced earlier this season. The dark glow of the opening Andante is neatly set off by the filigree of the Allegro and a captious scherzando in which woodwinds and piano play a prominent part. The close brings a reiteration of the slow theme. Dramatic instrumentation and the utmost concentration of musical ideas make the Essay for Orchestra seem longer, in retrospect, than it is. Mr. Barber knew exactly when to stop and thus what, in a more redundant form, might have seemed a minor work, is extremely expressive in its present laconic version.

Schumann and Strauss

Program companions of Barber and Britten were the Schumann of the Fourth Symphony and the Strauss of "Till Eulenspiegel." The Fourth Symphony has been frequently performed in recent seasons and requires no comment other than to say that both Koussevitzky and his men were in top form.

The jeering, leering Till and his unspeakable pranks careened through the orchestra with gusto that can seldom have been surpassed. Koussevitzky etched his friew career with sharp, pointed detail and a clarity, which was incredibly maintained even when pandemonium broke out in the marketplace. Only in the passing moments of tenderness at beginning and end or in the sudden burst of glee as Till escapes his persuers, could one have wished for a more relaxed, caressing phrase. Yesterday's was among the most brilliant concerts of the entire season.

E. D.

Closes This Week

-Serge Koussevitzky will bring an end with the concerts of t coming week the 60th season of t Boston Symphony Orchestra. T 24th pair of concerts in Symphon Hall will be given on Friday afte noon and Saturday evening, and t 8th concert of the Cambridge serie at Sanders Theater, on the Thur day evening previous.

Serge Koussevitzky announces th following program for the Bost pair: The suite "Sarabande, Gigu and Badinerie" from Corelli's viol sonatas, as arranged for string o chestra by Pinelli; Erik Satie "Gymnopedies" as orchestrated Debussy (Milhaud's collection Satie manuscripts is being show at Symphony Hall); Debussy's o chestral sketches, "The Sea," ar the first symphony of Brahms C minor.

For the program in Cambridg Koussevitzy announces the Suite c Corelli. Satie's "Gymnopedies, Debussy's "La Mer," and the secon symphony of Sibelius.

This Clipping From COLUMBUS, OHIO DISPATCH
APR 27 1941

(23

C.S.M. 4-23

Modern Scores Listed By Serge Koussevitzky

WORKS by the contemporary composers, Sibelius, Vaughan Williams, Barber, Piston, Hindemith, Shostakovitch, Villa Lobos, Copland and Hanson are included in the programs to be played by the Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conductor, at the eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood, July 31-August 17.

There will be three Mozart works the second week of the festival in commemoration of the 150th anniversary of the composer's death. The much-discussed Symphony No. 5 by Shostakovitch is included in the first series of concerts. The eminent Brazilian composer, Villa Lobos, will have presented his Chorus No. 10, also in the first series.

Dr. Howard Hanson's Symphony No. 2, "Romantic," will be given the final week. It is of interest to note that Piston, Hindemith, Copland and Hanson are listed either as members of the faculty or lecturers at the Berkshire Music Center which will be operated for its second year at Tanglewood by the Boston Symphony orchestra for six weeks starting the first week in July, ending with the final festival concert.

DESPITE troubled conditions abroad and this country's defense program the festival reports encouraging response for subscriptions for the coming season, the returns being about a month in advance of 1940. About a dozen more boxes have been sold than last year at this date. Music lovers contemplating attendance at the festival are urged to communicate at once with the Berkshire Hills Conference at the courthouse in Pittsfield for room accommodations. One southern Berkshire hotel is already booked to capacity.

The programs by series follow:

SERIES "A"

Symphony in G major, No. 88 Haydn
Symphony No. 3, "Eroica"..Beethoven
Symphony in B minor, "Unfinished" .....Schubert
"Italian" Symphony ....Mendelssohn
Symphony No. 4, in E minor..Brahms
Symphony No. 5 .....Shostakovitch
Overture to "Leonore" No. 3 .....Beethoven
Three Nocturnes ("Clouds," "Festivals," "Sirens") .....Debussy
Choros No. 10 .....Villa Lobos
Quiet City .....Copland
Concerto for Violoncello ...Hindemith

SERIES "B"

Requiem .....Mozart
Symphony in C major
Symphony in A major
(In commemoration of the 150th anniversary of Mozart's death)
Symphony No. 5 in C minor.....Beethoven
"Fantastic" Symphony .....Berlioz
Symphony No 2, "Romantic"..Hanson
Piano Concerto in B flat major, No. 2 .....Brahms
"La Mer" .....Debussy

SERIES "C"

"Missa Solemnis" ..... Beethoven
Symphony No. 5 .....Tchaikovsky
Symphony No. 6 .....Sibelius
"A London Symphony" ..... Vaughan Williams
Prelude and Love-Death .....Wagner "Tristan und Isolde"
Prelude to "Die Meistersinger von Nurnberg"
"Death and Transfiguration"..Strauss
Violin Concerto .....Barber
"The Incredible Flutist".....Piston

This Clipping From
WESTCHESTER, PA. LOCAL NEWS
APR 29 1941

WRITES WELL OF BARBER'S "ESSAY"

In his account of the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Warren Storey Smith, of the Boston Post, states that Samuel Barber's "Essay for Orchestra," which runs some eight minutes, was played twice, and was applauded both times.

Mr. Barber's number, says Mr Smith, is transparent enough to be absorbed immediately by a person of ordinary musical intelligence. Its title suggests scholasticism, and it may be described as the development of a single brief and by no means original motive. This "Essay" shows Mr. Barber to be an expert crafstman who writes in a highly agreeable manner.

Program Change

A last-minute change in this week's Boston Symphony program substitutes Samuel Barber's "Essay" for Orchestra for Falla's Suite from "El Amor Brujo."

This makes a second novelty for the program. The other is Benjamin Britten's Variations for String Orchestra on a Theme by Frank Bridge. Schumann's Fourth Symphony and Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel" complete the list.

Two Symphonic Novelties

C.S.M. 4-26-41

By L. A. Sloper

Two novelties adorn the program of the last symphony pair but one of the Boston season; one from an English, the other from an American pen. The first is Benjamin Britten's Variations for String Orchestra on a Theme by Frank Bridge, the composer's opus 10. The other is Samuel Barber's Essay for Orchestra. Between them on the program lies Schumann's Symphony No. 4, in D minor. Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel" is the last item listed.

The compositions of Britten and Barber, played yesterday afternoon for the first time in Boston, are both works of striking individuality. Britten's Variations (three are omitted in these performances) reveal an indubitable talent. The workmanship is expert, but these are no pupil's exercises. Although the customary devices are employed, the composition is reminiscent of nobody.

The theme is introduced quietly in an unusual setting of chords and runs. An Adagio in similar mood leads to a bright March. This is followed by a Romance in waltz time which indicates that Mr. Britten, though a young man and a "modern," is not afraid of sentiment. The Aria Italiana proves him capable of burlesque, too, and the succeeding Bourrée Classique demonstrates his mastery of modern rhythmic design. A Chant has a devotional air, and a brisk fugue leads to a prolonged restatement of the theme in a Finale which ends calmly. The single hearing roused a desire to hear more of the composer's work. The string choirs of the orchestra played superbly.

A strong impression was left also by Mr. Barber's "Essay." This American composer had been represented before at these concerts only by his Overture, "The School for Scandal," which I missed. In this work, I judge, he is in more serious mood. The "Essay," unconventional in form, is clearly dramatic in mood. Indeed, it might easily be a Prelude to a tragic opera, or incidental music to a drama. Beginning quietly, it rises to a climax of brass and percussion, subsides, is built again to a climax, and finally fades into silence.

Dr. Koussevitzky established a new precedent with this work: he repeated it immediately. He had once played Prokofieff's "Sept, Ils Sont Sept" in both the first and the second half of a program; and did not Mr. Monteux once try the same experiment with Stravinsky's "The Rite of Spring?" But this was probably the first time in the history of the orchestra that a composition had been repeated at once, merely because the conductor liked it.

The experiment yesterday was successful in two respects: the second performance was much better than the first, in which there had been some palpable raggedness in the brass; and the audience, which was lukewarm after the first rendition, having apparently been surprised by the quiet ending, was much more cordial the second time, when it was prepared.

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra's 60th season comes to a close with the concerts of this Friday afternoon and Saturday evening and the final item on the programme is—you've guessed it—the First Symphony of Brahms. A year ago, thanks to the observances which marked the 100th anniversary of the birth of Tchaikovsky, that composer's Fifth occupied the place of honor, as it did one other season when a Tchaikovsky festival brought matters to a close. Twice Brahm's Second has replaced it (and thrice on Friday afternoon, owing to a split programme at a Brahm's festival). Once Beethoven's Fifth had the temerity to aspire to the place now sacred to the work which von Buelow dubbed "The Tenth Symphony." Otherwise, in 10 of Dr. Koussevitzky's past 16 seasons the Brahm's C minor will have provided the grand finale. And rarely has it been altogether absent. The conductor has been considered kidded on this score, but it takes more than kidding to shake his conviction that the Brahm's First is the most fitting piece with which to end a symphony season. And, after all, perhaps it is.

* * * *

In the matter of programmes, this season of 1940-41 has not been as interesting as certain earlier ones, although detailed comment on this issue had better be postponed until next Sunday, when all the returns are in. There have, however, been certain performances of extraordinary eloquence and brilliance, something we have now come to take almost for granted. To an unprecedented extent Dr. Koussevitzky has shared his conductorial labors with others. Desire Dufaw, Igor Stravinsky and Stanley Chapple were each responsible for one pair of concerts and concert master Richard Burgin took over two. Arthur Shepherd and Eugene Goossens each conducted a symphony of his own and the latter threw in Mozart's Overture to "The Marriage of Figaro" for good measure, while Darius Milhaud introduced to us three of his compositions. No one of these men is a conductor of the first rank, though collectively they were responsible for much interesting music, for a goodly proportion of the season's novelties and revivals. Next year, if all goes well, we will have a really great conductor, Bruno Walter, as guest and for two weeks, while Dr. Koussevitzky holds forth with the New York Philharmonic Symphony as one of the several conductors to take charge of that orchestra's centennial season.

INCORRECT PAGINATION

--MUSIC NOTES

Symphony Concert

Koussevitzky Directs Brilliant Performances of New Works by Barber and Benjamin Britten

HALF of yesterday's Boston Symphony program, and the most arresting half at that, was the work of a young Briton and a young American. Benjamin Britten, 27-year-old Englishman, whose Variations for String Orchestra opened the concert with a blaze of virtuosity, is relatively unfamiliar here. Thirty-one-year-old Samuel Barber of New York, whose Essay for Orchestra so captivated Dr. Koussevitsky that he played it twice in succession on yesterday's program, is one of the least pretentious, most gifted of rising American composers.

Widely as their temperaments diverge, these two men have precious qualities in common. Briton is the more spectacular, Barber perhaps more serious. But the musical speech of both flows with a joyous ease, complete honesty and lack of affectation, and it flows because each of them has something real to say. There is nothing doctrinaine about this music. Gone is the tortured self-consciousness of a generation which had to free itself over-ripe romantic tradition. Gone, the grim determination to establish a new "ism" with which to outface an older one. There is no longer any need for it.

The generation of Mr. Barber and Mr. Britten never had to sow any wild oats either of the atonal or neo-classical sort. You do not sow wild oats if you are born into complete freedom. They leave that to the bad boys of Stravinsky's age.

Not for many years—even before the present war started—has a voice spoken from the European continent with the freshness and naivete, the primal musical urge of these young men. By this I do not mean to imply that the two works, which the Boston Symphony played for the first time yesterday, are immortal masterpieces. They are eloquent music, wrought with all the zest of youth—the kind of music which, high as it stands, promises greater things to come.

Variations by Britten

Britten's ten Variations (seven of which were performed yesterday) are built around a theme of his colleague and teacher, Frank Bridge. Their titles: Adagio, March, Romance, Aria Italiana, Bourree Classique, Chant, Fugue and Finale, might suggest an out-worn ecclecticism, but this ecclecticism is aonly skin-deep. Mr. Britten's thought and styleare his own. His writing for the strings are bold and original. His fertile invention ranges from an alomst Rossinian wit in the Aria Italiana, to the vigorous sweep of his Introduction, the impudent dexterity of a highly unorthodox fugue, and the pensive song of the Finale.

It is not easy to know how much of the superb effect this performance made is due to the composer and how much to Dr. Koussevitzky's strings, which were at their inimitable best. In any case these variations and other works of Britten should figure again and soon on Symphony programs.

Barber's Essay

Samuel Barber's Essay for Orchestra is soberer music and possibly, after further hearings, it would prove of finer fiber. If its orchestra garb is less glittering, the emotion it conveys is deeper and stronger. It is closely knit, and for all its brevity, a weightier work than Mr. Barber's popular Overture to "The School for Scandal" which Dr. Koussevitzky produced earlier this season. The dark glow of the opening Andante is neatly set off by the filigree of the Allegro and a captious scherzando in which woodwinds and piano play a prominent part. The close brings a reiteration of the slow theme. Dramatic instrumentation and the utmost concentration of musical ideas make the Essay for Orchestra seem longer, in retrospect, than it is. Mr. Barber knew exactly when to stop and thus what, in a more redundant form, might have seemed a minor work, is extremely expressive in its present laconic version.

Schumann and Strauss

Program companions of Barber and Britten were the Schumann of the Fourth Symphony and the Strauss of "Till Eulenspiegel." The Fourth Symphony has been frequently performed in recent seasons and requires no comment other than to say that both Koussevitzky and his men were in top form.

The jeering, leering Till and his unspeakable pranks careened through the orchestra with gusto that can seldom have been surpassed. Koussevitzky etched his friew career with sharp, pointed detail and a clarity, which was incredibly maintained even when pandemonium broke out in the marketplace. Only in the passing moments of tenderness at beginning and end or in the sudden burst of glee as Till escapes his persuers, could one have wished for a more relaxed, caressing phrase. Yesterday's was among the most brilliant concerts of the entire season.

E. D.

Closes This Week

Serge Koussevitzky will bring an end with the concerts of t coming week the 60th season of t Boston Symphony Orchestra. T 24th pair of concerts in Symphor Hall will be given on Friday afte noon and Saturday evening, and th 8th concert of the Cambridge seri at Sanders Theater, on the Thur day evening previous.

Serge Koussevitzky announces th following program for the Bost pair: The suite "Sarabande, Gigu and Badinerie" from Corelli's viol sonatas, as arranged for string o chestra by Pinelli; Erik Satie "Gymnopedies" as orchestrated Debussy (Milhaud's collection Satie manuscripts is being show at Symphony Hall); Debussy's o chestral sketches, "The Sea," an the first symphony of Brahms C minor.

For the program in Cambridg Koussevitzy announces the Suite c Corelli. Satie's "Gymnopedies, Debussy's "La Mer," and the secon symphony of Sibelius.

This Clipping From COLUMBUS, OHIO
DISPATCH
APR 27 1941

(23

Modern Scores Listed By Serge Koussevitzky

WORKS by the contemporary composers, Sibelius, Vaughan Williams, Barber, Piston, Hindemith, Shostakovitch, Villa Lobos, Copland and Hanson are included in the programs to be played by the Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conductor, at the eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood, July 31-August 17.

There will be three Mozart works the second week of the festival in commemoration of the 150th anniversary of the composer's death. The much-discussed Symphony No. 5 by Shostakovitch is included in the first series of concerts. The eminent Brazilian composer, Villa Lobos, will have presented his Chorus No. 10, also in the first series.

Dr. Howard Hanson's Symphony No. 2, "Romantic," will be given the final week. It is of interest to note that Piston, Hindemith, Copland and Hanson are listed either as members of the faculty or lecturers at the Berkshire Music Center which will be operated for its second year at Tanglewood by the Boston Symphony orchestra for six weeks starting the first week in July, ending with the final festival concert.

DESPITE troubled conditions abroad and this country's defense program the festival reports encouraging response for subscriptions for the coming season, the returns being about a month in advance of 1940. About a dozen more boxes have been sold than last year at this date. Music lovers contemplating attendance at the festival are urged to communicate at once with the Berkshire Hills Conference at the courthouse in Pittsfield for room accommodations. One southern Berkshire hotel is already booked to capacity.

The programs by series follow:

SERIES "A"
Symphony in G major, No. 88 Haydn
Symphony No. 3, "Eroica"..Beethoven
Symphony in B minor, "Unfinished" .....Schubert
"Italian" Symphony ....Mendelssohn
Symphony No. 4, in E minor ..Brahms
Symphony No. 5 .....Shostakovitch
Overture to "Leonore" No. 3 .....Beethoven
Three Nocturnes ("Clouds," "Festivals," "Sirens") .....Debussy
Choros No. 10 .....Villa Lobos
Quiet City .....Copland
Concerto for Violoncello ...Hindemith

SERIES "B"
Requiem .....Mozart
Symphony in C major
Symphony in A major
(In commemoration of the 150th anniversary of Mozart's death)
Symphony No. 5 in C minor..... .....Beethoven
"Fantastic" Symphony .....Berlioz
Symphony No. 2, "Romantic"..Hanson
Piano Concerto in B flat major, No. 2 .....Brahms
"La Mer" .....Debussy

SERIES "C"
"Missa Solemnis" ..... Beethoven
Symphony No. 5 .....Tchaikovsky
Symphony No. 6 .....Sibelius
"A London Symphony" ....Vaughan Williams
Prelude and Love-Death .....Wagner
"Tristan und Isolde"
Prelude to "Die Meistersinger von Nurnberg"
"Death and Transfiguration"..Strauss
Violin Concerto .....Barber
"The Incredible Flutist".....Piston

This Clipping From WESTCHESTER, PA.
LOCAL NEWS
APR 29 1941

WRITES WELL OF BARBER'S "ESSAY"

In his account of the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Warren Storey Smith, of the Boston Post, states that Samuel Barber's "Essay for Orchestra," which runs some eight minutes, was played twice, and was applauded both times.

Mr. Barber's number, says Mr. Smith, is transparent enough to be absorbed immediately by a person of ordinary musical intelligence. Its title suggests scholasticism, and it may be described as the development of a single brief and by no means original motive. This "Essay" shows Mr. Barber to be an expert craftsman who writes in a highly agreeable manner.

C.S.M. 4-23

Program Change

A last-minute change in this week's Boston Symphony program substitutes Samuel Barber's "Essay" for Orchestra for Falla's Suite from "El Amor Brujo."

This makes a second novelty for the program. The other is Benjamin Britten's Variations for String Orchestra on a Theme by Frank Bridge. Schumann's Fourth Symphony and Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel" complete the list.

Two Symphonic Novelties

C.S.M. 4-26-41

By L. A. Sloper

Two novelties adorn the program of the last symphony pair but one of the Boston season; one from an English, the other from an American pen. The first is Benjamin Britten's Variations for String Orchestra on a Theme by Frank Brioge, the composer's opus 10. The other is Samuel Barber's Essay for Orchestra. Between them on the program lies Schumann's Symphony No. 4, in D minor. Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel" is the last item listed.

The compositions of Britten and Barber, played yesterday afternoon for the first time in Boston, are both works of striking individuality. Britten's Variations (three are omitted in these performances) reveal an indubitable talent. The workmanship is expert, but these are no pupil's exercises. Although the customary devices are employed, the composition is reminiscent of nobody.

The theme is introduced quietly in an unusual setting of chords and runs. An Adagio in similar mood leads to a bright March. This is followed by a Romance in waltz time which indicates that Mr. Britten, though a young man and a "modern," is not afraid of sentiment. The Aria Italiana proves him capable of burlesque, too, and the succeeding Bourrée Classique demonstrates his mastery of modern rhythmic design. A Chant has a devotional air, and a brisk fugue leads to a prolonged restatement of the theme in a Finale which ends calmly. The single hearing roused a desire to hear more of the composer's work. The string choirs of the orchestra played superbly.

A strong impression was left also by Mr. Barber's "Essay." This American composer had been represented before at these concerts only by his Overture, "The School for Scandal," which I missed. In this work, I judge, he is in more serious mood. The "Essay," unconventional in form, is clearly dramatic in mood. Indeed, it might easily be a Prelude to a tragic opera, or incidental music to a drama. Beginning quietly, it rises to a climax of brass and percussion, subsides, is built again to a climax, and finally fades into silence.

Dr. Koussevitzky established a new precedent with this work: he repeated it immediately. He had once played Prokofieff's "Sept, Ils Sont Sept" in both the first and the second half of a program; and did not Mr. Monteux once try the same experiment with Stravinsky's "The Rite of Spring?" But this was probably the first time in the history of the orchestra that a composition had been repeated at once, merely because the conductor liked it.

The experiment yesterday was successful in two respects: the second performance was much better than the first, in which there had been some palpable raggedness in the brass; and the audience, which was lukewarm after the first rendition, having apparently been surprised by the quiet ending, was much more cordial the second time, when it was prepared.

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra's 60th season comes to a close with the concerts of this Friday afternoon and Saturday evening and the final item on the programme is—you've guessed it—the First Symphony of Brahms. A year ago, thanks to the observances which marked the 100th anniversary of the birth of Tchaikovsky, that composer's Fifth occupied the place of honor, as it did one other season when a Tchaikovsky festival brought matters to a close. Twice Brahm's Second has replaced it (and thrice on Friday afternoon, owing to a split programme at a Brahm's festival). Once Beethoven's Fifth had the temerity to aspire to the place now sacred to the work which von Buelow dubbed "The Tenth Symphony." Otherwise, in 10 of Dr. Koussevitzky's past 16 seasons the Brahm's C minor will have provided the grand finale. And rarely has it been altogether absent. The conductor has been considered kidded on this score, but it takes more than kidding to shake his conviction that the Brahm's First is the most fitting piece with which to end a symphony season. And, after all, perhaps it is.

* * * *

In the matter of programmes, this season of 1940-41 has not been as interesting as certain earlier ones, although detailed comment on this issue had better be postponed until next Sunday, when all the returns are in. There have, however, been certain performances of extraordinary eloquence and brilliance, something we have now come to take almost for granted. To an unprecedented extent Dr. Koussevitzky has shared his conductorial labors with others. Desire Dufaw, Igor Stravinsky and Stanley Chapple were each responsible for one pair of concerts and concert master Richard Burgin took over two. Arthur Shepherd and Eugene Goossens each conducted a symphony of his own and the latter threw in Mozart's Overture to "The Marriage of Figaro" for good measure, while Darius Milhaud introduced to us three of his compositions. No one of these men is a conductor of the first rank, though collectively they were responsible for much interesting music, for a goodly proportion of the season's novelties and revivals. Next year, if all goes well, we will have a really great conductor, Bruno Walter, as guest and for two weeks, while Dr. Koussevitzky holds forth with the New York Philharmonic Symphony as one of the several conductors to take charge of that orchestra's centennial season.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
APR 14 1941

124

MUSIC

By VIRGIL THOMSON

NEW YORK CITY SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Sir Thomas Beecham, conductor, concert last night in series presented by Mayor LaGuardia and the New York City WPA Music Project at Carnegie Hall, with the following program:

Symphony No. 102, in B flat major..Haydn
Symphony No. 36, in C major (Linz)..Mozart
"Paris," Impressions of a Great City..Delius
Symphonic Variations .....Dvorak

More Beecham

THE second Beecham concert of the New York City Symphony was a triumph like the first. The house was full and loved it. Sir Thomas was in form and looked as if he were loving it. The orchestra played as if they loved both him and music.

* * *

Beecham alone of the great conductors, as Nikisch did before him, collaborates with an orchestra rather than conquers it. As a result his orchestra always sounds like an ensemble of skilled musicians rather than like a Panzer Division on the march. This particular attitude toward music-making places him at once as the survivor of a vanished epoch and the hope of the next. He is the obvious rallying point for all those musicians, young and old, who have had enough of musical Caesarism.

Not that he is lacking in authority or discipline. He has more of both than most. But these are imposed and accepted, as such things can only be imposed and accepted in the Republic of Art, by the exercise of friendliness and human consideration. As a result of this courteous and pleasant manner, he achieves a spontaneity of collaboration that is in every musical way superior to the machine finish that makes the work of less humanely tempered men sound dead and horrid.

* * *

Noticeable in both his concerts this season has been the consistent musicality of his fortissimi. He can make the W. P. A. boys play as softly and as loud as the musicians do in any other orchestra. But one is never conscious of any forcing of the sonority. Koussevitzky often forces his strings beyond the point of maximum resonance. Mitropoulos makes all the instruments sound powerful but husky. Walter is not infrequently sloppy, inexcusably sloppy about his tuttis. Toscanini seems not to care what kind of a noise comes out of his musicians' efforts provided there is a certain equilibrium of one kind of sound against another and provided the whole machine is kept rolling. Stokowski, of course, sacrifices everything to the production of an organ-like sostenuto dominated by over-played brasses. Beecham, on the other hand, lets the strings dominate the ensemble, keeps them in command of tonal coloration, as is undoubtedly the correct tradition of orchestral execution, as it is of orchestral writing; and yet he seems to have no difficulty about building or sustaining majestic fortissimi in which the strings sound full and easy and unforced.

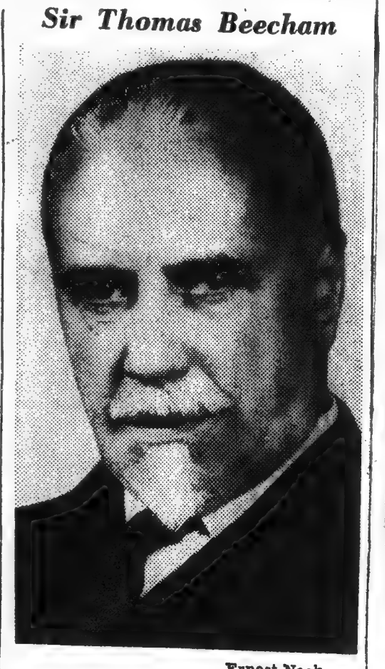
In contrast to the subtlety and flexibility of his string work at all dynamic levels, he keeps his woodwinds cool and neatly precise in the French taste. His brasses, too, are kept quietly rich, never allowed to scream. And he has a nice sense of dosage, spicy but not obtrusive, in dealing with the percussion section.

* * *

Last week I commented on the excellence of his musical interpretations both of eighteenth century and of nineteenth century repertory. This was again manifest last night in the brilliance and wit of his Haydn, in the majesty and mystery of his Mozart. (A Bostonian composer of my acquaintance was not entirely happy about the leisurely pace of both minuets.) The Delius piece last night was made to sound like the almost first-class impressionism it is. And the Dvorak came off as the Czechish charm-number that composer could write so prettily and so infallibly.

All that I mention simply for the record. I should like to impress on my readers this week that Beecham's interpretative excellence is the achievement of no mere gifted musical amateur. It is the expression not only of a sound musical culture but of a skilled orchestral technician as well. Sir Thomas makes music sound convincing because he is convinced of how it should sound. He succeeds finally, however, not only by being able to imagine the result but by being able to convince a hundred musicians that nothing is needed for its achievement beyond intelligent good will and the exercise of their instrumental skill within that range of sonorities traditionally considered legitimate and beautiful.

Sir Thomas Beecham



Ernest Nash

Who conducted his second concert with the New York City Symphony last night

YOAKUM, TEX.
HERALD
APR 25 1941

Music to Soothe Eglantine

Lenox, Mass.—On the theory, perhaps, that music hath charms to soothe the eglantine, Conductor Serge Koussevitzky of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has hired Robert Richardson, cornet-playing farmer, as superintendent of his Lenox estate.

—(Tom Tom, June 12-13-14)—

MISSOULA, MONT.
MISSOULIAN
APR 27 1941

Evidently homeward bound, the Philadelphia Orchestra reaches Pittsburgh on Saturday. The Boston Symphony, already at home, closes its winter season the same day. Seattle begins the five-day convention of the Washington Federation of Music clubs. New York has, besides the second concert of the Toscanini Orchestra summer series, under Reginald Stewart, and probably others not listed in the notes at hand, the local debut recital of Violinist Ernest Eniti.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
APR 27 1941

FROM THE MAIL POUCH

An Appeal for Aid for Daughter of Artur Nikisch—A Note on Composers

Nikisch's Daughter

To the Music Editor:

ONE of the many deplorable consequences of political persecution in Europe is the utter impoverishment of Eleanora Nikisch Schindler, the daughter of the renowned Arthur Nikisch, former conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and later of the Berlin Philharmonic and Leipzig Gewandhaus Orchestras and one of the greatest orchestra leaders of all time. She, with her husband, Emil Schindler, and their two children, had to flee from their home in Prague at the time of the Nazi conquest of Czecho-Slovakia, and since that time they have led a most precarious existence. They are now in Italy, where Mr. Schindler is a prisoner in a concentration camp, for no other reason than that he is a Jew. He is a brother of the late Kurt Schindler, who is well remembered in New York as the founder and former conductor of the celebrated Schola Cantorum.

The situation of the family in Italy is most critical, and funds are now being raised in this country to enable them to come to America. As I was a friend of Arthur Nikisch and a great admirer of his wonderful art during the many years that I lived in Berlin before the first World War, I have been requested to make known through the press an appeal to music lovers to contribute to this fund. The sum of $1,500 is necessary for the purpose.

A home here has already been found for them with a niece of Arthur Nikisch, Mrs. Irma Groell, 240 River Road, Red Bank, N. J. Checks should be marked "For the Nikisch Fund," and made payable and mailed to Olga Naumoff, in care of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, 88 Druce Street, Brookline, Mass. Miss Naumoff is Dr. Koussevitzky's niece and secretary and she will see that the funds thus collected reach their proper destination. She became interested in the plan because of a letter which Dr. Koussevitzky received from Mrs. Schindler describing the deplorable situation of the family. The two Schindler children are the only living grandchildren of Arthur Nikisch.

ARTHUR M. ABELL.

Hastings-on-Hudson, N. Y., April 22, 1941.

About Composers—From One

To the Music Editor:

THE TIMES has devoted generous space to the recent nation-wide contest for orchestra compositions by unheard native composers, held in Washington, D. C., under the auspices of the National Orchestra Association. Possibly the opinion of one of the contestants may be of interest to your readers.

Although no exponent of pure cacophony—Kataphony might be a better word—I am, I hope, sufficiently modern in my thinking to appreciate much contemporary music. Modern harmony, so called, with its atonality, its unrelieved and unresolved dissonances, and its rhythmic irregularities are good—IF the composer has something to say. It seems to me, however, that a composer should have something to say and that he should be able to say it coherently and intelligently—or keep still.

To my way of thinking, the concert hall is no laboratory for experimenting with tone colors and "discolors." Nor is it a classroom for propounding musical hypotheses. Above all, it is no place to learn how to orchestrate. Much of the cataleptic nonsense which the modern audience is expected to hear with fortitude—if not enthusiasm, is due to pure ignorance! Modern "harmony" cannot cover up deficiencies in the knowledge of the simplest fundamentals of good orchestra writing. You can't "fool all the people all the time."

To be sure, this ignorance, strange to say, is often aided and abetted in the classroom. I once heard a teacher of orchestration tell his class that the B flat clarinet was used for brilliant passages and that the A clarinet was to be used where the music was of a somber or quiet nature. This classic bit of misinformation was from a professor in one of our largest and best-known schools of music! Other mistakes of the lecture hall could easily be cited.

The best possible course for any serious young composer would be to learn to manipulate and play, passably, each instrument of the orchestra. In that way he could learn at first hand what the possibilities and limitations of the various instruments were, and would be able to write with an assurance and ease that no amount of study could bring. Certainly this involves a great amount of work. We live in an impatient age but the results would be so satisfactory both to the composer and his audience that the time and energy thus spent would be rewarded many times over.

In this connection, I am convinced that we might do well to take the audience more into consideration in our writing. We are too prone to assume that if the audience reaction is bad, it is due to ignorance. Such an assumption is a dangerous opiate. Audiences are far more intelligent than most of us would like to believe. They can sense bad writing, if they cannot analyze it. We have too many "Beethovens" and too few "Gounods" in this age. Beethoven could ignore his audience because of a magnificent self-assurance which most of the modern iconoclasts seem to lack.

If any generalization is to be made about modern music it must be this; that it lacks assurance and direction. It is marked by indecision and uncertainty. Was it G. B. Shaw who said that America reached decadence before it reached maturity? That is, of course, untrue, but indecision marks a lack of maturity. The "golden age" of art in America is waiting that very thing. All we need is to find out where we are going. We will not help matters along, however, by assuming an antagonistic attitude toward our hearers, either in our writing or our thinking.

ROBERT O. BARKLEY.

Wilkinsburg, Pa., April 23, 1941.

Boston Globe
April 26, 1941

MUSIC

SYMPHONY HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Three varieties of musical cleverness and one example of great romanticism are to be met with at the season's last pair of concerts but one by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The three varieties, as they appear, are Benjamin Britten's Variations For String Orchestra On a Theme of Frank Bridge, "Essay For Orchestra" by Samuel Barber, and Richard Strauss' "Till Eulenspigel." Robert Schumann's D minor Symphony is the great work. Both the Britten and Barber were conducted yesterday afternoon by Serge Koussevitzky for the first time in Boston. Mr. Koussevitzky was so impressed by the Barber miniature (which took the place of the originally announced Suite from "Love, the Sorcerer" by Manuel De Falla), that he played it twice over.

Mr. Britten, a young English composer still under 28, knows how to write brilliantly and with many effects of color for massed strings. He also has a sense of humor. The seven variations are mostly in light vein, and the "Aria Italiana" is a delicious burlesque of a florid Italian aria of, say, the mid-19th century. These variations are the kind which go far afield from the theme, unlike the Beethoven or classic way of writing variations which always keeps the original tune or fragments of it handy in the background.

One would like to have heard the other three variations—"Viennese Waltz," "Perpetual Motion," and "Funeral March"—which Mr. Koussevitzky omits from the present performances. If they match the ingenuity of their fellows, they must be first-rate. No doubt the astonishing sonorities Mr. Koussevitzky drew from the Boston Symphony strings was partly accountable for the music's brilliance. Yet it is correct to assert that Mr. Britten has a good ear for clear, deep tone. His orchestration and some of his harmony make you think of Prokofieff's "Classical" Symphony, of Stravinsky's "The Fairy's Kiss," and a few traces of Debussy. What of it? They don't interfere with enjoyment unless you happen to be an incorrigible reminiscence hunter.

Barber's music could be called "Essay in a Minor Third." On brief acquaintance the thematic material seems to be a melodic phrase woven about the interval of a minor third, extended and manipulated. One easily recognized tune occurs again and again, and in the middle of the piece a slight variant of it makes the basis of a speedy little scherzino. Barber's style is really old-fashioned, his treatment of diatonic. A tinge of the scoring of Sibelius' "Valse Triste" lurks in the strings at the outset.

Barber's cleverness is his capacity to build up a dramatic mood in short time, to say as much as he wants and then stop. In all, only eight minutes are required. "Essay for Orchestra" is notably pleasant, though certainly not extraordinary. Its immediate repetition must have set a Boston Symphony precedent, the nearest approach to which was when "Sept, Ils Sont Sept," by Prokenfieff, having been introduced here, was played again at the end of the concert.

There was a good deal of enthusiasm from the audience the whole afternoon through. Nothing was obscure or baffling about the program, and the orchestra gave another exhibition of technical wizardry.

"Till Eulenspiegel" had this reviewer sitting on the edge of his seat. The voltage of Mr. Koussevitzky's interpretations, Schumann included, was even higher than usual.

How nice it would have been, just to carp a little, if the conductor had kept to his first intention and given us the Schumann Second Symphony instead of the Fourth. Not that anyone would avoid hearing the Fourth. But in recent years it has been done several times and the Second hardly at all. As it now stands we shall have to wait until next Fall, at least, with nothing to console us except the memory of Dimitri Mitropoulos' magnificent reading of the Second four years ago.

The last program of the season, next week, will be as follows: Corelli: Suite for Strings; Satie: Two "Gymnopedies" (orchestrated by Debussy); Debussy: Three Symphonic Sketches, "The Sea"; Brahms: First Symphony. C. W. D.

Mostly Cloudy
Warmer Tonight

Official 2.35 P. M. Temperature
Today: 59 Year ago: 48

U. S. Weather on Page 8

Boston Evening Transcript

Today's Truth = Tomorrow's Trend

VOL. CXII NO. 95 Established 1830 WEDNESDAY, APRIL 23, 1941 ★ ★ ★

Entered as Second Class Matter at the Post Office

An Editorial

HAIL AND FAREWELL

Next Wednesday, April 30, we will publish the last Boston Evening Transcript. The Transcript has attempted to serve its community and its country as a newspaper fashioned after the highest ideals of journalism in a democracy.

The need for better newspapers continues. They are the foundation of our democracy and essential to our human freedoms. At their best, they are the most priceless possession that any community can have. Such a newspaper belongs to the citizens of its community just as definitely as to its owners.

You may have noticed the statement of Transcript policy which appears at the top of our editorial columns daily: "New in ideas; old in ideals."

* * *

In conformity with that policy, the Transcript in the last two years has been modernized from cover to cover. Among many innovations, it introduced Newscope as the most advanced form of daily journalism in the United States. Its foreign and national news reporting is surpassed by but few papers in this country. Steadily and unalterably, it has followed within the limitations of human error, the policy of "Truth in News," even when it hurt.

Our editorial policy has been characterized by tolerance for all views. We have never hesitated to take a clear-cut stand on controversial issues, "calling them as we saw them" regardless of majority opinion. Our commercial interests never have been allowed to sway editorial policy. Above all, our policy has been guided by a faith in our community, a love for our country and a consciousness of the importance of Christian principles.

Two significant facts indicate the interest of the younger generation in the Transcript today. The first is that three-quarters of the twenty-four individuals who invested money to reorganize the Transcript two years ago were then under forty years of age. The second is the large number of parents in their thirties and forties who are Transcript readers. They are concerned about the kind of newspaper their growing children should read. The Transcript is one of the principal sources of current event material for school children.

* * *

For 111 years the Transcript has been closely interwoven with the history and traditions of Boston and America. Throughout these years, its roots have spread deep into the fundamentals of our community life. It has encouraged the development of the arts, sciences, education and religion and has always given its full support to honest, fair and efficient government. Of its unique record, the Transcript is proud.

But tradition alone does not earn the right for continued existence. If the Transcript today were only a survival of the past, it would have no place in the life stream of the present.

What we regret and feel very deeply is the loss of what the Transcript is and stands for today; what it should be and would be tomorrow. In these dark days, more than ever before, the need is paramount for news and editorial policies which will contribute to that kind of American character and manner of life which our country was destined to have had.

We are duly conscious of our shortcomings. We have many. Most of them are the result of a necessarily limited budget.

Most newspapers, today, must meet operating costs from revenue. Transcript circulation has always been curtailed by the necessity of selling at a price higher than its immediate competitors.

* * *

In the days of lush financial advertising before 1929, a small circulation was profitable. But today a larger circulation is essential to secure adequate advertising of a general nature.

Before establishing the five-cent price in December, 1939, we made every effort to do those things necessary to establish a competitive price of two cents in order that the paper could be read by a larger number of readers. Similar efforts were made again in the last few months as it became increasingly clear that only in this way could the Transcript become permanently successful. To establish a two-cent price, we needed either more capital to carry larger losses until sufficient circulation attracted more advertising; or the assurance of enough additional advertising immediately upon the establishment of a competitive two-cent price to offset the reduction in circulation income.

* * *

Neither solution has been possible to date. For the benefit of those readers who are interested in more detail of this phase of our problem, we have printed on page 11 the management's report to the Company's stockholders.

Customarily, when newspaper publication is discontinued, the public is not notified in advance. We feel, however, that a newspaper is a public trustee. As such it should report to the public as well as to its stockholders. Our readers and the community should be given the same opportunity as its owners to produce any prompt, sound alternative to discontinuance of publication.

RICHARD N. JOHNSON, Publisher

TWO NOVELTIES BY SYMPHONY

Boston Post April 26, 1941

One Played Twice Upon Composer's Direction

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

History, of a sort, is being made at this week's Symphony Concerts. On the programme stands, as one of two novelties, Samuel Barber's "Essay for Orchestra" (the other is Benjamin Britten's Variations for string orchestra, on a theme by Frank Bridge), and it is expressly stated that Mr. Barber's piece, which runs some eight minutes, is to be played twice. It was duly repeated yesterday afternoon and applauded both times.

Back in the spring of 1926 Dr. Koussevitzky staged a double performance, or a pair of double performances, of Prokofieff's hair-raising choral piece, "Seven, They Are Seven!" but between the two hearings of it other matter intervened. Prokofieff's music was a bit hard to grasp, while Mr. Barber's is transparent enough to be absorbed immediately by a person of ordinary musical intelligence. Its title suggests scholasticism, and it may be described as the development of a single brief and by no means original motive. As did his Overture, "The School for Scandal," played at Symphony Hall earlier in the season, this "Essay" shows Mr. Barber to be an expert craftsman who writes in a highly agreeable manner. Call it pleasant and clever and the story is told.

Of far more substance, individuality and anything else you want to add, is Mr. Britten's set of variations. Three of them were omitted yesterday and they might well have replaced the rather superfluous "Da capo" of Mr. Barber. We discovered when the Zighera Orchestra played his Sinfonietta a few weeks ago that young Mr. Britten writes with real brilliance and handles the instruments with uncommon skill. Together with his countrymen, William Walton and Constant Lambert, he possesses also the talent of mimicry, witness the variations entitled "Aria Italiana."

At this next-to-the-last pair of concerts Dr. Koussevitzky first planned to play Schumann's Second Symphony, which has not been heard here in some years, but deciding that it was too long, he substituted the Fourth, one of his particular favorites. Falla's "Love, the Sorcerer," was on the original list but ultimately gave place to Mr. Barber's "Essay." The final number, Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks," was not changed. There is much that is beautiful and much that is perennially fresh in Schumann's D minor Symphony (it is also less of a symphony in the accepted sense than any of the others) and Dr. Koussevitzky conducted it con amore yesterday, emphasizing its best points and minimizing its weaknesses. Nevertheless, there was reason to regret that No. 2 had been shelved. Both it and the "Rhenish" Symphony, No. 3, are long overdue here. With "Till" the conductor was as felicitious as usual.

Britten and

Boston Herald April 26, 1941

MUSIC

By ALEXANDER WILLIAMS

Symphony Concert

The 23rd concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting, was given yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. The program was as follows:

Variations for string orchestra on a Theme by Frank Bridge Op. 10 . . Britten
Symphony No. 4 in D minor Op. 120 Schumann
Essay for Orchestra . . . . . Barber
"Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks" Op. 28 . . . . . Strauss

This was one of the best concerts of the season. The program was admirably chosen and contrasted. There were two unfamiliar and meritorious works for novelty. Finally, the concert ended with an amazingly clear and brilliant performance of "Till Eulenspiegel." That constitutes, surely, a triumphant come-back after last week's unsatisfactory excursion.

Both Messrs. Britten and Barber have an inestimable gift as composers, namely vitality of inspiration. You at once recognize that they have something to say, that they were not just writing music because they wanted to do something in the artistic line. Theirs is neither machine-made art nor sterile experimentation.

Undoubtedly the comparison ceases at this point. But it is something to be able to acclaim young contemporary composers for themselves and not feel that they are groping around for novelty at all costs or writing merely to build up a reputation in a given field. Both works were heard for the first time in Boston, and unfortunately neither composer was present to hear the sincere applause of the audience.

Mr. Britten's Variations are exceedingly attractive. They really comprise a suite, for the theme is not quickly grasped by the ear and the variations thus take on the character of independent pieces. If you studied the score, you would undoubtedly discover the inter-relationship and consequently realize that there is a deftly hidden unity. As to the character of the music itself, there is often a strong whiff of Prokofieff. That is a good influence, and Mr. Britten has his own fertility of invention to carry him past the danger of too faithfully following the model. It is plain that the English have a real creative find in Benjamin Britten.

We may agree with Mr. Koussevitzky that Americans have "got something" too in the same line with Samuel Barber. His "School for Scandal" Overture, played here earlier in the season, was good music; and this Essay is better. It is a short piece, and Mr. Koussevitzky did wisely in immediately repeating it. Heard but once, its qualities might have been forgotten.

Within its brief span it is music of dramatic contrast. In the orchestration the strings are deliberately opposed to the brass; in the material its sombre passion stands over against the satirical brilliance of the allegro section. After the second performance the piece obviously appealed to the audience and must have gratified Mr. Koussevitzky for the success of this departure from precedent.

Schumann's great Symphony was also welcome yesterday, but we need not discuss it here as it has been heard a great deal in recent seasons. The orchestra was in capital form throughout the afternoon and surpassed itself in the Strauss. "Till" wears the best of all the tone poems, and we have never heard it better played than it was yesterday. The clarity with which the inner voices of Strauss's rich polyphony emerged was nothing short of astounding. The phrasing was exquisite, the climaxes immense. These orchestral virtuosos, who are the Boston Symphony, outdid themselves. Above all it was proof of Mr. Koussevitzky's greatness as a conductor, for by no other means could such a perform-

Mostly Cloudy
Warmer Tonight

Official 2.35 P. M. Temperature
Today: 59 Year ago: 48

U. S. Weather on Page 8

Boston Evening Transcript

Today's Truth = Tomorrow's Trend

VOL. CXII NO. 95 Established 1830 WEDNESDAY, APRIL 23, 1941 ★ ★ ★

Entered as Second Class Matter at Boston Post Office

An Editorial

HAIL AND FAREWELL

Next Wednesday, April 30, we will publish the last Boston Evening Transcript. The Transcript has attempted to serve its community and its country as a newspaper fashioned after the highest ideals of journalism in a democracy.

The need for better newspapers continues. They are the foundation of our democracy and essential to our human freedoms. At their best, they are the most priceless possession that any community can have. Such a newspaper belongs to the citizens of its community just as definitely as to its owners.

You may have noticed the statement of Transcript policy which appears at the top of our editorial columns daily: "New in ideas; old in ideals."

* * *

In conformity with that policy, the Transcript in the last two years has been modernized from cover to cover. Among many innovations, it introduced Newscope as the most advanced form of daily journalism in the United States. Its foreign and national news reporting is surpassed by but few papers in this country. Steadily and unalterably, it has followed within the limitations of human error, the policy of "Truth in News," even when it hurt.

Our editorial policy has been characterized by tolerance for all views. We have never hesitated to take a clear-cut stand on controversial issues, "calling them as we saw them" regardless of majority opinion. Our commercial interests never have been allowed to sway editorial policy. Above all, our policy has been guided by a faith in our community, a love for our country and a consciousness of the importance of Christian principles.

Two significant facts indicate the interest of the younger generation in the Transcript today. The first is that three-quarters of the twenty-four individuals who invested money to reorganize the Transcript two years ago were then under forty years of age. The second is the large number of parents in their thirties and forties who are Transcript readers. They are concerned about the kind of newspaper their growing children should read. The Transcript is one of the principal sources of current event material for school children.

* * *

For 111 years the Transcript has been closely interwoven with the history and traditions of Boston and America. Throughout these years, its roots have spread deep into the fundamentals of our community life. It has encouraged the development of the arts, sciences, education and religion and has always given its full support to honest, fair and efficient government. Of its unique record, the Transcript is proud.

But tradition alone does not earn the right for continued existence. If the Transcript today were only a survival of the past, it would have no place in the life stream of the present.

What we regret and feel very deeply is the loss of what the Transcript is and stands for today; what it should be and would be tomorrow. In these dark days, more than ever before, the need is paramount for news and editorial policies which will contribute to that kind of American character and manner of life which our country was destined to have had.

We are duly conscious of our shortcomings. We have many. Most of them are the result of a necessarily limited budget.

Most newspapers, today, must meet operating costs from revenue. Transcript circulation has always been curtailed by the necessity of selling at a price higher than its immediate competitors.

* * *

In the days of lush financial advertising before 1929, a small circulation was profitable. But today a larger circulation is essential to secure adequate advertising of a general nature.

Before establishing the five-cent price in December, 1939, we made every effort to do those things necessary to establish a competitive price of two cents in order that the paper could be read by a larger number of readers. Similar efforts were made again in the last few months as it became increasingly clear that only in this way could the Transcript become permanently successful. To establish a two-cent price, we needed either more capital to carry larger losses until sufficient circulation attracted more advertising; or the assurance of enough additional advertising immediately upon the establishment of a competitive two-cent price to offset the reduction in circulation income.

* * *

Neither solution has been possible to date. For the benefit of those readers who are interested in more detail of this phase of our problem, we have printed on page 11 the management's report to the Company's stockholders.

Customarily, when newspaper publication is discontinued, the public is not notified in advance. We feel, however, that a newspaper is a public trustee. As such it should report to the public as well as to its stockholders. Our readers and the community should be given the same opportunity as its owners to produce any prompt, sound alternative to discontinuance of publication.

RICHARD N. JOHNSON, Publisher

TWO NOVELTIES BY SYMPHONY

Boston Post April 26, 1941

One Played Twice Upon Composer's Direction

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

History, of a sort, is being made at this week's Symphony Concerts. On the programme stands, as one of two novelties, Samuel Barber's "Essay for Orchestra" (the other is Benjamin Britten's Variations for string orchestra, on a theme by Frank Bridge), and it is expressly stated that Mr. Barber's piece, which runs some eight minutes, is to be played twice. It was duly repeated yesterday afternoon and applauded both times.

Back in the spring of 1926 Dr. Koussevitzky staged a double performance, or a pair of double performances, of Prokofieff's hair-raising choral piece, "Seven, They Are Seven!" but between the two hearings of it other matter intervened. Prokofieff's music was a bit hard to grasp, while Mr. Barber's is transparent enough to be absorbed immediately by a person of ordinary musical intelligence. Its title suggests scholasticism, and it may be described as the development of a single brief and by no means original motive. As did his Overture, "The School for Scandal," played at Symphony Hall earlier in the season, this "Essay" shows Mr. Barber to be an expert craftsman who writes in a highly agreeable manner. Call it pleasant and clever and the story is told.

Of far more substance, individuality and anything else you want to add, is Mr. Britten's set of variations. Three of them were omitted yesterday and they might well have replaced the rather superfluous "Da capo" of Mr. Barber. We discovered when the Zighera Orchestra played his Sinfonietta a few weeks ago that young Mr. Britten writes with real brilliance and handles the instruments with uncommon skill. Together with his countrymen, William Walton and Constant Lambert, he possesses also the talent of mimicry, witness the variations entitled "Aria Italiana."

At this next-to-the-last pair of concerts Dr. Koussevitzky first planned to play Schumann's Second Symphony, which has not been heard here in some years, but deciding that it was too long, he substituted the Fourth, one of his particular favorites. Falla's "Love, the Sorcerer," was on the original list but ultimately gave place to Mr. Barber's "Essay." The final number, Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks," was not changed. There is much that is beautiful and much that is perennially fresh in Schumann's D minor Symphony (it is also less of a symphony in the accepted sense than any of the others) and Dr. Koussevitzky conducted it con amore yesterday, emphasizing its best points and minimizing its weaknesses. Nevertheless, there was reason to regret that No. 2 had been shelved. Both it and the "Rhenish" Symphony, No. 3, are long overdue here. With "Till" the conductor was as felicitious as usual.

Britten and

Boston Herald Apr. 26, 1941

MUSIC

By ALEXANDER WILLIAMS

Symphony Concert

The 23rd concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting, was given yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. The program was as follows:

Variations for string orchestra on a Theme by Frank Bridge Op. 10...Britten
Symphony No. 4 in D minor Op. 120 ..... Schumann
Essay for Orchestra ..... Barber
"Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks" Op. 28 ..... Strauss

This was one of the best concerts of the season. The program was admirably chosen and contrasted. There were two unfamiliar and meritorious works for novelty. Finally, the concert ended with an amazingly clear and brilliant performance of "Till Eulenspiegel." That constitutes, surely, a triumphant come-back after last week's unsatisfactory excursion.

Both Messrs. Britten and Barber have an inestimable gift as composers, namely vitality of inspiration. You at once recognize that they have something to say, that they were not just writing music because they wanted to do something in the artistic line. Theirs is neither machine-made art nor sterile experimentation.

Undoubtedly the comparison ceases at this point. But it is something to be able to acclaim young contemporary composers for themselves and not feel that they are groping around for novelty at all costs or writing merely to build up a reputation in a given field. Both works were heard for the first time in Boston, and unfortunately neither composer was present to hear the sincere applause of the audience.

Mr. Britten's Variations are exceedingly attractive. They really comprise a suite, for the theme is not quickly grasped by the ear and the variations thus take on the character of independent pieces. If you studied the score, you would undoubtedly discover the inter-relationship and consequently realize that there is a deftly hidden unity. As to the character of the music itself, there is often a strong whiff of Prokofieff. That is a good influence, and Mr. Britten has his own fertility of invention to carry him past the danger of too faithfully following the model. It is plain that the English have a real creative find in Benjamin Britten.

We may agree with Mr. Koussevitzky that Americans have "got something" too in the same line with Samuel Barber. His "School for Scandal" Overture, played here earlier in the season, was good music; and this Essay is better. It is a short piece, and Mr. Koussevitzky did wisely in immediately repeating it. Heard but once, its qualities might have been forgotten.

Within its brief span it is music of dramatic contrast. In the orchestration the strings are deliberately opposed to the brass; in the material its sombre passion stands over against the satirical brilliance of the allegro section. After the second performance the piece obviously appealed to the audience and must have gratified Mr. Koussevitzky for the success of this departure from precedent.

Schumann's great Symphony was also welcome yesterday, but we need not discuss it here as it has been heard a great deal in recent seasons. The orchestra was in capital form throughout the afternoon and surpassed itself in the Strauss. "Till" wears the best of all the tone poems, and we have never heard it better played than it was yesterday. The clarity with which the inner voices of Strauss's rich polyphony emerged was nothing short of astounding. The phrasing was exquisite, the climaxes immense. These orchestral virtuosos, who are the Boston Symphony, outdid themselves. Above all it was proof of Mr. Koussevitzky's greatness as a conductor, for by no other means could such a perform-

MUSIC AND MUSICIANS

Season's End for Boston Symphony

The 60th year of the Boston Symphony Orchestra is ended. Ended, that is, for the full orchestra, for Boston and the sort of programs which in part make these concerts what they are. We shall not go without music. For two months we shall have the lighter pleasures of the Pops, then—presumably—a few weeks of open-air concerts on the Charles River Esplanade before the orchestra reconvenes at "Tanglewood" for the nine programs of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

For some years the artistic fortunes of this great orchestra have remained constant. In excellence of ensemble and individuals, in discipline, technic and sheer splendor of sound the Boston Symphony remains at what is probably the highest peak of its history. Serge Koussevitzky continues to occupy his unique position among the world's foremost conductors, an artist of extraordinary magnetism, imagination and interpretive brilliance. His position is unique because, of the other first rank orchestras now existing—and they are all on this side of the Atlantic—there is no other governed artistically by one man throughout its main season.

Does Boston recognize its own fabulous good fortune? The answer must essentially be yes. All four subscription series at Symphony Hall are well attended. So is that in Sanders Theatre at Harvard. The Society of Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra loyally pay the inevitable deficit.

But if the answer is yes, how account for the obviously smaller support of the pension fund for retired players? Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis," presented for this purpose only a week ago, did not attract sufficient numbers to fill the hall. Why? Surely not entirely because people avoid such a great score. Revival of the "St. Matthew" Passion of Bach five years ago did not bring the response deserved. Going farther back, there were empty seats when Mr. Koussevitzky, the orchestra and the Radcliffe and Harvard singers gave the first performances of Bach's B minor Mass. In subsequent years, as the Mass grew more popular, attendance improved until finally it achieved the distinction of becoming a "sell-out."

One must, then, assume reluctant conviction that the public is unworthily indifferent to the pension fund. If the cause itself and the standard of music and performance received just recognition, every subscriber to the four series would buy at least one ticket to pension fund concerts.

Fundamentally, the season past has not differed from its immediate predecessors, except that we have had more guest conductors. Desire Dafauw was clearly outstanding among them. As conductor, Richard Burgin, the concert master, has for several years shown maturing technic and interpretive powers. It was interesting to hear Darius Milhaud and Igor Stravinsky, both of whom are primarily composers; Stanley Chapple and Eugene Goossens.

More interesting novelties appeared than in the season before. Samuel Barber's "School for Scandal" Overture and ingenious "Essay for Orchestra" led us to expect much of this young American composer, whose style is not yet completely individual. Precisely the same term is applicable to the Englishman, Benjamin Britten, also young, whose Variations for Strings on a Theme of Frank Bridge were the first of his music to be heard at these concerts.

Among the older, established composers Stravinsky himself gave us his unorthodox and fascinating Symphony in C major, and M. Milhaud directed a trio of ponderable original works—"Funeral March," "Provencal Suite" and "Pastoral Fantasy." Aaron Copland's "Quiet City" was worthy of him. Walter Piston's Violin Concerto is a valuable score, and the Cello Concerto of Hindemith merits further hearings. The list of rewarding novelties must include Mr. Koussevitzky's Bach transcription, the two Bach Clavier Concertos, Handel's "Fireworks" Music, Villa-Lobos Choros "Rasga-Coracao," and the Arnold Bax Overture to a Picaresque Comedy. One terms the Bach and Handel novelties because they had not been given before at these concerts.

Arthur Shepherd's Symphony, the Concert Piece of Henriette Bosmans, Roy Harris' "Folk Song" Symphony, the Symphony by Eugene Goossens, and Schoenberg's orchestration of the Brahms G minor Piano Quartet, Op. 25 were all disappointing, and except the Harris and Schoenberg, notably dull.

Of the music which was not new yet infrequently performed in other seasons, Mahler's Ninth Symphony, the "Faust" Symphony by Liszt, Rachmaninoff's Third Piano Concerto and the Third Symphony of Nicolai Berezowsky gave at least this writer a good deal of enjoyment. Shostakovitch's barren Fifth Symphony, one hopes, will be left to slumber, along with the Stravinsky Violin Concerto.

Fiedler Begins 56th Pops Season at Symphony Hall Tuesday Evening

Musical proof that Spring has again come to Boston will be found at Symphony Hall Tuesday evening, where Arthur Fiedler will begin the 56th season of Pop concerts. This will be Mr. Fiedler's 12th year as conductor. Under his regime the Pops have reached unprecedented favor with the public.

This Spring there will be an orchestra of about 90 Boston Symphony men. Symphony Hall will again be in Summer dress, and refreshments will be served at the tables on the floor of the hall. Concerts begin at 8:30.

Programs for the first week are as follows:

Tuesday, Opening Night — "Semper Fidelis," march, Sousa; Overture to "Orpheus in Hades," Offenbach; Minuet from "The Daughter of the Regiment," Donizetti; "Die Meistersinger," Excerpts from Act III, Wagner; "The Incredible Flutist," suite, Piston; triumphal march from "Peter and the Wolf," Prokofieff; Rumanian Rhapsody, No. 1, Enesco; "Music of the Spheres," waltzes, Josef Strauss; Andalucia, Lecuona-Gould; "Oxford Street," march from "London Again," Eric Coates.

Wednesday—Entrance of the Guests into the Wartburg, from "Tannhaeuser," Wagner; Overture to "The Merry Wives of Windsor," Nicolai; "Molly on the Shore," Grainger; "Aida," Fantasia, Verdi; "Peer Gynt" suite, Grieg; "Drink to Me Only with Thine Eyes," for string orchestra, arranged by Pochon; Overture to "Rienzi," Wagner; "Roses from the South," waltzes, Strauss; Intermezzo, "Souvenir of Vienna," Prevost; First Hungarian Dance, Brahms.

Thursday — Polonaise from "Eugene Onlegin," Tchaikovsky; Overture to "Poet and Peasant," Suppe; "Entrance of the

Music and Musicians

Continued on Page 52

SYMPHONY HALL—COM. 1492
56th SEASON OPENS
TUESDAY at 8:30
POPS
ARTHU
MA
Sole
MON.
TICK

Boston Symphony Season

By L. A. Sloper

The Boston Symphony Orchestra closes its sixtieth season with the concerts of this week. The organization continues at the peak of its technical and artistic powers. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, in his seventeenth season as conductor, has maintained his high standards in programs. As in other recent years, "world premieres" have been fewer than formerly; but that presumably is because fewer challenging works are being written nowadays. Novelties continue to hold a place beside standard works and revivals.

Of the three works heard this year for the first time anywhere, Paul Hindemith's Cello Concerto seemed a rather arid intellectual product, Mario Castelnuovo-Tedesco's "Cipressi" was nostalgically impressionistic, and Dr. Koussevitzky's transcription for wind instruments of Bach's Prelude and Fugue in C major (No. 17) was notable for its restraint and its faithfulness to the composer's musical thought.

Eighteen works were played for the first time at these concerts. Two of these revealed oncoming talents of great promise: Benjamin Britten's Variations for String Orchestra on a Theme by Frank Bridge and Samuel Barber's "Essay for Orchestra." Each of these young composers, one British, one American, displayed a significant musical individuality.

Another work that was striking, though in another sense, was the "Chôros No. 10" of the Brazilian Villa-Lobos. This seemed like a belated "Sept, Ils Sont Sept," with a South American accent. Roy Harris' Folk-Song Symphony was a not entirely successful attempt to reconcile the elements of popular song and symphonic composition, for popular use. Bax's "Overture to a Picaresque Comedy" showed the composer in a boisterous instead of a mystical mood. Aaron Copland's "Quiet City" seemed to suffer by its divorce from the play which it was written to accompany.

There were several distinguished guest conductors. Igor Stravinsky offered his symphony in C major, the "Baiser de la Fée" Divertimento, and Tchaikovsky's Second Symphony. Désiré Defauw made an excellent impression in a program made up of music by Franck, Grétry, Falla, and Beethoven (the Seventh Symphony). Darius Milhaud directed three compositions of his own, of which "Le Cortège Funèbre," composed last May, was a touching reminder of the immediate reason for his presence in the United States. Stanley Chapple submitted a lively program of works by Elgar, Delius, and Bax, and the Brahms Fourth Symphony. Eugène Goossens conducted his new Symphony, and Arthur Shepherd his Second Symphony.

Among the soloists, the most conspicuous success was scored by Vladimir Horowitz, returning after a long absence to play again the Third Piano Concerto of Rachmaninoff. Gregor Piatigorsky was warmly applauded for his performance in the Hindemith Concerto, and so was Nathan Milstein in the Stravinsky Violin Concerto.

The most treasurable musical experience of the season, however, was, for this listener, the performance of two Bach Concertos for two pianos (C minor and C major) and string orchestra. Conductor, soloists (Abram Chasins and J. M. Sanromá), and the string choirs were united in their understanding and revelation of these scores.

Eighty-six works altogether were listed during the season. By exception, Mozart led in number of works played, with six. Brahms was second with five, and Beethoven, Sibelius, and Stravinsky had four each.

For the final program of the year (May 2-3) Dr. Koussevitzky chose a Suite for Strings by Corelli, two of Satie's "Gymnopédies" (orchestrated by Debussy), Debussy's "La Mer," and the Brahms First Symphony.

The regular season will be follow cer

THE BOSTON DA

In the first three weeks of under the direction of Dr.
vitzky, the orchestra will annual Berkshire Symphon tival at "Tanglewood," near Mass. There will be thre of three concerts each.

SYMPHONY PLAYERS GO SWINGY—"Gone With the Woodwinds" is the title of a program to be presented at Hotel Vendome next Monday evening for the benefit of South End Music School, in which staid, dignified players of the Boston Symphony will go jazzy. Here are a couple of them putting the old oomph into a rhumba at Symphony Hall yesterday. Jesus Sanroma, noted pianist (at left) and Roger Voisin.

Boston MUSIC Globe April 19, 1941

SYMPHONY HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Aaron Copland's "Quiet City" was played for the first time in Boston yesterday at the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The work stood first on a program that contained the "Romantic" Symphony by Howard Hanson and three Wagner excerpts: the Overture to "The Flying Dutchman," the Prelude to "Parsifal" and the Overture to "Tannhaeuser." Serge Koussevitzky conducted.

Taken as a whole this was one of the least effective programs Mr. Koussevitzky has given us. Copland's new music proved well worth hearing, but the Symphony of Hanson, with all its sentimental lushness, is second rate and the operatic excerpts proved a rather indigestible chunk of Wagner. Do not misunderstand. As a devout Wagnerian this reviewer always welcomes his music, but two overtures and a prelude lumped together are scarcely an artistic choice, especially when the solemnities of "Parsifal" are squeezed between the virile fury of "The Flying Dutchman" and "Tannhaeuser."

"Quiet City" is oddly but very cleverly scored for solo English horn and trumpet against a background of massed strings. The combination is fascinating. It produces some lovely sounds. Mr. Copland's writing is neat, spare, comfortably between harmonic richness and dissonance. "Quiet City" is, of course, a concert work, intended to be heard for and by itself, although the material is based on themes used by Mr. Copland in his incidental score (for trumpet, clarinet, saxophone and piano) to the stage play "Quiet City," by Irwin Shaw.

Yet Mr. Copland wrote what is essentially theatre music, a score of mood and feeling. Not that it fails to make effect as an abstract symphonic piece, because it does to a degree. But through its course one had the constant impression of how superbly it could emphasize the action of a play.

Mr. Copland would surely have been pleased had he been present yesterday to hear the virtuoso performance and brilliant interpretation. Mr. Speyer's playing of the English horn, and that of Mr. Mager in the trumpet part, were splendid.

Little can be written of Hanson's "Romantic" Symphony not already put in print. The score is competently written for large orchestra, but trivial in ideas and notably derivative. Sentimentality rules most of the time, reminding you of Vernon Blackburn's declaration that a tune is a melody become overripe. Due to Mr. Koussevitzky's intense reading, and the fine caliber of the orchestra, the Symphony was given a specious brilliance, another example of music being made to sound better than it actually is.

Of the Wagner group, this reviewer enjoyed best the "Parsifal" Prelude. The two overtures were fussed over and blown up almost to the point of distortion.

Mr. Koussevitzky received a gracious and prolonged welcome when he first appeared upon the stage, no doubt in recognition of his newly acquired American citizenship. The orchestra rose to greet him and the audience applauded even more than usual. The tribute was appropriate, and served to emphasize the esteem with which he is regarded.

Next week the program will be: Benjamin Britten: Variations for strings on a Theme by Frank Bridge; Schumann: Fourth Symphony (Mr. Koussevitzky has substituted the Fourth for the Schumann Second announced in the program book); Manuel de Falla: Suite from "Love the Sorcerer"; Strauss: "Till Eulenspiegel."—C. W. D.

KESDAY. PRIL 30, 1941

SHOW HONORS TO CONDUCTOR

Boston Post
April 19, 1941

Orchestra and Audience Rise to New American

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

Serge Koussevitzky, who became an American citizen last Wednesday, conducted compositions by two fellow-Americans, Aaron Copland's "Quiet City," and Howard Hanson's "Romantic" Symphony, at the Symphony Concert of yesterday afternoon. When the conductor first came upon the stage the orchestra stood and applauded and the audience, many members of which may not have known what all the fuss was about, applauded much more heartily than usual.

After the intermission Dr. Koussevitzky led his men through three Wagnerian introductions, the Overture to "The Flying Dutchman," the Prelude to "Parsifal," and the Overture to "Tannhaeuser." Hs grandiose reading of the "Tannhaeuser" Overture's closing pages won him another ovation, although the real climax, not only of the Wagner, but of the entire concert, was the singularly impressive performance of the "Parsifal" Prelude.

"The Flying Dutchman" Overture had stirring moments, such as the electrifying opening, but taken as a whole, it was a bit studied and self-conscious; also uncomfortably brassy in spots. It would not be strictly accurate to say that Dr. Koussevitzky is a great interpreter of Wagner—or that he is not. He is likely to prove one and quite as likely not to. The up-and-down-ness of his Wagner yesterday was a case in point.

Getting back to Messrs. Copland and Hanson, the former's "Quiet City," scored for trumpet, English horn and strings, is drawn from music for a stage play (by Irwin Shaw) but stands very well by itself, while Mr. Hanson's Second Symphony sounds much of the time like the score for a movie which does not exist. It might also be said of "Quiet City," heard yesterday for the first time in Boston, that it is very nice as far as it goes but doesn't go very far. It is mostly mood, yet there is in it a fine and sensitive quality and there is a climax of considerable intensity. Incidentally, it offered Mr. Mager and Mr. Speyer, particularly the former, a fine opportunity to shine. Dr. Koussevitzky had them both rise in acknowledgment of the applause.

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR,

Symphony Orchestra Players 'Swin

By a Staff Photographer

Nothing 'Classical' About This Rehearsal

Here are members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra caught by the cameraman as they rehearse a surprise program. Under the title of "Gone With the Woodwinds," a concert will be given at the Hotel Vendome, Boston, on Monday evening, May 5, for the benefit of the South End Music School. In the front row, the man on the extreme left banging the piano is Jesus Sanroma, concert soloist; center is Henri Erkelens, violinist, while at the extreme right Harry Dubbs acts as conductor (he plays a violin in the Symphony). Center row (left to right) starts with Roger Voisin, trumpeter; Ludwig Juht, virtuoso soloist on the double bass; Rene Voisin, trumpeter; P. Cardillo, clarinetist; Alvin Ball, trumpeter. Then, in order, come Roland Tapley, Clarence Knudsen, and Gaston Dufresne, playing saxophones. In the Symphony Mr. Tapley and Mr. Knudsen play violins, while Mr. Dufresne performs on the double bass. At the end of the row comes Sam Diamond, violinist. In the background with trombones are Lucien Hansotte and Vinal Smith.

MUSIC AND MUSICIANS

Season's End for Boston Symphony

The 60th year of the Boston Symphony Orchestra is ended. Ended, that is, for the full orchestra, for Boston and the sort of programs which in part make these concerts what they are. We shall not go without music. For two months we shall have the lighter pleasures of the Pops, then—presumably—a few weeks of open-air concerts on the Charles River Esplanade before the orchestra reconvenes at "Tanglewood" for the nine programs of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

For some years the artistic fortunes of this great orchestra have remained constant. In excellence of ensemble and individuals, in discipline, technic and sheer splendor of sound the Boston Symphony remains at what is probably the highest peak of its history. Serge Koussevitzky continues to occupy his unique position among the world's foremost conductors, an artist of extraordinary magnetism, imagination and interpretive brilliance. His position is unique because, of the other first rank orchestras now existing—and they are all on this side of the Atlantic—there is no other governed artistically by one man throughout its main season.

Does Boston recognize its own fabulous good fortune? The answer must essentially be yes. All four subscription series at Symphony Hall are well attended. So is that in Sanders Theatre at Harvard. The Society of Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra loyally pay the inevitable deficit.

But if the answer is yes, how account for the obviously smaller support of the pension fund for retired players? Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis," presented for this purpose only a week ago, did not attract sufficient numbers to fill the hall. Why? Surely not entirely because people avoid such a great score. Revival of the "St. Matthew" Passion of Bach five years ago did not bring the response deserved. Going farther back, there were empty seats when Mr. Koussevitzky, the orchestra and the Radcliffe and Harvard singers gave the first performances of Bach's B minor Mass. In subsequent years, as the Mass grew more popular, attendance improved until finally it achieved the distinction of becoming a "sell-out."

One must, then, assume reluctant conviction that the public is unworthily indifferent to the pension fund. If the cause itself and the standard of music and performance received just recognition, every subscriber to the four series would buy at least one ticket to pension fund concerts.

Fundamentally, the season past has not differed from its immediate predecessors, except that we have had more guest conductors. Desire Dafauw was clearly outstanding among them. As conductor, Richard Burgin, the concert master, has for several years shown maturing technic and interpretive powers. It was interesting to hear Darius Milhaud and Igor Stravinsky, both of whom are primarily composers; Stanley Chapple and Eugene Goossens.

More interesting novelties appeared than in the season before. Samuel Barber's "School for Scandal" Overture and ingenious "Essay for Orchestra" led us to expect much of this young American composer, whose style is not yet completely individual. Precisely the same term is applicable to the Englishman, Benjamin Britten, also young, whose Variations for Strings on a Theme of Frank Bridge were the first of his music to be heard at these concerts.

Among the older, established composers Stravinsky himself gave us his unorthodox and fascinating Symphony in C major, and M. Milhaud directed a trio of ponderable original works—"Funeral March," "Provencal Suite" and "Pastoral Fantasy." Aaron Copland's "Quiet City" was worthy of him. Walter Piston's Violin Concerto is a valuable score, and the Cello Concerto of Hindemith merits further hearings. The list of rewarding novelties must include Mr. Koussevitzky's Bach transcription, the two Bach Clavier Concertos, Handel's "Fireworks" Music, Villa-Lobos Choros "Rasga-Coracao," and the Arnold Bax Overture to a Picaresque Comedy. One terms the Bach and Handel novelties because they had not been given before at these concerts.

Arthur Shepherd's Symphony, the Concert Piece of Henriette Bosmans, Roy Harris' "Folk Song" Symphony, the Symphony by Eugene Goossens, and Schoenberg's orchestration of the Brahms G minor Piano Quartet, Op. 25 were all disappointing, and except the Harris and Schoenberg, notably dull.

Of the music which was not new yet infrequently performed in other seasons, Mahler's Ninth Symphony, the "Faust" Symphony by Liszt, Rachmaninoff's Third Piano Concerto and the Third Symphony of Nicolai Berezowsky gave at least this writer a good deal of enjoyment. Shostakovitch's barren Fifth Symphony, one hopes, will be left to slumber, along with the Stravinsky Violin Concerto.

Fiedler Begins 56th Pops Season at Symphony Hall Tuesday Evening

Musical proof that Spring has again come to Boston will be found at Symphony Hall Tuesday evening, where Arthur Fiedler will begin the 56th season of Pop concerts. This will be Mr. Fiedler's 12th year as conductor. Under his regime the Pops have reached unprecedented favor with the public.

This Spring there will be an orchestra of about 90 Boston Symphony men. Symphony Hall will again be in Summer dress, and refreshments will be served at the tables on the floor of the hall. Concerts begin at 8:30.

Programs for the first week are as follows:

Tuesday, Opening Night — "Semper Fidelis," march, Sousa: Overture to "Orpheus in Hades," Offenbach: Minuet from "The Daughter of the Regiment," Donizetti: "Die Meistersinger," Excerpts from Act III, Wagner: "The Incredible Flutist," suite, Piston: triumphal march from "Peter and the Wolf," Prokofiet: Rumanian Rhapsody, No. 1, Enesco: "Music of the Spheres," waltzes, Josef Strauss: Andalucia, Lecuona-Gould: "Oxford Street," march from "London Again," Eric Coates.

Wednesday—Entrance of the Guests into the Wartburg, from "Tannhaeuser," Wagner: Overture to "The Merry Wives of Windsor," Nicolai: "Molly on the Shore," Grainger: "Aida," Fantasia, Verdi: "Peer Gynt" suite, Grieg: "Drink to Me Only with Thine Eyes," for string orchestra, arranged by Pochon: Overture to "Rienzi," Wagner: "Roses from the South," waltzes, Strauss: Intermezzo, "Souvenir of Vienna," Prevost: First Hungarian Dance, Brahms.

Thursday — Polonaise from "Eugene Onegin," Tchaikovsky: Overture to "Poet and Peasant," Suppe: "Entrance of the

Music and Musicians

Continued on Page 52

SYMPHONY HALL—COM. 1492
56th SEASON OPENS
TUESDAY at 8:30
POPS
ARTHU
MA
Sol
MON.
TICK

Boston Symphony Season

By L. A. Sloper

The Boston Symphony Orchestra closes its sixtieth season with the concerts of this week. The organization continues at the peak of its technical and artistic powers. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, in his seventeenth season as conductor, has maintained his high standards in programs. As in other recent years, "world premieres" have been fewer than formerly; but that presumably is because fewer challenging works are being written nowadays. Novelties continue to hold a place beside standard works and revivals.

Of the three works heard this year for the first time anywhere, Paul Hindemith's Cello Concerto seemed a rather arid intellectual product, Mario Castelnuovo-Tedesco's "Cipressi" was nostalgically impressionistic, and Dr. Koussevitzky's transcription for wind instruments of Bach's Prelude and Fugue in C major (No. 17) was notable for its restraint and its faithfulness to the composer's musical thought.

Eighteen works were played for the first time at these concerts. Two of these revealed oncoming talents of great promise: Benjamin Britten's Variations for String Orchestra on a Theme by Frank Bridge and Samuel Barber's "Essay for Orchestra." Each of these young composers, one British, one American, displayed a significant musical individuality.

Another work that was striking, though in another sense, was the "Chôros No. 10" of the Brazilian Villa-Lobos. This seemed like a belated "Sept, Ils Sont Sept," with a South American accent. Roy Harris' Folk-Song Symphony was a not entirely successful attempt to reconcile the elements of popular song and symphonic composition, for popular use. Bax's "Overture to a Picaresque Comedy" showed the composer in a boisterous instead of a mystical mood. Aaron Copland's "Quiet City" seemed to suffer by its divorce from the play which it was written to accompany.

There were several distinguished guest conductors. Igor Stravinsky offered his symphony in C major, the "Baiser de la Fée" Divertimento, and Tchaikovsky's Second Symphony. Désiré Defauw made an excellent impression in a program made up of music by Franck, Grétry, Falla, and Beethoven (the Seventh Symphony). Darius Milhaud directed three compositions of his own, of which "Le Cortège Funèbre," composed last May, was a touching reminder of the immediate reason for his presence in the United States. Stanley Chapple submitted a lively program of works by Elgar, Delius, and Bax, and the Brahms Fourth Symphony. Eugène Goossens conducted his new Symphony, and Arthur Shepherd his Second Symphony.

Among the soloists, the most conspicuous success was scored by Vladimir Horowitz, returning after a long absence to play again the Third Piano Concerto of Rachmaninoff. Gregor Piatigorsky was warmly applauded for his performance in the Hindemith Concerto, and so was Nathan Milstein in the Stravinsky Violin Concerto.

The most treasurable musical experience of the season, however, was, for this listener, the performance of two Bach Concertos for two pianos (C minor and C major) and string orchestra. Conductor, soloists (Abram Chasins and J. M. Sanromá), and the string choirs were united in their understanding and revelation of these scores.

Eighty-six works altogether were listed during the season. By exception, Mozart led in number of works played, with six. Brahms was second with five, and Beethoven, Sibelius, and Stravinsky had four each.

For the final program of the year (May 2-3) Dr. Koussevitzky chose a Suite for Strings by Corelli, two of Satie's "Gymnopédies" (orchestrated by Debussy), Debussy's "La Mer," and the Brahms First Symphony.

The regular season will be fol[lo]w[ed] by [a] cer[ies] of three concerts each.

In the first three weeks of under the direction of Dr. [K]itzky, the orchestra will annual Berkshire Symphon[y] tival at "Tanglewood," near Mass. There will be thre

Boston MUSIC
SYMPHONY HALL
Boston Symphony Orchestra

12¼	11	Boston & Maine	200	11¾
10¼	16	Borg Warner(.40E)	1300	16⅛
10¼	18⅝	Borden Co (.30E)	100	19⅛
2¼	18⅝	Bond Strs (1.60)	200	18⅜
24	43¾	Bon Ami B(2½a)†	20	44⅛
5	26⅜	Boeing Airplane	2200	27¼
8⅝	13	Boeing Airplane	2200	13⅜
0¼	6⅝	Blaw Knox (.15E)	700	7
8	23¼	Bigelow San (1E)	400	24⅝
1¾	121¼	Beth Steel 7 pf (7)	300	122¼
9⅛	69	Beth Steel (1¾E)	4000	70⅜
0⅛	19¼	Benefical (.45E)	100	19⅝
7⅛	33	Bendix Avia (2E)	1200	33⅛
1⅛	28⅜	Beech Crk R (2)†	10	30⅛
4⅛	22	Beat Cream (1a)	100	22
4⅛	18⅜	Bath Ir Wks (⅛E)	2800	21⅛
9⅜	7⅛	Barnsdall (.15E)	400	8¼
8⅛	6⅝	Barker Bros (⅜e)	300	7
0⅛	7⅛	Barber Asph (⅜e)	700	7¾
7⅛	4⅛	Balt & Ohio pf	700	6
4⅛	31⅛	Baltimore & Ohio	700	3⅜
9	13	Baldwin cfts	1000	13¼
5¼	2⅜	Aviation Corp	7700	2⅜
7	6	Atlas Tack (.15E)	600	6⅜
8⅛	111⅛	Atlas Powd pr(5)†	10	111⅛
9⅛	47⅛	Atlas Corp pr (3)	100	49⅛
7⅛	6⅝	Atlas Corp (⅛E)	1200	6⅝
4¼	20⅜	Atl Refining (1)	1300	23⅛
9	16⅛	Atl Gulf & W I pr	400	27
0¼	13⅛	Atl Coast Line	2100	18⅛
0	60¼	Atch T&SF pr (5)	200	66⅛
8	18	Atch T&SF (1E)	6400	25⅞
6⅛	92¼	Assoc Inv pr (5)†	60	93⅛
5⅛	29	Assoc Invest (2)	100	29
7	79⅛	Ass'd D G 1st pr(6)	100	81⅛
7⅛	5⅝	Ass'd Dry Gds	300	6⅛
8⅛	6⅜	Arnold Cons (⅛E)	500	7
1⅜	26⅜	Armstrong C (⅛E)	400	27⅛
8	47⅛	Armour Ill pr pr	500	53
5⅛	4¼	Armour Ill	3800	4⅛
4¼	11⅛	Anchor Hck (.30E)	300	11⅛
5	26	Anac W & C(½E)†	150	26⅛
7⅜	22⅛	Anaconda (½E)	4100	23⅜
8	5	Am Zinc & Lead	600	5⅛
0⅛	51	Am Woolen pr(2k)	400	54⅛
8⅛	6¼	Am Woolen	700	6⅜
7⅛	4⅛	Am Water Works	1400	4⅜
7	4⅛	Am Type Frds	900	4⅛
9	147⅛	Am Tob pr (6)	100	150⅜
4⅛	67¼	Am Tobacco B (5)	900	68⅛
3⅛	67	Am Tobacco (5)	200	67
8⅜	156	Am Tel & Tel (9)	1700	158
9	13	Am Sugar (½E)	200	15⅛
8⅛	19¼	Am Steel Fd (½E)	1100	20⅛
5⅛	34	Am Smelting (½E)	900	34⅝
0	30	Am Shipbldg (1E)†	320	35⅞

SYMPHONY PLAYERS GO SWINGY—"Gone With the Woodwinds" is the title of a program to be presented at Hotel Vendome next Monday evening for the benefit of South End Music School, in which staid, dignified players of the Boston Symphony will go jazzy. Here are a couple of them putting the old oomph into a rhumba at Symphony Hall yesterday. Jesus Sanroma, noted pianist (at left) and Roger Voisin.

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR,

Symphony Orchestra Players 'Swin

By a Staff Photographer

Nothing 'Classical' About This Rehearsal

Here are members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra caught by the cameraman as they rehearse a surprise program. Under the title of "Gone With the Woodwinds," a concert will be given at the Hotel Vendome, Boston, on Monday evening, May 5, for the benefit of the South End Music School. In the front row, the man on the extreme left banging the piano is Jesus Sanroma, concert soloist; center is Henri Erkelens, violinist, while at the extreme right Harry Dubbs acts as conductor (he plays a violin in the Symphony). Center row (left to right) starts with Roger Voisin, trumpeter; Ludwig Juht, virtuoso soloist on the double bass; Rene Voisin, trumpeter; P. Cardillo, clarinetist; Alvin Ball, trumpeter. Then, in order, come Roland Tapley, Clarence Knudsen, and Gaston Dufresne, playing saxophones. In the Symphony Mr. Tapley and Mr. Knudsen play violins, while Mr. Dufresne performs on the double bass. At the end of the row comes Sam Diamond, violinist. In the background with trombones are Lucien Hansotte and Vinal Smith.

SHOW HONORS TO CONDUCTOR

BOSTON POST
April 19, 1941

Orchestra and Audience Rise to New American

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

Serge Koussevitzky, who became an American citizen last Wednesday, conducted compositions by two fellow-Americans, Aaron Copland's "Quiet City," and Howard Hanson's "Romantic" Symphony, at the Symphony Concert of yesterday afternoon. When the conductor first came upon the stage the orchestra stood and applauded and the audience, many members of which may not have known what all the fuss was about, applauded much more heartily than usual.

After the intermission Dr. Koussevitzky led his men through three Wagnerian introductions, the Overture to "The Flying Dutchman," the Prelude to "Parsifal," and the Overture to Tannhaeuser." His grandiose reading of the "Tannhaeuser" Overture's closing pages won him another ovation, although the real climax, not only of the Wagner, but of the entire concert, was the singularly impressive performance of the "Parsifal" Prelude.

"The Flying Dutchman" Overture had stirring moments, such as the electrifying opening, but taken as a whole, it was a bit studied and self-conscious; also uncomfortably brassy in spots. It would not be strictly accurate to say that Dr. Koussevitzky is a great interpreter of Wagner—or that he is not. He is likely to prove one and quite as likely not to. The up-and-down-ness of his Wagner yesterday was a case in point.

Getting back to Messrs. Copland and Hanson, the former's "Quiet City," scored for trumpet, English horn and strings, is drawn from music for a stage play (by Irwin Shaw) but stands very well by itself, while Mr. Hanson's Second Symphony sounds much of the time like the score for a movie which does not exist. It might also be said of "Quiet City," heard yesterday for the first time in Boston, that it is very nice as far as it goes but doesn't go very far. It is mostly mood, yet there is in it a fine and sensitive quality and there is a climax of considerable intensity. Incidentally, it offered Mr. Mager and Mr. Speyer, particularly the former, a fine opportunity to shine. Dr. Koussevitzky had them both rise in acknowledgment of the applause.

MUSIC AND MUSICIANS

Season's End for Boston Symphony

The 60th year of the Boston Symphony Orchestra is ended. Ended, that is, for the full orchestra, for Boston and the sort of programs which in part make these concerts what they are. We shall not go without music. For two months we shall have the lighter pleasures of the Pops, then—presumably—a few weeks of open-air concerts on the Charles River Esplanade before the orchestra reconvenes at "Tanglewood" for the nine programs of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

For some years the artistic fortunes of this great orchestra have remained constant. In excellence of ensemble and individuals, in discipline, technic and sheer splendor of sound the Boston Symphony remains at what is probably the highest peak of its history. Serge Koussevitzky continues to occupy his unique position among the world's foremost conductors, an artist of extraordinary magnetism, imagination and interpretive brilliance. His position is unique because, of the other first rank orchestras now existing—and they are all on this side of the Atlantic—there is no other governed artistically by one man throughout its main season.

Does Boston recognize its own fabulous good fortune? The answer must essentially be yes. All four subscription series at Symphony Hall are well attended. So is that in Sanders Theatre at Harvard. The Society of Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra loyally pay the inevitable deficit.

But if the answer is yes, how account for the obviously smaller support of the pension fund for retired players? Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis," presented for this purpose only a week ago, did not attract sufficient numbers to fill the hall. Why? Surely not entirely because people avoid such a great score. Revival of the "St. Matthew" Passion of Bach five years ago did not bring the response deserved. Going farther back, there were empty seats when Mr. Koussevitzky, the orchestra and the Radcliffe and Harvard singers gave the first performances of Bach's B minor Mass. In subsequent years, as the Mass grew more popular, attendance improved until finally it achieved the distinction of becoming a "sell-out."

One must, then, assume reluctant conviction that the public is unworthily indifferent to the pension fund. If the cause itself and the standard of music and performance received just recognition, every subscriber to the four series would buy at least one ticket to pension fund concerts.

Fundamentally, the season past has not differed from its immediate predecessors, except that we have had more guest conductors. Desire Dafauw was clearly outstanding among them. As conductor, Richard Burgin, the concert master, has for several years shown maturing technic and interpretive powers. It was interesting to hear Darius Milhaud and Igor Stravinsky, both of whom are primarily composers; Stanley Chapple and Eugene Goossens.

More interesting novelties appeared than in the season before. Samuel Barber's "School for Scandal" Overture and ingenious "Essay for Orchestra" led us to expect much of this young American composer, whose style is not yet completely individual. Precisely the same term is applicable to the Englishman, Benjamin Britten, also young, whose Variations for Strings on a Theme of Frank Bridge were the first of his music to be heard at these concerts.

Among the older, established composers Stravinsky himself gave us his unorthodox and fascinating Symphony in C major, and M. Milhaud directed a trio of ponderable original works—"Funeral March," "Provencal Suite" and "Pastoral Fantasy." Aaron Copland's "Quiet City" was worthy of him. Walter Piston's Violin Concerto is a valuable score, and the Cello Concerto of Hindemith merits further hearings. The list of rewarding novelties must include Mr. Koussevitzky's Bach transcription, the two Bach Clavier Concertos, Handel's "Fireworks" Music, Villa-Lobos Choros "Rasga-Coracao," and the Arnold Bax Overture to a Picaresque Comedy. One terms the Bach and Handel novelties because they had not been given before at these concerts.

Arthur Shepherd's Symphony, the Concert Piece of Henriette Bosmans, Roy Harris' "Folk Song" Symphony, the Symphony by Eugene Goossens, and Schoenberg's orchestration of the Brahms G minor Piano Quartet, Op. 25 were all disappointing, and except the Harris and Schoenberg, notably dull.

Of the music which was not new yet infrequently performed in other seasons, Mahler's Ninth Symphony, the "Faust" Symphony by Liszt, Rachmaninoff's Third Piano Concerto and the Third Symphony of Nicolai Berezowsky gave at least this writer a good deal of enjoyment. Shostakovitch's barren Fifth Symphony, one hopes, will be left to slumber, along with the Stravinsky Violin Concerto.

Fiedler Begins 56th Pops Season at Symphony Hall Tuesday Evening

Musical proof that Spring has again come to Boston will be found at Symphony Hall Tuesday evening, where Arthur Fiedler will begin the 56th season of Pop concerts. This will be Mr. Fiedler's 12th year as conductor. Under his regime the Pops have reached unprecedented favor with the public.

This Spring there will be an orchestra of about 90 Boston Symphony men. Symphony Hall will again be in Summer dress, and refreshments will be served at the tables on the floor of the hall. Concerts begin at 8:30.

Programs for the first week are as follows:

Tuesday, Opening Night — "Semper Fidelis," march, Sousa; Overture to "Orpheus in Hades," Offenbach; Minuet from "The Daughter of the Regiment," Donizetti; "Die Meistersinger," Excerpts from Act III, Wagner; "The Incredible Flutist," suite, Piston; triumphal march from "Peter and the Wolf," Prokofieff; Rumanian Rhapsody, No. 1, Enesco; "Music of the Spheres," waltzes, Josef Strauss; Andalucia, Lecuona-Gould; "Oxford Street," march from "London Again," Eric Coates.

Wednesday—Entrance of the Guests into the Wartburg, from "Tannhaeuser," Wagner; Overture to "The Merry Wives of Windsor," Nicolai; "Molly on the Shore," Grainger; "Aida," Fantasia, Verdi; "Peer Gynt" suite, Grieg; "Drink to Me Only with Thine Eyes," for string orchestra, arranged by Pochon; Overture to "Rienzi," Wagner; "Roses from the South," waltzes, Strauss; Intermezzo, "Souvenir of Vienna," Prevost; First Hungarian Dance, Brahms.

Thursday — Polonaise from "Eugene Onegin," Tchaikovsky; Overture to "Poet and Peasant," Suppe; "Entrance of the

Music and Musicians

Continued on Page 52

SYMPHONY HALL—COM. 1492
56th SEASON OPENS
TUESDAY at 8:30
POPS
ARTHU
MA
Sol
MON.
TICK

Boston Symphony Season

By L. A. Sloper

The Boston Symphony Orchestra closes its sixtieth season with the concerts of this week. The organization continues at the peak of its technical and artistic powers. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, in his seventeenth season as conductor, has maintained his high standards in programs. As in other recent years, "world premieres" have been fewer than formerly; but that presumably is because fewer challenging works are being written nowadays. Novelties continue to hold a place beside standard works and revivals.

Of the three works heard this year for the first time anywhere, Paul Hindemith's Cello Concerto seemed a rather arid intellectual product, Mario Castelnuovo-Tedesco's "Cipressi" was nostalgically impressionistic, and Dr. Koussevitzky's transcription for wind instruments of Bach's Prelude and Fugue in C major (No. 17) was notable for its restraint and its faithfulness to the composer's musical thought.

Eighteen works were played for the first time at these concerts. Two of these revealed oncoming talents of great promise: Benjamin Britten's Variations for String Orchestra on a Theme by Frank Bridge and Samuel Barber's "Essay for Orchestra." Each of these young composers, one British, one American, displayed a significant musical individuality.

Another work that was striking, though in another sense, was the "Chôros No. 10" of the Brazilian Villa-Lobos. This seemed like a belated "Sept, Ils Sont Sept," with a South American accent. Roy Harris' Folk-Song Symphony was a not entirely successful attempt to reconcile the elements of popular song and symphonic composition, for popular use. Bax's "Overture to a Picaresque Comedy" showed the composer in a boisterous instead of a mystical mood. Aaron Copland's "Quiet City" seemed to suffer by its divorce from the play which it was written to accompany.

There were several distinguished guest conductors. Igor Stravinsky offered his symphony in C major, the "Baiser de la Fée" Divertimento, and Tchaikovsky's Second Symphony. Désiré Defauw made an excellent impression in a program made up of music by Franck, Grétry, Falla, and Beethoven (the Seventh Symphony). Darius Milhaud directed three compositions of his own, of which "Le Cortège Funèbre," composed last May, was a touching reminder of the immediate reason for his presence in the United States. Stanley Chapple submitted a lively program of works by Elgar, Delius, and Bax, and the Brahms Fourth Symphony. Eugène Goossens conducted his new Symphony, and Arthur Shepherd his Second Symphony.

Among the soloists, the most conspicuous success was scored by Vladimir Horowitz, returning after a long absence to play again the Third Piano Concerto of Rachmaninoff. Gregor Piatigorsky was warmly applauded for his performance in the Hindemith Concerto, and so was Nathan Milstein in the Stravinsky Violin Concerto.

The most treasurable musical experience of the season, however, was, for this listener, the performance of two Bach Concertos for two pianos (C minor and C major) and string orchestra. Conductor, soloists (Abram Chasins and J. M. Sanromá), and the string choirs were united in their understanding and revelation of these scores.

Eighty-six works altogether were listed during the season. By exception, Mozart led in number of works played, with six. Brahms was second with five, and Beethoven, Sibelius, and Stravinsky had four each.

For the final program of the year (May 2-3) Dr. Koussevitzky chose a Suite for Strings by Corelli, two of Satie's "Gymnopédies" (orchestrated by Debussy), Debussy's "La Mer," and the Brahms First Symphony.

The regular season will be followed as usual by the Pop Concerts, conducted by Arthur Fiedler. In the first three weeks of August, under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky, the orchestra will hold the annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival at "Tanglewood," near Lenox, Mass. There will be three series of three concerts each.

Boston Globe April 30, 1941

MUSIC

SYMPHONY HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

1½			Boston & Maine		200	11½
9	13		Baldwin cfts		1000	13½
4½	3½		Baltimore & Ohio		700	3⅜
7⅝	4½		Balt & Ohio pr		700	6
0½	7⅛		Barber Asph (⅛e)		700	7¾
8¼	6½		Barker Bros (⅛e)		300	7
9⅝	7⅝		Barnsdall (.15g)		400	8½
4⅞	18¾		Bath Ir Wks (⅛g)		2800	21⅜
7¾	22		Beat Cream (1a)		100	22
1⅛	28¾		Beech Crk R (2) †		10	30½
4¾	33		Bendix Avia (2g)		1200	33½
0⅞	19¾		Benefical (.45g)		100	19⅝
9¾	69		Beth Steel (1½g)		4000	70⅜
1⅝	121½		Beth Steel 7 pf (7)		300	122½
8	23½		Bigelow San (1g)		400	24½
0½	6⅝		Blaw Knox (.15g)		700	7
4	43¾		Bon Ami B(2½a) †		20	44½
5	26¾		Bohn A & R (½g)		200	27¼
8⅝	13		Boeing Airplane		2200	13⅝
0½	16		Borg Warner(.40g)		1300	16½
0½	18½		Borden Co (.30g)		500	19½
2¾	18¾		Bond Strs (1.60)		200	18¾
5	43¾		Bon Ami B(2½a) †		20	44½
4	26¾		Bohn A & R (½g)		200	27¼
5	26¾		Boeing Airplane		2200	13⅝
8⅝	13		Bond Strs (1.60)		200	18¾
0½	18½		Borden Co (.30g)		500	19½
0½	16		Borg Warner(.40g)		1300	16½
1½			Boston & Maine		200	11½
9	13		Baldwin cfts		1000	13½
4½	3½		Baltimore & Ohio		700	3⅜
7⅝	4½		Balt & Ohio pr		700	6
0½	7⅝		Barber Asph (⅛e)		700	7¾
8¼	6½		Barker Bros (⅛e)		300	7
9⅝	7⅝		Barnsdall (.15g)		400	8½
4⅞	18¾		Bath Ir Wks (⅛g)		2800	21⅜
7¾	22		Beat Cream (1a)		100	22
1⅛	28¾		Beech Crk R (2) †		10	30½
4¾	33		Bendix Avia (2g)		1200	33½
0⅞	19¾		Benefical (.45g)		100	19⅝
9¾	69		Beth Steel (1½g)		4000	70⅜
1⅝	121½		Beth Steel 7 pf (7)		300	122½
8	23½		Bigelow San (1g)		400	24½
0½	6⅝		Blaw Knox (.15g)		700	7
4	43¾		Bon Ami B(2½a) †		20	44½
5

MUSIC AND MUSICIANS

Season's End for Boston Symphony

The 60th year of the Boston Symphony Orchestra is ended. Ended, that is, for the full orchestra, for Boston and the sort of programs which in part make these concerts what they are. We shall not go without music. For two months we shall have the lighter pleasures of the Pops, then—presumably—a few weeks of open-air concerts on the Charles River Esplanade before the orchestra reconvenes at "Tanglewood" for the nine programs of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

For some years the artistic fortunes of this great orchestra have remained constant. In excellence of ensemble and individuals, in discipline, technic and sheer splendor of sound the Boston Symphony remains at what is probably the highest peak of its history. Serge Koussevitzky continues to occupy his unique position among the world's foremost conductors, an artist of extraordinary magnetism, imagination and interpretive brilliance. His position is unique because, of the other first rank orchestras now existing—and they are all on this side of the Atlantic—there is no other governed artistically by one man throughout its main season.

Does Boston recognize its own fabulous good fortune? The answer must essentially be yes. All four subscription series at Symphony Hall are well attended. So is that in Sanders Theatre at Harvard. The Society of Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra loyally pay the inevitable deficit.

But if the answer is yes, how account for the obviously smaller support of the pension fund for retired players? Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis," presented for this purpose only a week ago, did not attract sufficient numbers to fill the hall. Why? Surely not entirely because people avoid such a great score. Revival of the "St. Matthew" Passion of Bach five years ago did not bring the response deserved. Going farther back, there were empty seats when Mr. Koussevitzky, the orchestra and the Radcliffe and Harvard singers gave the first performances of Bach's B minor Mass. In subsequent years, as the Mass grew more popular, attendance improved until finally it achieved the distinction of becoming a "sell-out."

One must, then, assume reluctant conviction that the public is unworthily indifferent to the pension fund. If the cause itself and the standard of music and performance received just recognition, every subscriber to the four series would buy at least one ticket to pension fund concerts.

Fundamentally, the season past has not differed from its immediate predecessors, except that we have had more guest conductors. Desire Dafauw was clearly outstanding among them. As conductor, Richard Burgin, the concert master, has for several years shown maturing technic and interpretive powers. It was interesting to hear Darius Milhaud and Igor Stravinsky, both of whom are primarily composers; Stanley Chapple and Eugene Goossens.

More interesting novelties appeared than in the season before. Samuel Barber's "School for Scandal" Overture and ingenious "Essay for Orchestra" led us to expect much of this young American composer, whose style is not yet completely individual. Precisely the same term is applicable to the Englishman, Benjamin Britten, also young, whose Variations for Strings on a Theme of Frank Bridge were the first of his music to be heard at these concerts.

Among the older, established composers Stravinsky himself gave us his unorthodox and fascinating Symphony in C major, and M. Milhaud directed a trio of ponderable original works—"Funeral March," "Provencal Suite" and "Pastoral Fantasy." Aaron Copland's "Quiet City" was worthy of him. Walter Piston's Violin Concerto is a valuable score, and the Cello Concerto of Hindemith merits further hearings. The list of rewarding novelties must include Mr. Koussevitzky's Bach transcription, the two Bach Clavier Concertos, Handel's "Fireworks" Music, Villa-Lobos Choros "Rasga-Corracao," and the Arnold Bax Overture to a Picaresque Comedy. One terms the Bach and Handel novelties because they had not been given before at these concerts.

Arthur Shepherd's Symphony, the Concert Piece of Henriette Bosmans, Roy Harris' "Folk Song" Symphony, the Symphony by Eugene Goossens, and Schoenberg's orchestration of the Brahms G minor Piano Quartet, Op. 25 were all disappointing, and except the Harris and Schoenberg, notably dull.

Of the music which was not new yet infrequently performed in other seasons, Mahler's Ninth Symphony, the "Faust" Symphony by Liszt, Rachmaninoff's Third Piano Concerto and the Third Symphony of Nicolai Berezowsky gave at least this writer a good deal of enjoyment. Shostakovitch's barren Fifth Symphony, one hopes, will be left to slumber, along with the Stravinsky Violin Concerto.

Fiedler Begins 56th Pops Season at Symphony Hall Tuesday Evening

Musical proof that Spring has again come to Boston will be found at Symphony Hall Tuesday evening, where Arthur Fiedler will begin the 56th season of Pop concerts. This will be Mr. Fiedler's 12th year as conductor. Under his regime the Pops have reached unprecedented favor with the public.

This Spring there will be an orchestra of about 90 Boston Symphony men. Symphony Hall will again be in Summer dress, and refreshments will be served at the tables on the floor of the hall. Concerts begin at 8:30.

Programs for the first week are as follows:

Tuesday. Opening Night — "Semper Fidelis," march, Sousa: Overture to "Orpheus in Hades," Offenbach: Minuet from "The Daughter of the Regiment," Donizetti: "Die Meistersinger," Excerpts from Act III, Wagner: "The Incredible Flutist," suite, Piston: triumphal march from "Peter and the Wolf," Prokofieff: Rumanian Rhapsody, No. 1, Enesco: "Music of the Spheres," waltzes, Josef Strauss: Andalucia, Lecuona - Gould: "Oxford Street," march from "London Again," Eric Coates.

Wednesday—Entrance of the Guests into the Wartburg, from "Tannhaeuser," Wagner: Overture to "The Merry Wives of Windsor," Nicolai: "Molly on the Shore," Grainger: "Aida," Fantasia, Verdi: "Peer Gynt" suite, Grieg: "Drink to Me Only with Thine Eyes," for string orchestra, arranged by Pochon: Overture to "Rienzi," Wagner: "Roses from the South," waltzes, Strauss: Intermezzo, "Souvenir of Vienna," Prevost: First Hungarian Dance, Brahms.

Thursday — Polonaise from "Eugene Onegin," Tchaikovsky: Overture to "Poet and Peasant," Suppe: "Entrance of the

Music and Musicians

Continued on Page 52

SYMPHONY HALL—COM. 1492
56th SEASON OPENS
TUESDAY at 8:30
POPS
ARTHUR FIEDLER—Conductor
1ST SUNDAY POPS
MAY 11 AT 8:30
Soloist—SANROMA—Piano
MON.—HARVARD NIGHT
TICKETS NOW ON SALE

Boston Symphony Season

By L. A. Sloper

The Boston Symphony Orchestra closes its sixtieth season with the concerts of this week. The organization continues at the peak of its technical and artistic powers. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, in his seventeenth season as conductor, has maintained his high standards in programs. As in other recent years, "world premieres" have been fewer than formerly; but that presumably is because fewer challenging works are being written nowadays. Novelties continue to hold a place beside standard works and revivals.

Of the three works heard this year for the first time anywhere, Paul Hindemith's Cello Concerto seemed a rather arid intellectual product, Mario Castelnuovo-Tedesco's "Cipressi" was nostalgically impressionistic, and Dr. Koussevitzky's transcription for wind instruments of Bach's Prelude and Fugue in C major (No. 17) was notable for its restraint and its faithfulness to the composer's musical thought.

Eighteen works were played for the first time at these concerts. Two of these revealed oncoming talents of great promise: Benjamin Britten's Variations for String Orchestra on a Theme by Frank Bridge and Samuel Barber's "Essay for Orchestra." Each of these young composers, one British, one American, displayed a significant musical individuality.

Another work that was striking, though in another sense, was the "Chôros No. 10" of the Brazilian Villa-Lobos. This seemed like a belated "Sept, Ils Sont Sept," with a South American accent. Roy Harris' Folk-Song Symphony was a not entirely successful attempt to reconcile the elements of popular song and symphonic composition, for popular use. Bax's "Overture to a Picaresque Comedy" showed the composer in a boisterous instead of a mystical mood. Aaron Copland's "Quiet City" seemed to suffer by its divorce from the play which it was written to accompany.

There were several distinguished guest conductors. Igor Stravinsky offered his symphony in C major, the "Baiser de la Fée" Divertimento, and Tchaikovsky's Second Symphony. Désiré Defauw made an excellent impression in a program made up of music by Franck, Grétry, Falla, and Beethoven (the Seventh Symphony). Darius Milhaud directed three compositions of his own, of which "Le Cortège Funèbre," composed last May, was a touching reminder of the immediate reason for his presence in the United States. Stanley Chapple submitted a lively program of works by Elgar, Delius, and Bax, and the Brahms Fourth Symphony. Eugène Goossens conducted his new Symphony, and Arthur Shepherd his Second Symphony.

Among the soloists, the most conspicuous success was scored by Vladimir Horowitz, returning after a long absence to play again the Third Piano Concerto of Rachmaninoff. Gregor Piatigorsky was warmly applauded for his performance in the Hindemith Concerto, and so was Nathan Milstein in the Stravinsky Violin Concerto.

The most treasurable musical experience of the season, however, was, for this listener, the performance of two Bach Concertos for two pianos (C minor and C major) and string orchestra. Conductor, soloists (Abram Chasins and J. M. Sanromá), and the string choirs were united in their understanding and revelation of these scores.

Eighty-six works altogether were listed during the season. By exception, Mozart led in number of works played, with six. Brahms was second with five, and Beethoven, Sibelius, and Stravinsky had four each.

For the final program of the year (May 2-3) Dr. Koussevitzky chose a Suite for Strings by Corelli, two of Satie's "Gymnopédies" (orchestrated by Debussy), Debussy's "La Mer," and the Brahms First Symphony.

The regular season will be followed as usual by the Pop Concerts, conducted by Arthur Fiedler. In the first three weeks of August, under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky, the orchestra will hold the annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival at "Tanglewood," near Lenox, Mass. There will be three series of three concerts each.

BOSTON MUSIC — SYMPHONY HALL — Boston Symphony Orchestra

9	13	Baldwin cfs	1000	13¼
4⅝	3⅛	Baltimore & Ohio	700	3⅝
7⅝	4⅝	Balt & Ohio pr	700	6
0⅝	7⅛	Barber Asph (⅝e)	700	7¼
8⅝	6⅝	Barker Bros (⅝e)	300	7
9⅝	7⅝	Barnsdall (.15g)	400	8¼
4⅞	18⅜	Bath Ir Wks (⅛g)	2800	21⅛
4⅝	22	Beat Cream (1a)	100	22
1⅛	28½	Beech Crk R (2) †	10	30½
7⅞	33	Bendix Avia (2g)	1200	33⅛
0⅞	19¼	Beneficial (.45g)	100	19⅝
9⅛	69	Beth Steel (1½g)	4000	70⅜
1⅝	121½	Beth Steel 7 pf (7)	300	122½
3	23½	Bigelow San (1g)	400	24½
0⅛	6⅝	Blaw Knox (.15g)	700	7
4	43⅜	Bon Ami B(2½a) †	20	44⅛
2⅛	18⅜	Bond Strs (1.60)	200	18¾
0⅛	18⅛	Borden Co (.30g)	500	19⅛
1	16	Borg Warner(.40g)	1300	16⅛
17		Boston & Maine	200	17
5	26⅜	Bohn A & H (½g)	200	27⅛
8⅝	13	Boeing Airplane	2200	13⅝
0⅛	6⅝	Braw Knox (.15g)	700	7
3	23⅛	Bigelow San (1g)	400	24½
1⅝	121½	Beth Steel 7 pf (7)	300	122½
9⅛	69	Beth Steel (1½g)	4000	70⅜
0⅞	19¼	Beneficial (.45g)	100	19⅝
7⅞	33	Bendix Avia (2g)	1200	33⅛
1⅛	28½	Beech Crk R (2) †	10	30½
4⅜	22	Beat Cream (1a)	100	22
4⅞	18⅜	Bath Ir Wks (⅛g)	2800	21⅛
9⅝	7⅝	Barnsdall (.15g)	400	8¼
0⅝	6⅝	Barker Bros (⅝e)	300	7
7⅝	4⅝	Balt & Ohio pr	700	6
4⅝	3⅛	Baltimore & Ohio	700	3⅝
9	13	Baldwin cfs	1000	13¼
5⅛	2⅝	Avlation Corp	7700	2⅝
7	6	Atlas Tack (.15g)	600	6⅜
8⅛	111⅜	Atlas Powd pr(5) †	10	111⅜
9⅛	47⅛	Atlas Corp pr (3)	100	49⅛
7⅛	6⅝	Atlas Corp (⅛g)	1700	6⅝
4⅛	20⅜	Al Refining (1)	1300	23⅛
9	16⅛	Al Gulf & W I pr	400	27
0⅛	13⅛	Al Coast Line	2100	18⅜
0	60⅛	Alch T&SF pr (5)	200	66⅛
8	18	Alch T&SF (1e)	6400	25⅞
6⅛	92⅛	Assoc Inv pr (5) †	60	93⅛
5⅛	29	Assoc Invest (2)	100	29
7	79⅛	Ass'd D G 1stpf(6)	100	81⅛
7⅞	5⅝	Ass'd Dry Gds	300	6⅛
8⅛	6⅛	Arnold Cons (⅝g)	500	7
14⅛	26⅜	Armstrong C (1⅛g)	400	27⅛
8	47⅛	Armour Ill pf pr	500	53
5⅛	4⅛	Armour Ill	3800	4⅜
4⅛	11⅛	Anchor Hck (.80e)	300	11⅛
15	26	Anac W & C(⅝g) †	150	26⅛
27⅛	22⅛	Anaconda (⅛g)	4100	23⅜
8	5	Am Zinc & Lead	600	5⅛
30⅛	51	Am Woolen pr(2k)	400	54⅛
8⅜	6⅛	Am Woolen	700	6⅜
7⅛	4⅛	Am Water Works	1400	4⅜
7	4⅛	Am Type Fdrs	900	4⅛
59	147⅛	Am Tob pr (6)	100	150⅜
74⅛	67⅜	Am Tobacco B (5)	900	68⅛
73⅛	67	Am Tobacco (5)	200	67
38⅜	156	Am Tel & Tel (9)	1700	158
19	13	Am Sugar (⅝g)	200	15⅛
28⅛	19⅛	Am Steel Fd (⅛g)	1100	20⅛
15⅛	34	Am Smelting (⅝g)	900	34⅛
10	30	Am Shipbldg (1g) †	320	35⅞

'LOBE—WED THE BOSTO
'SDAY, 'APRIL' 30, 1941

SYMPHONY PLAYERS GO SWINGY—"Gone With the Woodwinds" is the title of a program to be presented at Hotel Vendome next Monday evening for the benefit of South End Music School, in which staid, dignified players of the Boston Symphony will go jazzy. Here are a couple of them putting the old oomph into a rhumba at Symphony Hall yesterday. Jesus Sanroma, noted pianist (at left) and Roger Voisin.

SHOW HONORS TO CONDUCTOR

Boston Post
April 19, 1941

Orchestra and Audience Rise to New American

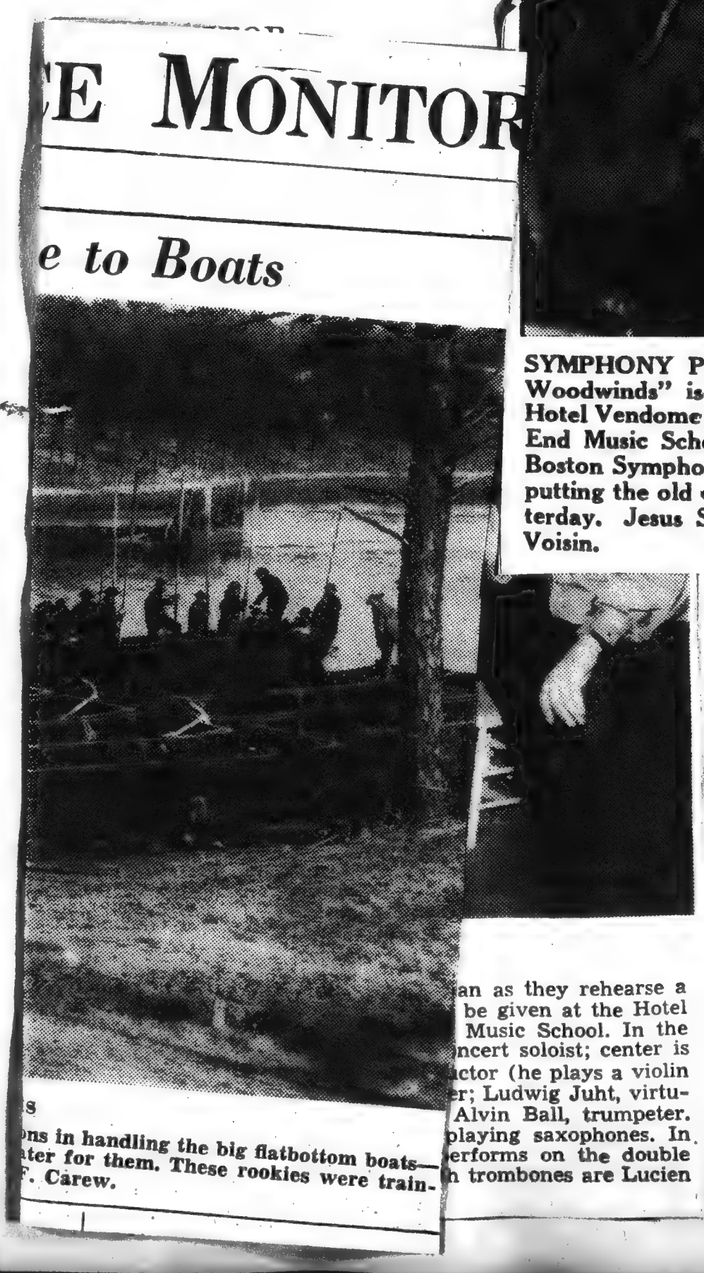
BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

Serge Koussevitzky, who became an American citizen last Wednesday, conducted compositions by two fellow-Americans, Aaron Copland's "Quiet City," and Howard Hanson's "Romantic" Symphony, at the Symphony Concert of yesterday afternoon. When the conductor first came upon the stage the orchestra stood and applauded and the audience, many members of which may not have known what all the fuss was about, applauded much more heartily than usual.

After the intermission Dr. Koussevitzky led his men through three Wagnerian introductions, the Overture to "The Flying Dutchman," the Prelude to "Parsifal," and the Overture to Tannhaeuser." Hs grandiose reading of the "Tannhaeuser" Overture's closing pages won him another ovation, although the real climax, not only of the Wagner, but of the entire concert, was the singularly impressive performance of the "Parsifal" Prelude.

"The Flying Dutchman" Overture had stirring moments, such as the electrifying opening, but taken as a whole, it was a bit studied and self-conscious; also uncomfortably brassy in spots. It would not be strictly accurate to say that Dr. Koussevitzky is a great interpreter of Wagner—or that he is not. He is likely to prove one and quite as likely not to. The up-and-down-ness of his Wagner yesterday was a case in point.

Getting back to Messrs. Copland and Hanson, the former's "Quiet City," scored for trumpet, English horn and strings, is drawn from music for a stage play (by Irwin Shaw) but stands very well by itself, while Mr. Hanson's Second Symphony sounds much of the time like the score for a movie which does not exist. It might also be said of "Quiet City," heard yesterday for the first time in Boston, that it is very nice as far as it goes but doesn't go very far. It is mostly mood, yet there is in it a fine and sensitive quality and there is a climax of considerable intensity. Incidentally, it offered Mr. Mager and Mr. Speyer, particularly the former, a fine opportunity to shine. Dr. Koussevitzky had them both rise in acknowledgment of the applause.



CE MONITOR

e to Boats

s ons in handling the big flatbottom boats—ter for them. These rookies were train-F. Carew.

ian as they rehearse a be given at the Hotel Music School. In the ncert soloist; center is ctor (he plays a violin er; Ludwig Juht, virtu-Alvin Ball, trumpeter. playing saxophones. In erforms on the double n trombones are Lucien

REDUCTION

RATIO

16x

2.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

PM-MGP 13"x18"
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

200 mm

150 mm

100 mm

A3

A4

A5

1.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

2.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century

A&P

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

4.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

3.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

3.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

Boston Herald April 19, 1941

MUSIC

Symphony Concert

By ALEXANDER WILLIAMS

The 22nd concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting, was given yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. The program was as follows:

Copeland..."Quiet City" for trumpet, English horn and strings
Hanson.....Symphony No. 2, "Romantic"
Wagner.....Overture to "The Flying Dutchman"
Wagner.....Prelude to "Parsifal"
Wagner.....Overture to "Tannhaeuser"

We have had a good deal of music this season that has sought to express the spirit of a city—Vaughn-Williams's London Symphony, Delius's Paris and now Mr. Copeland's "Quiet City," which is presumably New York. It is a short piece and was derived from some music he wrote for a play by Irwin Shaw. The curious combination of solo trumpet and English horn (ably played yesterday by Messrs. Mager and Speyer) and a string orchestra is employed.

Mr. Copeland seems in his recent work to have turned his back on his earliest music which so aggressively eschewed charm. "Quiet City" has an idea behind it and some originality. Yet it remains a not very effective piece as it stands. It would be interesting to know if the composer honestly feels that he has clearly conveyed what he had in mind. To use the piece seemed amorphous.

If Mr. Koussevitzky is affectionately termed the "godfather of American music,' certainly Howard Hanson is its enthusiastic big brother. No one is more energetic than he in whooping up the cause, introducing the other members of the family and praising them behind their backs to unsympathetic strangers. Unfortunately the big brother himself has found time to compose on a large scale, and in view of all that he has done for American music it would naturally be a gross discourtesy not to play his works frequently.

Again unfortunately, they do not merit amiable treatment. The 2nd Symphony, to be sure, is not nearly so bad as the 3rd, which Mr. Koussevitzky so earnestly fostered last season. On the other hand it is not, except for the first movement, much good. If Mr. Hanson had a spark of originality or even his fair share of that much despised quality, cleverness, a lot could be forgiven him.

In a sense he has cleverness, but it consists in his being able to copy pretty faithfully. With the 2nd Symphony he has spiked one of our best critical guns by himself pointing to it as "romantic," but that doesn't make the music any fresher.

The first movement is effective and not uninteresting in a by-gone manner. The second movement seemed to us very stale and tedious. The last movement is the poorest of all, because it depends for its climax on hauling back material from the first, material moreover that had been amply worked over at the time.

"Why then the applause?" asks the reader who liked the symphony. There are two reasons for this. First, the music is juicy and easy on the ear harmonically, for all its loudness. Second, the work received a surpassingly fine and intense performance under Mr. Koussevitzky's direction. Do but life the veils of conventional harmony and inspired interpretation, however, and you will behold the faded imitation within.

Every so often Mr. Koussevitzky must say to himself: "Come, it is high time I played some Wagner. I'll just give up half a program to him next week. That ought to satisfy them." Maybe this practice does succeed in pacifying the Wagnerians, who as a rule have short tempers. Yesterday we must confess that, far fro mrighting the balance of a dull concert, the Wagner items plunged it further into boredom.

We cannot put our finger on just what it is about Mr. Koussevitzky's interpretations of Wagner that fails to be electrifying. Possibly it is that he tries too hard, that he is impatient with the music for not being more brilliant and as a result coaxes it out of shape.

Incidentally why may we not hear the Venusberg music alone? It can be so played, even though the beginning is a little awkward. It was, of course, written in Wagner's mature style and subsequently by him pinned on to that absurd Salvation Army hymn that does such laborious duty in "Tannhaeuser."

Next week let us hope for better luck with the following program: Benjamin Britten's Variations for string orchestra on a theme of Frank Bridge; Schumann's 4th Symphony (not the 2nd as announced); Falla's Suite from "El Amor Brujo"; Strauss's "Till Eulenspiegel."

TIMES HER...
APR 20 1941

National Music Council Starts Bureau to Promote Works of Native Composers

Compilation of Alien Compositions Shows Symphony in Lower Brackets

By GLENN DILLARD GUNN

Music in the United States now benefits by the propaganda of the National Music Council, of New York city, of which Edwin Hughes is president.

The membership includes all the organizations that contribute to the musical life of the nation in any manner. Societies, associations and leagues of composers, publishers, teachers, piano manufacturers, wholesalers, sororities, broadcasters, artists, music clubs—in short everybody interested in the art, either actively or passively, except the symphony orchestras and opera companies, are banded together in the National Music Council, their purpose being to stimulate the performance and appreciation of native music.

Bid Them Welcome

As one who for 30 years has been merely a voice crying this cause in the wilderness of our superimposed European musical culture I hasten to bid them welcome and to spread abroad in these columns their first propaganda release.

This conveys information that is surprising, even shocking. The National Music Council, "believing that American orchestral composition has reached a point in its development where works of our native composers should be accorded increased attention by every orchestra in the country" has compiled tables showing the ratio of native to alien music as represented on the programs of our major symphonic institutions.

The Capital of the Nation will be shocked to learn that the National Symphony stands in the lower brackets of all these tables, a phenomenon that could not happen in France, Germany, Russia, Italy, Finland, or any other country that lays claim to a national culture.

The National Music Council has been more than lenient in compiling its ratios and percentages. It has not differentiated between works of symphonic dimensions and those of briefer duration, arguing, doubtless, that art is not a matter of size but of quality. When, however, they have counted 11 Negro spirituals played by the Detroit Symphony Orchestra as native symphonic works it is evident that they have become confused. Spirituals universally are classed as folk songs not as symphonic composiitons.

Chicago Rated Low

It is a fact that the Chicago Symphony played more native symphonies than any other orchestra but fewer native works. At the same time it played more alien music than any other major orchestra except the New York Philharmonic-Symphony, and thus earned a low rating of only 7 per cent as measure of its interest in native art.

The highest percentage was earned by the Indianapolis Symphony which stood above Boston—17.3 per cent of its programs being devoted to native music, while Boston, next in the honor role, devoted 15.6 per cent of its effort to the same cause. In artistic patriotism the cities supporting symphony orchestras stand as follows:

Indianapolis, 17.3 per cent.
Boston, 15.6 per cent.
Los Angeles, 11.1 per cent.
Cleveland, 10.2 per cent.
Pittsburgh, 9.2 per cent.
Cincinnati, 7.4 per cent.
Chicago, 7 per cent.
San Francisco, 6.3 per cent.
Kansas City, 6.2 per cent.
New York (Philharmonic Symphony), 6 per cent.
Washington (National Symphony), 5.7 per cent.
Minneapolis, 5.5 per cent.
St. Louis, 5.3 per cent.
Philadelphia, 4.7 per cent.
Rochester, 2.6 per cent.

One Native Conductor

The men responsible for these ratios of alien and native art in the symphonic life of the nation are, of course, the conductors. Only one of them is a native, Karl Krueger, of Kansas City, who might well have done better. The leaders, Sevitzky, of Indianapolis, and his uncle Koussevitzky, of Boston, are Russians. Klemperer, of Los Angeles, is German. Rodzinski, of Cleveland, is Polish. Reiner, of Pittsburgh, is German. Goossens, of Cincinnati, is English. Stock, of Chicago, is German. Monteux, of San Francisco, is French. Barbirolli, of New York, is English. Kindler, of Washington, is Dutch. Metropoulis, of Minneapolis, is Greek. Golschmann, of St. Louis, is Russian. Ormandy, of Philadelphia, is Hungarian. Iturbi, of Rochester, least interested in native art, is Spanish, and the poorest conductor of the lot.

The National Music Council did not touch, in its tables, on the programs of the broadcasters. Here the ratios might show differences. I suspect that men such as Wallenstein, of Mutual, and Barlow, of Columbia, have good records in the matter of native art. Everyone knows that the various conductors active on the Ford Hour play no American music and only the most trite from Europe.

Toscanini, most famous of symphonic broadcasters, has the worst record of all. During 34 years of activity in this country he has played two native compositions.

Works Please Symphony Audience

Lead, E. St. Louis, spot	6.80-90	3.85-90
Zinc, E. St. Louis, spot	6.70	6.70
Iron, 2 POR, Louis, spot	7.25	7.25
Iron, 2 POR, E. Pittsburgh	7.25	7.25
Iron, 2 POR, Buffalo	22	22
Antimony, Alabama	23	23
Quicksilver, spot	16.38	16.38
Aluminum	181/2	181/2
Wolframite	180-184	182-184
Platinum	37	37
Bar silver (foreign)	25-26	25-26
	36	36
	34¾	34¾

Cotton Price Easy at Close

Futures Decline 3 to 4 Points

NEW YORK, April 18 (AP)—Cotton remained in a narrow range today with closing prices 3 to 4 points lower.

Making for inactivity again was the absence of definite word from Washington on the farm legislation program.

Reports from Worth street said print cloths and some other fabrics were offered in small amounts by second hands at concessions of ½ cent a yard. General turnover was small.

Exports yesterday 11,728 bales; season so far 844,018. Port receipts 12,247. Port stocks 3,360,210.

Today's quotations follow:

	Open	High	Low	Last	Prev cl
May	11.28	11.28	11.22	11.22	11.26
July	11.22	11.23	11.22	11.22	11.24
Oct.	11.16	11.20	11.15	11.20	11.24
Jan.	11.18	11.19	11.16	11.17	11.21
March	11.17	11.17	11.14	11.17	11.20

Spot on four points at 11.45.

Boston Produce Market

WHOLESALE PRICES

FLOUR—Mill shipments, carlots, per bbl f. o. b. Boston points: small lots 40c higher: spring patents, standards, $6.40-6.60; spring first clears, $5.65-5.85; spring patents, $6.75-6.95; soft winter straights, $4.60-5.30; soft winter patents, $5.50-5.80; soft winter clears, $4.50-4.85; working flour, choice winter straights, $4.50-4.80; standard patents, $5.30-5.60; rye flour, standard patents, $5.40-5.70; dark rye, $3.15-3.50; rye meal, $3.45-3.75.

CORN—All rail, No. 2 yellow, 65-66c; No. 3 yellow, 58-87c; lake and rail No. 2 yellow, 87-88c; cornmeal, 40-lb bag, granulated and bolted, $2.45; feeding meal and cracked corn, $1.80.

OATS—All rail, 40 lbs poultry, 54-55c; 38-lb pigeon, 50-52c; oat meal pulled, per 100-lb sack, $2.80; oat meal ground, $2.10.

MILLFEED — Standard bran, $29.00-30.00; middlings, $29.00-29.00; red dog, $30.00-31.00; gluten feed, $28.40; stock feed, $24.80; hominy feed, $25.40; cottonseed meal (41%) $36.00; soya flour meal (41%) $36.00; soya stream meal (41%) $36.00; linseed meal (34%) $38.50; soya stream meal (41%) $36.00; linseed meal (34%) $36.50; 1 first cutting alfalfa, $18.00; dried brewers grain, $27.50; dried beet pulp, $34.00.

HAY—Wholesale, dealers' prices; timothy $19.00-20.00; No. 1, $18.00-19.00; No. 2, $17.00-18.00; No. 3, $16.00-17.00; clover mixed, $17.00-18.00; clover, $17.00-18.00; alfalfa, $18.00-19.00; straw, $9.00-10.00.

This Clipping From
WASHINGTON, D. C.
TIMES HERALD
APR 20 1941

National Music Council Starts Bureau to Promote Works of Native Composers

Compilation of Alien Compositions Shows Symphony in Lower Brackets

By GLENN DILLARD GUNN

Music in the United States now benefits by the propaganda of the National Music Council, of New York city, of which Edwin Hughes is president.

The membership includes all the organizations that contribute to the musical life of the nation in any manner. Societies, associations and leagues of composers, publishers, teachers, piano manufacturers, wholesalers, sororities, broadcasters, artists, music clubs—in short everybody interested in the art, either actively or passively, except the symphony orchestras and opera companies, are banded together in the National Music Council, their purpose being to stimulate the performance and appreciation of native music.

Bid Them Welcome

As one who for 30 years has been merely a voice crying this cause in the wilderness of our superimposed European musical culture I hasten to bid them welcome and to spread abroad in these columns their first propaganda release.

This conveys information that is surprising, even shocking. The National Music Council, "believing that American orchestral composition has reached a point in its development where works of our native composers should be accorded increased attention by every orchestra in the country" has compiled tables showing the ratio of native to alien music as represented on the programs of our major symphonic institutions.

The Capital of the Nation will be shocked to learn that the National Symphony stands in the lower brackets of all these tables, a phenomenon that could not happen in France, Germany, Russia, Italy, Finland, or any other country that lays claim to a national culture.

The National Music Council has been more than lenient in compiling its ratios and percentages. It has not differentiated between works of symphonic dimensions and those of briefer duration, arguing, doubtless, that art is not a matter of size but of quality. When, however, they have counted 11 Negro spirituals played by the Detroit Symphony Orchestra as native symphonic works it is evident that they have become confused. Spirituals universally are classed as folk songs not as symphonic compositions.

Chicago Rated Low

It is a fact that the Chicago Symphony played more native symphonies than any other orchestra but fewer native works. At the same time it played more alien music than any other major orchestra except the New York Philharmonic-Symphony, and thus earned a low rating of only 7 per cent as a measure of its interest in native art.

The highest percentage was earned by the Indianapolis Symphony which stood above Boston —17.3 per cent of its programs being devoted to native music, while Boston, next in the honor role, devoted 15.6 per cent of its effort to the same cause. In artistic patriotism the cities supporting symphony orchestras stand as follows:

Indianapolis, 17.3 per cent.
Boston, 15.6 per cent.
Los Angeles, 11.1 per cent.
Cleveland, 10.2 per cent.
Pittsburgh, 9.2 per cent.
Cincinnati, 7.4 per cent.
Chicago, 7 per cent.
San Francisco, 6.3 per cent.
Kansas City, 6.2 per cent.
New York (Philharmonic Symphony), 6 per cent.
Washington (National Symphony), 5.7 per cent.
Minneapolis, 5.5 per cent.
St. Louis, 5.3 per cent.
Philadelphia, 4.7 per cent.
Rochester, 2.6 per cent.

One Native Conductor

The men responsible for these ratios of alien and native art in the symphonic life of the nation are, of course, the conductors. Only one of them is a native, Karl Krueger, of Kansas City, who might well have done better. The leaders, Sevitzky, of Indianapolis, and his uncle Koussevitzky, of Boston, are Russians. Klemperer, of Los Angeles, is German. Rodzinski, of Cleveland, is Polish. Reiner, of Pittsburgh, is German. Goossens, of Cincinnati, is English. Stock, of Chicago, is German. Monteux, of San Francisco, is French. Barbirolli, of New York, is English. Kindler, of Washington, is Dutch. Metropoulis, of Minneapolis, is Greek. Golschmann, of St. Louis, is Russian. Ormandy, of Philadelphia, is Hungarian. Iturbi, of Rochester, least interested in native art, is Spanish, and the poorest conductor of the lot.

The National Music Council did not touch, in its tables, on the programs of the broadcasters. Here the ratios might show differences. I suspect that men such as Wallenstein, of Mutual, and Barlow, of Columbia, have good records in the matter of native art. Everyone knows that the various conductors active on the Ford Hour play no American music and only the most trite from Europe.

Toscanini, most famous of symphonic broadcasters, has the worst record of all. During 34 years of activity in this country he has played two native compositions.

Works Please Symphony Audience

REDUCTION RATIO 14x

PM-MGP 13″x18″
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

200 mm

150 mm

100 mm

A3

A4

A5

1.0 mm

1.5 mm

2.0 mm

2.5 mm

1.0

1.1

1.25

1.4

1.6

1.8

2.0

2.2

2.5

2.8

3.2

3.6

4.0

4.5

5.0

5.6

6.3

7.1

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

BOSTON HERALD

Symphony Co

By ALEXANDE

The 22nd conce
Symphony Orche sevitzky conducti terday afternoon
The program w

Copeland..."Quiet lish horn and Hanson.....Sym
Wagner..Overtur man"
Wagner.....
Wagner.....

We have this season lower.
press the Williams
Delius's land's program.
sumabl piece must sho so
(s

Boston Produce Market

WHOLESALE PRICES

FLOUR—Mill shipments, carloads, per 100-lb bag: Boston points, spring patents, $5.75-6.15; spring first patents, $5.65-6.35; hard winter patents, $5.40-5.80; soft winter patents, $4.75-5.50; rye flour, $4.15-4.85; soft winter straights, $4.40-5.00; Standard patents, $3.65-4.45; choice winter patents, $3.85-4.40; pure dark rye, $3.15-3.80; rye meal, $3.40-3.75.

CORN—All rail, No. 2 yellow, 88-89c; lake and rail No. 2 yellow, 87-88c; lake and rail No. 3 yellow, 86-87c; cornmeal, per 100 lbs, granulated and bolted, $2.45; feeding meal and cracked corn, $2.40-2.45.

OATS—All rail; 40 lbs poultry, 54-55c; 36-38 lbs poultry, 52-53c; oatmeal rolled, per 100-lb sack, $2.90; cut and ground, $2.10.

MILLFEED — Standard bran, $29.50-30.00; middlings, $28.00-29.00; red dog, $29.40-$31.00; gluten feed, $32.90; hominy feed, $29.00; gluten meal, $34.00; oat feed, $30.00; gluten feed, $34.00; linseed meal (41%), $36.00; linseed meal (41%), $30.00; dried brewers grains, $27.50; dried first cutting alfalfa meal (41%), $19.00-$19.50; dried soya bean meal, $34.50; wheat feed, $27.50; dried peanut meal, $34.00; cottonseed meal (41%), $36.50-$37.00; dried beet pulp, $34.50-$35.00; hominy feed, $29.00; gluten feed, $34

This Clipping From
WASHINGTON, D. C.
TIMES HERALD
APR 20 1941

National Music Council Starts Bureau to Promote Works of Native Composers

Compilation of Alien Compositions Shows Symphony in Lower Brackets

By GLENN DILLARD GUNN

Music in the United States now benefits by the propaganda of the National Music Council, of New York city, of which Edwin Hughes is president.

The membership includes all the organizations that contribute to the musical life of the nation in any manner. Societies, associations and leagues of composers, publishers, teachers, piano manufacturers, wholesalers, sororities, broadcasters, artists, music clubs—in short everybody interested in the art, either actively or passively, except the symphony orchestras and opera companies, are banded together in the National Music Council, their purpose being to stimulate the performance and appreciation of native music.

Bid Them Welcome

As one who for 30 years has been merely a voice crying this cause in the wilderness of our superimposed European musical culture I hasten to bid them welcome and to spread abroad in these columns their first propaganda release.

This conveys information that is surprising, even shocking. The National Music Council, "believing that American orchestral composition has reached a point in its development where works of our native composers should be accorded increased attention by every orchestra in the country" has compiled tables showing the ratio of native to alien music as represented on the programs of our major symphonic institutions.

The Capital of the Nation will be shocked to learn that the National Symphony stands in the lower brackets of all these tables, a phenomenon that could not happen in France, Germany, Russia, Italy, Finland, or any other country that lays claim to a national culture.

The National Music Council has been more than lenient in compiling its ratios and percentages. It has not differentiated between works of symphonic dimensions and those of briefer duration, arguing, doubtless, that art is not a matter of size but of quality. When, however, they have counted 11 Negro spirituals played by the Detroit Symphony Orchestra as native symphonic works it is evident that they have become confused. Spirituals universally are classed as folk songs not as symphonic composiitons.

Chicago Rated Low

It is a fact that the Chicago Symphony played more native symphonies than any other orchestra but fewer native works. At the same time it played more alien music than any other major orchestra except the New York Philharmonic-Symphony, and thus earned a low rating of only 7 per cent as measure of its interest in native art.

The highest percentage was earned by the Indianapolis Symphony which stood above Boston—17.3 per cent of its programs being devoted to native music, while Boston, next in the honor role, devoted 15.6 per cent of its effort to the same cause. In artistic patriotism the cities supporting symphony orchestras stand as follows:

Indianapolis, 17.3 per cent.
Boston, 15.6 per cent.
Los Angeles, 11.1 per cent.
Cleveland, 10.2 per cent.
Pittsburgh, 9.2 per cent.
Cincinnati, 7.4 per cent.
Chicago, 7 per cent.
San Francisco, 6.3 per cent.
Kansas City, 6.2 per cent.
New York (Philharmonic Symphony), 6 per cent.
Washington (National Symphony), 5.7 per cent.
Minneapolis, 5.5 per cent.
St. Louis, 5.3 per cent.
Philadelphia, 4.7 per cent.
Rochester, 2.6 per cent.

One Native Conductor

The men responsible for these ratios of alien and native art in the symphonic life of the nation are, of course, the conductors. Only one of them is a native, Karl Krueger, of Kansas City, who might well have done better. The leaders, Sevitzky, of Indianapolis, and his uncle Koussevitzky, of Boston, are Russians. Klemperer, of Los Angeles, is German. Rodzinski, of Cleveland, is Polish. Reiner, of Pittsburgh, is German. Goossens, of Cincinnati, is English. Stock, of Chicago, is German. Monteux, of San Francisco, is French. Barbirolli, of New York, is English. Kindler, of Washington, is Dutch. Metropoulis, of Minneapolis, is Greek. Golschmann, of St. Louis, is Russian. Ormandy, of Philadelphia, is Hungarian. Iturbi, of Rochester, least interested in native art, is Spanish, and the poorest conductor of the lot.

The National Music Council did not touch, in its tables, on the programs of the broadcasters. Here the ratios might show differences. I suspect that men such as Wallenstein, of Mutual, and Barlow, of Columbia, have good records in the matter of native art. Everyone knows that the various conductors active on the Ford Hour play no American music and only the most trite from Europe.

Toscanini, most famous of symphonic broadcasters, has the worst record of all. During 34 years of activity in this country he has played two native compositions.

Works Please Symphony Audience

THE BOSTON HERALD

SUNDAY, APRIL 27, 1941

SOCIETY

Each spring, benefit Pop Concerts blossom forth on the social calendar as profusely as the dandelions that dot the green meadows. Tuesday evening, May 13, has been chosen as Smith Night at the Pops, the entire proceeds to benefit the Scholarship Fund of the Boston Smith Club. The soloists will be two Smith College seniors, Miss Nancy Parker and Miss Mertina Johnson, in a special program including the Bach Concerto in C major for two pianos and orchestra.

Mrs. Charles F. Hovey of Chestnut Hill is chairman of the committee planning this gala evening at Symphony Hall. Assisting her are Mrs. John E. Yerxa and Mrs. Harris J. Nelson of Boston; Mrs. Henry McBurney Parker and Mrs. Charles C. Cunningham of Chestnut Hill; Mrs. Charles G. Mixter, Jr., Mrs. Howard Whiteside, Mrs. Geoffrey Lewis and Mrs. Edward A. Counihan of Cambridge; Mrs. Arnold Porter of Brookline; Mrs. Eustis Walcott and Mrs. Theodore Chase of Dover; Mrs. Charles J. Draper of Belmont; Mrs. J. Burke Wilkinson of Lincoln; Mrs. Stephen Grant of Wellesley, and Mrs. Richard Thompson of Salem.

Among the patronesses are Mrs. Osborne Earle, president of the Boston Smith Club, Mrs. Gordon Morrison, treasurer, Miss Ada L. Comstock, president of Radcliffe, Mrs. Ernest B. Dane, Mrs. Henry B. Sawyer, Miss Charlotte Bassett, Mrs. Raymond S. Wilkins, Mrs. F. Brittain Kennedy, Mrs. Nathaniel Faxon, Mrs. Robert Cushman, Mrs. George N. Proctor, Mrs. Richard Floyd, Mrs. James Nelson, Mrs. Harvey P. Hood, Mrs. Frank Webster, Mrs. Dudley Harmon, Miss Muriel Haines, Mrs. Delbert Jackson and Mrs. William Rand.

ALISON ARNOLD—Editor

Mrs. Edward A. Counihan

Mrs. John E. Yerxa

Mrs. Charles F. Hovey

Mrs. Arnold Porter

Mrs. Charles J. Draper

Photos By Maynard White, Herald Staff Photographer.

trade "ALLTONE" mark
Reg. U. S. Patent Office

SECTION A

THE BOSTON HER

SUNDAY, APRIL 27, 1941

SOCIE

Each spring, benefit Pop Concerts blossom forth on the profusely as the dandelions that dot the green meadows. Tuesd has been chosen as Smith Night at the Pops, the entire proc Scholarship Fund of the Boston Smith Club. The soloists will seniors, Miss Nancy Parker and Miss Mertina Johnson, in a spe the Bach Concerto in C major for two pianos and orchestra.

Mrs. Charles F. Hovey of Chestnut Hill is chairman of t this gala evening at Symphony Hall. Assisting her are Mrs.
Harris J. Nelson of Boston; Mrs. Henry McBurney Parker an ningham of Chestnut Hill; Mrs. Charles G. Mixter, Jr., Mrs.
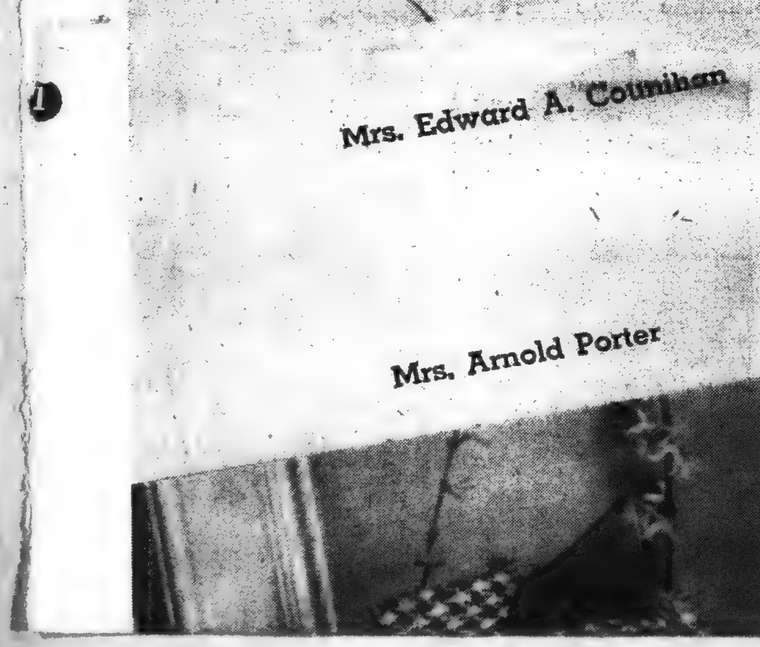
Geoffrey Lewis and Mrs. Edward A. Counihan of Cambridg
Brookline; Mrs. Eustis Walcott and Mrs. Theodore Chase
Draper of Belmont; Mrs. J. Burke Wilkinson of Lincoln
Wellesley, and Mrs. Richard Thompson of Salem.

Among the patronesses are Mrs. Osborne Earle
Smith Club, Mrs. Gordon Morrison, treasurer, Miss Ada
Radcliffe, Mrs. Ernest B. Dane, Mrs. Henry B. Sawyer,
Raymond S. Wilkins, Mrs. F. Brittain Kennedy, Mrs. N
Cushman, Mrs. George N. Proctor, Mrs. Richard Floy
Harvey P. Hood, Mrs. Frank Webster, Mrs. Dudley
Mrs. Delbert Jackson and Mrs. William Rand.

ALISON ARNOLD—Editor

Mrs. John E. Yerxa



Mrs. Edward A. Counihan

Mrs. Arnold Porter

THE POP CONCERTS WILL BEGIN AGAIN THIS WEEK

THE NEWS OF THE WORLD OF MUSIC

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

THE Symphony Hall Pops will begin their 56th season on Tuesday evening, a day earlier than usual, in relation to the last symphony concert. They will end on July 3, and for the first few weeks, at least, there will be concerts on Sunday evening also. Then will come the Esplanade series and the Berkshire festival, and the first thing you know it will be time for the symphony concerts (once the only orchestra concerts we had) to begin all over again.

Now at the peak of his well deserved popularity, Arthur Fiedler will conduct an orchestra of some 90 players, a larger body than ever before. His first programme, which may be studied in detail in another column, is typical of the range of these lists and includes music by Sousa, Offenbach, Donizetti, Wagner, Walter Piston, Prokofieff, Enesco, Josef Strauss, Lecuona and Eric Coates.

* * * *

The 150th anniversary of the death of Mozart (which actually falls on Dec. 5) finds that composer, whose earthly life was no bed of roses and whose very grave is unmarked, in high favor both in opera house and concert hall. The anniversary has something to do with this, but not everything. In the 60th season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra he led the field with six performances. Brahms rated five and Beethoven, Wagner, Sibelius and Stravinsky each had four. All told there were 84 compositions by 50 composers, of which 22 were new to Symphony Hall.

The most rewarding of these new pieces, some of which were really old, were—in this reviewer's opinion—Benjamin Britten's Variations for string orchestra, Samuel Barber's Overture, "The School for Scandal," Hindemith's 'cello concerto, Copland's "Quiet City," Villa Lobos' "Choros No. 10," the two Bach concertos for two pianos, the three pieces by Milhaud, which he conducted ("Le Cortege Funebre, "Fantaisie Pastorale" and "Suite Provencale"), and three contributions of Richard Burgin: the violin concerto of Piston, the Brahms-Schoenberg G minor quartet and Handel's "Fireworks Music."

* * * *

Three composers, Arthur Shepherd, Eugene Goossens and Stravinsky, introduced to us new symphonies of their own. Stravinsky's proved much the best of the lot, and even it was none too absorbing. Hardly worth the doing was Roy Harris' Folk Song Symphony, though its melodic material partially redeemed it.

There was new, timely and welcome emphasis on English music. Dr. Koussevitzky's revival of Vaughan Williams' "London" Symphony was one of the major successes of the season, Britten's Variations have been mentioned, and Stanley Chapple revived for us Elgar's Introduction and Allegro, Delius' "Paris" and gave us a new and pleasant enough "Overture to a Picaresque Comedy" by Bax. If Mr. Chapple conducts again next season, and he is likely to, he might do worse than give us one of the Elgar symphonies.

* * * *

Pre-season promises are not always fulfilled. We were to have received revivals of Berlioz' "Romeo and Juliet" Symphony, Mahler's Second and Schumann's Third and actually got the more familiar matter of their "Fantastique," Ninth and Fourth, respectively. By way of compensation, these were among the best performances of the year. Few could have missed the threatened performance of Tchaikovsky's "Manfred" Symphony, but the revival of his Second by Mr. Stravinsky made many wonder why that diverting piece had gone so long unheard here. We did not get Bruckner's Eighth, either, but there are other symphonies of his that we stood in more need of hearing, for example, the Fifth and Ninth, both of which are now recorded by the Victor Company.

Dr. Koussevitzky stirred up a teapot tempest with his two performances of Shostakovitch's Fifth Symphony and his open challenge to the reviewers' general lukewarmness toward that work. Also played twice, and twice in same pair of concerts, was Samuel Barber's short and agreeable "Essay for Orchestra." So much for post-season ruminations.

HOBART, OKLA.
DEMOCRAT - CHIEF
APR 30 1941

Today's Profile

(By UNITED PRESS)

Prince Charles Cheslovitch MacKaiev Miskavitch, which means Charles the son of Chelso MacKaiev, the son of Muscavite, is an are detective. He is one of the leading conservators of the United States and his job is to renovate, authenticate and classify old masterpieces. He has applied his X-ray machine and delicate instruments to many of the noted art works in this country.

Titles? Muskavitch doesn't like them and he says most Russian ones are phony. But here's how the title got into the Muskavitch family:

"My family," he explains, "lent our beer and vodka fortune to the Czar, so the Czar gave my grandfather a title instead of repaying the loan. The result was that my family found itself broke. My father was a violinist so he wound up literally playing fiddle for Czar."

The elder Muskavitch liked playing for the Czar better than fighting for him so after serving in the Russo-Japanese war he emigrated to the United States. Here he played in the Boston and Philadelphia Symphonies.

Young Charles, however, was more interested in American sports than symphonies and once held the Massachusetts state 50-yard dash record while a student at Boston Latin school. But after playing football in prep school, he decided music wasn't so bad after all.

At any rate he took up the bass saxaphone and played in the Dixieland jazz band around New York in the 1920s.

He explains the jump from music to art by declaring he was "a virtuoso who changed key."

Muskavitch has been doing all right in his profession of art. He has had his canvases hung in many American galleries.

Last fall he began work in the Sacramento, Cal., museum, restoring the several million dollar collection of old master drawings in the Crocker gallery. He found many important works which had been forgotten for more than a half century in the basement of the Crocker gallery. He re-discovered and restored works by Rubens, Van Dyke, Pieter Brueghel the Elder, Van Calcer and Mirov.

Muskavitch's home is Dallas, Tex., where he is Conservator of the Museum of Fine Arts.

"Being a kind of G-Man of the are world is no cinch," Muskavitch says. "You have to be able to spot a genuine Rubens or El Greco at a moment's notice and be able to detect a phony twice as fast. And some of the old painters and collectors could do things which an artist's signature fluid would make our modern counterfeiters or forgers look like rank amateurs."

Pops to Open 56th Season in Symphony Hall

Next Tuesday night in Symphony Hall the Pop concerts will open their 56th season. Arthur Fiedler, who through many spring seasons in Boston has brought the Pops to a new apex of popularity, will again be at his place with new and old music in hand and an orchestra of about ninety Symphony players to do his bidding. Refreshments will be served during each Pop concert at the tables which will cover the floor of Symphony Hall. Mr. Fiedler offers the following program for the opening week:

TUESDAY, MAY 6, AT 8:30
"Semper Fidelis," march.....Sousa
Overture to "Orpheus in Hades".....Offenbach
Minuet from "The Daughter of the Regiment".....Donizetti
"Die Meistersinger," excerpts from Act III.....Wagner
"The Incredible Flutist," suite.....Piston
Triumphal March from "Peter and the Wolf".....Prokofieff
Roumanian Rhapsody, No. 1.....Enesco
"Music of the Spheres," waltzes.....Josef Strauss
Andalucia.....Lecuona-Gould
"Oxford Street," march from London Again".....Eric Coates

WEDNESDAY, MAY 7, AT 8:30
Entrance of the Guests into the Wartburg, from "Tannhauser".....Wagner
Overture to "The Merry Wives of Windsor".....Nicolai
"Molly on the Shore".....Grainger
"Aida," Fantasia.....Verdi
"Peer Gynt" Suite.....Grieg
Morning Mood—Anitra's Dance—In the Hall of the Troll King
"Drink to Me Only with Thine Eyes."
Arranged by Alfred Pochon
For string orchestra
Overture to "Rienzi".....Wagner
"Roses from the South," waltzes..Strauss
Intermezzo, "Souvenir of Vienna"..Prevost
First Hungarian Dance.....Brahms

THURSDAY, MAY 8, AT 8:30
Polonaise from "Eugene Oniegin".....Tchaikovsky
Overture to "Poet and Peasant".....Suppe
"Entrance of the Little Fauns".....Pierne
"By the Beautiful Blue Danube," waltzes.....Strauss
"Nutcracker," Ballet Suite....Tchaikovsky
March—Arabian Dance—Waltz of the Flowers
"Finlandia," Symphonic Poem.....Sibelius
Rhapsody in Blue.....Gershwin
Soloist: Leo Litwin, piano
Prelude in C-sharp minor....Rachmaninoff
"The Toy Trumpet".....Scott
"Thunder and Lightning," Polka..Strauss

FRIDAY, MAY 9, AT 8:30
Marche Militaire.....Schubert
Overture to "William Tell".....Rossini
"The Sleigh Ride".....Mozart
"Carmen," Fantasia.....Bizet
Overture to "The Flying Dutchman".....Wagner
Pavane for a Dead Infanta.....Ravel
Marche Slave.....Tchaikovsky
"Tales from the Vienna Woods," waltzes.....Strauss
"Fugato on a Well-Known Theme".....McBride
"Pomp and Circumstance," march...Elgar

SATURDAY, MAY 10, AT 8:30
Introduction to Act III, "Lohengrin".....Wagner
Overture to "Die Fledermaus".....Strauss
Ave Maria.....Schubert-Wilhelmj
March of the Sardar from "Caucasian Sketches".....Ippolitov-Ivanov
Twelve Contra-Dances.....Beethoven
The Lost Chord.....Sullivan
Trumpet solo: Roger Voisin
Finale, "Scheherazade"..Rimsky-Korsakov
Songs by the Regis College Glee Club
"Estudiantina," waltzes.....Waldteufel
"Stars and Stripes Forever," march..Sousa

SUNDAY, MAY 11, AT 8:30
Prelude to "Carmen".....Bizet
Largo from the "New World" Symphony.....Dvorak
Latin-American Symphonette.Morton Gould
Rhumba—Tango—Guaracha—Conga
Piano Concerto No. 2 in D minor, Op. 23.....MacDowell
Soloist: Jesus Maria Sanroma
Bolero.....Ravel
Invitation to the Dance.....Weber
Cielito Lindo....Arranged by Peter Bodge
"Strike up the Band".....Gershwin

TOPEKA, KAN.
CAPITAL
APR 27 1941

129

Sings Here Friday Night

Dorothy Maynor, Negro soprano.

"One of the outstanding voices of the day," was the verdict of the music critic of the New York Times, after hearing for the first time Dorothy Maynor, the Negro soprano, who will give a recital on Friday night at the Woman's Club Auditorium.

Miss Maynor's sensational rise to fame is one of the rare success stories in recent music history. A few months ago she was a virtually unknown singer. Today critics agree on the discovery of a new star on the musical horizon.

A native of Norfolk, Va., and daughter of a minister, Miss Maynor received her first musical experience in the choir of her father's church. At fourteen she entered Hampton Institute, where she was a member of the choir and went to Europe with the Institute's famous chorus. She had modestly planned to become merely a music teacher, but was urged by Dr. John Finley Williamson, of the Westminster Choir in Princeton, N. J., to become a choral director. But Dorothy Maynor's is a voice which captures friends—and several music lovers who heard her insisted that this voice must be given a chance—and a solo career! She came to New York and first studied with Wilfred Klamroth, before going to her present teacher, John Alan Haughton. A brillian New York recital in November and an appearance as soloist with the great Boston Symphony Orchestra during the same month have started her first season.

It has been quite a jump for a young singer who had had virtually no experience on the solo platform to find herself the sensation of this year's musical season, with many cities clamoring to hear her. Anyone would pardon the young singer a certain self-congratulation. But Dorothy Maynor has a true artist's modesty and reverence for the works she sings. Music is her entire life. "I hope to represent the art of song as well as I can—to be worthy to sing the best music," is all she says.

Miss Maynor's concert brings to a close Topeka Community Concert Association's tenth and most successful season. This will be annual Membership Week, and all desiring to join the association for the ensuing year may do so by calling at the Wolf Jewelry Store.

By a Staff Photographer

Conference on a Pops Program

Arthur Fiedler, Pops conductor; Leslie J. Rogers, Librarian of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Prof. Walter Piston of Harvard examining the score of Mr. Piston's ballet, "The Incredible Flutist." An orchestral Suite from the score will be performed at the Symphony Hall Pop Concert, May 6.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
BROOKLYN, N. Y.
CITIZEN
MAY 1 - 1941

Boston Symphony Aides Hear Talk By Reginald C. Foster; Tea Given By Mrs. Henry J. Davenport

Reginald C. Foster, chairman of the Society of Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was the guest of honor yesterday at the Spring meeting of the Brooklyn Committee of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the home of Mrs. Henry J. Davenport, No. 31 Grace court. Mrs. Davenport is executive chairman of the Brooklyn Committee of which Adrian Van Sinderen is chairman.

Mr. Foster addressed the group on the background and formation of a symphony orchestra. Mrs. Walter Truslow, chairman of boxes and Mrs. M. Preston Goodfellow, chairman o fthe membership of the Brooklyn Committee made reports on the plans of the committee for the 1941-42 Brooklyn subscription season. The orchestra completed recently its fifty-fifth season in Brooklyn. Dates for the 1941-42 season are: Friday evening, Nov. 21, Friday evening, Jan. 9, Thursday evening, Feb. 12, Friday evening, Mar. 13 and Friday evening, April 3.

The concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, of which Dr. Serge Koussevitsky is conductor, are presented in Brooklyn under the auspices of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences, of which James G. McDonald is president, the Philharmonic Society of Brooklyn, of which Dr. R. Huntington Woodman is president, and the Brooklyn Committee.

Among those who attended yesterday's tea were: Mrs. George M. Billings, Mrs. Edward C. Blum, Mrs. Irving L. Cabot, Mrs. Thomas F. Casey, Mrs. I. Sherwood Coffin, Mrs. Russell V. Cruikshank, Mrs. Guy DuVal, Mrs. Lewis W. Francis, Mrs. Charles Jaffa, Mrs. William G. James, Mrs. Maxwell Lester, Mrs. Irving J. Sands, Mrs. F. R. Schepmoes, Robert Alfred Shaw, Mrs. William Slater, Mrs. Harold I. Small, Carl H. Tollefsen, Mrs. Adrian Van Sinderen, Mrs. Edward Carrington Ward, Mrs. Walter F. Wells, Mrs. William H. Whitton and Mrs. Maude B. Wood.

This Clipping From
SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.
CHRONICLE
MAY 1 - 1941

Local Girls Sing In Boston Concert

Marian Marcus, daughter of Mrs. Henry Marcus, and Joan Humphrey, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frederic L. Humphrey, sang with the choral society of Radcliffe Society last Sunday at the pension fund concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Christian Science Monitor

Pops Open Next Tuesday

MAY 1, 1941

The Symphony Hall Pop concerts will open their fifty-sixth season Tuesday evening. Arthur Fiedler will again conduct an orchestra of about 90 Symphony players. Refreshments will be served at the tables which will cover the floor of Symphony Hall. Mr. Fiedler offers the following programs for the opening week:

Tuesday, May 6, at 8:30

"Semper Fidelis," March ..... Sousa
Overture to "Orpheus in Hades" ..... Offenbach
Minuet from "The Daughter of the Regiment" ..... Donizetti
"Die Meistersinger," Excerpts from Act III ..... Wagner
"The Incredible Flutist," Suite .... Piston
Triumphal March from "Peter and the Wolf" ..... Prokofieff
Roumanian Rhapsody, No. 1 ..... Enesco
"Music of the Spheres," Waltzes ..... Josef Strauss
Andalucia ..... Lecuona-Gould
"Oxford Street," March from "London Again" ..... Eric Coates

Wednesday, May 7, at 8:30

Entrance of the Guests into the Wartburg, from "Tannhäuser" ..... Wagner
Overture to "The Merry Wives of Windsor" ..... Nicolai
"Molly on the Shore" ..... Grainger
"Aida," Fantasia ..... Verdi
"Peer Gynt" Suite ..... Grieg
"Drink to Me Only With Thine Eyes" Arranged by Alfred Pochon for String Orchestra
Overture to "Rienzi" ..... Wagner
"Roses from the South," Waltzes ..... Strauss
Intermezzo, "Souvenir of Vienna" ..... Prevost
First Hungarian Dance ..... Brahms

Thursday, May 8, at 8:30

Polonaise from "Eugene Onégin" ..... Tchaikovsky
Overture to "Poet and Peasant" .. Suppé
"Entrance of the Little Fauns" .... Pierné
"By the Beautiful Blue Danube," Waltzes ..... Strauss
"Nutcracker," Ballet Suite .. Tchaikovsky
"Finlandia," Symphonic Poem ... Sibelius

TRENTON, N. J
NEWS
5/2/41

Jack Styer of Bordentown, has been elected fraternity representative on the Student Council at Lafayette College.

Four New Jersey students sang with the Radcliffe College Choral Society at the recent annual pension fund concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The quartet included Miss Anne Bedinger, of Fort Dix, and Miss Helen Crossley, of Princeton.

This Clipping From
SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.
EXAMINER
MAY 1 - 1941

Local Girls Sing In Boston Concert

TWO SAN FRANCISCO lasses, Marion Marcus and Joan Humphrey, were among members of the Choral Society of Radcliffe College to take part in the annual pension fund concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra last Sunday in Boston.

Marion, daughter of Mrs. Henry C. Marcus, will receive her diploma in June and soon thereafter will make plans for her marriage to H. Garrett Wright. Joan is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frederic L. Humphrey.

Rhapsody in Blue ..... Gershwin
Soloist: Leo Litwin, Piano
Prelude in C sharp minor .. Rachmaninoff
"The Toy Trumpet" ..... Scott
"Thunder and Lightning," Polka ..... Strauss

Friday, May 9, at 8:30

Marche Militaire ..... Schubert
Overture to "William Tell" ..... Rossini
"The Sleigh Ride" .... Mozart
"Carmen," Fantasia ..... Bizet
Overture to "The Flying Dutchman" ..... Wagner
Pavene for a Dead Infanta ..... Ravel
Marche Slave ..... Tchaikovsky
"Tales from the Vienna Woods," Waltzes ..... Strauss
"Fugato on a Well-Known Theme" ..... McBride
"Pomp and Circumstance," March .. Elgar

Saturday, May 10, at 8:30

Introduction to Act III, "Lohengrin" ..... Wagner
Overture to "Die Fledermaus" .... Strauss
Ave Maria ..... Schubert-Wilhelmj
March of the Sardar from "Caucasian Sketches" ..... Ippolitoff-Ivanoff
Twelve Contra-Dances ..... Beethoven
The Lost Chord ..... Sullivan
Trumpet Solo: Roger Voisin
Finale, "Schéhérazade" .. Rimsky-Korsakoff
Songs by the Regis College Glee Club
"Estudiantina," Waltzes ..... Waldteufel
"Stars and Stripes Forever," March ..... Sousa

Sunday, May 11, at 8:30

Prelude to "Carmen" ..... Bizet
Largo from the "New World" Symphony ..... Dvořák
Latin-American Symphonette ..... Morton Gould
Piano Concerto No. 2 in D minor, Op. 23 ..... MacDowell
Soloist: Jesús María Sanromá
Bolero ..... Ravel
Invitation to the Dance ..... Weber
Cielito Lindo ... Arranged by Peter Bodge
"Strike Up the Band" ..... Gershwin

THIS CLIPPING FROM CHICAGO, ILL.
DIAPASON
MAY 1 - 1941

E. POWER BIGGS HEARD WITH BOSTON SYMPHONY

At the final concert of a series of six youth concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra March 19 E. Power Biggs, now the official organist of the orchestra, was the soloist, playing Handel's Thirteenth Concerto ("The Cuckoo and the Nightingale"). This is the third season of these concerts, conducted by Wheeler Beckett.

Mr. Biggs was one of four soloists who gave an unusual concert at the Germanic Museum of Harvard University in Cambridge, Mass., March 24. Mr. Biggs played Vivaldi's Concerto in D minor and a group of selections of English organ music which consisted of: Introduction and Toccata in G major, Walond; Variations on the Dutch Chorale "Laet Ons met Herten Reijne." Bull; Trumpet Voluntary, Purcell; "The Earl of Salisbury," Byrd; "Ayre" in E minor, Stanley; Two Trumpet Tunes and Air, Purcell. The remainder of the program included a sonata for strings with organ by Corelli and three sonatas for strings with organ by Mozart.

This Clipping From
BROOKLYN, N.Y.
EAGLE
MAY 1 - 1941

30

Symphony Group Hears Address By R. C. Foster

Reginald C. Foster, chairman of the Society of Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was guest of honor yesterday at the Spring meeting of the Brooklyn committee of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the home of Mrs. Henry J. Davenport, 31 Grace Court. Mrs. Davenport is executive chairman of the Brooklyn committee, of which Adrian Van Sinderen is chairman.

Mr. Foster discussed the background and formation of a symphony orchestra. This is the first time that a representative of the Society of Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has come from Boston to participate in a meeting of the Brooklyn committee.

Plans for '42 Season

Mrs. Walter Truslow, chairman of boxes, and Mrs. M. Preston Goodfellow, chairman of the membership committee of the Brooklyn committee, made reports on the plans of the committee in the interest of the 1941-42 Brooklyn subscription season. The Boston Symphony Orchestra has just completed its 55th season in Brooklyn, and dates for the 1941-42 season are announced as follows: Friday evening, Nov. 21; Friday evening, Jan. 9; Thursday evening, Feb. 12; Friday evening, March 13, and Friday evening, April 3.

The season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, of which Dr. Serge Koussevitsky is conductor, is presented in Brooklyn under the auspices of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences, of which James G. McDonald is president; the Philharmonic Society of Brooklyn, of which Dr. R. Huntington Woodman is president, and the Brooklyn Committee.

Among the members of the Brooklyn Committee who attended yesterday's tea were Mrs. George M. Billings, Mrs. Edward C. Blum, a vice chairman of the Brooklyn Committee; Mrs. Irving L. Cabot, Mrs. Thomas F. Casey, Mrs. I. Sherwood Coffin, Mrs. Russell V. Cruikshank, Mrs. Guy DuVal, Mrs. Lewis W. Francis, Mrs. M. Preston Goodfellow, chairman of the membership committee; Mrs. Charles Jaffa, Mrs. William G. James, Mrs. Maxwell Lester, Mrs. Irving J. Sands, Mrs. F. R. Schepmoes, Robert Alfred Shaw, Mrs. William Slater, Mrs. Harold I. Small, Carl H. Tollefsen, Mrs. Adrian Van Sinderen, Mrs. Truslow, chairman of boxes; Mrs. Edward Carrington Ward, Mrs. Walter F. Wells, Mrs. William H. Whitton, Mrs. Maude B. Wood, Miss Emma Jessie Ogg and Mrs. Charles W. Franklin.

This Clipping From
NEWARK, N. J.
STAR-LEDGER
MAY 2 - 1941

Expect 10,000 At Concert In Rutgers Bowl

More than 10,000 New J music-lovers are expected to Rutgers Stadium in New B wick Sunday afternoon, Ma for the concert by Leopold kowski and his All - Ame Youth Orchestra, which will its only North Jersey appea of the season in the giant crete bowl in the first of the gers Stadium Concerts.

One of the early stops i transcontinental 72-concert Stokowski's appearance at Ru will mark the third notable phony concert of the year a college. The Rochester and Symphony units made stops during the Winter season.

Many of the young artists made the South American transcontinental tours last se with Stokowski will be under baton again this Summer as 110-piece unit moves slowly a the United States toward H wood, where motion picture gagements will close the y activities late next Fall.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
MAY 2 - 1941

The People's Forum

Meeting Standards

To the Editor of THE EAGLE:—

With reference to the BMA chorus, some people, not acquainted with all the facts, must think it is in its "last gasp," but this is not at all the case. It is true that there are still openings for more men, but even so, the chorus as it now stands is quite capable of doing justice to itself, to the county, to the music selected and to the great occasion. Even the tenor section, which was numerically weak has been so strengthened, and is doing such splendid and enthusiastic work, that it is becoming a tower of strength. It is not, after all, only numbers which count in obtaining a proper balance.

I hope everyone read two excellent letters, published recently in The Eagle's friendly columns, over the signatures of James C. Morton (April 27) and Mrs. Dorothy B. Steele (April 19). In thanking them for their expressions of help I should like to mention that the members of the groups mentioned by Mr. Morton along with many other choirs and glee clubs did in fact receive invitations some weeks ago to join with the BMA in its efforts to make the local contribution to the Festival at Tanglewood an outstanding success. As Mr. Morton says there is no reason why it should not be so. All we need is the imagination and co-operation of the musical public, and perhaps a willingness to sink individualities in the common interest.

I should like to assure Mr. Morton himself, the members of the groups he names and any other tenors or basses who may not have realized the general nature of the invitation, that I should value their co-operation and welcome their addition to our group.

There is only one proviso, which I am sure all will understand, and that is that those who wish to respond to the call enroll at once and start attendance at rehearsals this Monday. But 12 weeks remain for preparation, and all this time will be needed if we are to measure up to the standard of perfection which is the hallmark of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its acknowledged master-conductor Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

HORACE HUNT.
Musical Director Berkshire Musical Association.
Dalton.

A Tragedy

To the Editor of THE EAGLE:—

One of the many deplorable consequences of political persecution in Europe is the utter impoverishment of Eleanora Nikisch Schindler, the daughter of the renowned Arthur Nikisch, former conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and later of the Berlin Philharmonic and Leipzig Gewandhaus Orchestras and one of the greatest orchestra leaders of all time. She with her husband, Emil Schindler, and their two children, had to flee from their home in Prague at the time of the Nazi conquest of Czecho-Slovakia, and since that time they have led a most precarious existence. They are now in Italy, where Mr. Schindler is a prisoner in a concentration camp, for no other reason than that he is a Jew. He is a brother of the late Kurt Schindler, who is well remembered in New York as the founder and former conductor of the celebrated Schola Cantorum.

The situation of the family in Italy is most critical, and funds are now being raised in this country to enable them to come to America. As I was a friend of Arthur Nikisch and a great admirer of his wonderful art during the many years that I lived in Berlin before the first World War, I have been requested to make known through the press an appeal to music lovers to contribute to this fund. The sum of $1500 is necessary for the purpose.

A home here has already been found for them with a niece of Arthur Nikisch, Mrs. Irma Groell, 240 River Road, Red Bank, N. J. Checks should be marked "For the Nikisch Fund," and made payable and mailed to Olga Naumoff, in care of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, 88 Druce Street, Brookline, Mass. Miss Naumoff is Dr. Koussevitzky's niece and secretary and she will see that the funds thus collected reach their proper destination. She became interested in the plan because of a letter which Dr. Koussevitzky received from Mrs. Schindler describing the deplorable situation of the family. The two Schindler children are the only living grandchildren of Arthur Nikisch.

ARTHUR M. ABELL.
Hastings-on-Hudson, N. Y.

making eason of certs, to of Wash-ning the ax Steinthe ponusicians expected presented 13, when oir will Stanley

r, Serge re Music ductor at erts, and gness to scussions
Berkshire
e the St.
d.
cet-selling
y a few of Mrs.
e new of-
Polk Jr.,
Bry, vice-
Franklin,
Holland,

Society
rs ago by in sym-d in the could be a setting Municipal
ise. The nsiderable then asn the New estra. Mr.
American conducted ienna and i his own
New York.
onduct the beginning s given in John Buran audience ans on the mmittee in-ciscus, first

s W. Pettus,
mann, Mrs.
Mrs. Henry
, Mrs. Ellis
B. Weakley,
Miss Mary

Mrs. John ork, the for-onant; Mrs.
Capt. How-tationed at Putzel, now
Johnson, Jay

Rice, Miss Corinne Frederick, Max Steindel, Igor Geffin, Mr. and Mrs. Arnold Maremont, now living in Chicago; and Mr. and Mrs. Myric Rogers who have also moved to Chicago where Mr. Rogers is curator of decorative arts at the Chicago Art Institute.

A recent letter from London to an officer of the Little Symphony organization here tells of the success of midday chamber music concerts organized by Myra Hess in London's National Gallery. The artists have been compelled to add an after lunch session and are now contemplating a tea time performance. The same letter also mentions the Griller String Quartet, now enlisted in the Royal Air Force and serving under Wing Commander R. P. O'Donnell, M. V. O.

By a Staff Photographer

Conference on a Pops Program

Arthur Fiedler, Pops conductor; Leslie J. Rogers, Librarian of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Prof. Walter Piston of Harvard examining the score of Mr. Piston's ballet, "The Incredible Flutist." An orchestral Suite from the score will be performed at the Symphony Hall Pop Concert, May 6.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
BROOKLYN, N. Y.
CITIZEN
MAY 1 - 1941

Boston Symphony Aides Hear Talk By Reginald C. Foster; Tea Given By Mrs. Henry J. Davenport

Reginald C. Foster, chairman of the Society of Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was the guest of honor yesterday at the Spring meeting of the Brooklyn Committee of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the home of Mrs. Henry J. Davenport, No. 31 Grace court. Mrs. Davenport is executive chairman of the Brooklyn Committee of which Adrian Van Sinderen is chairman.

Mr. Foster addressed the group on the background and formation of a symphony orchestra. Mrs. Walter Truslow, chairman of boxes and Mrs. M. Preston Goodfellow, chairman o fthe membership of the Brooklyn Committee made reports on the plans of the committee for the 1941-42 Brooklyn subscription season. The orchestra completed recently its fifty-fifth season in Brooklyn. Dates for the 1941-42 season are: Friday evening, Nov. 21, Friday evening, Jan. 9, Thursday evening, Feb. 12, Friday evening, Mar. 13 and Friday evening, April 3.

The concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, of which Dr. Serge Koussevitsky is conductor, are presented in Brooklyn under the auspices of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences, of which James G. McDonald is president, the Philharmonic Society of Brooklyn, of which Dr. R. Huntington Woodman is president, and the Brooklyn Committee.

Among those who attended yesterday's tea were: Mrs. George M. Billings, Mrs. Edward C. Blum, Mrs. Irving L. Cabot, Mrs. Thomas F. Casey, Mrs. I. Sherwood Coffin, Mrs. Russell V. Cruikshank, Mrs. Guy DuVal, Mrs. Lewis W. Francis, Mrs. Charles Jaffa, Mrs. William G. James, Mrs. Maxwell Lester, Mrs. Irving J. Sands, Mrs. F. R. Schepmoes, Robert Alfred Shaw, Mrs. William Slater, Mrs. Harold I. Small, Carl H. Tollefsen, Mrs. Adrian Van Sinderen, Mrs. Edward Carrington Ward, Mrs. Walter F. Wells, Mrs. William H. Whitton and Mrs. Maude B. Wood.

This Clipping From
SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.
CHRONICLE
MAY 1 - 1941

Local Girls Sing In Boston Concert

Marian Marcus, daughter of Mrs. Henry Marcus, and Joan Humphrey, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frederic L. Humphrey, sang with the choral society of Radcliffe Society last Sunday at the pension fund concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Christian Science Monitor

Pops Open Next Tuesday

MAY 1, 1941

The Symphony Hall Pop concerts will open their fifty-sixth season Tuesday evening. Arthur Fiedler will again conduct an orchestra of about 90 Symphony players. Refreshments will be served at the tables which will cover the floor of Symphony Hall. Mr. Fiedler offers the following programs for the opening week:

Tuesday, May 6, at 8:30

"Semper Fidelis," March ..... Sousa
Overture to "Orpheus in Hades" ..... Offenbach
Minuet from "The Daughter of the Regiment" ..... Donizetti
"Die Meistersinger," Excerpts from Act III ..... Wagner
"The Incredible Flutist," Suite .... Piston
Triumphal March from "Peter and the Wolf" ..... Prokofieff
Roumanian Rhapsody, No. 1 ..... Enesco
"Music of the Spheres," Waltzes ..... Josef Strauss
Andalucia ..... Lecuona-Gould
"Oxford Street," March from "London Again" ..... Eric Coates

Wednesday, May 7, at 8:30

Entrance of the Guests into the Wartburg, from "Tannhäuser" ..... Wagner
Overture to "The Merry Wives of Windsor" ..... Nicolai
"Molly on the Shore" ..... Grainger
"Aida," Fantasia ..... Verdi
"Peer Gynt" Suite ..... Grieg
"Drink to Me Only With Thine Eyes" Arranged by Alfred Pochon for String Orchestra
Overture to "Rienzi" ..... Wagner
"Roses from the South," Waltzes ..... Strauss
Intermezzo, "Souvenir of Vienna" ..... Prevost
First Hungarian Dance ..... Brahms

Thursday, May 8, at 8:30

Polonaise from "Eugene Onégin" ..... Tchaikovsky
Overture to "Poet and Peasant" ..... Suppé
"Entrance of the Little Fauns" ..... Pierné
"By the Beautiful Blue Danube," Waltzes ..... Strauss
"Nutcracker," Ballet Suite ..... Tchaikovsky
"Finlandia," Symphonic Poem ..... Sibelius
Rhapsody in Blue ..... Gershwin
Soloist: Leo Litwin, Piano
Prelude in C sharp minor ..... Rachmaninoff
"The Toy Trumpet" ..... Scott
"Thunder and Lightning," Polka ..... Strauss

Friday, May 9, at 8:30

Marche Militaire ..... Schubert
Overture to "William Tell" ..... Rossini
"The Sleigh Ride" ..... Mozart
"Carmen," Fantasia ..... Bizet
Overture to "The Flying Dutchman" ..... Wagner
Pavene for a Dead Infanta ..... Ravel
Marche Slave ..... Tchaikovsky
"Tales from the Vienna Woods," Waltzes ..... Strauss
"Fugato on a Well-Known Theme" ..... McBride
"Pomp and Circumstance," March ..... Elgar

Saturday, May 10, at 8:30

Introduction to Act III, "Lohengrin" ..... Wagner
Overture to "Die Fledermaus" ..... Strauss
Ave Maria ..... Schubert-Wilhelmj
March of the Sardar from "Caucasian Sketches" ..... Ippolitoff-Ivanoff
Twelve Contra-Dances ..... Beethoven
The Lost Chord ..... Sullivan
Trumpet Solo: Roger Voisin
Finale, "Schéhérazade" ..... Rimsky-Korsakoff
Songs by the Regis College Glee Club
"Estudiantina," Waltzes ..... Waldteufel
"Stars and Stripes Forever," March ..... Sousa

Sunday, May 11, at 8:30

Prelude to "Carmen" ..... Bizet
Largo from the "New World" Symphony ..... Dvořák
Latin-American Symphonette ..... Morton Gould
Piano Concerto No. 2 in D minor, Op. 23 ..... MacDowell
Soloist: Jesús María Sanromá
Bolero ..... Ravel
Invitation to the Dance ..... Weber
Cielito Lindo ..... Arranged by Peter Bodge
"Strike Up the Band" ..... Gershwin

TRENTON, N. J
NEWS
5/2/41

Jack Styer of Bordentown, has been elected fraternity representative on the Student Council at Lafayette College.

Four New Jersey students sang with the Radcliffe College Choral Society at the recent annual pension fund concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The quartet included Mrs. Anne Bedinger, of Fort Dix, and Miss Helen Crossley, of Princeton.

This Clipping From
SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.
EXAMINER
MAY 1 - 1941

Local Girls Sing In Boston Concert

TWO SAN FRANCISCO lasses, Marion Marcus and Joan Humphrey, were among members of the Choral Society of Radcliffe College to take part in the annual pension fund concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra last Sunday in Boston.

Marion, daughter of Mrs. Henry C. Marcus, will receive her diploma in June and soon thereafter will make plans for her marriage to H. Garrett Wright. Joan is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frederic L. Humphrey.

THIS CLIPPING FROM CHICAGO, ILL.
DIAPASON
MAY 1 - 1941

E. POWER BIGGS HEARD WITH BOSTON SYMPHONY

At the final concert of a series of six youth concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra March 19 E. Power Biggs, now the official organist of the orchestra, was the soloist, playing Handel's Thirteenth Concerto ("The Cuckoo and the Nightingale"). This is the third season of these concerts, conducted by Wheeler Beckett.

Mr. Biggs was one of four soloists who gave an unusual concert at the Germanic Museum of Harvard University in Cambridge, Mass., March 24. Mr. Biggs played Vivaldi's Concerto in D minor and a group of selections of English organ music which consisted of: Introduction and Toccata in G major, Walond; Variations on the Dutch Chorale "Laet Ons met Herten Reijne," Bull; Trumpet Voluntary, Purcell; "The Earl of Salisbury," Byrd; "Ayre" in E minor, Stanley; Two Trumpet Tunes and Air, Purcell. The remainder of the program included a sonata for strings with organ by Corelli and three sonatas for strings with organ by Mozart.

This Clipping From
NEWARK, N. J.
STAR-LEDGER
MAY 2 - 1941

Expect 10,000 At Concert In Rutgers Bowl

More than 10,000 New Jersey music-lovers are expected to jam Rutgers Stadium in New Brunswick Sunday afternoon, May 18, for the concert by Leopold Stokowski and his All - American Youth Orchestra, which will make its only North Jersey appearance of the season in the giant concrete bowl in the first of the Rutgers Stadium Concerts.

One of the early stops in the transcontinental 72-concert tour, Stokowski's appearance at Rutgers will mark the third notable symphony concert of the year at the college. The Rochester and Boston Symphony units made stops there during the Winter season.

Many of the young artists who made the South American and transcontinental tours last season with Stokowski will be under his baton again this Summer as the 110-piece unit moves slowly across the United States toward Hollywood, where motion picture engagements will close the year's activities late next Fall.

This Clipping From
BROOKLYN, N.Y.
EAGLE
MAY 1 - 1941

30

Symphony Group Hears Address By R. C. Foster

Reginald C. Foster, chairman of the Society of Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was guest of honor yesterday at the Spring meeting of the Brooklyn committee of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the home of Mrs. Henry J. Davenport, 31 Grace Court. Mrs. Davenport is executive chairman of the Brooklyn committee, of which Adrian Van Sinderen is chairman.

Mr. Foster discussed the background and formation of a symphony orchestra. This is the first time that a representative of the Society of Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has come from Boston to participate in a meeting of the Brooklyn committee.

Plans for '42 Season

Mrs. Walter Truslow, chairman of boxes, and Mrs. M. Preston Goodfellow, chairman of the membership committee of the Brooklyn committee, made reports on the plans of the committee in the interest of the 1941-42 Brooklyn subscription season. The Boston Symphony Orchestra has just completed its 55th season in Brooklyn, and dates for the 1941-42 season are announced as follows: Friday evening, Nov. 21; Friday evening, Jan. 9; Thursday evening, Feb. 12; Friday evening, March 13, and Friday evening, April 3.

The season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, of which Dr. Serge Koussevitsky is conductor, is presented in Brooklyn under the auspices of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences, of which James G. McDonald is president; the Philharmonic Society of Brooklyn, of which Dr. R. Huntington Woodman is president, and the Brooklyn Committee.

Among the members of the Brooklyn Committee who attended yesterday's tea were Mrs. George M. Billings, Mrs. Edward C. Blum, a vice chairman of the Brooklyn Committee; Mrs. Irving L. Cabot, Mrs. Thomas F. Casey, Mrs. I. Sherwood Coffin, Mrs. Russell V. Cruikshank, Mrs. Guy DuVal, Mrs. Lewis W. Francis, Mrs. M. Preston Goodfellow, chairman of the membership committee; Mrs. Charles Jaffa, Mrs. William G. James, Mrs. Maxwell Lester, Mrs. Irving J. Sands, Mrs. F. R. Schepmoes, Robert Alfred Shaw, Mrs. William Slater, Mrs. Harold I. Small, Carl H. Tollefsen, Mrs. Adrian Van Sinderen, Mrs. Truslow, chairman of boxes; Mrs. Edward Carrington Ward, Mrs. Walter F. Wells, Mrs. William H. Whitton, Mrs. Maude B. Wood, Miss Emma Jessie Ogg and Mrs. Charles W. Franklin.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

mailed to Olga Naumoff, in care of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, 88 Druce Street, Brookline, Mass. Miss Naumoff is Dr. Koussevitzky's niece and secretary and she will see that the funds thus collected reach their proper destination. She became interested in the plan because of a letter which Dr. Koussevitzky received from Mrs. Schindler describing the deplorable situation of the family. The two Schindler children are the only living grandchildren of Arthur Nikisch.

ARTHUR M. ABELL.
Hastings-on-Hudson, N. Y.

HITS THE

You can play tunes right away

how to read music, play chords in all keys, understand rhythm and rudiments of music. Has three easy popular pieces.

Send 10c in coin for your copy of Quick Course in Piano Playing to tain friends!

Our 24-page instruction book in cludes keyboard chart, shows yo

ST. LOUIS, MO.
POST DISPATCH
MAY 2 - 1941

A COMMITTEE is making plans for a six-week season of Little Symphony concerts, to be held in the Quadrangle of Washington University Beginning the night of June 13, with Max Steindel, resident conductor, on the podium, an orchestra of 25 musicians will play to an audience expected to exceed last year's 1800.

Choral work will be presented for the first time June 13, when Father Vitry's Boys' Choir will sing a Bach cantata. Stanley Chapple, assistant to Dr. Serge Koussevitzky at Berkshire Music Center, will be guest conductor at the June 20 and 27 concerts, and has indicated his willingness to participate in informal discussions as he has done at the Berkshire Festival and here before the St. Louis Grand Opera Guild.

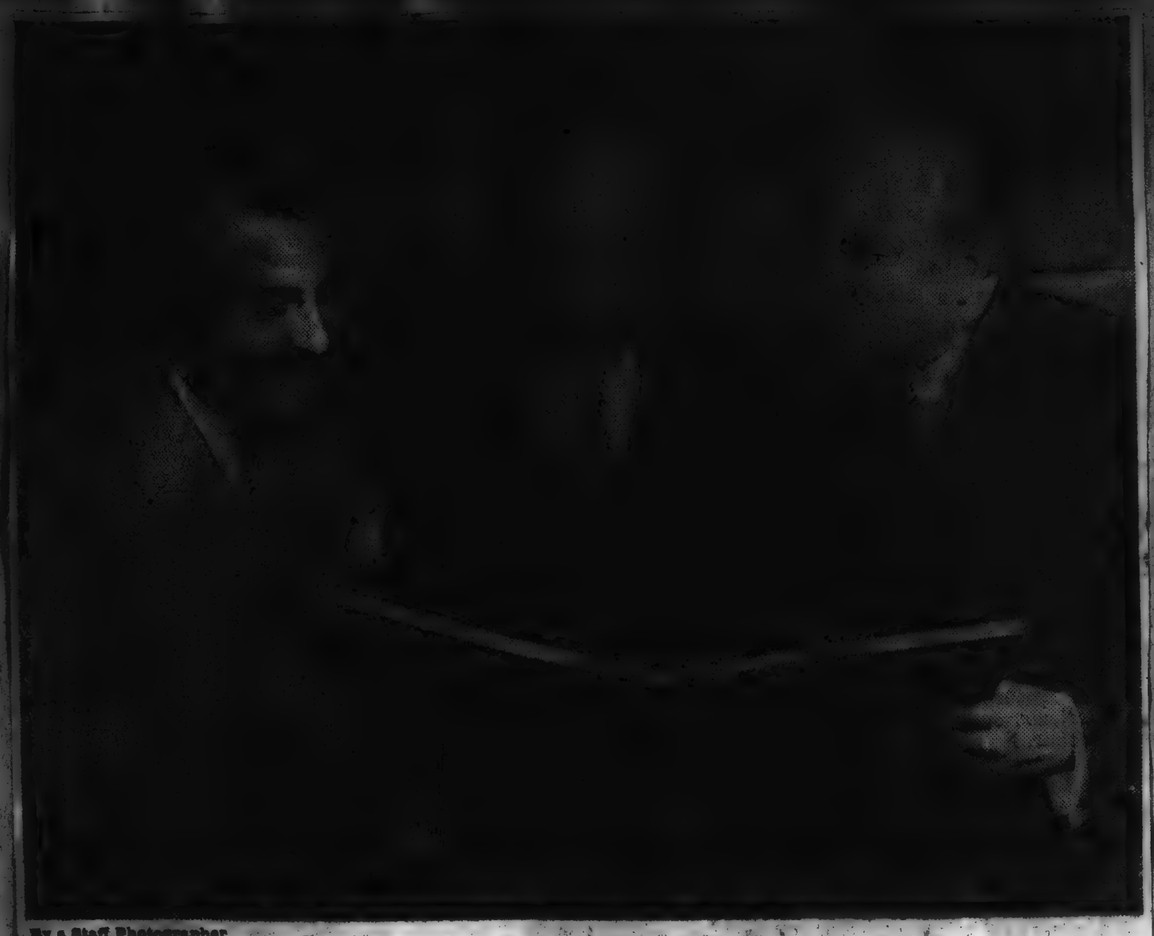
The seventh annual ticket-selling campaign got under way a few nights ago at the home of Mrs. Carleton Hadley, with the new officers—William Julius Polk Jr., president; Mrs. Henry Bry, vice-president; Miss Helen Franklin, secretary, and Leonard Holland, treasurer, in charge.

The Little Symphony Society was organized seven years ago by a small group interested in symphony music not included in the winter concerts, which could be played in the summer in a setting less formal than the Municipal Auditorium Opera House. The committee received considerable help from Hans Lange, then assistant to Toscanini with the New York Philharmonic Orchestra. Mr. Lange, who became an American citizen in 1930, had conducted concerts in London, Vienna and Paris, and had formed his own chamber orchestra in New York. He will be here to conduct the last three concerts, beginning July 3.

The first concert was given in the amphitheater of John Burroughs School before an audience of 250, with 18 musicians on the stage. The original committee included Mrs. John Franciscus, first president; Mrs. Thomas W. Pettus, Mrs. C. Edward Hermann, Mrs. Charles W. Rodewald, Mrs. Henry Bry, Mrs. Edith Baron, Mrs. Ellis Fischel, Mrs. William B. Weakley, Miss Martha Love and Miss Mary Bolland Taussig.

Other founders were Mrs. John L. Richards of New York, the former Miss Frances Conant; Mrs. Nancy Hitch Fordyce, Capt. Howard Williams, now stationed at Fort Riley, Kan.; Max Putzel, now of New York; Oscar Johnson, Jay Rice, Miss Corinne Frederick, Max Steindel, Igor Geffin, Mr. and Mrs. Arnold Maremont, now living in Chicago; and Mr. and Mrs. Myric Rogers who have also moved to Chicago where Mr. Rogers is curator of decorative arts at the Chicago Art Institute.

A recent letter from London to an officer of the Little Symphony organization here tells of the success of midday chamber music concerts organized by Myra Hess in London's National Gallery. The artists have been compelled to add an after lunch session and are now contemplating a tea time performance. The same letter also mentions the Griller String Quartet, now enlisted in the Royal Air Force and serving under Wing Commander R. P. O'Donnell, M. V. O.



By a Staff Photographer

Conference on a Pops Program

Arthur Fiedler, Pops conductor; Leslie J. Rogers, librarian of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Prof. Walter Piston of Harvard examining the score of Mr. Piston's ballet, "The Incredible Flutist." An orchestral Suite from the score will be performed at the Symphony Hall Pop Concert, May 6.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
BROOKLYN, N. Y.
CITIZEN
MAY 1 - 1941

Boston Symphony Aides Hear Talk by Reginald C. Foster; Tea Given By Mrs. Henry J. Davenport

Reginald C. Foster, chairman of the Society of Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was the guest of honor yesterday at the Spring meeting of the Brooklyn Committee of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the home of Mrs. Henry J. Davenport, No. 31 Grace court. Mrs. Davenport is executive chairman of the Brooklyn Committee of which Adrian Van Sinderen is chairman.

Mr. Foster addressed the group on the background and formation of a symphony orchestra. Mrs. Walter Truslow, chairman of boxes and Mrs. M. Preston Goodfellow, chairman of the membership of the Brooklyn Committee made reports on the plans of the committee for the 1941-42 Brooklyn subscription season. The orchestra completed recently its fifty-fifth season in Brooklyn. Dates for the 1941-42 season are: Friday evening, Nov. 21, Friday evening, Jan. 9, Thursday evening, Feb. 12, Friday evening, Mar. 13 and Friday evening, April 3.

The concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, of which Dr. Serge Koussevitsky is conductor, are presented in Brooklyn under the auspices of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences, of which James G. McDonald is president, the Philharmonic Society of Brooklyn, of which Dr. R. Huntington Woodman is president, and the Brooklyn Committee.

Among those who attended yesterday's tea were: Mrs. George M. Billings, Mrs. Edward C. Blum, Mrs. Irving L. Cabot, Mrs. Thomas F. Casey, Mrs. I. Sherwood Coffin, Mrs. Russell V. Cruikshank, Mrs. Guy DuVal, Mrs. Lewis W. Francis, Mrs. Charles Jaffa, Mrs. William G. James, Mrs. Maxwell Lester, Mrs. Irving J. Sands, Mrs. F. R. Schepmoes, Robert Alfred Shaw, Mrs. William Slater, Mrs. Harold I. Small, Carl H. Tollefsen, Mrs. Adrian Van Sinderen, Mrs. Edward Carrington Ward, Mrs. Walter F. Wells, Mrs. William H. Whitton and Mrs. Maude B. Wood.

THIS CLIPPING FROM SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.
CHRONICLE
MAY 1 - 1941

Local Girls Sing In Boston Concert

Marian Marcus, daughter of Mrs. Henry Marcus, and Joan Humphrey, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frederic L. Humphrey, sang with the choral society of Radcliffe Society last Sunday at the pension fund concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Christian Science Monitor
MAY 1, 1941

Pops Open Next Tuesday

The Symphony Hall Pop concerts will open their fifty-sixth season Tuesday evening. Arthur Fiedler will again conduct an orchestra of about 90 Symphony players. Refreshments will be served at the tables which will cover the floor of Symphony Hall. Mr. Fiedler offers the following programs for the opening week:

Tuesday, May 6, at 8:30

"Semper Fidelis," March ..... Sousa
Overture to "Orpheus in Hades" ..... Offenbach
Minuet from "The Daughter of the Regiment" ..... Donizetti
"Die Meistersinger," Excerpts from Act III ..... Wagner
"The Incredible Flutist," Suite ..... Piston
Triumphal March from "Peter and the Wolf" ..... Prokofieff
Roumanian Rhapsody, No. 1 ..... Enesco
"Music of the Spheres," Waltzes ..... Josef Strauss
Andalucia ..... Lecuona-Gould
"Oxford Street," March from "London Again" ..... Eric Coates

Wednesday, May 7, at 8:30

Entrance of the Guests into the Wartburg, from "Tannhäuser" ..... Wagner
Overture to "The Merry Wives of Windsor" ..... Nicolai
"Molly on the Shore" ..... Grainger
"Aida," Fantasia ..... Verdi
"Peer Gynt" Suite ..... Grieg
"Drink to Me Only With Thine Eyes" ..... Arranged by Alfred Pochon for String Orchestra
Overture to "Rienzi" ..... Wagner
"Roses from the South," Waltzes ..... Strauss
Intermezzo, "Souvenir of Vienna" ..... Prevost
First Hungarian Dance ..... Brahms

Thursday, May 8, at 8:30

Polonaise from "Eugene Onégin" ..... Tchaikovsky
Overture to "Poet and Peasant" ..... Suppé
"Entrance of the Little Fauns" ..... Pierné
"By the Beautiful Blue Danube," Waltzes ..... Strauss
"Nutcracker," Ballet Suite ..... Tchaikovsky
"Finlandia," Symphonic Poem ..... Sibelius
Rhapsody in Blue ..... Gershwin
Soloist: Leo Litwin, Piano
Prelude in C sharp minor ..... Rachmaninoff
"The Toy Trumpet" ..... Scott
"Thunder and Lightning," Polka ..... Strauss

Friday, May 9, at 8:30

Marche Militaire ..... Schubert
Overture to "William Tell" ..... Rossini
"The Sleigh Ride" ..... Mozart
"Carmen," Fantasia ..... Bizet
Overture to "The Flying Dutchman" ..... Wagner
Pavane for a Dead Infanta ..... Ravel
Marche Slave ..... Tchaikovsky
"Tales from the Vienna Woods," Waltzes ..... Strauss
"Fugato on a Well-Known Theme" ..... McBride
"Pomp and Circumstance," March ..... Elgar

Saturday, May 10, at 8:30

Introduction to Act III, "Lohengrin" ..... Wagner
Overture to "Die Fledermaus" ..... Strauss
Ave Maria ..... Schubert-Wilhelmj
March of the Sardar from "Caucasian Sketches" ..... Ippolitoff-Ivanoff
Twelve Contra-Dances ..... Beethoven
The Lost Chord ..... Sullivan
Trumpet Solo: Roger Voisin
Finale, "Scheherazade" ..... Rimsky-Korsakoff
Songs by the Regis College Glee Club
"Estudiantina," Waltzes ..... Waldteufel
"Stars and Stripes Forever," March ..... Sousa

Sunday, May 11, at 8:30

Prelude to "Carmen" ..... Bizet
Largo from the "New World" Symphony ..... Dvorak
Latin-American Symphonette ..... Merton Gould
Piano Concerto No. 2 in D minor, Op. 23 ..... MacDowell
Soloist: Jesus Maria Sanroma
Bolero ..... Ravel
Invitation to the Dance ..... Weber
Cielito Lindo ..... Arranged by Peter Bodge
"Strike Up the Band" ..... Gershwin

TRENTON, N. J
NEWS
5/2/41

Jack Styer of Bordentown, has been elected fraternity representative on the Student Council at Lafayette College.

Four New Jersey students sang with the Radcliffe College Choral Society at the recent annual pension fund concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The quartet included Miss Anne Bedinger, of Fort Dix, and Miss Helen Crossley, of Princeton.

This Clipping From
SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.
EXAMINER
MAY 1 - 1941

Local Girls Sing In Boston Concert

TWO SAN FRANCISCO lasses, Marion Marcus and Joan Humphrey, were among members of the Choral Society of Radcliffe College to take part in the annual pension fund concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra last Sunday in Boston.

Marion, daughter of Mrs. Henry C. Marcus, will receive her diploma in June and soon thereafter will make plans for her marriage to H. Garrett Wright. Joan is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frederic L. Humphrey.

THIS CLIPPING FROM CHICAGO, ILL.
DIAPASON
MAY 1 - 1941

E. POWER BIGGS HEARD WITH BOSTON SYMPHONY

At the final concert of a series of six youth concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra March 19 E. Power Biggs, now the official organist of the orchestra, was the soloist, playing Handel's Thirteenth Concerto ("The Cuckoo and the Nightingale"). This is the third season of these concerts, conducted by Wheeler Beckett.

Mr. Biggs was one of four soloists who gave an unusual concert at the Germanic Museum of Harvard University in Cambridge, Mass., March 24. Mr. Biggs played Vivaldi's Concerto in D minor and a group of selections of English organ music which consisted of: Introduction and Toccata in G major, Walond; Variations on the Dutch Chorale "Laet Ons met Herten Reijne." Bull; Trumpet Voluntary, Purcell; "The Earl of Salisbury," Byrd; "Ayre" in E minor, Stanley; Two Trumpet Tunes and Air, Purcell. The remainder of the program included a sonata for strings with organ by Corelli and three sonatas for strings with organ by Mozart.

This Clipping From
BROOKLYN, N.Y.
EAGLE
MAY 1 - 1941

Symphony Group Hears Address By R. C. Foster

Reginald C. Foster, chairman of the Society of Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was guest of honor yesterday at the Spring meeting of the Brooklyn committee of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the home of Mrs. Henry J. Davenport, 31 Grace Court. Mrs. Davenport is executive chairman of the Brooklyn committee, of which Adrian Van Sinderen is chairman.

Mr. Foster discussed the background and formation of a symphony orchestra. This is the first time that a representative of the Society of Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has come from Boston to participate in a meeting of the Brooklyn committee.

Plans for '42 Season

Mrs. Walter Truslow, chairman of boxes, and Mrs. M. Preston Goodfellow, chairman of the membership committee of the Brooklyn committee, made reports on the plans of the committee in the interest of the 1941-42 Brooklyn subscription season. The Boston Symphony Orchestra has just completed its 55th season in Brooklyn, and dates for the 1941-42 season are announced as follows: Friday evening, Nov. 21; Friday evening, Jan. 9; Thursday evening, Feb. 12; Friday evening, March 13, and Friday evening, April 3.

The season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, of which Dr. Serge Koussevitsky is conductor, is presented in Brooklyn under the auspices of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences, of which James G. McDonald is president; the Philharmonic Society of Brooklyn, of which Dr. R. Huntington Woodman is president, and the Brooklyn Committee.

Among the members of the Brooklyn Committee who attended yesterday's tea were Mrs. George M. Billings, Mrs. Edward C. Blum, a vice chairman of the Brooklyn Committee; Mrs. Irving L. Cabot, Mrs. Thomas F. Casey, Mrs. I. Sherwood Coffin, Mrs. Russell V. Cruikshank, Mrs. Guy DuVal, Mrs. Lewis W. Francis, Mrs. M. Preston Goodfellow, chairman of the membership committee; Mrs. Charles Jaffa, Mrs. William G. James, Mrs. Maxwell Lester, Mrs. Irving J. Sands, Mrs. F. R. Schepmoes, Robert Alfred Shaw, Mrs. William Slater, Mrs. Harold I. Small, Carl H. Tollefsen, Mrs. Adrian Van Sinderen, Mrs. Truslow, chairman of boxes; Mrs. Edward Carrington Ward, Mrs. Walter F. Wells, Mrs. William H. Whitton, Mrs. Maude B. Wood, Miss Emma Jessie Ogg and Mrs. Charles W. Franklin.

This Clipping From
NEWARK, N. J.
STAR-LEDGER
MAY 2 - 1941

Expect 10,000 At Concert In Rutgers Bowl

More than 10,000 New Jersey music-lovers are expected to jam Rutgers Stadium in New Brunswick Sunday afternoon, May 18, for the concert by Leopold Stokowski and his All - American Youth Orchestra, which will make its only North Jersey appearance of the season in the giant concrete bowl in the first of the Rutgers Stadium Concerts.

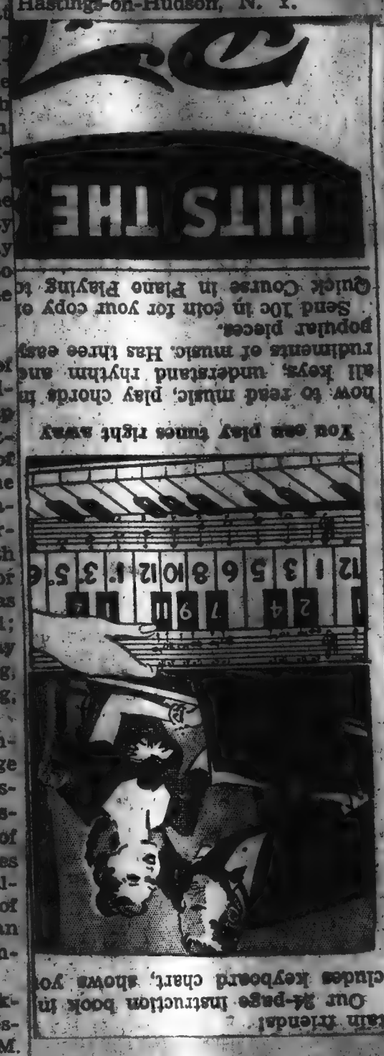
One of the early stops in the transcontinental 72-concert tour, Stokowski's appearance at Rutgers will mark the third notable symphony concert of the year at the college. The Rochester and Boston Symphony units made stops there during the Winter season.

Many of the young artists who made the South American and transcontinental tours last season with Stokowski will be under his baton again this Summer as the 110-piece unit moves slowly across the United States toward Hollywood, where motion picture engagements will close the year's activities late next Fall.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

mailed to Olga Naumoff, in care of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, 88 Druce Street, Brookline, Mass. Miss Naumoff is Dr. Koussevitzky's niece and secretary and she will see that the funds thus collected reach their proper destination. She became interested in the plan because of a letter which Dr. Koussevitzky received from Mrs. Schindler describing the deplorable situation of the family. The two Schindler children are the only living grandchildren of Arthur Nikisch.

ARTHUR M. ABELL.
Hastings-on-Hudson, N. Y.



ST. LOUIS, MO.
POST DISPATCH
MAY 2 - 1941

A COMMITTEE is making plans for a six-week season of Little Symphony concerts, to be held in the Quadrangle of Washington University. Beginning the night of June 13, with Max Steindel, resident conductor, on the podium, an orchestra of 25 musicians will play to an audience expected to exceed last year's 1800.

Choral work will be presented for the first time June 13, when Father Vitry's Boys' Choir will sing a Bach cantata. Stanley Chapple, assistant to Dr. Serge Koussevitzky at Berkshire Music Center, will be guest conductor at the June 20 and 27 concerts, and has indicated his willingness to participate in informal discussions as he has done at the Berkshire Festival and here before the St. Louis Grand Opera Guild.

The seventh annual ticket-selling campaign got under way a few nights ago at the home of Mrs. Carleton Hadley, with the new officers—William Julius Polk Jr., president; Mrs. Henry Bry, vice-president; Miss Helen Franklin, secretary, and Leonard Holland, treasurer, in charge.

The Little Symphony Society was organized seven years ago by a small group interested in symphony music not included in the winter concerts, which could be played in the summer in a setting less formal than the Municipal Auditorium Opera House. The committee received considerable help from Hans Lange, then assistant to Toscanini with the New York Philharmonic Orchestra. Mr. Lange, who became an American citizen in 1930, had conducted concerts in London, Vienna and Paris, and had formed his own chamber orchestra in New York. He will be here to conduct the last three concerts, beginning July 2.

The first concert was given in the amphitheater of John Burroughs School before an audience of 250, with 12 musicians on the stage. The original committee included Mrs. John Franciscus, first president; Mrs. Thomas W. Pettus, Mrs. C. Edward Hermann, Mrs. Charles W. Rodewald, Mrs. Henry Bry, Mrs. Edith Baron, Mrs. Ellis Fischel, Mrs. William B. Weakley, Miss Martha Love and Miss Mary Belland Taussig.

Other founders were Mrs. John L. Richards of New York, the former Miss Frances Conant; Mrs. Nancy Hitch Fordyce, Capt. Howard Williams, now stationed at Fort Riley, Kan.; Max Putzel, now of New York; Oscar Johnson, Jay Rice, Miss Corinne Frederick, Max Steindel, Igor Goffin, Mr. and Mrs. Arnold Maremont, now living in Chicago; and Mr. and Mrs. Myric Rogers who have also moved to Chicago where Mr. Rogers is curator of decorative arts at the Chicago Art Institute.

A recent letter from London to an officer of the Little Symphony organization here tells of the success of midday chamber music concerts organized by Myra Hess in London's National Gallery. The artists have been compelled to add an after lunch session and are now contemplating a tea time performance. The same letter also mentions the Griller String Quartet, now enlisted in the Royal Air Force and serving under Wing Commander R. P. O'Donnell, M. V. C.

131

Boston Symphony Orchestra Closes 60th Season

MUSIC

Symphony Concert

By ALEXANDER WILLIAMS

The 24th concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting, was given yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. The program was as follows:

Corelli—Suite for strings, arranged by Ettore Pinelli.
Satie—Two Gymnopedies, transcribed by Debussey.
Debussy—"La Mer."
Brahms—Symphony No. 1 in C minor Op. 68.

The last two concerts of the 60th season have been just about perfect. You cannot ask for better symphonic fare than these. Both orchestra and conductor have been in capital form, so that the experience of listening to great music has been at its most exciting and most enduring.

Every violinist knows the three dances that Ettore Pinelli selected from the suites of Corelli and arranged for full string orchestra. They sound remrakably well in this version and remind one of Handel, who was certainly influenced by Corelli. They must be played by so large an orchestra with the utmost polish or they would otherwise sound heavy; and Mr. Koussevitzky saw to it that this was done.

Satie's Gymnopedies are likewise known to most pianists, though they are not often played in public. On the piano they are exceedingly spare and cold and yet charming. Debussy, by orchestrating them, enhanced their charm, so that they become subtle an deffective orchestral pieces. We have always wondered if Satie approved of Debussy's work on the Gymnopedies. Most probably he did not, as he was an uncomfortably original and theoretical artist. At any rate, we, the ordinary public can and do take pleasure in the lovely sound of the music as it was played yesterday.

It was Satie's theory that music to ballet or to words did not have to follow the moods of the action or speech upon the stage. He pointed out that the scenery did not do so and he saw no reason why music should not profitably pursue the same unemotional course. He wrote his most important work, "Socrate," music to some of the dialogues of Plato, with this idea in mind. "Socrate" was given five years ago in Hartford and proved to be an interesting, os somewhat barren, experiment. We call this tehory to your attention with the hope that you will compare in your own mind the Gymnopedies as music and as the dances in Philip Hale's description in the progra mnotes!

Debussy's greatest purely orchestral work, "La Mer," is something of a specialty with Mr. Koussevitzky. His interpretation of it is ravishing, and fortunately he and the orchestra made a first-class recording of it not long ago.

Brahm's First Symphony is Mr. Koussevitzky's favorite composition with which to wind up the season, and it is easy to understand why. The nobility of the last movement is just the right note on which to end. This was demonstrated by the ovation which greeted it yesterday afternoon and will presumably hail it again this evening.

The season as a whole has been summed up in article for Sunday's Herald. We need only point out that it has seen fewer soloists than usual and more guest conductors (many of the mcomposers). Most of the new music, of which there was not quite so much as in the past two seasons, was well worth hearing and repeating. There was a fine, knock-down argument over Shostakovitch 5th Symphony, withm Mr. Koussevitzky playing his trump cards by repeating it in the regular series as well as offering it on tour and in the subsidiary series. He is finally going to take the last trick by giving it at the Berkshire Festival, where he will make in more ways than one a grand slam!

This Clipping From CLEVELAND, OHIO
PRESS
MAY 3 - 1941

Museum Cuts Sponsorship of Concerts

New Group Formed; Series to Present 3 Orchestras

THE Cleveland Concert Course—Mrs. Emil Brudno's annual contribution to the music life of Cleveland—will not have the Cleveland Museum of Art as its sponsor starting this fall. The course will be run by the Cleveland Concert Course Association, a new nonprofit organization.

The circumstances evolving around the shift, after seven years of cordial relationship between the museum and Mrs. Brudno, are being kept in the background, yet both William M. Milliken, director, and Arthur W. Quimby, curator of music, wrote glowing letters to the local concert manager following the decision to abandon backing the concerts.

The new organization that will sponsor the concert will be headed by Emil De Sauze, president; Mrs. Charles B. Schneider, vice president; Mrs. S. O. Champion, treasurer; Samuel Horwitz, secretary, and Mrs. Brudno, manager. The profits from the concerts will be used either for music scholarships or other means to further music in Cleveland.

The first concert of the season for the Cleveland Concert Course will bring back the Philadelphia Orchestra under the direction of Eugene Or[illegible] and the last program of the season will bring the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra here under the direction of its exciting conductor, Dimitri Mitropoulous, on Feb. 8. The first and last concerts in the series will be on Sundays, the rest Friday nights. All will be held in Public Music Hall.

Others in Course

THE other five concerts in the series will present Ezio Pinza, on Nov. 14 (replacing the previously announced Artur Rubinstein); Marjorie Lawrence and Ruth Posselt, pianist, on Nov. 28; Robert Casadesus, Dec. 12; Emmanuel Feuerman, 'cello; Erica Morini, violinist, and Albert Hirsch, pianist, Jan. 9, and the New Friends of Music Orchestra, directed by Fritz Stiedry, and Hortense Monath, pianist, as soloist, on Jan. 23.

Two benefits are planned by the association, outside the regular course. These will be Ruth Draper on Nov. 2 for a Zionist fund, and Dorothy Maynor on Oct. 19 for Karamu House.

This season will be the first time in four years that the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Sergei Koussevitzky, fails to meet a return engagement. Dr. Koussevitzky, in a personal letter to Mrs. Brudno, expressed extreme regrets that "circumstances beyond my control" left Cleveland out of his tour itinerary. He promised, however, that the season of 1942-43 will bring the Boston back here.

The first function of the new concert association will be to present the All-American Youth Orchestra and Leopold Stokowski in Public Hall on June 1. This is part of the new orchestra's 42 concerts in this country and Central America.—M. W.

This Clipping From
PLAINFIELD, N. J.
COURIER-NEWS
MAY 3 - 1941

All Youth Orchestra To Play at Rutgers

An attendance of 10,000 is expected at the concert by the All-American Youth Orchestra under Leopold Stokowski Sunday afternoon, May 18, in Rutgers Stadium, New Brunswick. This will be an early stop by the 110-piece orchestra in its transcontinental 72-concert tour.

The orchestra is composed of musicians under 25, with the exception of a half-dozen players brought with Stokowski from the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra. It is understood the program will include one or more Bach selections. This will be the third major symphony concert in New Brunswick this season, previous appearances having been made by the Rochester and Boston Symphony Orchestras.

This Clipping From LEWISTOWN, PA.
SENTINEL
MAY 3 - 1941

The conductor of the Boston Symphony, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, received his final papers as an American citizen on April 16, with his wife, Natalie and his secretary, Olga Naumoff. Dr. Koussevitzky took out his first papers in 1935.

ORCHESTRA AND LEADER SHINE

Boston Post MAY 3, 1941

Koussevitzky Includes Brahms and Debussy

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

The Friday afternoon half of the current series of Symphony Concerts came to an end yesterday with four performances that disclosed Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra at their best. And that best cannot be beaten, if it can even be equalled.

No time for novel and debatable music, this, but an occasion for honest enjoyment of the more or less familiar and the readily assimilable. Nevertheless, Dr. Koussevitzky contrived a programme of varied interest and appeal. Even Brahms'First Symphony, which somehow escaped performance last season, was good to hear in its accustomed position at the end of the last programme. Now if Dr. Koussevitzky will have the good grace to skip it next season, it will be doubly welcome two years hence.

No doubt Brahms never meant the final coda to sound as exciting as Dr. Koussevitzky makes it—and making Brahms exciting is no small feat—but who cares? The audience rose to it as it always does and for a moment at least could believe with Brahms and Browning that all's right with the world.

The good roast beef came last yesterday, the choicer viands first. For beginning, Dr. Koussevitzky chose the Suite for strings made by Ettore Pinelli from the Sonatas of Corelli, unheard here since 1931. Not all of the worthy Arcangelo's music is diverting as this. Pinelli chose his numbers shrewdly.

Another transcription follows that by Debussy, of the first and third Gymnopedies of Satie, music of disarming simplicity and of a fragility not easily reconciled with the 1890's, when storm and stress, bigness and profundity were the watchwords, even in France. However, this simplicity is not the kind that is easily realized in performance. What we heard yesterday was a species of virtuosity.

Most remarkable of all four performances, if such comparison can be made, was that of Debussy's "The Sea," which closed the first part of the programme. So proficient have Dr. Koussevitzky's forces become in this music, that they have achieved the art which conceals art, and the listener is made immediately conscious of the composer's imaginings, and of them alone. Fortunately, this definitive version of "La Mer" has been recorded and so can never become a mere legend.

The variety in yesterday's programme characterized the season as a whole, comment upon which will be made in these columns tomorrow. And now for the Pops.

This Clipping From
TRENTON, N. J.
STATE GAZETTE
MAY 3 - 1941

WILLIAM BRAHAM

FREEHOLD, May 2.—Funeral services will be conducted in New York for William Braham, brother-in-law of the famed actress, Lillian Russell, and for many years a well-known musician, who died yesterday in the Briar Hill Welfare House, Freehold, where he had been a patient for five years.

Mr. Braham, who was 80 years old, had retired from theatricals in 1925 to take up residence in Ocean Grove. He came from a family of musicians, for his father, Joseph, was an orchestra leader for Tony Pastor, and his uncle, David, was a famous songwriter.

For 18 years Mr. Braham was a drummer in the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and then came to New York, where he played in the orchestra of Charles Frohman, the producer. Mr. Braham's brother, Harry, married the great actress, Lillian Russell, when she was 18 years old, and two years later they were divorced.

His only survivors are a niece and a nephew.

Boston Globe MUSIC MAY 3, 1941

SYMPHONY HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Serge Koussevitzky unpredictably gave his program for the last Boston Symphony concerts this season a novel touch by including the two "Gymnopedies" of Erik Satie which Debussy arranged for orchestra. More often than not, the final program runs to very familiar items, so this variation came as a pleasant departure from custom. The other pieces were three movements from violin sonatas of Corelli, transcribed for massed strings by Ettore Pinelli; Debussy's "The Sea," and Brahms' First Symphony, which has come to be Mr. Koussevitzky's ceremonial work for ending a season.

In general and particulars the concert was exertmely enjoyable. Corelli's little fragments, given the glamour of massed strings and a super-k..n performance, began yesterday's concert with unassuming elegance. Through Satie, Debussy and Brahms the afternoon moved in a steady crescendo to the impressive brass "chorale" and resounding coda of the Symphony. This progressive contrast of styles made for increasing enthusiasm among the audience, whose applause broke in before Brahms' unison C had been finished.

As for the "Gymnopedies," unheard at Symphony concerts for more than four years, they are scarcely more than exquisite trifles, but how exquisite! Satie could not have had more sympathetic treatment in the orchestration of them. Debussy lavished great skill, with the result that they took on a sheen and color altogether fascinating. Who but Debussy would have thought of that delicate little touch, in the second, of a cymbal softly struck with a drum stick? Needless to say, Mr. Koussevitzky's reading matched—and perhaps increased—their inherent brilliance.

One of the Koussevitzky interpretations which this reviewer will remember so long as memory lasts is of "The Sea." It is a good deal more than sophisticated impressionism and absolutely correct style. Recreative imagination is as good a word for any for the process that transmutes music into a living picture of sound, motion and Nature. To put it in homely terms, you can smell salt air, see waves tossing and hear the hum of wind and sense the primeval rhythm of the sea.

Mr. Koussevitzky used to make Brahms' First Symphony more personal than he does now. His tempi once were capricious if not arbitrary. Over the years his conception has grown calmer. His tempi are in better keeping. He no longer attempts to transform the Symphony into a questionable, unrestrained burst of romantic fervor. Of course one side of Brahms was romantic, but there was another, best described as a lingering admiration for the sort of German classicism represented by Beethoven. The action of these two influences upon each other gave Brahms' music its especial character.

Now Mr. Koussevitzky recognizes each side, and does not emphasize one at the expense of the other. Hence his Brahms now exhibits thorough understanding of the right style, and for that reason is far more moving.

So we have come to the end of the Boston Symphony's 60th season. As the Friday audience warmly took leave of Mr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra yesterday afternoon, so will the Saturday subscribers tonight. This particular season ends with the Boston Symphony still the magnificent instrument its conductor has made it, and which it has been for some years past.—C. W. D.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
SUNDAY UNION
& REPUBLICAN
MAY 4 - 1941

Walter Damrosch will conduct two of the New York Philharmonic-Symphony society concerts during the 1941-1942 (centennial) season. These will probably be in March soon after his 80th birthday. Other conductors to appear are Leopold Stokowski, John Barbirolli, Bruno Walter, Artur Rodzinski, Dimitr Mitropoulos, Serge Koussevitzky, Fritz Busch and Eugene Goossens.

TORONTO, CANADA
GLOBE & MAIL
5/3/41

Philadelphia Affiliations

(By Hector Charlesworth.)

The coming visit of that superb organization the Philadelphia Orchestra, now a permanent annual event, is a reminder of the close affiliation which has long existed between it and the musical life of Toronto. Though for some years intermittent, it has lasted for nearly a quarter of a century. It was in 1916 that the orchestra rose to first-rank eminence in the United States, under Stokowski, and in the following year its visits to Toronto began. Its annual co-operation with the Festival concerts of the Mendelssohn Choir, which in 1917 had come under the baton of a new conductor, Dr. H. A. Fricker, did much to maintain the prestige of the choir.

Mr. Charlesworth.

The Philadelphians are far from being the oldest of great orchestras on this continent. The New York Philharmonic Orchestra will celebrate its centenary next year. The Boston Symphony Orchestra gave its first concert under its original conductor, Sir George Henschel, in October, 1882. The Chicago Orchestra was founded in 1889 by the great Theodore Thomas, and a few years later gave the first performances in Toronto of the Tschaikowsky "Pathetique" Symphony and the Dvorak "New World" Symphony, then new works. The Cincinnati Orchestra, founded in 1895, was really an outgrowth of the Cincinnati Festival founded by Theodore Thomas two decades earlier. The Philadelphia Orchestral Association is therefore the baby of the greater organizations of America, though on May 17 it will celebrate the fortieth anniversary of its foundation.

It was born of the tentative experiments by a German conductor, Fritz Scheel, who came to America in 1893 at the age of 41, and after trying to promote orchestras in other cities finally settled in Philadelphia. During the first decade its quality was not outstanding. Scheel died in 1907. On his death a Czech conductor, Karl Pohlig, carried on for five years and on the expiration of his contract returned to Europe, where he died in 1928.

Sponsors of the Philadelphia Orchestra did not know what a find they had made when they engaged Leopold Stokowski, who had conducted the Cincinnati Orchestra for three or four seasons. He was a Londoner, 30 years old, son of a Polish father and English mother, trained by eminent English musicians, like Walford Davies (who died the other day), Sir Charles Stanford and Sir Hubert Parry. At the outset an organist in London, he was in 1905 brought over to the fashionable St. Bartholomew's Church, New York. His Cincinnati engagement gave his ambitions the outlet he craved. His advent to Philadelphia came at the psychological moment for himself and for that city.

The aid of an "Unknown Donor" (E. W. Bok), who rallied 13,000 supporters for the orchestra, placed it on a sound footing.

Toronto was one of the first outside cities to recognize that a great new force had arisen. Stokowski's abilities were better known here than in most other centres, for Englishmen like Dr. Fricker and Dr. Healey Willan had known him as a student. Prior to the Great War the Mendelssohn Choir, under Dr. Vogt, had enjoyed happy co-operation with the Chicago Orchestra, under Frederick Stock, who had been concert-master for Theodore Thomas, but it was so German in personnel at that time that the relation could not be continued in wartime. Came years when the Philadelphians could not visit Canada, but in 1936 they were brought back to Toronto on the initiative of Wilfred James, manager of Massey Hall. It was Stokowski's last visit as permanent conductor, but his successor, the brilliant Eugene Ormandy, has also established himself in public regard.

132

This Clipping From
NEWARK, N. J.
STAR-LEDGER
MAY 4 - 1941

BLOOMFIELD JOINT RECITAL WEDNESDAY

Wednesday night, Roberta Bitgood, organist, and Harold Haugh, tenor, will give a joint recital at Westminster Presbyterian Church, Bloomfield.

Miss Bitgood is director of music at Bloomfield College and is a fellow of the American Guild of Organists. She has included on her program a sheaf of Bach Choral Preludes, a "Toccata" by Farnham and a group of lighter selections.

Haugh has appeared with the choir of Newark's Old First Church and with the Boston Symphony. He is to sing "Sound an Alarm" by Handel, a group by Cecil Forsyth and "Prayer" by Wagner.

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA is moved to express, while it still may, its deep gratitude to the Boston Evening Transcript, in remembrance of the years, and they are all of the Orchestra's years, in which the neighbor periodical has been its forum, its publicist.

One of those respects in which the Transcript has stood unique among the newspapers of the United States has been the ample representation of the arts in its pages. Music in Boston became a subject of increased public interest and enjoyment through enlightened treatment in these columns. The editors, notably H. T. Parker, brought a stimulation, a guidance, to the Boston Symphony Concerts which were of inestimable value to the orchestra, its direction, and its audiences. In Edward Downes, it has found a true "Transcript critic." An orchestra looks to this kind of support, which, without indulgence, gives discriminating but unfailing encouragement to artistic ventures well taken. Perhaps no other orchestra has been so fortunate in its critical fostering.

Next Saturday a sense of emptiness will go with the ending of the Orchestra's sixtieth season, if there is no Transcript to describe it.

This Clipping From SPOKANE, WASH.
CHRONICLE
MAY 5 - 1941

The World of Music

The festival of the International Society for Contemporary Music will be held in New York from May 17 to 25. It will be the first time the festival has been held in this country, now the haven of so many musicians from abroad.

The festival program includes three chamber music concerts at the Museum of Modern Art, Columbia university and the New York public library, and two programs of chamber music over the Columbia Broadcasting system. There also will be five broadcasts of orchestral works, two by Columbia, two by NBC and one by Mutual.

Other conductors and out-of-town orchestras will cooperate in the playing of contemporary works on their regular programs, including Serge Koussevitzky in Boston, Eugene Goossens in Cincinnati, Frederick Stoock in Chicago and Fabien Sevitzky in Toledo.

This Clipping From
NEW ORLEANS, LA.
TIMES-PICAYUNE
MAY 4 - 1941

Plans are being made for the construction of a large summer music hall in the Pocono mountains, near Skytop, Pa., where a series of concerts to be known as the Pocono Music Festival will be held.

Under present plans, the concerts will be given by the Philadelphia Orchestra under Eugene Ormandy. The site of the proposed auditorium is on a main highway between New York and Philadelphia. Mrs. Benjamin F. Maschal, chairman of the festival, said the concerts will be held late in August so as not to conflict with the series at Philadelphia's Robin Hood Dell or the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Stockbridge, Mass., where summer concerts are given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Serge Kroussevitzky.

Four members of the first violin section of the Philadelphia Orchestra will share the post of concertmaster of the Robin Hood Dell Orchestra this summer.

Eugene Ormandy, conductor of the Philadelphia Orchestra, said he plans to have the four violinists rotate in the post, with the hope that next year he may be able to select one of them as permanent Dell concertmaster.

This Clipping From BIRMINGHAM, ALA.
SUNDAY NEWS-AGE-HERALD
MAY 4 - 1941

* * *

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL — The eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood, July 31-Aug. 17, will include on the program the works of the contemporary composers, Sibelius, Vaughn Williams, Barber, Hindesmith, Lobos, Copland and Hanson, played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky. Three Mozart works will be included on the program the second week of the festival in commemoration of the 150th anniversary of the composer's death.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
MAY 4 - 1941

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who earlier in the season played the Shostakovich Fifth symphony twice within two weeks in an effort to make it popular, recently "plugged" an American composition in an even more unconventional manner. The work was Samuel Barber's "Essay," and Dr. Koussevitzky played it twice at the same concert. The second performance was not an encore; it was a deliberately planned repetition immediately after the first performance and as such the work appeared twice on the program. The conductor featured the music in this way so that the audience could get to know it better and therefore appreciate it more. Apparently the plan achieved its purpose, for the work was warmly received.

This Clipping From
PORTLAND, ME.
SUNDAY TELEGRAM
MAY 4 - 1941

Mrs. Walter Brown Parker of Cape Elizabeth was in Boston Saturday to join her daughter, Miss Nancy Parker, a student at Smith College, who, with Miss Mertina Johnson, rehearsed Saturday morning with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the concert at which they will appear May 13 in Symphony Hall, Boston. Miss Parker will also present an entire concert, May 16, at Sage Hall, Smith College.

This Clipping From
SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.
EXAMINER
MAY 4 - 1941

College Voices Sing Master's 'Solemn Mass'

SINCE SAN FRANCISCO itself recently heard an impressive presentation of "Missa Solemnis," a new recording of Beethoven's great sacred work (Victor) is bound to arouse especial local interest.

Eloquently led by Serge Koussevitzky, the disc performance is superb. The orchestra is his Boston Symphony. A fine choral achievement of the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society is enhanced by a choice solo group comprising Jeanette Vreeland, Anna Kaskas, John Priebe and Norman Cordon.

The performance was recorded during a concert. Hence some of the discs end with a jerk. But this flaw, for once, is not bad.

On other Victor records—

A Bach Sonata (flute-piano-violin) is charming Bach and it is charmingly played by the Moyse Trio of Paris.

Liszt's "Hungarian Rhapsody" No. 15, based mainly on Hungary's popular "Rakoczy March," is given clean lively performance by the Canadian pianist, Reginald Stewart.

This Clipping From LEWISTON, ME.
SUN
MAY 7 - 1941

THIS CLIPPING FROM CLEVELAND, TENN.
BANNER
MAY 6 - 1941

Under present plans, the concerts will be given by the Philadelphia Orchestra under Eugene Ormandy. The site of the proposed auditorium is on a main highway between New York and Philadelphia. Mrs. Benjamin F. Maschal, chairman of the festival, said the concerts will be held late in August so as not to conflict with the series at Philadelphia's Robin Hood Dell or the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Stockbridge, Mass., where summer concerts are given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

FOUR members of the first violin section of the Philadelphia Orchestra will share the post of concertmaster of the Robin Hood Dell Orchestra this summer.

Eugene Ormandy, conductor of the Philadelphia Orchestra, said he plans to have the four violinists rotate in the post, with the hope that next year he may be able to select one of them as permanent Dell concertmaster.

THE Edgard M. Levintritt Foundation announces a violin competition for its award this year. The prize is an appearance with the New York Philharmonic-Symphony. The first award, last year, was for pianists, and was won by Sydney Foster, who appeared with the orchestra.

Competitors for the violin award must be between 17 and 25 years old. They must have made at least one appearance in public, but not with a major orchestra.

Applications for auditions should be made by June 15 of this year to the foundation at 30 Broad Street, New York.

This Clipping From
WILLIMANTIC, CONN.
CHRONICLE
MAY 6 - 1941

Camp Edwards, Mass., May 6—Today was a red letter day for 300 musicians of regiments attached to this cantonment. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, internationally famous conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, leads the musicians in a concert of martial music on the parade grounds. Later he conducts a concert by the 180th F. A. band, at the Service Club.

This Clipping From LEWISTON, ME.
SUN
MAY 6 - 1941

KOUSSEVITSKY CONDUCTS BANDS AT EDWARDS TODAY

Massed Soldier Units Will Give a Concert of Martial Music

CAMP EDWARDS, May 5-Æ-With Dr. Serge Koussevitsky of the Boston Symphony Orchestra conducting, the massed soldier bands of this camp will give a concert of martial music tomorrow afternoon.

In the evening, the famed conductor will lead the band of the 180th F. A. in the overture "The Oberon."

A score of reserve second lieutenants have been ordered to duty with the 26th Division. Their names and assignments:

101st Infantry—William S. Deluca, Providence, R. I., Donald S. Healey, Westfield, Joseph F. Henry, Westboro, Wendell J. Martin, Southboro.

Among reserve Second Lieutenants ordered to active duty are Second Lieutenants Howard A. Allen Jr., Burlington, Vt., Donald M. Richards, Manchester, N. H.; William B. Plummer, Concord, N. H.; and Howard M. Platts, Woodsville, N. H.

This Clipping From
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
MERCURY
MAY 6 - 1941

Koussevitsky At Cape Camp

Boston Conductor To Lead Soldier Bands in Concert

CAMP EDWARDS, May 5 (AP)—With Dr. Serge Koussevitsky of the Boston Symphony Orchestra conducting, the massed soldier bands of this camp will give a concert of martial music tomorrow afternoon.

At night, the famed conductor will lead the band of the 180th F. A. in the overture "The Oberon."

A score of reserve second lieutenants have been ordered to duty with the 26th Division. Their names and assignments:

101st Infantry — William S. Deluca, Providence, Donald S. Healey, Westfield, Joseph F. Henry, Westboro, Wendell J. Martin, Southboro.

Among reserve second lieutenants ordered to active duty are Second Lieutenants Howard A. Allen Jr., Burlington, Vt.; Donald M. Richards, Manchester, N. H.; William B. Plumer, Concord, N. H.; and Howard M. Platts, Woodsville, N. H.

This Clipping From HYANNIS, MASS.
CAPE COD STANDARD TIMES
MAY 6 - 1941

Camp Is Visited By Koussevitsky

CAMP EDWARDS, May 6—Dr. Serge Koussevitsky arrived in camp shortly before noon today to conduct a mass concert of the military bands of the Yankee Division. Dr. Koussevitsky was met by Colonel John H. Agnew of the 180th Field Artillery; Lieutenant Robert Stewart of the same regiment and Warrant Officer Chester E. Whiting, Yankee Division band leader. Dr. Koussevitsky, who is conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was accompanied by his secretary, Mrs. Olga Naumoff, and Mrs. Gorham Brooks.

The concert, in which more than 300 musicians were directed by the distinguished visitor, was held at 2 p.m., following which Dr. Koussevitsky and his party were to tour the camp. Tonight the conductor will lead the 180th Field Artillery Band in an indoor concert in the regimental recreational hall.

KOUSSEVITSKY LEADS ARMY BAND IN CAMP

CAMP EDWARDS, Mass., May 6—(AP) With a "jeep" car as his podium, Serge Koussevitsky led 300 soldier-musicians in a mass band concert today—and thought it was "magnificent."

The famed conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who became a United States citizen only two weeks ago, was visibly moved as he directed the young musicians in John Phillip Sousa's "Stars and Stripes."

Using his hands in lieu of baton, Koussevitsky doffed his coat and hat before putting the bands through their paces in march music.

This Clipping From
BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
TELEGRAM
MAY 7 - 1941

KOUSSEVITSKY LEADS EDWARDS SOLDIER BAND

Famed Conductor visibly Moved as He Directs "Stars and Stripes"

CAMP EDWARDS, Mass., May 6 -Æ-With a "jeep" car as his podium, Serge Koussevitsky led 300 soldier-musicians in a mass band concert today—and that it was "magnificent."

The famed conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who became a United States citizen only two weeks ago, was visibly moved as he directed the young musicians in John Phillip Sousa's "Stars and Stripes."

Using his hands in lieu of baton, Koussevitsky doffed his coat and hat before putting the bands through their paces in march music.

THIS CLIPPING FROM MERCED, CAL.
SUN - STAR
MAY 7 1941

Celebrates Citizenship With Special Program

BOSTON, (U.P.)—Serge Koussevitzky, Russian-born conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, celebrated his becoming a United States citizen by presenting a special program of American music.

132

This Clipping From
NEWARK, N. J.
STAR-LEDGER
MAY 4 - 1941

BLOOMFIELD JOINT RECITAL WEDNESDAY

Wednesday night, Roberta Bitgood, organist, and Harold Haugh, tenor, will give a joint recital at Westminster Presbyterian Church, Bloomfield.

Miss Bitgood is director of music at Bloomfield College and is a fellow of the American Guild of Organists. She has included on her program a sheaf of Bach Choral Preludes, a "Toccata" by Farnham and a group of lighter selections.

Haugh has appeared with the choir of Newark's Old First Church and with the Boston Symphony. He is to sing "Sound an Alarm" by Handel, a group by Cecil Forsyth and "Prayer" by Wagner.

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA is moved to express, while it still may, its deep gratitude to the Boston Evening Transcript, in remembrance of the years, and they are all of the Orchestra's years, in which the neighbor periodical has been its forum, its publicist.

One of those respects in which the Transcript has stood unique among the newspapers of the United States has been the ample representation of the arts in its pages. Music in Boston became a subject of increased public interest and enjoyment through enlightened treatment in these columns. The editors, notably H. T. Parker, brought a stimulation, a guidance, to the Boston Symphony Concerts which were of inestimable value to the orchestra, its direction, and its audiences. In Edward Downes, it has found a true "Transcript critic." An orchestra looks to this kind of support, which, without indulgence, gives discriminating but unfailing encouragement to artistic ventures well taken. Perhaps no other orchestra has been so fortunate in its critical fostering.

Next Saturday a sense of emptiness will go with the ending of the Orchestra's sixtieth season, if there is no Transcript to describe it.

This Clipping From SPOKANE, WASH.
CHRONICLE
MAY 5 - 1941

The World of Music

The festival of the International Society for Contemporary Music will be held in New York from May 17 to 25. It will be the first time the festival has been held in this country, now the haven of so many musicians from abroad.

The festival program includes three chamber music concerts at the Museum of Modern Art, Columbia university and the New York public library, and two programs of chamber music over the Columbia Broadcasting system. There also will be five broadcasts of orchestral works, two by Columbia, two by NBC and one by Mutual.

Other conductors and out-of-town orchestras will cooperate in the playing of contemporary works on their regular programs, including Serge Koussevitzky in Boston, Eugene Goossens in Cincinnati, Frederick Stoock in Chicago and Fabien Sevitzky in Toledo.

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.
EXAMINER
MAY 4 - 1941

College Voices Sing Master's 'Solemn Mass'

SINCE SAN FRANCISCO itself recently heard an impressive presentation of "Missa Solemnis," a new recording of Beethoven's great sacred work (Victor) is bound to arouse especial local interest.

Eloquently led by Serge Koussevitzky, the disc performance is superb. The orchestra is his Boston Symphony. A fine choral achievement of the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society is enhanced by a choice solo group comprising Jeanette Vreeland, Anna Kaskas, John Priebe and Norman Cordon.

The performance was recorded during a concert. Hence some of the discs end with a jerk. But this flaw, for once, is not bad.

On other Victor records—

A Bach Sonata (flute-piano-violin) is charming Bach and it is charmingly played by the Moyse Trio of Paris.

Liszt's "Hungarian Rhapsody" No. 15, based mainly on Hungary's popular "Rakoczy March," is given clean lively performance by the Canadian pianist, Reginald Stewart.

This Clipping From
NEW ORLEANS, LA.
TIMES-PICAYUNE
MAY 4 - 1941

Plans are being made for the construction of a large summer music hall in the Pocono mountains, near Skytop, Pa., where a series of concerts to be known as the Pocono Music Festival will be held.

Under present plans, the concerts will be given by the Philadelphia Orchestra under Eugene Ormandy. The site of the proposed auditorium is on a main highway between New York and Philadelphia. Mrs. Benjamin F. Maschal, chairman of the festival, said the concerts will be held late in August so as not to conflict with the series at Philadelphia's Robin Hood Dell or the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Stockbridge, Mass., where summer concerts are given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

Four members of the first violin section of the Philadelphia Orchestra will share the post of concertmaster of the Robin Hood Dell Orchestra this summer.

Eugene Ormandy, conductor of the Philadelphia Orchestra, said he plans to have the four violinists rotate in the post, with the hope that next year he may be able to select one of them as permanent Dell concertmaster.

This Clipping From
BIRMINGHAM, ALA.
SUNDAY NEWS-AGE-HERALD
MAY 4 - 1941

* * *

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL — The eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood, July 31-Aug. 17, will include on the program the works of the contemporary composers, Sibelius, Vaughn Williams, Barber, Hindesmith, Lobos, Copland and Hanson, played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky. Three Mozart works will be included on the program the second week of the festival in commemoration of the 150th anniversary of the composer's death.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
MAY 4 - 1941

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who earlier in the season played the Shostakovich Fifth symphony twice within two weeks in an effort to make it popular, recently "plugged" an American composition in an even more unconventional manner. The work was Samuel Barber's "Essay," and Dr. Koussevitzky played it twice at the same concert. The second performance was not an encore; it was a deliberately planned repetition immediately after the first performance and as such the work appeared twice on the program. The conductor featured the music in this way so that the audience could get to know it better and therefore appreciate it more. Apparently the plan achieved its purpose, for the work was warmly received.

This Clipping From
PORTLAND, ME.
SUNDAY TELEGRAM
MAY 4 - 1941

Mrs. Walter Brown Parker of Cape Elizabeth was in Boston Saturday to join her daughter, Miss Nancy Parker, a student at Smith College, who, with Miss Mertina Johnson, rehearsed Saturday morning with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the concert at which they will appear May 13 in Symphony Hall, Boston. Miss Parker will also present an entire concert, May 16, at Sage Hall, Smith College.

This Clipping From
WILLIMANTIC, CONN.
CHRONICLE
MAY 6 - 1941

Camp Edwards, Mass., May 6—Today was a red letter day for 300 musicians of regiments attached to this cantonment. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, internationally famous conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, leads the musicians in a concert of martial music on the parade grounds. Later he conducts a concert by the 180th F. A. band at the Service Club.

This Clipping From
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
MERCURY
MAY 6 - 1941

Koussevitsky At Cape Camp

Boston Conductor To Lead Soldier Bands in Concert

CAMP EDWARDS, May 5 (AP)—With Dr. Serge Koussevitsky of the Boston Symphony Orchestra conducting, the massed soldier bands of this camp will give a concert of martial music tomorrow afternoon.

At night, the famed conductor will lead the band of the 180th F. A. in the overture "The Oberon."

A score of reserve second lieutenants have been ordered to duty with the 26th Division. Their names and assignments:

101st Infantry — William S. Deluca, Providence, Donald S. Healey, Westfield, Joseph F. Henry, Westboro, Wendell J. Martin, Southboro.

Among reserve second lieutenants ordered to active duty are Second Lieutenants Howard A. Allen Jr., Burlington, Vt.; Donald M. Richards, Manchester, N. H.; William B. Plumer, Concord, N. H.; and Howard M. Platts, Woodsville, N. H.

This Clipping From
HYANNIS, MASS.
CAPE COD STANDARD TIMES
MAY 6 - 1941

Camp Is Visited By Koussevitsky

CAMP EDWARDS, May 6—Dr. Serge Koussevitsky arrived in camp shortly before noon today to conduct a mass concert of the military bands of the Yankee Division. Dr. Koussevitsky was met by Colonel John H. Agnew of the 180th Field Artillery; Lieutenant Robert Stewart of the same regiment and Warrant Officer Chester E. Whiting, Yankee Division band leader. Dr. Koussevitsky, who is conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was accompanied by his secretary, Mrs. Olga Naumoff, and Mrs. Gorham Brooks.

The concert, in which more than 300 musicians were directed by the distinguished visitor, was held at 2 p.m., following which Dr. Koussevitsky and his party were to tour the camp. Tonight the conductor will lead the 180th Field Artillery Band in an indoor concert in the regimental recreational hall.

This Clipping From CLEVELAND, TENN.
BANNER
MAY 6 - 1941

Under present plans, the concerts will be given by the Philadelphia Orchestra under Eugene Ormandy. The site of the proposed auditorium is on a main highway between New York and Philadelphia. Mrs. Benjamin F. Maschal, chairman of the festival, said the concerts will be held late in August so as not to conflict with the series at Philadelphia's Robin Hood Dell or the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Stockbridge, Mass., where summer concerts are given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

FOUR members of the first violin section of the Philadelphia Orchestra will share the post of concertmaster of the Robin Hood Dell Orchestra this summer.

Eugene Ormandy, conductor of the Philadelphia Orchestra, said he plans to have the four violinists rotate in the post, with the hope that next year he may be able to select one of them as permanent Dell concertmaster.

THE Edgard M. Levintritt Foundation announces a violin competition for its award this year. The prize is an appearance with the New York Philharmonic-Symphony. The first award, last year, was for pianists, and was won by Sydney Foster, who appeared with the orchestra.

Competitors for the violin award must be between 17 and 25 years old. They must have made at least one appearance in public, but not with a major orchestra.

Applications for auditions should be made by June 15 of this year to the foundation at 30 Broad Street, New York.

This Clipping From LEWISTON, ME.
SUN
MAY 6 - 1941

KOUSSEVITSKY CONDUCTS BANDS AT EDWARDS TODAY

Massed Soldier Units Will Give a Concert of Martial Music

CAMP EDWARDS, May 5-AP-With Dr. Serge Koussevitsky of the Boston Symphony Orchestra conducting, the massed soldier bands of this camp will give a concert of martial music tomorrow afternoon.

In the evening, the famed conductor will lead the band of the 180th F. A. in the overture "The Oberon."

A score of reserve second lieutenants have been ordered to duty with the 26th Division. Their names and assignments:

101st Infantry—William S. Deluca, Providence, R. I., Donald S. Healey, Westfield, Joseph F. Henry, Westboro, Wendell J. Martin, Southboro.

Among reserve Second Lieutenants ordered to active duty are Second Lieutenants Howard A. Allen Jr., Burlington, Vt., Donald M. Richards, Manchester, N. H.; William B. Plummer, Concord, N. H.; and Howard M. Platts, Woodsville, N. H.

This Clipping From LEWISTON, ME.
SUN
MAY 7 - 1941

KOUSSEVITSKY LEADS EDWARDS SOLDIER BAND

Famed Conductor visibly Moved as He Directs "Stars and Stripes"

CAMP EDWARDS, Mass., May 6 -AP-With a "jeep" car as his podium, Serge Koussevitsky led 300 soldier-musicians in a mass band concert today—and that it was "magnificent."

The famed conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who became a United States citizen only two weeks ago, was visibly moved as he directed the young musicians in John Phillip Sousa's "Stars and Stripes."

Using his hands in lieu of baton, Koussevitsky doffed his coat and hat before putting the bands through their paces in march music.

This Clipping From
BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
TELEGRAM
MAY 7 - 1941

KOUSSEVITSKY LEADS ARMY BAND IN CAMP

CAMP EDWARDS, Mass., May 6—(AP) With a "jeep" car as his podium, Serge Koussevitsky led 300 soldier-musicians in a mass band concert today—and thought it was "magnificent."

The famed conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who became a United States citizen only two weeks ago, was visibly moved as he directed the young musicians in John Phillip Sousa's "Stars and Stripes."

Using his hands in lieu of baton, Koussevitsky doffed his coat and hat before putting the bands through their paces in march music.

THIS CLIPPING FROM MERCED, CAL.
SUN - STAR
MAY 7 1941

Celebrates Citizenship With Special Program

BOSTON, (U.P.)—Serge Koussevitzky, Russian-born conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, celebrated his becoming a United States citizen by presenting a special program of American music.

Pop Concerts Open 56th Season; Fiedler Conducts

Boston Globe

Symphony Hall Takes on Spring Atmosphere; Program Entertaining

MAY 6, 1941

There were flowers on the stage at Symphony Hall last evening, tables on the floor and glasses on the tables. The lower part of the hall was done over in green. Behind the musicians was a lattice of green and gold; above them hung the great chandelier. At the tables people were chatting, drinking, eating and smoking as they listened to music. And on the conductor's stand, Arthur Fiedler was waving a stick over some 90 players from the Boston Symphony Orchestra. In short, the 56th season of Pop concerts had begun.

There's nothing like the Boston Pops. Just as certain as Spring will grow out of Winter, so will the Pops follow the main season of the Boston Symphony. There is nothing new about the informality, the relaxed pleasure which is the governing note of the Pops, any more than Spring is new. Yet both Spring and the Pops always seem to be new and fresh and attractive. Seated at a table or perched in a balcony, you may think yourself light years away from troubled times and their echoing headlines.

Spirit Remains Constant

The spirit of the Pops, therefore, remains constant. But their substance yields obediently to the laws of gradual change. Mr. Fiedler, in whose 11 years as conductor the Pops have reached their highest peak of favor, has a delicate finger upon the pulse of general taste in light music. Without sacrificing the best of the familiar music that must form the flesh and bone of the Pops repertory, he has constantly added new pieces and rediscovered old ones whose disuse has given them a patina of novelty.

The "light classics" are always interspersed through the two months of these programs with waltzes and polkas and marches, "patrols," operatic pot-pourris and symphonic excerpts. The best, or at least the most popular of jazz and swing, dressed up for large symphonic orchestra, are generously represented. The Pops were designed as entertainment, not as musical high art, and fortunately they continue to be so.

Once Mr. Fiedler had disposed of the opening formalities of repeated bowing to the introductory applause, last evening began with the snap of a Sousa march, "Semper Fidelis." It proceeded through Offenbach's quaintly fragrant Overture "Orpheus in Hades," an Entr'acte from Donizetti's operatic joke "The Daughter of the Regiment," and excerpts from Wagner's "Die Meistersingers," to the first intermission.

One Composer Present

Since the middle section of a popular program usually is a little more sophisticated or important or ponderable, as the case may be, that of last evening presented the suite (whose composer was present) from Walter Piston's ballet "The Incredible Flutist," music of skill and pungent flavor; the march from Prokofieff's amazingly clever "Peter and the Wolf," and the First Rumanian Rhapsody by Enesco. Prokofieff, incidentally, was followed with an encore, the Polka from the Soviet Dimitri Shostakovitch's ballet, "The Golden Age." Against the subtle ingenuity of Prokofieff, the bright colored crudities of Shostakovitch made an impish, nose-thumbing contrast.

Mr. Fiedler conducted energetically, with feeling for rhythm, color and accent, and thus the orchestra played for him. He has the secret of the Viennese waltz, represented on this occasion by Josef Strauss and "Music of the Spheres." What American conductor, indeed, can equal Mr. Fiedler with Viennese waltzes? To end, there were Morton Gould's tasty arrangement (with suggestions of Prokofieff) of the Lecuona "Andalucia," and Eric Coates' tuny "Oxford Street" march.

The audience? They enjoyed themselves, as they always do at the Pops, and they practically filled the hall.

Groups of tables were taken by the Children's Art Center and John Hancock Chorus. By way of extra attraction, there is an exhibition, in the lower Massachusetts av. lobby, of water colors, black and white and tempera drawings by students of the Children's Art Center.—C. W. D.

The program tonight follows:

Entrance of the Guests into the Wartburg, from "Tannhaeuser," Wagner; Overture to "The Merry Wives of Windsor," Nicolai; "Molly on the Shore," Grainger; "Aida," Fantasia, Verdi; "Peer Gynt" Suite, Grieg; "Drink to Me Only With Thine Eyes," for string orchestra, arranged by Alfred Pochon; Overture to "Rienzi," Wagner; "Roses From the South," waltzes, Strauss; Intermezzo, "Souvenir of Vienna," Prevost; First Hungarian Dance, Brahms.

Koussevitsky Directs From Army "Jeep" Car

Camp Edwards, Mass., May 7 (AP)—Even at a standstill, the army's new little "jeep" cars can prove useful.

Serge Koussevitsky, famed conductor of the Boston symphony orchestra, used one as a podium yesterday while directing 300 soldier-musicians in a mass concert.

The conductor, who became a United States citizen a few weeks ago, doffed his coat and hat before putting the army bands through their paces.

This Clipping From
HOLYOKE, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT TELEGRAM
MAY 7 - 1941

Serge Koussevitzky, the great conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, made a big hit with the boys at Camp Edwards yesterday. He visited the New England encampment on Cape Cod and led the 26th division band in playing "The Stars and Stripes Forever."

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN
MAY 7 - 1941

133

...g or office jobs.

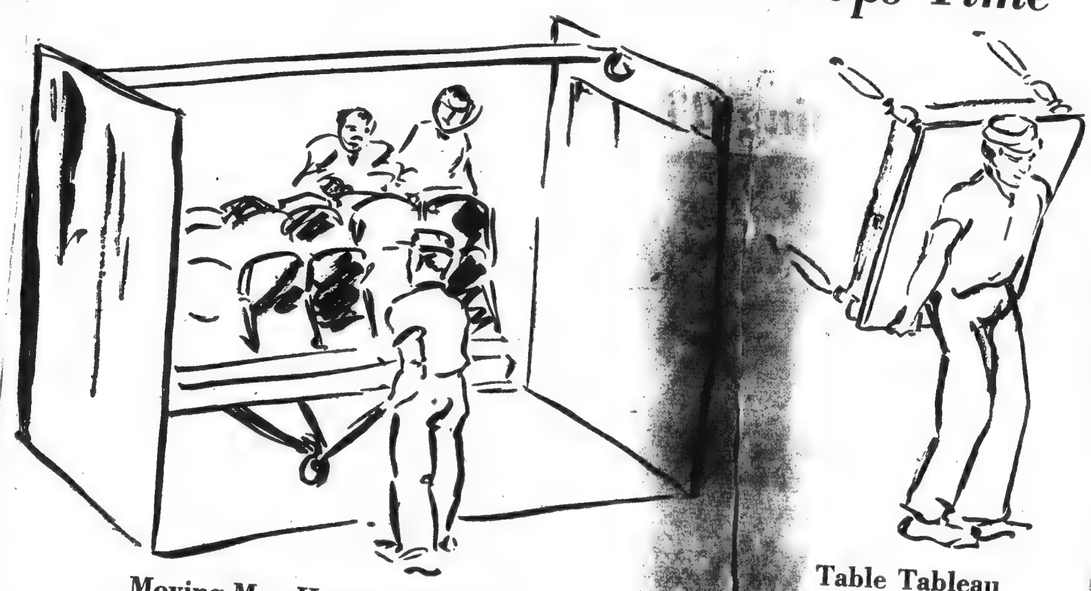
"JEEP" FOR PODIUM

Camp Edwards, Mass., May 7.—(AP)—Even at a standstill, the Army's new little "jeep" cars can prove useful.

Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, used one as a podium yesterday while directing 300 soldier-musicians in a mass concert.

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR, BOSTON, TUESDAY, MAY 6, 1941

Chairs Out, Tables In—It's Pops Time



Moving Men Have Own Symphony

This is the season when the theater chairs are moved out of Symphony Hall and tables and straight chairs moved in. It's Pops time in Boston. The artist, watching the movers changing things about, caught the elevator going down with a load.

Table Tableau

This man, says the artist, has a feeling he knows how many tables there are. He's getting ready for the Pops' opening night.

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM
MAY 7 - 1941

Koussevitzky Conducts Soldier Band

CAMP EDWARDS, May 6 (AP)—With a "jeep" car as his podium, Serge Koussevitzky led 300 soldier-musicians in a mass band concert today—and thought it was "magnificent."

The famed conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who became a United States citizen only two weeks ago, was visibly moved as he directed the young musicians in John Philip Sousa's "Stars and Stripes."

Using his hands in lieu of baton, Koussevitzky doffed his coat and hat before putting the bands through their paces in March music.

This Clipping From
BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
TIMES-STAR
MAY 6 - 1941

NATALIE'S NOTES

THE MUSICAL RESEARCH Club's campaign for subscribers for next season's concert series has plenty to talk about. Each one of the four concerts is the best, you might say, with such an array of celebrated artists. Tito Schipa, tenor, will make his first appearance in Bridgeport, after captivating audiences in all the opera houses of Europe, South America and the United States. Critics can't find words for their ever increasing admiration for his art . . . Who doesn't know Jessica Dragonette's beautiful soprano voice? She holds a world record among singers for the length of her commercial broadcasting career. Don't miss her concert, when you will see as well as hear her at Klein Memorial Auditorium, where all these concerts will be held.

PERCY GRAINGER IS AN OLD favorite of Bridgeport audiences and will be given a royal welcome back. The pianist will hold a joint recital in this series with Jula Goldyne, the celebrated Dutch mezzo soprano, in her first American concert tour . . . And Ruggiero Ricci, already ranked as "one of the outstanding violinists of our time," though it seems only a little while ago I first met him as a curly headed child, milling his way into the artists's room after a Carnegie Hall concert—I forgot whose. And I recall his sitting in my brother's box at an Elman concert when he was slimming toward his teens, curls gone. How quiet he was in his devout following of Elman's art! . . . His will be a joint recital with Stell Andersen, the American pianist who has been concertizing in European capitals for several years; and made such an impression with the Boston Symphony Orchestra last season . . . The Musical Research concert series is the only one with reserved seats, so order now from Mrs. Harold Youd, 75 Eaton St., 3-0947.

This Clipping From
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD TIMES
MAY 7 - 1941

This Clipping From
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER
MAY 7 - 1941

Another Use Found For Army Jeep Car

Camp Edwards, Mass., May 7.—(AP)—Even at a standstill, the army's new little "Jeep" cars can prove useful.

Serge Koussevitsky, famed conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, used one as a podium yesterday while directing 300 soldier-musicians in a mass concert.

The conductor, who became a United States citizen a few weeks ago, doffed his coat and hat before putting the army bands through their paces.

Symphony Leader Visits Camp

Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is shown at Camp Edwards. Left to right are Dr. Koussevitsky, Warrant Officer Chester O. Whiting, YD band leader; Colonel John H. Agnew, commander of the 108th Field Artillery and host to the conductor, and Lieutenant-Colonel Charles G. Moore, G-1 of the division.

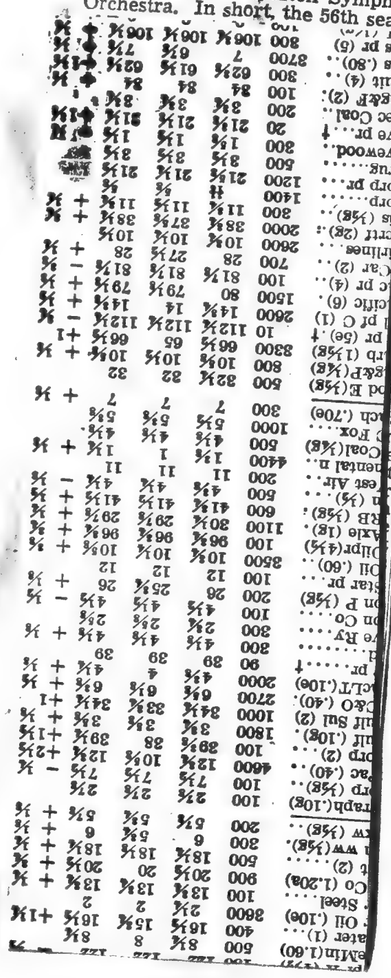
Pop Concerts Open 56th Season; Fiedler Conducts

Boston Globe

MAY 6, 1941

Symphony Hall Takes on Spring Atmosphere; Program Entertaining

There were flowers on the stage at Symphony Hall last evening, tables on the floor and glasses on the tables. The lower part of the hall was done over in green. Behind the musicians was a lattice of green and gold; above them hung the great chandelier. At the tables people were chatting, drinking, eating and smoking as they listened to music. And on the conductor's stand, Arthur Fiedler was waving a stick over some 90 players from the Boston Symphony Orchestra. In short, the 56th season



Hancock Chorus. By way of extra attraction, there is an exhibition, in the lower Massachusetts av. lobby, of water colors, black and white and tempera drawings by students of the Children's Art Center.—C. W. D.

The program tonight follows:

Entrance of the Guests into the Wartburg, from "Tannhaeuser," Wagner; Overture to "The Merry Wives of Windsor," Nicolai; "Molly on the Shore," Grainger; "Aida," Fantasia, Verdi; "Peer Gynt" Suite, Grieg; "Drink to Me Only With Thine Eyes," for string orchestra, arranged by Alfred Pochon; Overture to "Rienzi," Wagner; "Roses From the South," waltzes, Strauss; Intermezzo, "Souvenir of Vienna," Prevost; First Hungarian Dance, Brahms.

This Clipping From
HOLYOKE, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT TELEGRAM
MAY 7 - 1941

Serge Koussevitzky, the great conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, made a big hit with the boys at Camp Edwards yesterday. He visited the New England encampment on Cape Cod and led the 26th division band in playing "The Stars and Stripes Forever."

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN
MAY 7 - 1941

ing or office jobs.

"JEEP" FOR PODIUM

Camp Edwards, Mass., May 7.—(AP)—Even at a standstill, the Army's new little "jeep" cars can prove useful.

Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, used one as a podium yesterday while directing 300 soldier-musicians in a mass concert.

133

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR, BOSTON, TUESDAY, MAY 6, 1941

Chairs Out, Tables In—It's Pops Time

Moving Men Have Own Symphony

This is the season when the theater chairs are moved out of Symphony Hall and tables and straight chairs moved in. It's Pops time in Boston. The artist, watching the movers changing things about, caught the elevator going down with a load.

Table Tableau

This man, says the artist, has a feeling he knows how many tables there are. He's getting ready for the Pops' opening night.

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM
MAY 7 - 1941

Koussevitzky Conducts Soldier Band

CAMP EDWARDS, May 6 (AP)—With a "jeep" car as his podium, Serge Koussevitzky led 300 soldier-musicians in a mass band concert today—and thought it was "magnificent."

The famed conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who became a United States citizen only two weeks ago, was visibly moved as he directed the young musicians in John Philip Sousa's "Stars and Stripes."

Using his hands in lieu of baton, Koussevitzky doffed his coat and hat before putting the bands through their paces in March music.

This Clipping From
BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
TIMES-STAR
MAY 6 - 1941

NATALIE'S NOTES

THE MUSICAL RESEARCH Club's campaign for subscribers for next season's concert series has plenty to talk about. Each one of the four concerts is the best, you might say, with such an array of celebrated artists. Tito Schipa, tenor, will make his first appearance in Bridgeport, after captivating audiences in all the opera houses of Europe, South America and the United States. Critics can't find words for their ever increasing admiration for his art . . . Who doesn't know Jessica Dragonette's beautiful soprano voice? She holds a world record among singers for the length of her commercial broadcasting career. Don't miss her concert, when you will see as well as hear her at Klein Memorial Auditorium, where all these concerts will be held.

PERCY GRAINGER IS AN OLD favorite of Bridgeport audiences and will be given a royal welcome back. The pianist will hold a joint recital in this series with Jula Goldyne, the celebrated Dutch mezzo soprano, in her first American concert tour . . . And Ruggiero Ricci, already ranked as "one of the outstanding violinists of our time," though it seems only a little while ago I first met him as a curly headed child, milling his way into the artists's room after a Carnegie Hall concert—I forgot whose. And I recall his sitting in my brother's box at an Elman concert when he was slimming toward his teens, curls gone. How quiet he was in his devout following of Elman's art! . . . His will be a joint recital with Stell Andersen, the American pianist who has been concertizing in European capitals for several years; and made such an impression with the Boston Symphony Orchestra last season . . . The Musical Research concert series is the only one with reserved seats, so order now from Mrs. Harold Youd, 75 Eaton St., 3-0947.

This Clipping From
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER
MAY 7 - 1941

Another Use Found For Army Jeep Car

Camp Edwards, Mass., May 7.—(AP)—Even at a standstill, the army's new little "Jeep" cars can prove useful.

Serge Koussevitsky, famed conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, used one as a podium yesterday while directing 300 soldier-musicians in a mass concert.

The conductor, who became a United States citizen a few weeks ago, doffed his coat and hat before putting the army bands through their paces.

This Clipping From
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD TIMES
MAY 7 - 1941

Symphony Leader Visits Camp

Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is shown at Camp Edwards. Left to right are Dr. Koussevitsky, Warrant Officer Chester O. Whiting, YD band leader; Colonel John H. Agnew, commander of the 108th Field Artillery and host to the conductor, and Lieutenant-Colonel Charles G. Moore, G-1 of the division.

THIS CLIPPING FROM SALEM, MASS.
NEWS
MAY 7 - 1941

Dr. Koussevitzky Praises Army Band At Camp Edwards

Camp Edwards, May 7—The gift of about 1000 prayer books from William Cardinal O'Connell to members of the 101st Infantry are expected to arrive at this camp some time this week, it was announced last night.

The books, supplementing a previous gift from Cardinal O'Connell, will be inscribed with the 101st's coat of arms and will be of pocket size.

Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, earlier in the day led a band of 300 enlisted men and afterwards commented: "Marvelous rhythm, marvelously in tune, such as you seldom hear."

He added that he had "never conducted a band like that before." Equally important to the army men as the famous conductor's praise was the distinction of having played under his direction.

This Clipping From
NEW BRITAIN, CONN.
HERALD
MAY 7 - 1941

Koussevitsky Directs From Army "Jeep" Car

Camp Edwards, Mass., May 7 (AP)—Even at a standstill, the army's new little "jeep" cars can prove useful.

Serge Koussevitsky, famed conductor of the Boston symphony orchestra, used one as a podium yesterday while directing 300 soldier-musicians in a mass concert.

The conductor, who became a United States citizen a few weeks ago, doffed his coat and hat before putting the army bands through their paces.

Pops Open 56th Year Tuesday

Boston Herald May 4, 1941

Arthur Fiedler, conductor of the Pops, which begin their 56th consecutive season at Symphony Hall on Tuesday evening.

Annual Stock-taking of The Symphony's 60th Season

By. ALEXANDER WILLIAMS

Once again another Boston Symphony season has come and gone, so that it becomes our annual and agreeable duty to offer some survey of it here. New music is the chief interest for this type of comment, and the figures indicate that there was rather less of it than in the past two years, rather more than in the two seasons preceding those. Actually there were 16 works new to Boston and six semi-new.

Probably the latter figure needs a little explanation. There is no point in counting the Sibelius symphonies or "Petrouchka" as unfamiliar music, even though their composers are still alive. The expression "semi-new" refers to such works as the symphonies of Hanson, Shostakovitch, Berezowsky, Hindemith's Konzertmusik and the Violin Concerto of Stravinsky—in other words conspicuous revivals of not too familiar music.

The new music aroused a certain amount of controversy and possibly some bitterness in the discussion. The most notable row was over Shostakovitch's Fifth Symphony. Some of the press, of which the present writer was especially vociferous, blazed away at it with both barrels. Mr. Koussevitzky, however, had faith in the symphony's virtues and promptly repeated it in the regular series, put in on his New York program and on the Monday-Tuesday series. He is also going to play it at the Berkshire Festival. We still think the symphony is not worthy of this championship; but we have had our say on the subject and are now content to stand by.

Further controversy arose over that touchy institution, the American composer, who was represented by eight works. In our opinion the best scores from this field were Piston's Violin Concerto, Berezowsky's Third Symphony and the two pieces by Samuel Barber. The worst were the Second Symphony by Howard Hanson and the Second Symphony by Arthur Shepherd; and indeed the latter would win many votes from the subscribers, who are alert on these matters, as the dullest score in many years. More interesting than these, though in the main disappointing, were Harris' Folk Song Symphony and Copland's "Quiet City." [illegible]rd is respectable.

[illegible] the foreign composers can in a [illegible] by virtue of their presence on [illegible]travinsky would again win the new music of the season, the [illegible]d the latter with his Symphony in C major. A very interesting concert was that in which Darius Milhaud conducted three of his own compositions. The Villa Lobos Choros No. 10 was a curious item and at the least quite original. The Bosmans piece for violin and orchestra had the disadvantage of being followed by the much more effective Piston Concerto.

There were four works by our English friends. The most stirring of these was the revival of Vaughan Williams' London Symphony. The Goossens Symphony was disappointing, but the Variations by Benjamin Britten and Arnold Bax's Overture to a Picturesque Comedy were most enjoyable. There was also the slight, though pleasant, "Cipressi" by Castelnuovo-Tedesco, and that pretty well covers the new music.

OTHER DETAILS

The composer who had the most works played was Mozart with six, which is only fair in the 150th year since his death. Inasmuch as he died in December we can look forward to more Mozart next season. Brahms was represented with five works; Beethoven, Sibelius, Wagner and Stravinsky with four each; Strauss, Debussy, Milhaud and Bach with three each. Two from this number were novelties, namely Koussevitzky's arrangement of one of organ preludes and fugues of Bach and Schoenberg's transcription of the Brahms G minor Piano Quartet. Both are emphatically worth repetition.

Our only suggestion on the basis of surveying the past season's repertory would be a further broadening of the base. Certain works, like Mahler's Ninth Symphony, have helped this aspect, but the revival of such music should be extended. For example, there is Bruckner's Ninth Symphony in the original version. Then there are a quantity of scores that have only been played once, and many of them merit another hearing. Of course there are some that should never have been given in the first place, but there must be a dozen or more that are unwarrantably gathering dust on the library shelf.

The trouble is that a majority of the public wants to hear Beethoven and Brahms and not too much experimentation besides. New subscribers, also, have a right to be initiated into the accepted symphonic masterpieces and hear them from the hands of a top-notch body of experts. But there are others of us who like a concert best when there is some unfamiliar music on the program. It is the difficult balance between these groups that Mr. Koussevitzky has to keep.

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL
MAY 4 - 1941

MUSIC and MUSICIANS

By JOHN TEBBEL

WALTER HOVING, who ought to know better, let loose an emphatic if not particularly accurate broadside at music critics the other day during a Philharmonic Symphony League luncheon in New York.

"Critics," said Mr. Hoving severely, "have what I call 'conductoritis.' All they write about is that the conductor did this and the conductor did that, so there is now a premium on the conductor who makes the wildest gesture and who puts on the best show."

Mr. Hoving is an important department store executive and president of the Brown Alumni Association and involved with various other high responsibilities, but in this matter, which is quite foreign to these pursuits, he is completely and utterly wrong.

Heaven knows the critical fraternity has much to answer for but the Hoving complaint is no part of it. If the critics appear to dwell largely on the conductor, it is simply because no symphony orchestra is any better than its leader and proof of the same is abundant. Some conductors put on a show, others get results by quieter methods but it is the results which are important and the conductor is responsible for them.

New York's WPA orchestra is a case in point. It sounded like any other outfit until the energetic Otto Klemperer took over for a brief period prior to his illness. Mr. Hoving may be indirectly defending the genteel methods of John Barbirolli but it is a fact that the only time all season the New York Philharmonic sounded like a first-rate orchestra was during the time of Dmitri Mitropoulos' guest conductorship. The Philadelphia Orchestra has never performed quite the same under Ormandy's baton as it did for Stokowski. And it takes an exceptional maestro to make the Boston orchestra play with Koussevitzky-like quality, as was demonstrated here this season. One could go on and on with similar examples.

The orchestra played magnificently last night," the critic writes, but he knows and most musically informed people know why it played that way.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
MAY 7 - 1941

Koussevitsky Uses Army Jeep Car As His Podium

CAMP EDWARDS (AP)—Even at a standstill, the Army's new little "jeep" cars can prove useful. Serge Koussevitsky, famed conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, used one as a podium yesterday while directing 300 soldier-musicians in a mass concert.

The conductor, who became a United States citizen a few weeks ago, doffed his coat and hat before putting the Army bands through their paces.

THIS CLIPPING FROM TAUNTON, MASS.
GAZETTE
MAY 7 - 1941

KOUSSEVITSKY LEADS MASSED BANDS

CAMP EDWARDS, May 7 (AP)—Even at a standstill, the army's new little "jeep" cars can prove useful.

Serge Koussevitsky, famed conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, used one as a podium yesterday while directing 300 soldier-musicians in a mass concert.

The conductor, who became a United States citizen a few weeks ago, doffed his coat and hat before putting the army bands through their paces.

This Clipping From MANCHESTER, N. H.
LEADER
MAY 7 - 1941

Koussevitsky Leads Army Bands at Devens

CAMP EDWARDS, Mass., May 7—(A. P.)—Even at a standstill, the army's new little "jeep" cars can prove useful.

Serge Koussevitsky, famed conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, used one as a podium yesterday while directing 300 soldier-musicians in a mass concert.

The conductor, who became a United States citizen a few weeks ago, doffed his coat and hat before putting the army bands through their paces.

POPS CONCERT IN 56TH SEASON

Crowd Greets Opening of Popular Event

BOSTON POST
MAY 7 1941

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

Three days after the Symphony Concerts had finished their 60th season, the Pops began last evening their 56th. In the more than usually brief interim Symphony Hall had once more been transformed within, if not without. Green walls replaced the red and the customary green and gold lattice work enclosed the stage, whereon Arthur Fiedler and his 90-odd Symphony men held forth. There are some full-fledged symphony orchestras in this country which do not boast that number of players. There are none which have more skilful ones.

In his programme last evening Mr. Fiedler was uncommonly happy. Not one of his chosen numbers was a "dud" and more than one might be described as highly entertaining. The real hit of the evening, however, was not one of the announced numbers but an "extra," the saucy Polka from Shostakovitch's ballet, "The Golden Age," which was immediately encored. The provocation for this particular extra was another amusing Russian tidbit, the Triumphal March from Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf."

As one might learn last evening, it is not only the Muscovites who can be clever in this parodistic way. Our own Walter Piston who graced the occasion with his presence, was represented by the brilliant and diverting suite drawn from his ballet, "The Incredible Flutist." All the above items were played in the middle third of the programme, which ended with Enesco's First Rumanian Rhapsody. The spicy and audacious harmonies of his successors made Enesco's work sound for once a little tame, for all its brilliant orchestral dress.

New to the Pops was the third number of the first group, the Entr'acte in Tyrolean style from Donizetti's "The Daughter of the Regiment," which brought back to some a pleasant evening spent not long ago in the Metropolitan Theatre when Donizetti's opera was revived for us in such engaging fashion. Announced as excerpts from Act III. from Wagner's "Die Meistersinger," this particular potpourri, which had a novel sound to it, contained one excerpt from Act I., Walther's "Am Stillen Herd." But we can let that pass. Here were also Sousa's "Semper Fidelis" March and the always welcome to Offenbach's Overture to "Orpheus in Hades."

Josef Strauss' "Music of the Spheres," Lecuona's "Andalucia" and the March, "Oxford Street," from Eric Coates' "London Again," brought the evening to a close. Save for a few tables in the rear, the hall was filled. And the audience, as is the present way at the Pops, listened appreciatively to the music and reserved its merrymaking for the pauses.

16

56th Pops Season in Full Swing

BOSTON DAILY RECORD, WEDNESDAY, MAY 7, 1941

Boston's famous light music, light wines and beer festival, the annual spring season of Pop concerts at Symphony Hall, have swung gayly into a 56th season.

There is nothing like the Pops anywhere else today, in this country or abroad, and they make Boston in spring the cheeriest of big cities.

Arthur Fiedler is conducting again, with 90 Symphony men to take his beat through marches, waltzes and popular overture and give the Pops fans a big treat.

The new season got a rousing start last night, and a full house enjoyed the tuneful program and the light refreshments served at tables on the floor.

There will be concerts every weekday night and also on Sundays for a time—next Sunday is the first. The program for tonight runs:

Excerpt, "Tannhaeuser"	Wagner
"Merry Wives of Windsor" overture	Nicolai
"Molly on the Shore"	Grainger
"Aida" fantasia	Verdi
"Peer Gynt" suite	Grieg
""Drink to Me Only with Thine Eyes"	Arranged by Poehon
"Rienzi" overture	Wagner
"Roses from the South" waltzes	Strauss
"Souvenir of Vienna" intermezzo	Prevost
First Hungarian Dance	Brahms

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
AMERICAN
MAY 7 - 1941

JEEP PODIUM

Camp Edwards, Mass., May 7—(AP)—Even at a standstill, the army's new little "Jeep" cars can prove useful.

Serge Koussevitsky, famed conductor [illegible] Boston Symphony orchestra, used one as a podium yesterday while directing 300 soldier-musicians in a mass concert.

Pops Open 56th Year Tuesday

Boston Herald May 4, 1941

Arthur Fiedler, conductor of the Pops, which begin their 56th consecutive season at Symphony Hall on Tuesday evening.

Annual Stock-taking of The Symphony's 60th Season

By. ALEXANDER WILLIAMS

Once again another Boston Symphony season has come and gone, so that it becomes our annual and agreeable duty to offer some survey of it here. New music is the chief interest for this type of comment, and the figures indicate that there was rather less of it than in the past two years, rather more than in the two seasons preceding those. Actually there were 16 works new to Boston and six semi-new.

Probably the latter figure needs a little explanation. There is no point in counting the Sibelius symphonies or "Petrouchka" as unfamiliar music, even though their composers are still alive. The expression "semi-new" refers to such works as the symphonies of Hanson, Shostakovitch, Berezowsky, Hindemith's Konzertmusik and the Violin Concerto of Stravinsky—in other words conspicuous revivals of not too familiar music.

The new music aroused a certain amount of controversy and possibly some bitterness in the discussion. The most notable row was over Shostakovitch's Fifth Symphony. Some of the press, of which the present writer was especially vociferous, blazed away at it with both barrels. Mr. Koussevitzky, however, had faith in the symphony's virtues and promptly repeated it in the regular series, put in on his New York program and on the Monday-Tuesday series. He is also going to play it at the Berkshire Festival. We still think the symphony is not worthy of this championship; but we have had our say on the subject and are now content to stand by.

Further controversy arose over that touchy institution, the American composer, who was represented by eight works. In our opinion the best scores from this field were Piston's Violin Concerto, Berezowsky's Third Symphony and the two pieces by Samuel Barber. The worst were the Second Symphony by Howard Hanson and the Second Symphony by Arthur Shepherd; and indeed the latter would win many votes from the subscribers who are alert on these matters, as the dullest score in many years. More interesting than these, though in the main disappointing, were Harris' Folk Song Symphony and Copland's "Quiet City." On the whole the American record is respectable.

As a matter of fact, most of the foreign composers can in a sense be considered native sons by virtue of their presence on these shores. Hindemith and Stravinsky would again win the award for the most interesting new music of the season, the former with his Cello Concerto and the latter with his Symphony in C major. A very interesting concert was that in which Darius Milhaud conducted three of his own compositions. The Villa Lobos Choros No. 10 was a curious item and at the least quite original. The Bosmans piece for violin and orchestra had the disadvantage of being followed by the much more effective Piston Concerto.

There were four works by our English friends. The most stirring of these was the revival of Vaughan Williams' London Symphony. The Goossens Symphony was disappointing, but the Variations by Benjamin Britten and Arnold Bax's Overture to a Picturesque Comedy were most enjoyable. There was also the slight, though pleasant, "Cipressi" by Castelnuovo-Tedesco, and that pretty well covers the new music.

OTHER DETAILS

The composer who had the most works played was Mozart with six, which is only fair in the 150th year since his death. Inasmuch as he died in December we can look forward to more Mozart next season. Brahms was represented with five works; Beethoven, Sibelius, Wagner and Stravinsky with four each; Strauss, Debussy, Milhaud and Bach with three each. Two from this number were novelties, namely Koussevitzky's arrangement of one of organ preludes and fugues of Bach and Schoenberg's transcription of the Brahms G minor Piano Quartet. Both are emphatically worth repetition.

Our only suggestion on the basis of surveying the past season's repertory would be a further broadening of the base. Certain works, like Mahler's Ninth Symphony, have helped this aspect, but the revival of such music should be extended. For example, there is Bruckner's Ninth Symphony in the original version. Then there are a quantity of scores that have only been played once, and many of them merit another hearing. Of course there are some that should never have been given in the first place, but there must be a dozen or more that are unwarrantably gathering dust on the library shelf.

The trouble is that a majority of the public wants to hear Beethoven and Brahms and not too much experimentation besides. New subscribers, also, have a right to be initiated into the accepted symphonic masterpieces and hear them from the hands of a top-notch body of experts. But there are others of us who like a concert best when there is some unfamiliar music on the program. It is the difficult balance between these groups that Mr. Koussevitzky has to keep.

POPS CONCERT IN 56TH SEASON

Crowd Greets Opening of Popular Event

BOSTON POST MAY 7 1941

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

Three days after the Symphony Concerts had finished their 60th season, the Pops began last evening their 56th. In the more than usually brief interim Symphony Hall had once more been transformed within, if not without. Green walls replaced the red and the customary green and gold lattice work enclosed the stage, whereon Arthur Fiedler and his 90-odd Symphony men held forth. There are some full-fledged symphony orchestras in this country which do not boast that number of players. There are none which have more skilful ones.

In his programme last evening Mr. Fiedler was uncommonly happy. Not one of his chosen numbers was a "dud" and more than one might be described as highly entertaining. The real hit of the evening, however, was not one of the announced numbers but an "extra," the saucy Polka from Shostakovitch's ballet, "The Golden Age," which was immediately encored. The provocation for this particular extra was another amusing Russian tidbit, the Triumphal March from Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf."

As one might learn last evening, it is not only the Muscovites who can be clever in this parodistic way. Our own Walter Piston who graced the occasion with his presence, was represented by the brilliant and diverting suite drawn from his ballet, "The Incredible Flutist." All the above items were played in the middle third of the programme, which ended with Enesco's First Rumanian Rhapsody. The spicy and audacious harmonies of his successors made Enesco's work sound for once a little tame, for all its brilliant orchestral dress.

New to the Pops was the third number of the first group, the Entr'acte in Tyrolean style from Donizetti's "The Daughter of the Regiment," which brought back to some a pleasant evening spent not long ago in the Metropolitan Theatre when Donizetti's opera was revived for us in such engaging fashion. Announced as excerpts from Act III. from Wagner's "Die Meistersinger," this particular potpourri, which had a novel sound to it, contained one excerpt from Act I., Walther's "Am Stillen Herd." But we can let that pass. Here were also Sousa's "Semper Fidelis" March and the always welcome to Offenbach's Overture to "Orpheus in Hades."

Josef Strauss' "Music of the Spheres," Lecuona's "Andalucia" and the March, "Oxford Street," from Eric Coates' "London Again," brought the evening to a close. Save for a few tables in the rear, the hall was filled. And the audience, as is the present way at the Pops, listened appreciatively to the music and reserved its merrymaking for the pauses.

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL
MAY 4 - 1941

MUSIC

WALTER HOVI[NG] to know bette[r] emphatic if no[t] accurate broadside at [the] the other day during a [Symphony League lunch] York.

"Critics," said Mr. Hoving severely, "have what I call 'conductoritis.' All they write about is that the conductor did this and the conductor did that, so there is now a premium on the conductor who makes the wildest gesture and who puts on the best show."

Mr. Hoving is an important department store executive and president of the Brown Alumni Association and involved with various other high responsibilities, but in this matter, which is quite foreign to these pursuits, he is completely and utterly wrong.

Heaven knows the critical fraternity has much to answer for but the Hoving complaint is no part of it. If the critics appear to dwell largely on the conductor, it is simply because no symphony orchestra is any better than its leader and proof of the same is abundant. Some conductors put on a show, others get results by quieter methods but it is the results which are important and the conductor is responsible for them.

New York's WPA orchestra is a case in point. It sounded like any other outfit until the energetic Otto Klemperer took over for a brief period prior to his illness. Mr. Hoving may be indirectly defending the genteel methods of John Barbirolli but it is a fact that the only time all season the New York Philharmonic sounded like a first-rate or-two members of his staff, and to wind-up affairs with the OPM publicity man, who also had a deadline to make.

"Get It From Who's Who"

He gave up.

"Get it out of the book. Got a copy of Who's Who in New [conductorship.] Philadelphia Orchestra has performed quite the same under Ormandy's baton as it did for Stokowski. And it takes an exceptional maestro to make the Boston orchestra play with Koussevitsky-like quality, as was demonstrated here this season. One could go on and on with similar examples.

The orchestra played magnificently last night," the critic writes, but he knows and most musically informed people know why it played that way.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
MAY 7 - 1941

Koussevitsky Uses Army Jeep Car As His Podium

CAMP EDWARDS (AP)—Even at a standstill, the Army's new little "jeep" cars can prove useful. Serge Koussevitsky, famed conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, used one as a podium yesterday while directing 300 soldier-musicians in a mass concert.

The conductor, who became a United States citizen a few weeks ago, doffed his coat and hat before putting the Army bands through their paces.

THIS CLIPPING FROM TAUNTON, MASS.
GAZETTE
MAY 7 - 1941

KOUSSEVITSKY LEADS MASSED BANDS

CAMP EDWARDS, May 7 (AP)—Even at a standstill, the army's new little "jeep" cars can prove useful.

Serge Koussevitsky, famed conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, used one as a podium yesterday while directing 300 soldier-musicians in a mass concert.

The conductor, who became a United States citizen a few weeks ago, doffed his coat and hat before putting the army bands through their paces.

This Clipping From MANCHESTER, N. H.
LEADER
MAY 7 - 1941

Koussevitsky Leads Army Bands at Devens

CAMP EDWARDS, Mass., May 7—(A. P.)—Even at a standstill, the army's new little "jeep" cars can prove useful.

Serge Koussevitsky, famed conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, used one as a podium yesterday while directing 300 soldier-musicians in a mass concert.

The conductor, who became a United States citizen a few weeks ago, doffed his coat and hat before putting the army bands through their paces.

16

56th Pops Season in Full Swing

BOSTON DAILY RECORD, WEDNESDAY, MAY 7, 1941

Boston's famous light music, light wines and beer festival, the annual spring season of Pop concerts at Symphony Hall, have swung gayly into a 56th season.

There is nothing like the Pops anywhere else today, in this country or abroad, and they make Boston in spring the cheeriest of big cities.

Arthur Fiedler is conducting again, with 90 Symphony men to take his beat through marches, waltzes and popular overture and give the Pops fans a big treat.

The new season got a rousing start last night, and a full house enjoyed the tuneful program and the light refreshments served at tables on the floor.

There will be concerts every weekday night and also on Sundays for a time—next Sunday is the first. The program for tonight runs:

Excerpt, "Tannhaeuser"	Wagner
"Merry Wives of Windsor" overture	Nicolai
"Molly on the Shore"	Grainger
"Aida" fantasia	Verdi
"Peer Gynt" suite	Grieg
"Drink to Me Only with Thine Eyes" Arranged by	Pochon
"Rienzi" overture	Wagner
"Roses from the South" waltzes	Strauss
"Souvenir of Vienna" intermezzo	Prevost
First Hungarian Dance	Brahms

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
AMERICAN
MAY 7 - 1941

JEEP PODIUM

Camp Edwards, Mass., May 7—(AP)—Even at a standstill, the army's new little "Jeep" cars can prove useful.

Serge Koussevitsky, famed conductor [illegible] Boston Symphony orchestra, used one as a podium yesterday while directing 300 soldier-musicians in a mass concert.

This Clipping From
COLUMBUS, OHIO
DISPATCH
MAY 4 - 1941

135

With Rochester Orchestra

Helen Pugh Alcorn

THE Symphony Club of Central Ohio now has completed its course for next year.

Announcement was made Saturday to the workers of the club that the third orchestra to be heard on the course would be the Rochester Philharmonic orchestra, already a favorite with the Columbus public and much demanded, with Jose Iturbi as conductor. The date is Friday, March 6, 1942.

Further announcement is made that Helen Pugh Alcorn, manager of the Symphony club, has acceded to the repeated importunities of her fellow officers, and has consented to appear with the orchestra as soloist. Her long training, both in America and Europe, especially in the realm of solo playing with orchestra, has richly fitted her for such an appearance. The name of the concerto to be used cannot now be named, inasmuch as Mrs. Alcorn wishes Mr. Iturbi to approve a choice from her repertoire. It will, however, almost certainly be from the classic school.

Orchestras formerly announced for this course include the Boston Symphony orchestra, to be conducted by Koussevitzky, and the Philadelphia orchestra, under the baton of Eugene Ormandy.

This Clipping From
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
MERCURY
MAY 7 - 1941

'Jeep' Car Podium For Koussevitsky

CAMP EDWARDS, May 6 (AP) —With a "Jeep" car as his podium, Serge Koussevitsky led 300 soldier-musicians in a mass band concert today—and said that it was "magnificent."

The famed conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who became a United States citizen only two weeks ago, was visibly moved as he directed the young musicians in John Phillip Sousa's "Stars and Stripes."

Using his hands in lieu of baton, Koussevitsky doffed his coat and hat before putting the bands through their paces in march music.

This Clipping From
STAMFORD, CONN.
ADVOCATE
MAY 8 - 1941

nwich

of the St. Ce- old Greenwich al Music Week in the form of ghter Musical esday, May 13, at the home of Mrs. Alfred Harcourt in Riverside. The program will feature two advanced student artists of the Helen Norfleet School of New York, Miss Betty Skofield, pianist, and Eloise Ford, 'cellist. Miss Ford has studied for two years at Oberlin and has spent five years at the Helen Norfleet Camp which specializes in the arts and music. She is a member of the National Orchestra Association and is now studying under Louis Barzin. Miss Norfleet, who has served as soloist with the New York Philharmonic, Boston Symphony and other orchestras throughout the country, will also be a guest.

This Clipping From
BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
POST
MAY 4 - 1941

Mme. Ziolkowska, Violinist, Soloist in Tonight's Concert

Wife of Sculptor of Paderewski Bust on Display at Stratfield.

A distinguished violinist, Mme. Ziolkowska, will play at the Paderewski memorial concert, 8:30 o'clock tonight in the Stratfield hotel, where a marble head of the Polish statesman-composer, sculptured by her husband, Korczak Ziolkowska, is on exhibit.

The Polish Central committee in cooperation with the I Am An American Committee and the Wednesday Afternoon Musical club is sponsoring the concert.

Nancy Hawley Lang, contralto, and her husband, Boris Lang, pianist, of Westport, also will perform at the concert, arranged by the American Foundation for Polish Unity.

Music Inspired Sculpture

Mme. Ziolkowska and her husband, who live in West Hartford, are united in their art. The musical composition, Szymanowski's "La Fontaine d'Arethuse" which Mme. Ziolkowska will play tonight, was the inspiration for her husband's sculpture, "The Fountain of Arethuse."

One of his best-known works is a sculpture of one of Mme. Ziolkowska's hands. Untitled, it has been dscribed as an "exquisite cutting" expressing "strength of fingers and vitality leashed in marble."

The first word Mrs. Ziolkowska learned to speak as a small child was "Paderewski," the subject of her husband's much-discussed work, "Study of an Immortal," now on exhibit in the Stratfield.

MME. ZIOLOWSKA

A Native Of New York

Although proud of her Polish name, Mme. Ziolkowska was born in New York city of New England parents. Many of her ancestors lived in Connecticut. Three of her forefathers were passengers on the Mayflower; others founded Hartford, Wethersfield, New Haven and New London; several were early surgeons in the Colonies; and one was John Treadwell, "the last of the Puritan governors." Mme. Ziolkowska's husband is from Boston.

Mme. Ziolkowska, an accomplished linguist, spent much of her childhood in Europe. She started violin study at the age of nine. A graduate of Vassar College, she gave frequent concerts there and won the college's musical composition award for an anthem written for choir and organ.

Founded Chamber Group

In Boston, Mme. Ziolkowska founded the chamber music group, "The Seventeenth Century Ensemble". The membership included players from the first desks of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. It was this enterprising organization which gave the first public American performance in 1929, of the "Art of the Fugue", Bach's last work. They played the American premiere also, of Stravinsky's "Histoire du Soldat".

Mme. Ziolkowska studied with the conductor-violinist, Paul Stassevitch, in New York; and for more than three years was a scholarship pupil of Georges Enesco, only guest conductor of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra prior to the World war.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
MAY 7 - 1941

Philharmonic's Chief Works for 1941-'42 Listed

day, after referring to the fact that the city will begin razing the Fulton Street line in June, the Mayor repeated his criticism of obstructionists, although he did not mention the budget commission by name.

"The City of New York," he said, "desires to manage and operate our great transit system in a businesslike way, and the people who attempt to criticize the city for the cost of transit are the very people who seek to hamper, delay and otherwise obstruct the business of the greatest transit system in the world."

The Citizens' Budget Commission issued a statement recently saying that the "heavy subway deficits are a burden the people can no longer bear." The statement said that further subway extension is unwarranted, and demanded that the New York City Transit System be placed on a self-sustaining basis.

The Broadway Ferry spur, one of the B. M. T. elevated lines acquired by the city through transit unification last June, runs from the East River to the Williamsburg Bridge Plaza, where it joins the Broadway elevated line to Jamaica, Queens. It is only six blocks long. Trains that used to carry passengers along the spur to the old Broadway Ferry to Manhattan have since been routed over the bridge. The ceremony yes-

This Clipping From
COLUMBUS, OHIO
DISPATCH
MAY 4 - 1941

135

With Rochester Orchestra

Helen Pugh Alcorn

THE Symphony Club of Central Ohio now has completed its course for next year.

Announcement was made Saturday to the workers of the club that the third orchestra to be heard on the course would be the Rochester Philharmonic orchestra, already a favorite with the Columbus public and much demanded, with Jose Iturbi as conductor. The date is Friday, March 6, 1942.

Further announcement is made that Helen Pugh Alcorn, manager of the Symphony club, has acceded to the repeated importunities of her fellow officers, and has consented to appear with the orchestra as soloist. Her long training, both in America and Europe, especially in the realm of solo playing with orchestra, has richly fitted her for such an appearance. The name of the concerto to be used cannot now be named, inasmuch as Mrs. Alcorn wishes Mr. Iturbi to approve a choice from her repertoire. It will, however, almost certainly be from the classic school.

Orchestras formerly announced for this course include the Boston Symphony orchestra, to be conducted by Koussevitzky, and the Philadelphia orchestra, under the baton of Eugene Ormandy.

This Clipping From
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
MERCURY
MAY 7 - 1941

'Jeep' Car Po... For Koussevi...

...nan at a

CAMP EDWARDS, Ma... —With a "Jeep" car... podium, Serge Kousse... 300 soldier-musicians i... band concert today—and said that it was "magnificent."

The famed conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who became a United States citizen...

Wanted—T...
Highest Cash — R...
Shapiro & Son, 28 Beet...

This Clipping From
STAMFORD, CONN.
ADVOCATE
MAY 8 - 1941

Old Greenwich

The Study Group of the St. Cecilia Society of Old Greenwich will observe National Music Week and Mother's Day in the form of a Mother and Daughter Musical at 2:30 p. m. on Tuesday, May 13, at the home of Mrs. Alfred Harcourt in Riverside. The program will feature two advanced student artists of the Helen Norfleet School of New York, Miss Betty Skofield, pianist, and Eloise Ford, 'cellist. Miss Ford has studied for two years at Oberlin and has spent five years at the Helen Norfleet Camp which specializes in the arts and music. She is a member of the National Orchestra Association and is now studying under Louis Barzin. Miss Norfleet, who has served as soloist with the New York Philharmonic, Boston Symphony and other orchestras throughout the country, will also be a guest.

This Clipping From
BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
POST
MAY 4 - 1941

Mme. Ziolkowska, Violinist, Soloist in Tonight's Concert

Wife of Sculptor of Paderewski Bust on Display at Stratfield.

A distinguished violinist, Mme. Ziolkowska, will play at the Paderewski memorial concert, 8:30 o'clock tonight in the Stratfield hotel, where a marble head of the Polish statesman-composer, sculptured by her husband, Korczak Ziolkowska, is on exhibit.

The Polish Central committee in cooperation with the I Am An American Committee and the Wednesday Afternoon Musical club is sponsoring the concert.

Nancy Hawley Lang, contralto, and her husband, Boris Lang, pianist, of Westport, also will perform at the concert, arranged by the American Foundation for Polish Unity.

Music Inspired Sculpture

Mme. Ziolkowska and her husband, who live in West Hartford, are united in their art. The musical composition, Szymanowski's "La Fontaine d'Arethuse" which Mme. Ziolkowska will play tonight, was the inspiration for her husband's sculpture, "The Fountain of Arethuse."

One of his best-known works is a sculpture of one of Mme. Ziolkowska's hands. Untitled, it has been dscribed as an "exquisite cutting" expressing "strength of fingers and vitality leashed in marble."

The first word Mrs. Ziolkowska learned to speak as a small child was "Paderewski," the subject of her husband's much-discussed work, "Study of an Immortal," now on exhibit in the Stratfield.

MME. ZIOLOWSKA

A Native Of New York

Although proud of her Polish name, Mme. Ziolkowska was born in New York city of New England parents. Many of her ancestors lived in Connecticut. Three of her forefathers were passengers on the Mayflower; others founded Hartford, Wethersfield, New Haven and New London; several were early surgeons in the Colonies; and one was John Treadwell, "the last of the Puritan governors." Mme. Ziolkowska's husband is from Boston.

Mme. Ziolkowska, an accomplished linguist, spent much of her childhood in Europe. She started violin study at the age of nine. A graduate of Vassar College, she gave frequent concerts there and won the college's musical composition award for an anthem written for choir and organ.

Founded Chamber Group

In Boston, Mme. Ziolkowska founded the chamber music group, "The Seventeenth Century Ensemble". The membership included players from the first desks of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. It was this enterprising organization which gave the first public American performance in 1929, of the "Art of the Fugue", Bach's last work. They played the American premiere also, of Stravinsky's "Histoire du Soldat".

Mme. Ziolkowska studied with the conductor-violinist, Paul Stassevitch, in New York; and for more than three years was a scholarship pupil of Georges Enesco, only guest conductor of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra prior to the World war.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
MAY 7 - 1941

Philharmonic's Chief Works for 1941-'42 Listed

Nine Conductors to Share Direction of Centennial Season Starting Oct. 9

Some of the principal works which the Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra will perform under the direction of the nine conductors who will share its centennial season of 1941-'42 were announced yesterday by the orchestra. During the first two weeks, beginning Oct. 9, at Carnegie Hall, Leopold Stokowski will offer Beethoven's fifth and seventh symphonies and his orchestral arrangement of Moussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition."

Dimitri Mitropoulos, conductor of the Minneapolis Symphony, who will conduct the Philharmonic-Symphony between Dec. 18 and 28, will observe the seventy-fifth anniversary of the birth of the late Ferruccio Busoni in his closing program by presenting Busoni's piano and violin concertos, with Egon Petri and Joseph Szigeti as the respective soloists. The choral finale of the piano concerto will be omitted. Both Messrs. Mitropoulos and Petri studied with Busoni.

Other works to be conducted by Mr. Mitropoulos during his six concerts are Rachmaninoff's third symphony and one of the Rachmaninoff concertos with the composer as soloist; Richard Strauss's Alpine Symphony, Gustav Mahler's ninth symphony, and his own version of the prelude and Dido's Death from Purcell's "Dido and Aeneas."

John Barbirolli, regular conductor of the orchestra, who will be in charge between Oct. 23 and Nov. 2 and for several weeks in the spring, will devote several programs to Tchaikovsky's music, with Reginald Stewart as soloist in the B flat minor piano concerto and Mishel Piastro as soloist in the violin concerto. During the Holy Week and Easter period (April 1, 2 and 5) he will present his arrangement of excerpts from Wagner's "Parsifal" with the assistance of the Westminster Choir.

Bruno Walter, appearing between Nov. 6 and 16 and for two weeks in the spring, will offer three choral works, Brahms's Alto Rhapsody and "Song of Fate" and the Mozart Requiem, with the Westminster Choir, and Bruckner's fifth and seventh symphonies.

In his six Philharmonic concerts between Jan. 22 and Feb. 1, Serge Koussevitzky of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will conduct three symphonies, Tchaikovsky's fourth, Beethoven's sixth and Shostakovitch's fifth. No details have yet been announced of the programs of the other four conductors, Artur Rodzinski, Eugene Goossens, Fritz Busch and Walter Damrosch.

Boston Herald May 7, 1941

56TH SEASON OF POPS IN BOSTON TRADITION

By ALISON ARNOLD

Spring has really arrived in Boston. The tulips are blooming gaily in the Public Garden, the swan-boats are making trips about the pond, the circus has come to town and the Pop Concerts have begun. For the opening last evening, Symphony Hall was in its summer dress with the familiar gold and green lattice serving as a background for the orchestra. The front of the stage was banked with slender stalks of salmon pink gladioli flanked by two huge bouquets of golden forsythia. Small tables filled the floor and the pleasant hum of conversation was punctuated by the occasional popping of corks. Even the waitresses wore crisp new uniforms,—green and white checked gingham blouses and trim green skirts and aprons.

These concerts, which never have been successfully imitated in any other city, are a part of the Boston tradition, and last night marked the beginning of the 56th season. Extremely popular as a means for raising money for pet charities, groups of tables were reserved by the Children's Art Center and the John Hancock Chorus.

The large audience represented all ages from octogenarian Daniel Kuntz, who was concert master of the Pops 55 years ago in its second season, and William R. Kittredge and Walter H. Dugan, who have never missed a Pops opening in 56 years, to eight-year-old Carol Delaney of Newton, resplendent in pink taffeta and a huge matching hair ribbon. And all were equally enthusiastic. Sitting with the latter was pig-tailed Joan Hughes of Cambridge, who, having reached the ripe age of 10, has attended three Pop Concerts and could explain everything.

Street clothes were the favorite attire, although many who had attended dinner parties earlier in the evening were formally clad. Distinguished white-haired dowagers peered through their lorgnettes at the orchestra, and pretty debutantes about to step over the threshhold of society, tried to be sophisticated about it all. Groups of young married couples politely stifled yawns as they surreptitiously looked at their watches and considered getting the children off to school in the morning.

When Arthur Fiedler made his appearance he received his usual welcome, and applause rang out from the floor to the very topmost seats in the balcony, as he began to conduct his 12th season. The program opened with the stirring Sousa march, "Semper Fidelis," and the entr'acte from "The Daughter of the Regiment" brought memories of the recent opera season when Lily Pons sang the title role. There was great excitement when Walter Piston, the composer, rose to take a bow following the playing of his "Incredible Flutist Suite."

OFFICERS REPRESENTED

Of course, the officers and council of the center were well represented in the audience. Mrs. William B Castle, wife of the president, was there, and Mrs. Charles B. Perkins, the vice-president; Miss Mary Corcoran, secretary; Mr. Hobart W. Spring, treasurer, and Mrs. Spring; and Major Montague W. W. Prowse, assistant treasurer, and Mrs. Prowse. Miss Charlotte A. Dempsey, director, and Mrs. Robert Riedel, assistant director, were also present.

Among the members of the council who attended the concert were Mr. and Mrs. B. Devereux Barker, Jr., who had with them a large group of friends. Among them were Mr. and Mrs. Edward Dane, Mr. and Mrs. Laurence H. H. Johnson, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. James Parker, 2nd, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Wilder, Miss Betty Foster, Mrs. John Yerxa and Mr. David Lewis. Mr. and Mrs. Francis W. MacVeagh were other council members, Mrs. MacVeagh in a pastel print, and Mr. MacVeagh conspicuous for his jacket of wine red velvet. An honorary member present was Mrs. Richmond Mayosmith.

Among others we glimpsed in the audience were the French Consul Francois Briere and Mme. Briere, Mr. Arthur Richmond, Miss Faith Thoron, Miss Frances Lowell, Miss Bolling Byrd, debutante daughter of Rear Admiral and Mrs. Byrd; Mrs. Alonzo Wessell, Mr. and Mrs. A. Barr Comstock, Mr. and Mrs. George Willard Smith, Mrs. Grosvenor Calkins, Miss Olive Perry, Mr. and Mrs. Morris F. La Croix, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Colt, Mr. and Mrs. E. Curtiss Mower, Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. A. Schmitt and Mr. Leon Little.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN
MAY 7 - 1941

AMERICANISM DAY PREVIEW

"I Am an American" songwriters joined in patriotic rally at Brooklyn's Borough Hall. Seated at piano are Leonard Whitcup (front) and Ira Schuster. Standing: Paul Cunningham and Orchestra Leader Gray Gordon. Some 2,500 persons enjoyed preview of big rally set for Sunday, May 18, on Central Park Mall.

LaGuardia Asks Children To Join in American Day

Convinced that I Am an American Day, to be celebrated with impressive ceremonies ll surpass any patriotic demonstration ever heldin the city, Mayor LaGuardia stressed today th the rally.

The New York Journal and Amercian, which has been co-operating with the Mayor's Citizens Committee of 1,000 in arranging for the mass meeting, has been deluged with offers of co-operation from patriotic organizations of the metropiltan area.

To co-operate with the Mayor, who wants at least 25,000 school children to join in the Mall ceremonies, the Board of Education today called on every prinicpal in the city to aid in bringing their pupils to the Mall ceremonies.

A pledge of co-operation, prepared at the Mayor's office, is being sent to every school for the children to sign. The promise of co-operation, carries not only a pledge to be present at the Mall, but to take every opportunity each day of the year to let the world know that the signer is an American.

SOLDIERS TO ATTEND.

Just how many thousand young Americans, now wearing the uniform of their country, will gather at the Mall, is a question with one guess as good as another. Suffice to say, they will be there by the thousands.

From Fort Dix came a request to the New York Journal and American for 1,200 tickets for distribution to young Americans—those who attained their majority during the past year.

Determined to outdo the preview celebrations, arranged by the New York Journal and American last week in Manhattan and yesterday on the steps of Borough Hall, Brooklyn, Queens Borough President Harvey has called on citizens of Queens to participate in a similar rally Friday on the steps of Queens Borough Hall, Queens blvd., Kew Gardens.

URGES BIG TURNOUT.

In urging 100 per cent co-operation, Harvey said:

"I urge the people of Queens to turn out en masse on this day in order that we may put on the kind of demonstration that can leave no doubt as to just how glad we are to be Americans."

The thought expressed by Harvey was echoed in a statement made by Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He said:

"I waited 12 years before applying for my first American papers. When I realized that my work and life belonged to America I felt that I could and should become an American citizen."

This Clipping From
GREENWICH, CONN.
TIME

MAY 8 - 1941

Old Greenwich

Musicale Planned By St. Cecilia's

In connection with "Mother's Day" and National Music Week the study group of the St. Cecilia Society will feature a Mother and Daughter Musicale with two advanced student artists from the Helen Norfleet School in New York City, 2:30, Tuesday, May 13, at the home of Mrs. Alfred Harcourt.

Miss Eloise Ford, cellist, studied at Oberlin and attended the Helen Norfleet camp for five years specializing in arts and music.

Miss Betty Schofield, pianist, in her second year at the Norfleet School and a pupil of Helen Norfleet, will also play. Miss Norfleet will be present and will play several selections. She has been soloist with the New York Philharmonic and with the Boston Symphony, as well as with other major orchestras throughout the country.

36

Boston Herald MAY 7, 1941

56TH SEASON OF POPS IN BOSTON TRADITION

By ALISON ARNOLD

Spring has really arrived in Boston. The tulips are blooming gaily in the Public Garden, the swan-boats are making trips about the pond, the circus has come to town and the Pop Concerts have begun. For the opening last evening, Symphony Hall was in its summer dress with the familiar gold and green lattice serving as a background for the orchestra. The front of the stage was banked with slender stalks of salmon pink gladioli flanked by two huge bouquets of golden forsythia. Small tables filled the floor and the pleasant hum of conversation was punctuated by the occasional popping of corks. Even the waitresses wore crisp new uniforms,—green and white checked gingham blouses and trim green skirts and aprons.

These concerts, which never have been successfully imitated in any other city, are a part of the Boston tradition, and last night marked the beginning of the 56th season. Extremely popular as a means for raising money for pet charities, groups of tables were reserved by the Children's Art Center and the John Hancock Chorus.

The large audience represented all ages from octogenarian Daniel Kuntz, who was concert master of the Pops 56 years ago in its second season, and William R. Kittredge and Walter H. Dugan, who have never missed a Pops opening in 56 years, to eight-year-old Carol Delaney of Newton, resplendent in pink taffeta and a huge matching hair ribbon. And all were equally enthusiastic. Sitting with the latter was pig-tailed Joan Hughes of Cambridge, who, having reached the ripe age of 10, has attended three Pop Concerts and could explain everything.

Street clothes were the favorite attire, although many who had attended dinner parties earlier in the evening were formally clad. Distinguished white-haired dowagers peered through their lorgnettes at the orchestra, and pretty debutantes about to step over the threshhold of society, tried to be sophisticated about it all. Groups of young married couples politely stifled yawns as they surreptitiously looked at their watches and considered getting the children off to school in the morning.

When Arthur Fiedler made his appearance he received his usual welcome, and applause rang out from the floor to the very topmost seats in the balcony, as he began to conduct his 12th season. The program opened with the stirring Sousa march, "Semper Fidelis," and the entr'acte from "The Daughter of the Regiment" brought memories of the recent opera season when Lily Pons sang the title role. There was great excitement when Walter Piston, the composer, rose to take a bow following the playing of his "Incredible Flutist Suite."

OFFICERS REPRESENTED

Of course, the officers and council of the center were well represented in the audience. Mrs. William B Castle, wife of the president, was there, and Mrs. Charles B. Perkins, the vice-president; Miss Mary Corcoran, secretary; Mr. Hobart W. Spring, treasurer, and Mrs. Spring; and Major Montague W. W. Prowse, assistant treasurer, and Mrs. Prowse. Miss Charlotte A. Dempsey, director, and Mrs. Robert Riedel, assistant director, were also present.

Among the members of the council who attended the concert were Mr. and Mrs. B. Devereux Barker, Jr., who had with them a large group of friends. Among them were Mr. and Mrs. Edward Dane, Mr. and Mrs. Laurence H. H. Johnson, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. James Parker, 2nd, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Wilder, Miss Betty Foster, Mrs. John Yerxa and Mr. David Lewis. Mr. and Mrs. Francis W. MacVeagh were other council members, Mrs. MacVeagh in a pastel print, and Mr. MacVeagh conspicuous for his jacket of wine red velvet. An honorary member present was Mrs. Richmond Mayosmith.

Among others we glimpsed in the audience were the French Consul Francois Briere and Mme. Briere, Mr. Arthur Richmond, Miss Faith Thoron, Miss Frances Lowell, Miss Bolling Byrd, debutante daughter of Rear Admiral and Mrs. Byrd; Mrs. Alonzo Wessell, Mr. and Mrs. A. Barr Comstock, Mr. and Mrs. George Willard Smith, Mrs. Gresvenor Calkins, Miss Olive Perry, Mr. and Mrs. Morris F. La Croix, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Colt, Mr. and Mrs. E. Curtiss Mower, Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. A. Schmitt and Mr. Leon Little.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN
MAY 7 - 1941

AMERICANISM DAY PREVIEW

"I Am an American" songwriters joined in patriotic rally at Brooklyn's Borough Hall. Seated at piano are Leonard Whitcup (front) and Ira Schuster. Standing: Paul Cunningham and Orchestra Leader Gray Gordon. Some 2,500 persons enjoyed preview of big rally set for Sunday, May 18, on Central Park Mall.

LaGuardia Asks Children To Join in American Day

Convinced that I Am an American Day, to be celebrated with impressive ceremonies ll surpass any patriotic demonstration ever heldin the city, Mayor LaGuardia stressed today th the rally.

The New York Journal and Amercian, which has been co-operating with the Mayor's Citizens Committee of 1,000 in arranging for the mass meeting, has been deluged with offers of co-operation from patriotic organizations of the metropiltan area.

To co-operate with the Mayor, who wants at least 25,000 school children to join in the Mall ceremonies, the Board of Education today called on every prinicpal in the city to aid in bringing their pupils to the Mall ceremonies.

A pledge of co-operation, prepared at the Mayor's office, is being sent to every school for the children to sign. The promise of co-operation, carries not only a pledge to be present at the Mall, but to take every opportunity each day of the year to let the world know that the signer is an American.

SOLDIERS TO ATTEND.

Just how many thousand young Americans, now wearing the uniform of their country, will gather at the Mall, is a question with one guess as good as another. Suffice to say, they will be there by the thousands.

From Fort Dix came a request to the New York Journal and American for 1,200 tickets for distribution to young Americans—those who attained their majority during the past year.

Determined to outdo the preview celebrations, arranged by the New York Journal and American last week in Manhattan and yesterday on the steps of Borough Hall, Brooklyn, Queens Borough President Harvey has called on citizens of Queens to participate in a similar rally Friday on the steps of Queens Borough Hall, Queens blvd., Kew Gardens.

URGES BIG TURNOUT.

In urging 100 per cent co-operation, Harvey said:

"I urge the people of Queens to turn out en masse on this day in order that we may put on the kind of demonstration that can leave no doubt as to just how glad we are to be Americans."

The thought expressed by Harvey was echoed in a statement made by Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He said:

"I waited 12 years before applying for my first American papers. When I realized that my work and life belonged to America I felt that I could and should become an American citizen."

This Clipping From
GREENWICH, CONN.
TIME

MAY 8 - 1941

Old Greenwich

Musicale Planned By St. Cecilia's

In connection with "Mother's Day" and National Music Week the study group of the St. Cecilia Society will feature a Mother and Daughter Musicale with two advanced student artists from the Helen Norfleet School in New York City, 2:30, Tuesday, May 13, at the home of Mrs. Alfred Harcourt.

Miss Eloise Ford, cellist, studied at Oberlin and attended the Helen Norfleet camp for five years specializing in arts and music.

Miss Betty Schofield, pianist, in her second year at the Norfleet School and a pupil of Helen Norfleet, will also play. Miss Norfleet will be present and will play several selections. She has been soloist with the New York Philharmonic and with the Boston Symphony, as well as with other major orchestras throughout the country.

This Clipping From
PAINSVILLE, O.
TELEGRAPH

Fifty-sixth Season of Pops Begins

Piston's 'Incredible Flutist' Played at Opening Concert

Spring received the official nod of approval from Symphony Hall last evening when Arthur Fiedler raised his baton to begin the fifty-sixth season of Pop concerts.

Inside the hall everything was as it should be. The painters had been busy since the conclusion of the regular Symphony series changing the dignified maroon of the walls into the traditional Pops shade of green. The chandelier with its amber lights had been taken out of winter storage and lowered into position over the platform. The candelabra were in place, and so was the gilt lattice work. Around the podium were banked peach-colored gladioli—rushing the horticultural season a bit, perhaps, but no one is likely to object to that.

The program was in Mr. Fiedler's characteristic vein, light enough to be pleasing and substantial enough to be satisfying. It dipped into the opératic repertory, with the entr'acte from "The Daughter of the Regiment" to recall recent memories. It glanced in the direction of Wagner with excerpts from the third act of "Die Meistersinger." And it turned briefly to Offenbach with the overture to "Orpheus in Hades."

The most ambitious item of the evening was Walter Piston's suite, "The Incredible Flutist." This is music that goes well with the mood of the Pops, and the audience was quick to show its approval, calling the composer to his feet to bow several times from his place at a table near the center of the hall. Likewise well suited to the occasion was the Triumphal March from Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf."

The musicians, like the audience, seemed to enjoy the opening of the lighter season of music. They whirled through Enesco's First Roumanian Rhapsody, racing around the musical corners at a rate that would be a violation of almost any traffic regulations. And they turned their attention with so much enthusiasm to the polka from Shostakovitch's "Golden Age," which was offered as an encore piece, that they were obliged to repeat it.

There must be waltzes in a Pops program. Last evening the choice fell on Josef Strauss' "Music of the Spheres" in the melodious Viennese tradition. Add the Lecuona-Gould "Andalucia," and the Oxford Street March from Eric Coates' "London Again," which Mr. Fiedler had placed on his program for a concluding note of timely significance and the Pops had been successfully launched once more on a new season.

E. F. M.

Tonight at the Pops

Entrance of the Guests into the Wartburg, from "Tannhäuser".....Wagner
Overture to "The Merry Wives of Windsor".....Nicolai
"Molly on the Shore".....Grainger
"Aida," Fantasia.....Verdi
"Peer Gynt" Suite.....Grieg
"Drink to Me Only With Thine Eyes" Arranged by Alfred Pochon for String Orchestra
Overture to "Rienzi".....Wagner
"Roses from the South," Waltzes.....Strauss
Intermezzo, "Souvenir of Vienna".....Prevost
First Hungarian Dance.....Brahms

THIS CLIPPING FROM GARDNER, MASS.
NEWS
MAY 7 - 1941

MUSIC

Boston Herald May 7, 1941

By ALEXANDER WILLIAMS

The Pops

The 56th season of the Boston Symphony's Pop concerts opened last night in Symphony Hall. Arthur Fiedler began his 12th year as conductor of the Pops. Last night's program was as follows:

"Semper Fidelis," March.....Sousa
Overture to "Orpheus in Hades".....Offenbach
Minuet from "The Daughter of the Regiment".....Donizetti
"Die Meistersinger," Excerpts from Act III.....Wagner
"The Incredible Flutist," Suite.....Piston
Triumphal March from "Peter and the Wolf".....Prokofieff
Roumanian Rhapsody No. 1.....Enesco
"Music of the Spheres," Waltzes.....Josef Strauss
Andalucia.....Lecuona-Gould
"Oxford Street," March from "London Again".....Eric Coates

Mr. Fiedler is entering his 12th year of service in the Pops and he knows as well as we do the secret of their success, which is fundamentally the simple one of "no change." Of course, now and again new music is introduced and old music is dropped; but the Pops carry on in their odd combination of concert, causerie and beer-hall with a delightful lack of change. Hence last night's familiar triumph.

Mr. Fiedler contrived a curious program for the opening night, perhaps in the charitable thought of aiding his journalistic well-wishers. Mr. Piston's Suite, "The Incredible Flutist," which was originally a ballet and a good deal more extended, is a bright and attractive number that is welcome in that it is still not too well known. There is now a recording of it, and doubtless it soon will be as familiar as Enesco's Roumanian Rhapsody, which was so well received last night. Mr. Piston, by the way, was in the audience.

Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf" march is a splendid piece for the Pops. In this cut version it does not need the narrator, and its delicious humor can sound forth effectively alone. It is, apparently, a bit subtle for the general public, for Shostakovitch's polka from "The Golden Age," an amusing but very obvious piece, was much more enthusiastically applauded and had to be repeated.

How the really proper, Bayreuth Wagnerians must fume at the potpourri from "Die Meistersinger," Act 3, which was played last night! It puts him right there with a selection of "gem" from "Faust." One of the pleasantest numbers on the program was the Offenbach Overture to "Orpheus in Hades," music that is in many ways fresher than and just as entertaining as Sullivan.

POPS PROGRAM

The Pop Concerts, which opened their 56th season last night in Symphony Hall, will give the second concert tonight under the direction of Arthur Fiedler, presenting the following program:

Entrance of the Guests into the Wartburg, from "Tannhauser".....Wagner
Overture to "Merry Wives of Windsor".....Nicolai
"Molly on the Shore".....Grainger
"Aida," Fantasia.....Verdi
"Peer Gynt" Suite.....Grieg
"Drink to Me Only with Thine Eyes," for String Orchestra.....Arranged by Alfred Pochon
Overture to "Rienzi".....Wagner
"Roses from the South," Waltzes.....Strauss
Intermezzo, "Souvenir of Vienna".....Prevost
First Hungarian Dance.....Brahms

THIS CLIPPING FROM LINCOLN, NEB.
STAR
MAY 4 1941

...calist ...fulfilled

MARY VAN KIRK

When Mary Van Kirk sang at the Berkshire music festival last summer, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston symphony orchestra, congratulated her on her performance and predicted a brilliant career for her. She is now on the threshold of that career, having recently been awarded a contract by the Metropolitan Opera company.

Miss Van Kirk, who has been called a "second Schumann-Heik" by New York music experts, will be heard here Thursday night in a program sponsored by the Community Forum on World Affairs and dedicated to Dr. Vivian B. Small, president of Lake Erie college.

The program is to be given at 8:15 in the Morley Memorial music building. No admission will be charged.

WILL DEDICATE ORGAN IN BAPTIST CHURCH SUNDAY

Ludwig Juhte, Soloist With Boston Symphony, Guest Artist—Rev. Harry W. Birch To Conduct Service

The new organ at the First Baptist church will be dedicated Sunday afternoon at 4 with Bradford Braley at the console. The instrument is 11 rank with 186 pipes, including harp and chimes. Ludwig Juhte, contrabass soloist of the Boston Symphony orchestra, will be guest artist. There will be several selections by the Novello Quartet which is composed of Albert Dell, Porter Dawley, Robert Crouch and Edwin Bjurling.

Rev. Harry W. Birch will have charge of the service which, in addition to the musical portion, will include the litany of praise and the litany of dedication. A large attendance is expected at the program which is open to the public.

The program is as follows:

Invocation: Rev. Harry W. Birch
Organ selection: Bradford Braley
"The Poet and Peasant Overture" Von Suppe
Anthem: Senior choir, "Oh, Praise the Lord of Heaven" J. C. Marks
Bass Viol solos: Ludwig Juhte
1. "Sarabande"—Handel
2. "Ases Tod" —Greig

Organ Selection:
"Adoration"—Borowski

Service of Dedication
Litany of Praise
Doxology
Litany of Dedication
Prayer
Offertory: "Onward Christian Soldiers"—Sullivan
Bass Viol Solos
"Ein' Feste Burg" —Martin Luther
"A Migthy Fortress Is Our God" Congregation
Male Quartet
1. "Silent Recollection" Pache
2. "An Even Song"—Trotheroe
Organ Selection: "Londonderry Air"
Bass Viol Solos
1. "Mother's Heart"—Hansen
2. "Largo"—Eccles
Recessional Hymn
"God of Our Fathers, Whose Almight Hand"
Benediction
Postlude
"Hallelujah Chorus" from "The Messiah"—Handel

MUSIC NOTES

Maynor in concert here Monday

Famous soprano to be presented

Dorothy Maynor, famous soprano soloist, will be presented in concert here Monday evening at 8 at St. Paul Methodist church. The concert is under the sponsorship of the Lincoln Symphony Orchestra association.

Miss Maynor's sensational rise to fame is one of the rare success stories in recent music history. A few months ago she was a virtually unknown singer. Today critics agree on the discovery of a new star on the musical horizon. She went last summer to the Berkshire Festival to hear the music of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky —and ended by making music herself for the great conductor.

A friend persuaded Koussevitzky to allow her to sing at the musicale which he gives for his orchestra each year at Tanglewood, the summer home of the Boston Symphony. Before an audience of 200, including musicians, critics and a group of music lovers, the young Negro singer started with difficult German Lieder, then sang coloratura arias from Handel and Mozart, and ended with the Wagnerian "Ho-yo-to-Ho," from "Die Walkuere." The professional audience marvelled at her versatility and tremendous vocal range and found her rich voice one of the finest in a generation.

DOROTHY MAYNOR

A native of Norfolk, Va., and daughter of a minister Miss Maynor received her first musical experience in the choir of her father's church. At 14 she entered Hampton Institute, where she was a member of the choir and went to Europe with the institute's famous chorus. She had modestly planned to become merely a music teacher, but was urged by Dr. John Finley Williamson, of the Westminster choir in Princeton, N. J. to become a choral director.

But Dorothy Maynor's is a voice which captures friends—and several music lovers who heard her insisted that this voice must be given a chance — and a solo career! She went to New York and first studied with Wilfred Klamroth, before going to her present teacher, John Alan Haughton. A brilliant New York recital in November and an appearance as soloist with the great Boston Symphony Orchestra during the same month have started her first season.

It has been quite a jump for a young singer who had had virtually no experience on the solo platform to find herself with many cities clamoring to hear her. Dorothy Maynor has a true artist's modesty and reverence for the works she sings. Music is her entire life. "I hope to represent the art of song as well as I can—to be worthy to sing the best music," she says.

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR, BOSTON, WEI

10*

Fifty-sixth Seas

Piston's 'Incredible Flutist' Played at Opening Concert

Spring received the official nod of approval from Symphony Hall last evening when Arthur Fiedler raised his baton to begin the fifty-sixth season of Pop concerts.

Inside the hall everything was as it should be. The painters had been busy since the conclusion of the regular Symphony series changing the dignified maroon of the walls into the traditional Pops shade of green. The chandelier with its amber lights had been taken out of winter storage and lowered into position over the platform. The candelabra were in place, and so was the gilt lattice work. Around the podium were banked peach-colored gladioli—rushing the horticultural season a bit, perhaps, but no one is likely to object to that.

The program was in Mr. Fiedler's characteristic vein, light enough to be pleasing and substantial enough to be satisfying. It dipped into the operatic repertory, with the entr'acte from "The Daughter of the Regiment" to recall recent memories. It glanced in the direction of Wagner with excerpts from the third act of "Die Meistersinger." And it turned briefly to Offenbach with the overture to "Orpheus in Hades."

The most ambitious item of the evening was Walter Piston's suite, "The Incredible Flutist." This is music that goes well with the mood of the Pops, and the audience was quick to show its approval, calling the composer to his feet to bow several times from his place at a table near the center of the hall. Likewise well suited to the occasion was the Triumphal March from Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf."

The musicians, like the audience, seemed to enjoy the opening of the lighter season of music. They whirled through Enesco's First Roumanian Rhapsody, racing around the musical corners at a rate that would be a violation of almost any traffic regulations. And they turned their attention with so much enthusiasm to the polka from Shostakovitch's "Golden Age," which was offered as an encore piece, that they were obliged to repeat it.

There must be waltzes in a Pops program. Last evening the choice fell on Josef Strauss' "Music of the Spheres" in the melodious Viennese tradition. Add the Lecuona-Gould "Andalucia," and the Oxford Street March from Eric Coates' "London Again," which Mr. Fiedler had placed on his program for a concluding note of timely significance and the Pops had been successfully launched once more on a new season.

E. F. M.

Tonight at the Pops

Entrance of the Guests into the Wartburg, from "Tannhäuser".....Wagner
Overture to "The Merry Wives of Windsor".....Nicolai
"Molly on the Shore".....Grainger
"Aida," Fantasia.....Verdi
"Peer Gynt" Suite.....Grieg
"Drink to Me Only With Thine Eyes" Arranged by Alfred Pochon for String Orchestra
Overture to "Rienzi".....Wagner
"Roses from the South," Waltzes.....Strauss
Intermezzo, "Souvenir of Vienna".....Prevost
First Hungarian Dance.....Brahms

THIS CLIPPING FROM
GARDNER, MASS.
NEWS
MAY 7 - 1941

WILL DEDICATE ORGAN IN BAPTIST CHURCH SUNDAY

Ludwig Juhte, Soloist With Boston Symphony, Guest Artist—Rev. Harry W. Birch To Conduct Service

The new organ at the First Baptist church will be dedicated Sunday afternoon at 4 with Bradford Braley at the console. The instrument is 11 rank with 186 pipes, including harp and chimes. Ludwig Juhte, contra-bass soloist of the Boston Symphony orchestra, will be guest artist. There will be several selections by the Novello Quartet which is composed of Albert Dell, Porter Dawley, Robert Crouch and Edwin Bjurling.

Rev. Harry W. Birch will have charge of the service which, in addition to the musical portion, will include the litany of praise and the litany of dedication. A large attendance is expected at the program which is open to the public.

The program is as follows:

Invocation: Rev. Harry W. Birch
Organ selection: Bradford Braley
"The Poet and Peasant Overture" Von Suppe
Anthem: Senior choir, "Oh, Praise the Lord of Heaven" J. C. Marks
Bass Viol solos: Ludwig Juhte
1. "Sarabande"—Handel
2. "Ases Tod" —Greig

Organ Selection:
"Adoration"—Borowski
Service of Dedication
Litany of Praise
Doxology
Litany of Dedication
Prayer
Offertory: "Onward Christian Soldiers"—Sullivan
Bass Viol Solos
"Ein' Feste Burg" —Martin Luther
"A Migthy Fortress Is Our God" Congregation
Male Quartet
1. "Silent Recollection" Pache
2. "An Even Song"—Trotheroe
Organ Selection: "Londonderry Air"
Bass Viol Solos
1. "Mother's Heart"—Hansen
2. "Largo"—Eccles
Recessional Hymn
"God of Our Fathers, Whose Almight Hand"
Benediction
Postlude
"Hallelujah Chorus" from "The Messiah"—Handel

oys Win Pr

Atlantic, are attacks from

Boston Herald

MUSIC

By ALEXANDER WILLIAMS

May 7, 1941

The Pops

The 56th season of the Boston Symphony's Pop concerts opened last night in Symphony Hall. Arthur Fiedler began his 12th year as conductor of the Pops. Last night's program was as follows:

"Semper Fidelis," March.....Sousa
Overture to "Orpheus in Hades".....Offenbach
Minuet from "The Daughter of the Regiment".....Donizetti
"Die Meistersinger," Excerpts from Act III.....Wagner
"The Incredible Flutist," Suite.....Piston
Triumphal March from "Peter and the Wolf".....Prokofieff
Roumanian Rhapsody No. 1.....Enesco
"Music of the Spheres," Waltzes
Andalucia.....Josef Strauss
"Oxford Street," March from "London Again".....Lecuona-Gould
.....Eric Coates

Mr. Fiedler is entering his 12th year of service in the Pops and he knows as well as we do the secret of their success, which is fundamentally the simple one of "no change." Of course, now and again new music is introduced and old music is dropped; but the Pops carry on in their odd combination of concert, causerie and beer-hall with a delightful lack of change. Hence last night's familiar triumph.

Mr. Fiedler contrived a curious program for the opening night, perhaps in the charitable thought of aiding his journalistic well-wishers. Mr. Piston's Suite, "The Incredible Flutist," which was originally a ballet and a good deal more extended, is a bright and attractive number that is welcome in that it is still not too well known. There is now a recording of it, and doubtless it soon will be as familiar as Enesco's Roumanian Rhapsody, which was so well received last night. Mr. Piston, by the way, was in the audience.

Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf" march is a splendid piece for the Pops. In this cut version it does not need the narrator, and its delicious humor can sound forth effectively alone. It is, apparently, a bit subtle for the general public, for Shostakovitch's polka from "The Golden Age," an amusing but very obvious piece, was much more enthusiastically applauded and had to be repeated.

How the really proper, Bayreuth Wagnerians must fume at the potpourri from "Die Meistersinger," Act 3, which was played last night! It puts him right there with a selection of "gem" from "Faust." One of the pleasantest numbers on the program was the Offenbach Overture to "Orpheus in Hades," music that is in many ways fresher than and just as entertaining as Sullivan.

POPS PROGRAM

The Pop Concerts, which opened their 56th season last night in Symphony Hall, will give the second concert tonight under the direction of Arthur Fiedler, presenting the following program:

Entrance of the Guests into the Wartburg, from "Tannhauser".....Wagner
Overture to "Merry Wives of Windsor".....Nicolai
"Molly on the Shore".....Grainger
"Aida," Fantasia.....Verdi
"Peer Gynt" Suite.....Grieg
"Drink to Me Only with Thine Eyes" for String Orchestra.....Arranged by Alfred Pochon
Overture to "Rienzi".....Wagner
"Roses from the South," Waltzes.....Strauss
Intermezzo, "Souvenir of Vienna".....Prevost
First Hungarian Dance.....Brahms

THIS CLIPPING FROM LINCOLN, NEB.
STAR
MAY 4 1941

MUSIC NOTES

Maynor in concert here Monday

Famous soprano to be presented

Dorothy Maynor, famous soprano soloist, will be presented in concert here Monday evening at 8 at St. Paul Methodist church. The concert is under the sponsorship of the Lincoln Symphony Orchestra association.

Miss Maynor's sensational rise to fame is one of the rare success stories in recent music history. A few months ago she was a virtually unknown singer. Today critics agree on the discovery of a new star on the musical horizon. She went last summer to the Berkshire Festival to hear the music of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky —and ended by making music herself for the great conductor.

A friend persuaded Koussevitzky to allow her to sing at the musicale which he gives for his orchestra each year at Tanglewood, the summer home of the Boston Symphony. Before an audience of 200, including musicians, critics and a group of music lovers, the young Negro singer started with difficult German Lieder, then sang coloratura arias from Handel and Mozart, and ended with the Wagnerian "Ho-yo-to-Ho," from "Die Walkuere." The professional audience marvelled at her versatility and tremendous vocal range and found her rich voice one of the finest in a generation.

DOROTHY MAYNOR

A native of Norfolk, Va., and daughter of a minister Miss Maynor received her first musical experience in the choir of her father's church. At 14 she entered Hampton Institute, where she was a member of the choir and went to Europe with the institute's famous chorus. She had modestly planned to become merely a music teacher, but was urged by Dr. John Finley Williamson, of the Westminster choir in Princeton, N. J. to become a choral director.

But Dorothy Maynor's is a voice which captures friends—and several music lovers who heard her insisted that this voice must be given a chance — and a solo career! She went to New York and first studied with Wilfred Klamroth, before going to her present teacher, John Alan Haughton. A brilliant New York recital in November and an appearance as soloist with the great Boston Symphony Orchestra during the same month have started her first season.

It has been quite a jump for a young singer who had had virtually no experience on the solo platform to find herself with many cities clamoring to hear her. Dorothy Maynor has a true artist's modesty and reverence for the works she sings. Music is her entire life. "I hope to represent the art of song as well as I can—to be worthy to sing the best music," she says.

137

This Clipping From
PAINSVILLE, O.
TELEGRAPH
MAY 9 - 1941

Early Promise Of Girl Vocalist Being Fulfilled

MARY VAN KIRK

When Mary Van Kirk sang at the Berkshire music festival last summer, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston symphony orchestra, congratulated her on her performance and predicted a brilliant career for her. She is now on the threshold of that career, having recently been awarded a contract by the Metropolitan Opera company.

Miss Van Kirk, who has been called a "second Schumann-Heik" by New York music experts, will be heard here Thursday night in a program sponsored by the Community Forum on World Affairs and dedicated to Dr. Vivian B. Small, president of Lake Erie college.

The program is to be given at 8:15 in the Morley Memorial music building. No admission will be charged.

138

This Clipping From
HACKENSACK, N. J.
BERGEN-RECORD
MAY 7 - 1941

Music News And Views

By ROGER S. VREELAND

Thomas N. Monroe conducted the eighth spring concert of the Rutherford Choral Society last night, in Union School Auditorium. The 42-member mixed chorus, accompanied by Amelia Merwin, was assisted by Gari Shelton, pianist.

The program was as follows:

I

I Am Music ..... Spross
Edna Eynon, soloist
Sweet Memory ..... Fibich
And the Glory of the Lord ..... Handel
Society
Pastorale and Capriccio ..... Scarlatti
Variations in F Minor ..... Haydn
Mr. Shelton
Venetian Love Song ..... Nevin
The Star ..... Rogers
The Armorer's Song (Robin Hood) ..... DeKoven
Society

II

Come to the Wood ..... Chopin-Sodero
Echoing Voice (Patience) ..... Gilbert & Sullivan
Dance a Cachucha (The Gondoliers) ..... Gilbert & Sullivan
Society
Nocturne in F sharp minor ..... Chopin
Scherzo in C sharp minor ..... Chopin
Mr. Shelton
The Village Blacksmith ..... Berwald
Edna Eynon, soloist
God Shall Guide Us ..... Herbert
Edna Eynon, soloist
Society

This was the first time I'd had the pleasure of hearing this publicity shy chorus, which came into existence about the same time Music News and Views did, and which stands alone in that southern area of the County.

This was the Society's first season under Mr. Monroe, the community's new music supervisor, and that probably accounts for the few deficiencies apparent last night; for when a new conductor, with a different style and a different personality, takes over, we know from experience that it frequently requires at least two seasons for them to get on to each other.

The chorus sings with excellent expression, it sings with admirable restraint, and has good vocal qualities. There is room for improvement, however, in blending of parts, smoother attacks, and clearer enunciation. Emphasis on the latter will automatically tend to clear up the other weaknesses partially.

* * *

Tonight Westervelt B. Romaine will conduct the Amphion Glee Club of Bergen County in its spring concert, at State Street School, Hackensack. The concert of this Club, one of the three major male choruses of the County, is always looked forward to by a large list of patrons.

Giorgio Ricci, young cellist of Leonia who has earned an enviable reputation, will be the guest soloist. He is the brother of Ruggiero, famous violinist. But he has not needed his brother's fame to attract due recognition to himself. Herbert J. Henderson of Tenafly will accompany the Club, and Mrs. Zana Hansen of Leonia will accompany Ricci.

* * *

A meeting of the Cresskill Music Club will be held tonight at the home of Mrs. Avis Beveridge McKinley, 174 John Street, Englewood. Guest artists will include Muriel Burian and Henry I. Marshall. Mrs. Willard Audrey, Miss Catherine Murray, and other members also will perform.

* * *

The offices of the Philharmonic-Symphony Society are humming these days with Centennial activities. More than $15,000 worth of new orders already have been placed for next season and inquiries pour in daily. Subscriptions are being renewed at a faster rate than last year at this time. Present subscribers have, however, through Saturday to indicate their intentions of retaining their seats for 1941-42.

Meanwhile, by telegram, letter and personal calls conductors are submitting suggestions and outlines for Centennial programs. Before the programs of the conductors can be set, they must be compared and checked to avoid unnecessary duplication of works or over-emphasis of one school or type of music. As previously announced, each of the nine conductors will do one or more American works during their period on the podium.

Various major works, however, have been definitely scheduled. With the assistance of the Westminster Choir, John Barbirolli will perform at Eastertime excerpts from Act 1 of "Parsifal", in a concert version of his own arrangement. Bruno Walter will use this chorus for three special works: the Brahms Rhapsody and the "Song of Fate", and the Mozart Requiem. The latter is being played in commemoration of the 150th anniversary of Mozart's death. Mr. Walter also plans to include the Mahler Fifth and the Bruckner Seventh Symphonies on his programs.

Mr. Barbirolli will do a small Tchaikovsky festival, featuring one or two of the symphonies and the Piano Concerto with Reginald Stewart as soloist and the Violin Concerto with Mishel Piastro as soloist.

In commemoration of the 75th anniversary of the birth of Ferruccio Busoni, Dimitri Mitropoulos will conduct a Busoni Memorial Concert on December 28. Mr. Mitropoulos, who studied composition with Busoni in Berlin when he was a young man, will enlist for this program the services of Egon Petri and Joseph Szigeti, the former to play the Piano Concerto (omitting the choral finale) and the latter to play the Violin Concerto. Petri was a pianoet pupil of Busoni's. Szigeti, thoughbt not a pupil of the composer's, has a been his ardent disciple. The Violin d Concerto, written in 1897, languished buntil Szigeti revived interest in the el work through performances in Berlin, London, and Paris in 1912 and 1913. He not only introduced the concerto in various European capitals but in Australia and Japan. On first coming to this country he played it with the Friends of Music under Arthur Bodanzky.

Mr. Mitropoulos, with Sergei Rachmaninoff as soloist, will also do an all-Rachmaninoff program, including the composer's Third Symphony. His programs include Strauss' Alpine Symphony, the Mahler Ninth, and his own arrangement of Purcell's Prelude and Death of Dido from "Dido and Aeneas".

Serge Koussevitsky's basic Philharmonic-Symphony programs include two standard symphonies, the Tchaikovsky Fourth and the Beethoven "Pastoral", as well as the Shostakoich Fifth.

March 17, 1942.

Mrs. Leland A. Fleming, retiring president, announced contracts for the concerts at the club's annual luncheon Friday in the McCurdy Rose Room.

Previous announcement had been made that the San Carlo Opera Company will open the season Monday, Oct. 27 in "Rigoletto" and of the Indianapolis Symphony Orchestra's return engagement Jan. 12.

As a bonus, National Broadcasting Company, through whom bookings were made, will send Hertha Glaz, Viennese contralto, to appear with Mr. Szigeti. Her engagements for the coming season include appearances with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the NBC Symphony Orchestra conducted by Arturo Toscanini.

After reviewing the year's activities Mrs. Fleming turned over the

This Clipping From
TUCSON, ARIZ.
STAR
MAY 11 1941

Serge Koussevitzky offered a novel solution for the problem of getting an audience actually to enjoy and understand a new composition at its first performance. During a recent concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra he played Samuel Barber's "Essay" twice over. The second performance was not given as an encore but was listed on the program directly below the first.

This Clipping From
ANN ARBOR, MICH.
NEWS
MAY 8 - 1941

Piatigorsky Back In City Where He Married In '37

Ann Arbor probably holds more treasured memories for Gregor Piatigorsky than any other city in the United States, for it was in this city, in 1937, that the famous 'cellist was married to Jacqueline de Rothschild, a member of the de Rothschild family of the French nobility.

Appearing tonight in Hill Auditorium in the second concert in the Forty-Eighth May Festival series, Piatigorsky will be making his fourth performance before an Ann Arbor audience. Over a 10-year period on the American concert stage, Piatigorsky has been acclaimed the greatest violoncellist in the world today.

Performed By Payne

The details of Piatigorsky's marriage here are more interesting because they concern local people, Dr. and Mrs. Charles A. Sink, and Justice Jay H. Payne, who performed the marriage ceremony at the Sink home. The couple informed Dr. and Mrs. Sink of their intentions during an intermission of a Monday night concert and they were married the following day.

Piatigorsky's whole life makes an interesting biography. Born in the Russian Ukraine in 1903, he was wielding an instrument almost bigger than himself at age six in such manner that he astounded music lovers. When his father died before he had attained his tenth birthday, tiny Gregor became the sole supporter of his mother, as well as of his sisters and brothers. The next few years found him attending school as usual, playing at the movie in the evenings, and practising in whatever spare time he could find.

Gregor Piatigorsky

Scarcely 15 years old, Piatigorsky was engaged as first 'cellist by the Imperial Opera at Moscow. The revolution ended all this, however, and during the early days of Bolshevism Piatigorsky played in icy, unheated halls, clad in a big worn fur coat.

Robbed Of Clothing

Smugglers finally brought Piatigorsky out of Russia in 1921, but not until they had robbed him of his last ruble and most of his clothing. Warsaw befriended him, but Berlin wasn't as kind. Germany was in the throes of the worst money inflation known in history, and odd jobs in coffee houses and motion picture houses were his lot, until Artur Schnabel, the eminent pianist, heard of him, and hence the turning point in his life.

Piatigorsky made his first American tour at the age of 26. In the 10 years since that first appearance he has made 104 appearances as soloist with American orchestras. Serge Koussevitzky, the conductor of the Boston Symphony, hails him as "the greatest 'cellist of our day," which is endorsement enough.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
LA PORTE, IND.
HERALD-ARGUS
MAY 9 - 1941

One Moment, Please!

We have a nice big, bright calendar all decked out with the Thursdays circled in red ink that we're going to present to a prominent member of the LaPorte Kiwanis club who on more than one occasion has missed the weekly luncheon gathering of the club at the Hotel Rumely because he just plumb forgot what day it was.

It happen again yesterday. One of our operatives reports that this individual was eating his luncheon at the American restaurant and had just about half finished his meal when he gulped and said:

"Gosh, it's Kiwanis Day again!"

Well, it was too late to go then, so he finished luncheon and for all we know he attended the program afterpiece of the Kiwanis meeting.

You'd like to know who it was?

All right, it was . . . .

second thought, perhaps we shouldn't tell, because doubtless there are other Kiwanians who have the same malady, Thursday-forgetfulness, and this story may serve to prod them into attending.

Mr. Kiwanis Secretary, let us know if attendance at future meetings improves any, will you?

Plans are being made for the construction of a large summer music hall in the Pocono Mountains, near Skytop, Pa., where a series of concerts to be known as the Pocono Music Festival, will be held.

Under present plans, the concerts will be given by the Philadelphia orchestra under Eugene Ormandy which many LaPorte music lovers heard at Notre Dame last week. The site of the proposed auditorium is on a main highway between New York and Philadelphia. Mrs. Benjamin F. Maschal, chairman of the festival, said the concerts will be held late in August so as not to conflict with the series at Philadelphia's Robin Hood Dell or the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Stockbridge, Mass., where summer concerts are given by the Boston Symphony orchestra under Dr. Serge Koussevitzsky.

Four members of the first violin section of the Philadelphia orchestra will share the post of concertmaster of the Robin Hood Dell orchestra this summer.

Eugene Ormandy, conductor of the Philadelphia orchestra, said he plans to have the four violinists rotate in the post, with the hope that next year he may be able to select one of them as permanent Dell concertmaster.

—FALSTAFF.

This Clipping From PHILADELPHIA, PA.
BULLETIN
MAY 10 1941

The Forum Lists '41-42 Events

THE Philadelphia Forum has announced its schedule of events of the season of 1941-42.

The musical side of the schedule will include recitals by Helen Traubel, Rudolf Serkin, Robert Weede, Zino Francescatti, Alexander Borowsky, the duo-pianists, Whittemore and Lowe, and a concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

There will also be dance recitals by the Littlefield Ballet and by Carmen Amaya and her company. Salvatore Baccaloni, the Italian bassobuffo, will appear with a supporting company in a program of scenes from "Don Pasquale," "Falstaff," "L'Elisir d'Amore" and "Boris Godounov."

On the lecture schedule are Alexander Woollcott, Arthur Train, Alfred Noyes, Elsa Maxwell, William Lyon Phelps, Louis J. Alber, Captain John D. Craig, Burton Holmes, Lawrence Thaw, Julian Bryan and Major James C. Sawders.

Theatrical events will include the appearance of Fredric March and Florence Eldridge in Sophie Treadwell's "Hope for a Harvest." Two other plays will be announced later.

The Forum announces that due to the unsettled times several dates are being held open so that "we may have authoritative interpretations of what is happening as it happens rather than merely a guess at the future."

THIS CLIPPING FROM
BROOKLYN, N. Y.
CITIZEN
MAY 10 1941

Music Critic Lawrence To Be Guest Conductor At Museum Tomorrow

Alice Howland, Mezzo-Soprano, Will Be Soloist — Band Concert Offered

Robert Lawrence, music critic, is to be guest-conductor of the WPA New York City Symphony Orchestra in an all-Berlioz program, with Alice Howland as mezzo-soprano soloist, at 1:30 p. m. tomorrow in the Sculpture Court of Brooklyn Museum. Mr. Lawrence, who studied conducting with Philip James and Albert Stoessel at the Juilliard School of Music, is now a critic for the "Herald-Tribune." In addition he is radio co-ordinator of the Metropolitan Opera Guild, author of eight books on opera, co-author of the "Metropolitan Opera Guide" and is now writing "A Guide to the Symphony" for the Boston Symphony Association. Although he has conducted elseewhere, this will be his public debut in New York.

The program is composed of the "Fantastic" Symphony, excerpts from "The Damnation of Faust" and Overture to "Benventuto Cellini." Miss Howland, who has appeared in opera and on radio programs, will be heard in "The Damnation of Faust" number, singing two Marguerite arias—"Le Roi de Thule" and 'D'Amour l'ardente flamme."

The matinee is to be followed as usual by a concert by the New York City Symphonic Band, directed by Harwood Simmons, at 4 p. m.

This Clipping From
HACKENSACK, N. J.
BERGEN-RECORD
MAY 7 - 1941

Music New

By ROGER

Thomas N. Monroe conduct
Rutherford Choral Society last
The 42-member mixed chorus, assisted by Gari Shelton, pianist.
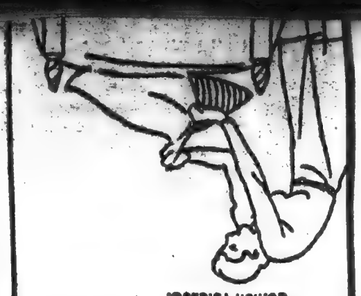
The program was as follows:

I

I Am Music ..... Spro
Edna Eynon, soloist
Sweet Memory ..... Fibi
And the Glory of the Lord ..... Hand
Society
Pastorale and Capriccio ..... Scarlat
Variations in F Minor ..... Hayd
Mr. Shelton
Venetian Love Song ..... Nevi
The Star ..... Roger
The Armorer's Song (Robin Hood) ..... DeKove
Society

II

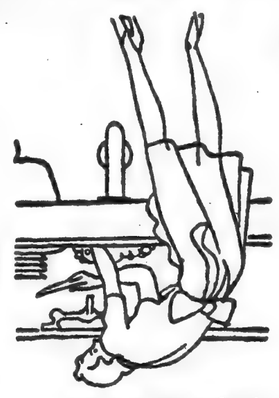
Come to the Wood ..... Chopin-Soder
Echoing Voice (Patience) ..... Gilbert & Sullivan



WRONG

Knees stiff, one shoulder high, back and shoulders hunched, abdomen relaxed.

MAKING



One foot poised outward at an angle, with weight thrown on other foot; shoulders and back hunched; abdomen relaxed; one hip higher than the other.

In The Home

Shredded pineapple
Watercress salad
Buttered peas
Potatoes with parsley butter
Frogs' legs a la Poulette

Quick Meal

Unless you can go frog hunting yourself, your food budget will probably not allow you to have frogs' legs very often, but when you buy them ready cooked for special occasions, you will find that they are very easy and quick to prepare.

From down in Texas comes a recipe sent to me by Gen. Casper Conrad, who delights in the Jumbo frogs which Texas provides. He says that he allows two pairs for each person. If you are using the sauce with the New York State product, you will need at least six pairs for each person.

Your food budget will probably not allow you to have frogs' legs very often, but when you buy them ready cooked for special occasions, you will find that they are very easy and quick to prepare.

Butter or an enriched margarine should be used daily.

Sweets should be used in moderation. There should be enough for palatability, but not enough to spoil the appetite for other foods. Very sweet desserts, syrups, honey, jellies, jams, sugars and candies are all sweets.

It is a good health rule to make a habit of drinking plenty of water, particularly in the summer. When white bread—they do not count as vegetables.

eaten with the fingers it may be really to be enjoyed.

This Clipping From
EVANSVILLE, IND.
PRESS
MAY 9 - 1941

Thomas and Szigeti On 1941-42 Concert Program

John Charles Thomas, American baritone, and Joseph Szigeti, leading contemporary violinist, will be additional artists on the Evansville Musicians' Club's 1941-42 concert series.

Mr. Thomas will sing Tuesday, Nov. 11, and Mr. Szigeti will play March 17, 1942.

Mrs. Leland A. Fleming, retiring president, announced contracts for the concerts at the club's annual luncheon Friday in the McCurdy Rose Room.

Previous announcement had been made that the San Carlo Opera Company will open the season Monday, Oct. 27 in "Rigoletto" and of the Indianapolis Symphony Orchestra's return engagement Jan. 12.

As a bonus, National Broadcasting Company, through whom bookings were made, will send Hertha Glaz, Viennese contralto, to appear with Mr. Szigeti. Her engagements for the coming season include appearances with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the NBC Symphony Orchestra conducted by Arturo Toscanini.

After reviewing the year's activities Mrs. Fleming turned over the gavel to Mrs. Richard Rosencranz, incoming president.

Farrell Scott, tenor, and James Hosmer, flutist, of Arthur Jordan Conservatory of Music faculty, presented a program accompanied by Miss Imogene Pierson.

Incidental music was furnished by Miss Iris Buck, Miss Mona Moye and Edgar Kirsch.

This Clipping From
TUCSON, ARIZ.
STAR
MAY 11 1941

Serge Koussevitzky offered a novel solution for the problem of getting an audience actually to enjoy and understand a new composition at its first performance. During a recent concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra he played Samuel Barber's "Essay" twice over. The second performance was not given as an encore but was listed on the program directly below the first.

TORONTO, CANADA
GLOBE & MAIL
5/10/41

Song plugging is now a common term, but plugging by a noted orchestra is something again. Yet Serge Koussevitzky recently not only repeated a number twice in a period of two weeks, but also played one number twice on the same program. The number was Samuel Barber's "Essay."

* * *

This Clipping From
ANN ARBOR, MICH.
NEWS
MAY 8 - 1941

Piatigorsky Back In City Where He Married In '37

Ann Arbor probably holds more treasured memories for Gregor Piatigorsky than any other city in the United States, for it was in this city, in 1937, that the famous 'cellist was married to Jacqueline de Rothschild, a member of the de Rothschild family of the French nobility.

Appearing tonight in Hill Auditorium in the second concert in the Forty-Eighth May Festival series, Piatigorsky will be making his fourth performance before an Ann Arbor audience. Over a 10-year period on the American concert stage, Piatigorsky has been acclaimed the greatest violoncellist in the world today.

Performed By Payne

The details of Piatigorsky's marriage here are more interesting because they concern local people, Dr. and Mrs. Charles A. Sink, and Justice Jay H. Payne, who performed the marriage ceremony at the Sink home. The couple informed Dr. and Mrs. Sink of their intentions during an intermission of a Monday night concert and they were married the following day.

Piatigorsky's whole life makes an interesting biography. Born in the Russian Ukraine in 1903, he was wielding an instrument almost bigger than himself at age six in such manner that he astounded music lovers. When his father died before he had attained his tenth birthday, tiny Gregor became the sole supporter of his mother, as well as of his sisters and brothers. The next few years found him attending school as usual, playing at the movie in the evenings, and practising in whatever spare time he could find.

Gregor Piatigorsky

Scarcely 15 years old, Piatigorsky was engaged as first 'cellist by the Imperial Opera at Moscow. The revolution ended all this, however, and during the early days of Bolshevism Piatigorsky played in icy, unheated halls, clad in a big worn fur coat.

Robbed Of Clothing

Smugglers finally brought Piatigorsky out of Russia in 1921, but not until they had robbed him of his last ruble and most of his clothing. Warsaw befriended him, but Berlin wasn't as kind. Germany was in the throes of the worst money inflation known in history, and odd jobs in coffee houses and motion picture houses were his lot, until Artur Schnabel, the eminent pianist, heard of him, and hence the turning point in his life.

Piatigorsky made his first American tour at the age of 26. In the 10 years since that first appearance he has made 104 appearances as soloist with American orchestras. Serge Koussevitzky, the conductor of the Boston Symphony, hails him as "the greatest 'cellist of our day," which is endorsement enough.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
LA PORTE, IND.
HERALD-ARGUS
MAY 9 - 1941

One Moment, Please!

We have a nice big, bright calendar all decked out with the Thursdays circled in red ink that we're going to present to a prominent member of the LaPorte Kiwanis club who on more than one occasion has missed the weekly luncheon gathering of the club at the Hotel Rumely because he just plumb forgot what day it was.

It happen again yesterday. One of our operatives reports that this individual was eating his luncheon at the American restaurant and had just about half finished his meal when he gulped and said:

"Gosh, it's Kiwanis Day again!"

Well, it was too late to go then, so he finished luncheon and for all we know he attended the program afterpiece of the Kiwanis meeting.

You'd like to know who it was?

All right, it was . . . .

second thought, perhaps we shouldn't tell, because doubtless there are other Kiwanians who have the same malady, Thursday-forgetfulness, and this story may serve to prod them into attending.

Mr. Kiwanis Secretary, let us know if attendance at future meetings improves any, will you?

Plans are being made for the construction of a large summer music hall in the Pocono Mountains, near Skytop, Pa., where a series of concerts to be known as the Pocono Music Festival, will be held.

Under present plans, the concerts will be given by the Philadelphia orchestra under Eugene Ormandy which many LaPorte music lovers heard at Notre Dame last week. The site of the proposed auditorium is on a main highway between New York and Philadelphia. Mrs. Benjamin F. Maschal, chairman of the festival, said the concerts will be held late in August so as not to conflict with the series at Philadelphia's Robin Hood Dell or the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Stockbridge, Mass., where summer concerts are given by the Boston Symphony orchestra under Dr. Serge Koussevitzsky.

Four members of the first violin section of the Philadelphia orchestra will share the post of concertmaster of the Robin Hood Dell orchestra this summer.

Eugene Ormandy, conductor of the Philadelphia orchestra, said he plans to have the four violinists rotate in the post, with the hope that next year he may be able to select one of them as permanent Dell concertmaster.

—FALSTAFF.

This Clipping From PHILADELPHIA, PA.
BULLETIN
MAY 10 1941

The Forum Lists '41-42 Events

THE Philadelphia Forum has announced its schedule of events of the season of 1941-42.

The musical side of the schedule will include recitals by Helen Traubel, Rudolf Serkin, Robert Weede, Zino Francescatti, Alexander Borowsky, the duo-pianists, Whittemore and Lowe, and a concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

There will also be dance recitals by the Littlefield Ballet and by Carmen Amaya and her company. Salvatore Baccaloni, the Italian basso-buffo, will appear with a supporting company in a program of scenes from "Don Pasquale," "Falstaff," "L'Elisir d'Amore" and "Boris Godounov."

On the lecture schedule are Alexander Woollcott, Arthur Train, Alfred Noyes, Elsa Maxwell, William Lyon Phelps, Louis J. Alber, Captain John D. Craig, Burton Holmes, Lawrence Thaw, Julian Bryan and Major James C. Sawders.

Theatrical events will include the appearance of Fredric March and Florence Eldridge in Sophie Treadwell's "Hope for a Harvest." Two other plays will be announced later.

The Forum announces that due to the unsettled times several dates are being held open so that "we may have authoritative interpretations of what is happening as it happens rather than merely a guess at the future."

THIS CLIPPING FROM
BROOKLYN, N. Y.
CITIZEN
MAY 10 1941

Music Critic Lawrence To Be Guest Conductor At Museum Tomorrow

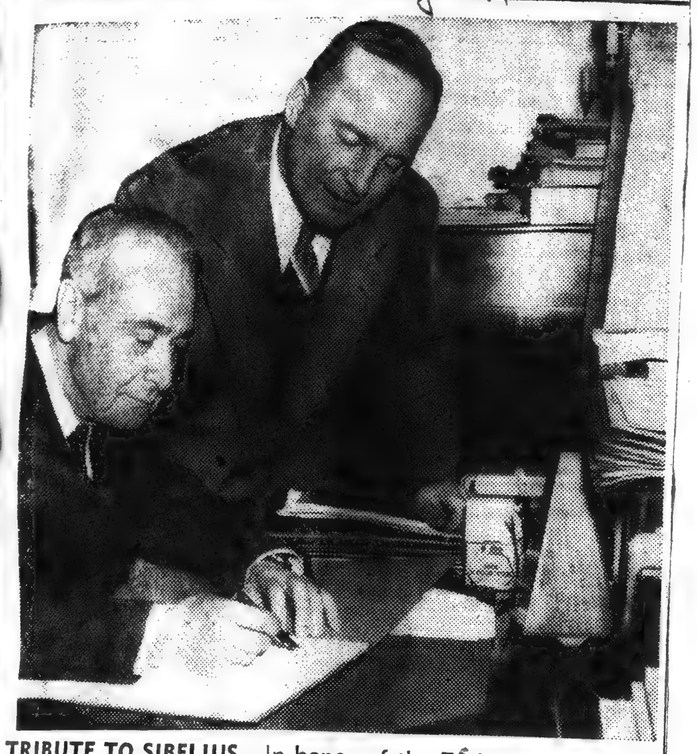
Alice Howland, Mezzo-Soprano, Will Be Soloist — Band Concert Offered

Robert Lawrence, music critic, is to be guest-conductor of the WPA New York City Symphony Orchestra in an all-Berlioz program, with Alice Howland as mezzo-soprano soloist, at 1:30 p. m. tomorrow in the Sculpture Court of Brooklyn Museum. Mr. Lawrence, who studied conducting with Philip James and Albert Stoessel at the Juilliard School of Music, is now a critic for the "Herald-Tribune." In addition he is radio co-ordinator of the Metropolitan Opera Guild, author of eight books on opera, co-author of the "Metropolitan Opera Guide" and is now writing "A Guide to the Symphony" for the Boston Symphony Association. Although he has conducted elseewhere, this will be his public debut in New York.

The program is composed of the "Fantastic" Symphony, excerpts from "The Damnation of Faust" and Overture to "Benventuto Cellini." Miss Howland, who has appeared in opera and on radio programs, will be heard in "The Damnation of Faust" number, singing two Marguerite arias—"Le Roi de Thule" and 'D'Amour l'ardente flamme."

The matinee is to be followed as usual by a concert by the New York City Symphonic Band, directed by Harwood Simmons, at 4 p. m.

Christian Science Monitor May 9, 1941



TRIBUTE TO SIBELIUS—In honor of the 70th anniversary of the birth of the Finnish composer, Jean Sibelius, a collection of autographs of his admirers in the United States is being assembled for presentation on his birthday in December. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is shown as he completed his signature. John B. Mattson of Winthrop, chairman of the Sibelius Anniversary Committee, and Finnish vice-consul in New England, looks on.

Musical Signature

Christian Science Monitor MAY 10, 1941

By a Staff Photographer

Conductor Honors Composer

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra (left), signs an American greeting to Jan Sibelius, in commemoration of the 75th anniversary of the famous Finnish composer. At the right is John B. Mattson of Winthrop, Vice-Consul of Finland in New England. A large handsomely-bound volume containing signatures of admirers in the United States of Dr. Sibelius is to be presented to him in Finland in conjunction with the Commemoration Festival to be held in his honor this summer.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
MAY 14 1941

Dr. and Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky have arrived at their summer home in Lenox for the season. Dr. Koussevitzky will attend the Bach festival in Bethlehem, Pa., the end of this week and later he and Mrs. Koussevitzky will visit for a short time in Saratoga Springs, N. Y.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
MAY 10 1941

139

Philharmonic-Symphony Admits 33 Compositions to Repertory

Several New Items Make Agreeable Impressions. Plans for Centennial Season Progressing Rapidly

By ROBERT BAGAR.

A review of the Philharmonic-Symphony Society's programs for the season just closed reveals that no fewer than 33 compositions were admitted to its repertory. There is ample comfort in the thought that the society has not been lax in one of its major duties toward the public.

Robert Bagar.

The purposes of a symphonic body are manifold. Essentially, it must provide enjoyment, and allied with that are aesthetic and cultural aims, the preaching of the musical gospel, the keeping alive of a great heritage. These are sacred trusts, as intimately connected with concert-giving as the sounding of notes.

Among the pieces there were strictly new, unfamiliar or edited familiar ones. Of the new items, several have made more than ordinary impressions, the Britten Sinfonia da Requiem and the Villa-Lobos Descobrimento do Brazil being eminently worthy of an important orchestra's repertory.

* * *

Other Agreeable Creations.

Other creations that proved agreeable were the Bloch Evocations, the Gould Foster Gallery, the Suite from Casella's La Donna Serpente and the Kurthy Overture. And one or two numbers, like the Sibelius Incidental Music to Pelleas and Melisande and the Bizet C Major Symphony, have made welcome, if belated entry into the society's roster of playables.

It would be pointless to go down the rest of the list, mentioning deficiencies here, validities there. Whatever judgment has been passed on them will stand up or fall down, depending on the prophetic or non-prophetic vision of its utterers.

New ideas arise constantly and they circulate about the world. Wherever there is fertile soil they take root and grow into new lines of thought, new experiments, new approaches to old problems. They reach out to every form of living activity, and there are sensitive beings who feel these things, who quicken to them, who heed the urgent call to make them captive and to give them further propagation and expression.

Thus we have new composers and new musics and orchestras like our own Philharmonic-Symphony to assist in their exploitation. The Mozarts, the Beethovens, the Brahmses, the Wagners were of the breed of sensitive beings. There may be many such now, for all we know. They must be given voice, for none can tell whether a work is great at least until it is played. Its greatness may not be recognized at once, but this would be no fault of a producing company. Suffice it that the work has been brought to light. Its future will be determined by the mysterious forces that comprise the infallible tribunal of time.

If only for the gracious acceptance of these principles, the society and its conductor, John Barbirolli, a motivating spirit in the devising of programs, deserve the grateful thanks of all music lovers. There have been mistakes, of course, and there have been some shoddy performances, whether of new or old material. Such things are to be expected. But there can be only praise for the sincerity of purpose in back of all the activity.

* * *

Plans for Centennial Season.

Meanwhile, the Philharmonic-Symphony's plans for its centennial season are making remarkable progress. Already several major works have been scheduled. Five of the nine conductors engaged have got past the thinking stage in respect to programs.

Mr. Barbirolli will conduct at Eastertime his own concert arrangement of excerpts from the first act of Parsifal, with the Westminster Choir to take a prominent part in the performance. He will also initiate a "small Tschaikowsky festival," offering one or two of the symphonies, the Piano Concerto, with Reginald Stewart, and the Violin Concerto, with Mishel Piastro.

Bruno Walter will have the services of the Westminster group in the reading of the Brahms Rhapsody and the Song of Fate, as well as the Mozart Requiem, the last-named in commemoration of the 150th anniversary of Mozart's death. The Mahler Fifth and the Bruckner Seventh are also in Mr. Walter's plans.

* * *

Busoni Memorial Concert.

The 75th anniversary of Ferrucio Busoni's birth is to be honored with a Busoni Memorial Concert on December 28, with the Piano Concerto to be played by Egon Petri and the Violin Concerto by Joseph Szigeti. Dimitri Mitropolous will be the conductor. An all-Rachmaninoff program, with Sergei Rachmaninoff as soloist, is also contemplated by Mr. Mitropolous. And further program ideas of Mr. Mitropolous include the Strauss Alpine Symphony, the Mahler Ninth and his own arrangement of the Prelude and Death of Dido from Purcell's Dido and Aeneas.

So far, Serge Koussevitzky has listed for performance the Tschaikowsky Fourth and the Beethoven Pastoral symphonies, and Leopold Stokowski, who appears in the season's first two weeks, will conduct the Fifth and Seventh symphonies of Beethoven, as well as his own orchestration of Moussorgsky's Pictures at an Exhibition.

This Clipping From BUFFALO, N.Y.
NEWS
MAY 10 1941

...ing together not very many moons. I a...

Echo Expert Finds Hall One of Best in Country

WHETHER he knew it or not, when Koussevitzky said of the new Kleinhans Music Hall "I have been in Europe, in South America, and all over North America and never have I found a music hall so perfect acoustically," he was making a statement of fact borne out by scientific analysis.

"It ranks with the best in the country and has the most desirable acoustical features of design af any hall of similar type in the country." This verbal report was made today by Charles G. Potwin, acoustical consultant of the Electrical Research Products Inc. of New York. He was adviser on acoustics in the architecture of the new building.

Here to present a preliminary report to Mrs. W. E. Corey, director, the sound expert and echo-killer said: "From a seat in the rear of the balcony, a patron can hear sound as one on the stage does."

The hall is so sound-perfect because all echoes have been broken down into "an even distribution of reverberations.

"Every surface in the hall is shaped to carry the maximum amount of sound to the seats, and distribute it over the audience area," he pointed out. And he should know. He is to echoes what the Pied Piper was to the fabled rats. Instead of piping the echoes away, however, he makes "little ones out of big ones" by architectual design.

The acoustical design in Kleinhans represents accumulated knowledge of the past 20 years, he said.

The actual test of the hall was made by a recorder which measures the "decay" of sound, or the manner in which sound dies away to inaudibility after its cessation, Mr. Potwin explained.

Technically speaking the Kleinhans hall has "achieved a logarithmic decay of sound at all frequencies, which means it is among the finest in the country."

Mrs. Corey said Nelson Eddy, who appeared here last month, told her he had never sung in a better place.

This Clipping From PITTSBURGH, PA.
PRESS
MAY 11 1941

* * *

Answers to correspondents: S. R.—A small four-stringed guitar found in the island of Madeira and Azores Islands is used by the Portuguese. G. M.—Serge Alexandrovitch Koussevitzky is the full name of the noted Boston Symphony leader. He was born at Tver, Russia, June 30, 1874, was educated at Moscow's Philharmonic Music School and later became a bass player in the Imperial Orchestra. Cultivating the double bass as a solo instrument he became famous throughout Europe in recitals played on this unwieldly instrument. He formed his own orchestra and toured Russian cities as its conductor. He also headed an organization that published Russian music. Dr. Koussevitzky has been leading the Boston Symphony Orchestra since 1924. C. R.—A full orchestral score is a score in which all the parts are written on separate staffs. Often two or more instruments of a kind are on one staff. T. E.—The clarinet was invented in 1690. Development of the modern trombone stems from 1593.

THIS CLIPPING FROM ESCANABA, MICH.
PRESS
MAY 15 1941

Conductor Hails Citizenship

Boston (UP)—Serge Koussevitzky, Russian-born conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, celebrated his becoming a United States citizen by presenting a special program of American music.

This Clipping From
BROOKLYN, N.Y.
EAGLE
MAY 11 1941

Conductors Formulate Plans For Philharmonic Centennial

While the offices of the Philharmonic-Symphony Society are humming these days with centennial activities, over $15,000 worth of new orders have already been placed for next season and inquiries pour in daily. By telegram, letter and personal calls, conductors are submitting suggestions and outlines for centennial programs. Various major works, however, have been definitely scheduled.

With the assistance of the Westminster Choir, John Barbirolli will perform at Eastertime excerpts from Act I of "Parsifal," in a concert version of his own arrangement. Bruno Walter will use this chorus for three special works: the Brahms Rhapsody and the "Song of Fate," and the Mozart Requiem. The latter is being played in commemoration of the 150th anniversary of Mozart's death. Mr. Walter also plans to include the Mahler Fifth and the Bruckner Seventh Symphonies on his programs. Mr. Barbirolli will do a "small Tchaikovsky festival," featuring one or two of the symphonies and the Piano Concerto with Reginald Stewart as soloist and the Violin Concerto with Mishel Piastro as soloist.

In commemoration of the 75th anniversary of the birth of Ferruccio Busoni, Dimitri Mitropoulos will conduct a Busoni Memorial Concert on Dec. 28. Mr. Mitropoulos, who studied composition with Busoni in Berlin when he was a young man, will enlist for this program the services of Egon Petri and Joseph Szigeti, the former to play the Piano Concerto (omitting the choral finale) and the latter to play the Violin Concerto. Petri was a piano pupil of Busoni's.

Mr. Mitropoulos, with Sergei Rachmaninoff as soloist, will also do an all-Rachmaninoff program, including the composer's Third Symphony. His programs include Strauss' Alpine Symphony, the Mahler Ninth, and his own arrangement of Purcell's Prelude and Death of Dido from "Dido and Aeneas."

Serge Koussevitzky's basic Philharmonic-Symphony programs include two standard symphonies, the Tchaikovsky Fourth and the Beethoven "Pastoral," as well as the Shostakovitch Fifth.

Leopold Stokowski, who conducts the first two weeks of the symphony, will do both the Fifth and the Seventh Symphonies of Beethoven as well as his own orchestration of Moussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition."

This Clipping From
MAMARONECK, N.Y.
TIMES
MAY 13 1941

Fritz Kramer, noted Austrian pianist, will play in an informal recital at the installation of officers by the Frederick E. Bellows Parent Teachers Association, tomorrow evening, in the high school auditorium.

Mr. Kramer, who at present is a guest of Eric Zeisl on Stuart Avenue, has just completed a series of concerts in the New England States. He first arrived in the United States in the Fall of 1939 from London on a seven weeks' contract tour through Canada, California and Western States, then came back to New York for a series of broadcasts with N. B. C. on the Magic Key program. He returned to London to complete services of his own piano arrangements for the BBC.

His concert appearances have included Boston Symphony Hall where Jerry Marlowe of NBC Chicago directed. Later he contracted Baron Hubert von Pantz, Austrian nobleman-hotel owner and was engaged to play at his Franconia Lodge in New Hampshire.

THIS CLIPPING FROM TROY, OHIO
NEWS
MAY 15 1941

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston symphony, generally knows what to expect when he raises his baton at rehearsal. But he was surprised recently, for the orchestra rose and played the Star Spangled Banner. Dr. Koussevitzky, a native of Russia, his wife and secretary have just become American citizens.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
MAY 11 1941

Arthur M. Abell, who has known Richard Strauss for more than fifty years, has received the following letter from the 76-year-old German composer. It is dated Garmisch, Feb. 25, 1941:

"I thank you for your friendly letter and the good news from the U. S. A. Please express for me my warmest thanks and greetings to Messrs. Koussevitzky, Barbirolli and my old friend, Frederick Stock, of whose concerts in Chicago I still love to think.

"I am well. I have finished the score of a new opera and have completed the piano sketch of a second one. I recently heard model performances of my operas, 'The Egyptian Helen,' 'The Woman Without a Shadow' and 'Arabella,' under Clemens Krauss at Munich. Lately, I have instrumentated six Brentano-Lieder, Op. 68. These have just been published by Fuerstner of Berlin. Mme. Rose Pauly also wrote me about her successes with 'Salome' and 'Elektra.'"

Boston Symphony Plays Sunday at Shell Exercises

Mayor Tobin announced yesterday that the "I Am An American Day" exercises, to be held at 2:30 p. m. Sunday at the Hatch Memorial Shell, Charles River Esplanade, will be featured by the full Boston Symphony Orchestra, led by Dr. Serge Koussevitsky who was recently made a citizen.

The program also will include a patriotic pageant by 60 professional actors, massing of colors by over 400 organizations and songs by 30 choral groups.

Stating that it will be the outstanding event of its kind in the country on that day, Mayor Tobin invites all to take part "so that we may all rededicate ourselves to the principles and the basic high ideal of American citizenship."

The ceremonies are being sponsored by the Mayor's Bureau of Americanization and the United States Departments of Justice, Immigration and Naturalization.

The Mayor also announced that Air Corps Cadet Week in Boston will open the same day. It is a campaign, he said, to stimulate interest in the Air Corps where men will be presented the opportunity to earn commissions.

Boston Herald May 12, 1941

MUSIC

The Pops

The first of the Sunday Pop concerts was given last night in Symphony Hall.. Arthur Fiedler conducted the orchestra of Boston Symphony players; and the soloist was Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist. The program was as follows:

Prelude to "Carmen" ..... Bizet
Largo from the New World Symphony ..... Dvorak
Latin-American Symphonette ..... Morton Gould
Piano Concerto No .2 in D minor ..... MacDowell
Bolero ..... Ravel
Invitation to the Dance ..... Weber-Berlioz
Cielito Lindo ..... Bodge
Strike up the Band ..... Gershwin

The Sunday Pops aim at being a bit more serious than the regular spring evenings in Symphony Hall, and they thus do not attempt to combat the hot weather of June. The first of these was given last night, but it could not be said to have been a strain on the intelligence to listen to it, for the program was shrewdly designed and certainly popular.

One new work—new at any rate, we suppose, to Boston—was presented. This was Morton Gould's Latin-American Symphontete. The work is in four movements based on popular dance rhythms, namely the Rhumba, the Tango, the Guaracho and the Conga. Mr. Gould is an able enough composer to get his effect in all of these; but the Tango was too prolonged and the Conga hardly needed the forces of a full symphony orchestra. A good noisy jazz band would have served in this latter instance equally well.

There was, however, a real talent for orchestration in the Rhumba and the Guaracho Here Mr. Gould exploited the combination of dance rhythm and sophisticated instrumentation cleverly. Here, at least, was a contemporary dance suite that did not lack for vitality.

After the first intermission came the most rewarding part of the program. Say what you will about the MacDowell Concerto, it is, in proper hands, a highly effective vehicle. It has its sentimental and slightly old-fashioned side, but these do not bother one much in a really good performance. Mr. Sanroma's is much more than that. He brings such intensity, such prodigious technical command to the music that he revitalizes it. It is an astonishing achievement, and in it, though he be the moving spirit, he is most ably abetted by the orchestra under Mr. Fiedler's guidance. Such an interpretation of an American classic is th egreatest credit to the high standard of the Pops, and it quite rightly won an ovation last night.

A. W. W.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TELEGRAPH
MAY 16 1941

Philharmonic Shapes Slate

N.Y. Symphony Program Has 9 Conductors to Direct American Works.

The New York Philharmonic Symphony, in shaping its programs for next season, the orchestra's 100th birthday, announces that each of the nine distinguished conductors engaged for the centennial season will direct one or more American works.

The programs of the conductors are being compared and checked to avoid unnecessary duplication of works or over-emphasis on one type of music. Various major works, however, have been scheduled.

With the assistance of the Westminster Choir, John Barbirolli will perform at Eastertime excerpts from Act I of "Parsifal," in a concert version of his own arrangement. Bruno Walter will use the same chorus for three special works: the Brahms Rhapsody and the "Song of Fate" and the Mozart Requiem, the latter in commemoration of the 150th anniversary of Mozart's death. Walter also plans to present the Mahler Fifth and the Bruckner Seventh symphonies.

Barbirolli will do a "small Tchaikovsky festival," featuring one or two of the symphonies and the Piano Concerto with Mishel Piastro as soloist.

In commemoration of the 75th anniversary of the birth of Feruccio Busoni, Dimitri Mitropoulos will conduct a Busoni memorial concert on December 28. Egon Petri, pianist, and Joseph Szegeti, violinist, will be soloists.

Mitropoulos, with Sergei Rachmaninoff as soloist, also will do an all-Rachmaninoff program, including the Third Symphony. His programs include Strauss' Alpine Symphony, the Mahler Ninth and his own arrangement of Purcell's Prelude and Death of Dido, from "Dido and Aeneas."

Serge Koussevitzky's basic Philharmonic-Symphony programs include two standard symphonies, the Tchaikovsky Fourth and the Beethoven "pastoral," as well as the Shostakovich Fifth.

Leopold Stokowski, who conducts the first two weeks of the symphony, will do both the Fifth and Seventh symphonies of Beethoven, and will present the Stokowski orchestration of Moussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition."

Globe MUSIC

SYMPHONY HALL

May 12 The Pops

In keeping with the custom of offering more serious works at the Sunday evening Pops concerts, Arthur Fiedler and Jesus Maria Sanroma joined their respective forces last night in the MacDowell Second Piano Concerto. Elsewhere the Latin-American influence was evidenced by what was probably a first Boston performance of Morton Gould's "Latin-American Symphonette" and, toward the close of the program, the playing of "Cielito Lindo," a Mexican folk song which is very popular in Central America.

Mr. Gould, a young American composer who has exhibited precocity since tender boyhood, lives in New York, where he has been a radio conductor for several years. Since his "Pavane"—a clever version of the old dance in modern idioms—first appeared on the scene both at Pops and through his own radio program, Mr. Gould has composed with considerable originality and lively humor. His "Latin-American Symphonette" is perhaps his extreme in style.

Cuban and Central American dance rhythms and all their studied irregularity are tricked out here in equally sharp harmonies. Yet the dissonances do not seem the least out of character. Of the four movements (Rhumba, Tango, Guaracho and Conga) the first two are the most civilized. It is hardly imaginable that beating feet could keep in metre with the wild Conga.

Mr. Sanroma, with the able assistance of Mr. Fielder and his band, made the sometimes unrewarding MacDowell Concerto sparkle with colors and highlights. Fading romanticism became lyrical and poetic.

Mr. Fielder had chosen a program which included the Prelude to Bizet's "Carmen," the famed Largo movement from Dvorak's "New World" Symphony, Ravel's Bolero, the Berlioz orchestration of "Invitation to the Dance" by Weber and Gershwin's "Strike Up the Band." These were generously interspersed wtih encores.

AMERICAN DAY ON ESPLANADE

Boston Post, May 17, 1941

Symphony Orchestra to Take Part in Exercises

Plans for an elaborate celebration at the Hatch Memorial Shell on the Charles River Esplanade tomorrow afternoon commemorating "I Am An American Day," were completed last night by city officials who predicted that close to 50,000 persons will attend the patriotic ceremonies.

An impressive list of speakers will include Senator David I. Walsh, Governor Saltonstall, Mayor Tobin and John F. Mulcahey, director of immigration and naturalization.

One of the features of the exercises will be the playing of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the leadership of its famous conductor, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, who himself recently became an American citizen and for whom the observance will have a deep significance.

A pageant will depict the highlights of American history. The programme also includes community singing and a massed pledge of allegiance to the Stars and Stripes. The programme will open at 2:30.

CHARLEROI, PA.
MAIL
MAY 15 1941

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony, generally knows what to expect when he raises his baton at rehearsal. But he was surprised recently, for the orchestra rose and played the Star Spangled Banner. Dr. Koussevitzky, a native of Russia, his wife and his secretary have just become American citizens.

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM
MAY 11 1941

Berkshire Festival

THESE FINE Spring days bring plans for the Berkshire Festival for which a forecast of the program for the coming three weekends is given.

Works by the contemporary composers, Sibelius, Vaughan Williams, Barber, Piston, Hindemith, Shostakovitch, Villa Lobos, Copland and Hanson are included in the programs to be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conductor, at the eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood, July 31-Aug. 17.

There will be three Mozart works the second week of the Festival in commemoration of the 150th anniversary of the composer's death. The much discussed Symphony No. 5 by Shostakovitch is included in the first series of concerts. The eminent Brazilian composer, Villa Lobos, will have presented his Chorus No. 10, also in the first series.

Dr. Howard Hanson's Symphony No. 2, "Romantic," will be given the final week. It is of interest to note that Piston, Hindemith, Copland and Hanson are listed either as members of the faculty or lecturers at the Berkshire Music Center, which will be operated for its second year at Tanglewood by the Boston Symphony Orchestra for six weeks, starting the first week in July, ending with the final Festival concert.

Despite troubled conditions abroad and this country's defense program the Festival reports encouraging response for subscriptions for the coming season, the returns being about a month in advance of 1940. About a dozen more boxes have been sold than last year at this date. Music lovers contemplating attendance at the Festival are urged to communicate at once with the Berkshire Hills Conference at the Courthouse in Pittsfield for room accommodations.

May 12

Koussevitzky To Conduct on Patriotic Day

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, fame conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, struck a dramatic note in patriotism today as he offered to conduct the full orchestra as part of the colorful program marking "I Am an American Day" Sunday.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky

"This is my contribution of gratitude in recognition of becoming a citizen," Dr. Koussevitzky said, in announcing the concert. "I feel that I owe this to Boston and to this country."

The celebration, Mayor Tobin declared, will be the outstanding patriotic event in any city in the country in observance of the day. To allow for wider attendance it will be held at the Hatch Memorial shell on the Esplanade and not, as first scheduled, at the Fenway Stadium.

The program is being prepared by hundreds of patriotic, fraternal and civic organizations in cooperation with 60 professional stage performers and radio stars. It will be, the city's Americanization bureau promises, the largest-scale demonstration of patriotism ever held in Boston.

Prominent speakers will include Mayor Tobin, Sen. David I. Walsh and John Mulcahey of the United States Department of Immigration and Naturalization. Frank Flaherty, director of the Bureau of Americanization, will be chairman of the celebration.

16 KOUSSEVITZKY TO CONDUCT ON PATRIOTIC DAY

BOSTON EVENING AMERICAN, FRIDAY, MAY 16, 1941

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, famed conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, struck a dramatic note in patriotism today as he offered to conduct the full orchestra as part of the colorful program marking "I Am An American Day" Sunday.

"This is my contribution of gratitude in recognition of becoming a citizen," Dr. Koussevitzky said, in announcing the concert. "I feel that I owe this to Boston and to this country."

OUTSTANDING PROGRAM

The celebration, Mayor Tobin declared, will be the outstanding patriotic event in any city in the country in observance of the day. To allow for wider attendance, it will be held at the Hatch Memorial shell on the Esplanade and not, as first scheduled, at the Fenway Stadium.

The program is being prepared by hundreds of patriotic, fraternal and civic organizations in co-operation with 60 professional stage performers and radio stars. It will be, the city's Americanization bureau promises, the largest-scale demonstration of patriotism ever held in Boston.

NOVEL SCENES

An instructive and novel scene depicting the making of a new citizen will be one of the features.

Scenes showing the landing of the Pilgrims, Washington crossing the Delaware, the inauguration of President Lincoln, the emancipation of the slaves, the surrender of General Lee to General Grant, and incidents of the Spanish and World Wars will be on the program.

Prominent speakers will include Mayor Tobin, Sen. David I. Walsh and John Mulcahey of the United States Department of Immigration and Naturalization. Frank Flanagan, director of the Bureau of Americanization, will be chairman of the celebration.

EGON PETRI AT POP CONCERT

Famous Dutch Pianist Delights

May 19

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

Last evening's Pop Concert benefited the Holland relief fund and boasted the presence of Egon Petri, who was heard in the B-flat minor Piano Concerto of Tchaikovsky and in solo pieces by Medtner, Prokofieff and Rachmaninoff. To be sure, Mr. Petri was born in Germany, but he is a citizen of The Netherlands. His appearances in Boston, whether with or without orchestra, have been all too few. It is no exaggeration to say that last evening's performance of Tchaikovsky's masterwork was one of the greatest ever heard in Symphony Hall, and a large share of the credit for this notable accomplishment goes to Arthur Fiedler and the Pops orchestra. Mr. Petri's playing of the numbers by the three contemporary Russians, all in relatively lighter vein, was wholly delightful.

Two items on the programme had especial significance, Beethoven's Overture to "Egmont," and H. E. Enthoven's "Music for a Pageant." This last, typical occasional music, was composed for the wedding of the Crown Princess Juliana and Prince Bernhard, and was conducted by the composer. Following an inspiring address by the Dutch minister to the United States, Mr. A. Loudon, the orchestra played the Dutch national anthem while the audience stood. Music by Elgar, Chabrier and Herbert made the rest of the programme.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

MAY 19 1941

Koussevitzky Flies to Boston From Bethlehem

Special to THE EAGLE

BOSTON—Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who stole the show at yesterday's celebration of "I Am an American" day at the Hatch Memorial Shell, flew from Bethlehem, Pa., in order to participate in the program. He had gone to Bethlehem from his Lenox home to attend the Bach festival.

Dr. Koussevitzky took another plane this afternoon from Boston to Albany via New York and from Albany where he lands early this evening, he will motor to his home in Lenox.

THIS CLIPPING FROM EAST LIVERPOOL, O.
REVIEW
MAY 16 1941

This Clipping From
JERSEY CITY, N. J.
JERSEY JOURNAL
MAY 17 1941

This Clipping From
YONKERS, N. Y.
HERALD-STATESMAN
MAY 17 1941

This Clipping From
PATERSON, N. J.
NEWS
MAY 17 1941

'We're Americans Now And Glad Of It!'

So Say 10 Widely-Known Persons Who Were Born In Other Lands

By The Associated Press.

SUNDAY, is "I Am An American Day," proclaimed by the President in recognition of citizens who have attained their majority or who have been naturalized within the last year. The occasion prompted inquiries to a number of foreign-born Americans as to why they are glad to be Americans. Here are their answers.

Serge Koussevitzky

(Conductor, Boston Symphony Orchestra)

Birthplace: Russia

I WANTED 12 years before applying for my first American papers. When I realized that my work and life belonged to America, I felt that I could and should become an American citizen.

Koussevitzky

I believe that there is no other country today where freedom of life—that vital factor of happiness for humanity—is preserved; where art, particularly musical art, is appreciated so deeply and the importance of art in relation to life is so well understood.

Indeed, I am proud of this great nation and proud to be an American.

This Clipping From
MOLINE, ILL.
DISPATCH
MAY 17 1941

This Clipping From
CHAMPAIGN, ILL.
NEWS-GAZETTE
MAY 19 1941

This Clipping From
CHICAGO, ILL.
HERALD-AMERICAN
MAY 19 1941

This Clipping From ANDERSON, IND.
BULLETIN
MAY 14 1941

THIS CLIPPING FROM
Ottumwa Ia
Courier
MAY 13 1941

This Clipping From
PASSAIC, N. J.
HERALD-NEWS
MAY 16 1941

THIS CLIPPING FROM
DYERSBURG, TENN.
STATE GAZETTE
MAY 17 1941

This Clipping From
MADISONVILLE, KY.
MESSENGER
MAY 17 1941

This Clipping From BRISTOL, CONN.
PRESS
MAY 17 1941

This Clipping From KINGSTON, N.Y.
FREEMAN
MAY 17 1941

THIS CLIPPING FROM RICHMOND, IND.
PALLADIUM
MAY 18 1941

THIS CLIPPING FROM ENID, OKLA.
EAGLE
MAY 17 1941

This Clipping From TOLEDO, OHIO
BLADE
MAY 12 1941

This Clipping From
PONCA CITY, OKLA.
NEWS
MAY 15 1941

THIS CLIPPING FROM CARTHAGE, MO.
PRESS
MAY 17 1941

This Clipping From HOUSTON, TEX.
CHRONICLE
MAY 17 1941

THIS CLIPPING FROM MARION, O.
STAR
MAY 17 1941

This Clipping From
NEWPORT NEWS, VA.
TIMES-HERALD
MAY 17 1941

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N.Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
MAY 17 1941

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
POST
MAY 17 1941

This Clipping From
OLYMPIA, WASH.
OLYMPIAN
MAY 18 1941

This Clipping From PORTSMOUTH, OHIO
TIMES
MAY 25 1941

This Clipping From
STEUBENVILLE, O.
HERALD-STAR
MAY 17 1941

This Clipping From
BLUEFIELD, W. VA.
SUNSET NEWS & TIMES LEADER
MAY 17 1941

THIS CLIPPING FROM RICHMOND, KY.
REGISTER
MAY 17 1941

This Clipping From ELMIRA, N.Y.
TELEGRAM
MAY 18 1941

THIS CLIPPING FROM HOPE, ARK.
STAR
MAY 27 1941

This Clipping From
ST. CLOUD, MINN.
TIMES
MAY 21 1941

This Clipping From
NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J.
SUNDAY TIMES
MAY 18 1941

THIS CLIPPING FROM FALL RIVER, MASS.
HERALD-NEWS
MAY 19 1941

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN
MAY 19 1941

Koussevitsky in Boston Highlight

BOSTON, May 19.—(International News Service.)—A native American statesman and a world-famous musician who recently acquired citizenship highlighted Boston's celebration of "I Am an American Day" yesterday at Charles River esplanade.

The musician was Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Senator David I. Walsh of Massachusetts was the statesman.

His voice shaking with emotion, Dr. Koussevitsky made an unscheduled address to tell the 15,000 persons he was "proud to be an American."

Senator Walsh warned new citizens they are not full-fledged Americans utill they have learned tolerance.

Addresses by state and local dignitaries, plays, tableaux and music comprised the program.

Koussevitsky Is Star Of Boston Celebration

BOSTON, May 19, (INS)—Boston's celebration of "I am an American Day" today had cast in a stellar role Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, world famous conductor who recently acquired American citizenship.

Before an assemblage of 15,000 at the Charles River Esplanade, Koussevitsky made an unscheduled address, saying:

"I believe there is no other country today like America, where freedom of life, that vital factor for the happiness of humanity, is preserved, where art, and especially musical art is so deeply appreciated, and the importance of art in relation to life, is so well understood. Indeed I am proud of this great nation and proud to be an American."

United States Senator David I. Walsh warned new citizens among his listeners that they are not full-fledged Americans until they have learned tolerance.

"You are not a real American," he said, "if you entertain any prejudice against any other American, if you think of your fellow Americans in terms of race, creed or conditions of servitude."

DR KOUSSEVITZKY ADDRESSES RALLY HELD IN BOSTON

Symphony Conductor 'Proud to Be an American' — Walsh Also 'I-Am-an-American Day' Speaker

Boston, May 18—(INS)—A native American statesman and a world-famous musician who recently acquired citizenship high-lighted Boston's celebration of "I-am-an-American day" this afternoon at Charles River esplanade.

The musician was Dr Sergei Koussevitzky, conducted of the Boston Symphony orchestra. Senator David I. Walsh of Massachusetts, was the statesman.

His voice shaking with emotion, Dr Koussevitzky made an unscheduled address to tell the gathering of 15,000 persons he was "proud to be an American."

"When I realized by life and my work belonged here, I felt that I could and should become an American citizen," he said. "I believe there is no other country today like America, where freedom of life, that vital factor for the happiness of humanity, is preserved. Where art, and especially musical art is so deeply appreciated, and the importance of art in relation to life is so well understood. Indeed, I am proud of this great nation and proud to be an American."

BOSTON EVENING AMERICAN, FRIDAY, MAY 16, 1941

16 KOUSSEVITZKY TO CONDUCT ON PATRIOTIC DAY

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, famed conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, struck a dramatic note in patriotism today as he offered to conduct the full orchestra as part of the colorful program marking "I Am An American Day" Sunday.

"This is my contribution of gratitude in recognition of becoming a citizen," Dr. Koussevitzky said, in announcing the concert. "I feel that I owe this to Boston and to this country."

OUTSTANDING PROGRAM

The celebration, Mayor Tobin declared, will be the outstanding patriotic event in any city in the country in observance of the day. To allow for wider attendance it will be held at the Hatch Memorial shell on the Esplanade and not, as first scheduled, at the Fenway Stadium.

The program is being prepared by hundreds of patriotic, fraternal and civic organizations in co-operation with 60 professional stage performers and radio stars. It will be, the city's Americanization bureau promises, the largest-scale demonstration of patriotism ever held in Boston.

NOVEL SCENES

An instructive and novel scene depicting the making of a new citizen will be one of the features.

Scenes showing the landing of the Pilgrims, Washington crossing the Delaware, the inauguration of President Lincoln, the emancipation of the slaves, the surrender of General Lee to General Grant, and incidents of the Spanish and World Wars will be on the program.

Prominent speakers will include Mayor Tobin, Sen. David I. Walsh and John Mulcahey of the United States Department of Immigration and Naturalization. Frank Flanagan, director of the Bureau of Americanization, will be chairman of the celebration.

EGON PETRI AT POP CONCERT

Famous Dutch Pianist Delights

May 19

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

Last evening's Pop Concert benefited the Holland relief fund and boasted the presence of Egon Petri, who was heard in the B-flat minor Piano Concerto of Tchaikovsky and in solo pieces by Medtner, Prokofieff and Rachmaninoff. To be sure, Mr. Petri was born in Germany, but he is a citizen of The Netherlands. His appearances in Boston, whether with or without orchestra, have been all too few. It is no exaggeration to say that last evening's performance of Tchaikovsky's masterwork was one of the greatest ever heard in Symphony Hall, and a large share of the credit for this notable accomplishment goes to Arthur Fiedler and the Pops orchestra. Mr. Petri's playing of the numbers by the three contemporary Russians, all in relatively lighter vein, was wholly delightful.

Two items on the programme had especial significance, Beethoven's Overture to "Egmont," and H. E. Enthoven's "Music for a Pageant." This last, typical occasional music, was composed for the wedding of the Crown Princess Juliana and Prince Bernhard, and was conducted by the composer. Following an inspiring address by the Dutch minister to the United States, Mr. A. Loudon, the orchestra played the Dutch national anthem while the audience stood. Music by Elgar, Chabrier and Herbert made the rest of the programme.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
MAY 19 1941

Koussevitsky Flies to Boston From Bethlehem

Special to THE EAGLE

BOSTON—Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who stole the show at yesterday's celebration of "I Am an American" day at the Hatch Memorial Shell, flew from Bethlehem, Pa., in order to participate in the program. He had gone to Bethlehem from his Lenox home to attend the Bach festival.

Dr. Koussevitzky took another plane this afternoon from Boston to Albany via New York and from Albany where he lands early this evening, he will motor to his home in Lenox.

THIS CLIPPING FROM EAST LIVERPOOL, O.
REVIEW
MAY 16 1941

This Clipping From
JERSEY CITY, N. J.
JERSEY JOURNAL
MAY 17 1941

This Clipping From
YONKERS, N. Y.
HERALD-STATESMAN
MAY 17 1941

This Clipping From
PATERSON, N. J.
NEWS
MAY 17 1941

14

'We're Americans Now And Glad Of It!'

So Say 10 Widely-Known Persons Who Were Born In Other Lands

By The Associated Press.

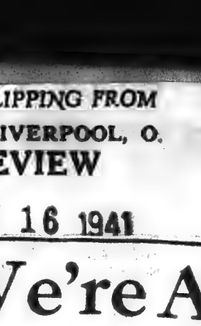
SUNDAY, is "I Am An American Day," proclaimed by the President in recognition of citizens who have attained their majority or who have been naturalized within the last year. The occasion prompted inquiries to a number of foreign-born Americans as to why they are glad to be Americans. Here are their answers.

Serge Koussevitzky

(Conductor, Boston Symphony Orchestra)

Birthplace: Russia

I WANTED 12 years before applying for my first American papers. When I realized that my work and life belonged to America, I felt that I could and should become an American citizen.



Koussevitzky

I believe that there is no other country today where freedom of life—that vital factor of happiness for humanity—is preserved; where art, particularly musical art, is appreciated so deeply and the importance of art in relation to life is so well understood.

Indeed, I am proud of this great nation and proud to be an American.

This Clipping From
ANDERSON, IND.
BULLETIN
MAY 14 1941

This Clipping From TOLEDO, OHIO
BLADE
MAY 12 1941

This Clipping From PORTSMOUTH, OHIO
TIMES
MAY 25 1941

THIS CLIPPING FROM
Ottumwa Ia
Courier
MAY 13 1941

This Clipping From
PONCA CITY, OKLA.
NEWS
MAY 15 1941

This Clipping From
STEUBENVILLE, O.
HERALD-STAR
MAY 17 1941

This Clipping From
PASSAIC, N. J.
HERALD-NEWS
MAY 16 1941

THIS CLIPPING FROM CARTHAGE, MO.
PRESS
MAY 17 1941

This Clipping From
BLUEFIELD, W. VA.
SUNSET NEWS & TIMES LEADER
MAY 17 1941

THIS CLIPPING FROM
DYERSBURG, TENN.
STATE GAZETTE
MAY 17 1941

This Clipping From HOUSTON, TEX.
CHRONICLE
MAY 17 1941

THIS CLIPPING FROM RICHMOND, KY.
REGISTER
MAY 17 1941

This Clipping From
MADISONVILLE, KY.
MESSENGER
MAY 17 1941

THIS CLIPPING FROM MARION, O.
STAR
MAY 17 1941

This Clipping From ELMIRA, N.Y.
TELEGRAM
MAY 18 1941

This Clipping From BRISTOL, CONN.
PRESS
MAY 17 1941

This Clipping From
NEWPORT NEWS, VA.
TIMES-HERALD
MAY 17 1941

THIS CLIPPING FROM HOPE, ARK.
STAR
MAY 27 1941

This Clipping From KINGSTON, N.Y.
FREEMAN
MAY 17 1941

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N.Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
MAY 17 1941

This Clipping From
ST. CLOUD, MINN.
TIMES
MAY 21 1941

This Clipping From
MOLINE, ILL.
DISPATCH
MAY 17 1941

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
POST
MAY 17 1941

This Clipping From
NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J.
SUNDAY TIMES
MAY 18 1941

This Clipping From
CHAMPAIGN, ILL.
NEWS-GAZETTE
MAY 19 1941

THIS CLIPPING FROM RICHMOND, IND.
PALLADIUM
MAY 18 1941

This Clipping From
OLYMPIA, WASH.
OLYMPIAN
MAY 18 1941

THIS CLIPPING FROM ENID, OKLA.
EAGLE
MAY 17 1941

This Clipping From
CHICAGO, ILL.
HERALD-AMERICAN
MAY 19 1941

Koussevitsky in Boston Highlight

BOSTON, May 19.—(International News Service.)—A native American statesman and a world-famous musician who recently acquired citizenship highlighted Boston's celebration of "I Am an American Day" yesterday at Charles River esplanade.

The musician was Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Senator David I. Walsh of Massachusetts was the statesman.

His voice shaking with emotion, Dr. Koussevitsky made an unscheduled address to tell the 15,000 persons he was "proud to be an American."

Senator Walsh warned new citizens they are not full-fledged Americans utll they have learned tolerance.

Addresses by state and local dignitaries, plays, tableaux and music comprised the program.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
FALL RIVER, MASS.
HERALD-NEWS
MAY 19 1941

Koussevitsky Is Star Of Boston Celebration

BOSTON, May 19, (INS)—Boston's celebration of "I am an American Day" today had cast in a stellar role Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, world famous conductor who recently acquired American citizenship.

Before an assemblage of 15,000 at the Charles River Esplanade, Koussevitsky made an unscheduled address, saying:

"I believe there is no other country today like America, where freedom of life, that vital factor for the happiness of humanity, is preserved, where art, and especially musical art is so deeply appreciated, and the importance of art in relation to life, is so well understood. Indeed I am proud of this great nation and proud to be an American."

United States Senator David I. Walsh warned new citizens among his listeners that they are not full-fledged Americans until they have learned tolerance.

"You are not a real American," he said, "if you entertain any prejudice against any other American, if you think of your fellow Americans in terms of race, creed or conditions of servitude."

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN
MAY 19 1941

DR KOUSSEVITZKY ADDRESSES RALLY HELD IN BOSTON

Symphony Conductor 'Proud to Be an American' — Walsh Also 'I-Am-an-American Day' Speaker

Boston, May 18—(INS)—A native American statesman and a world-famous musician who recently acquired citizenship high-lighted Boston's celebration of "I-am-an-American day" this afternoon at Charles River esplanade.

The musician was Dr Sergei Koussevitzky, conducted of the Boston Symphony orchestra. Senator David I. Walsh of Massachusetts, was the statesman.

His voice shaking with emotion, Dr Koussevitzky made an unscheduled address to tell the gathering of 15,000 persons he was "proud to be an American."

"When I realized by life and my work belonged here, I felt that I could and should become an American citizen," he said. "I believe there is no other country today like America, where freedom of life, that vital factor for the happiness of humanity, is preserved. Where art, and especially musical art is so deeply appreciated, and the importance of art in relation to life is so well understood. Indeed, I am proud of this great nation and proud to be an American."

URES
ews 11
....16
ws...16
.14, 15
....12

The Boston Post

ENTS

Entered as 2nd Class Matter at Boston P. O.
Copyright, 1941, by Post Pub. Co.

MONDAY, MAY 19, 1941. **

CITIZEN'S DAY STIRS 12,000

Brings Out Patriotic Fervor of Throng ---Walsh in Plea at 'I Am an American' Exercises

LONG MAY IT WAVE
Massed flags in the breeze at the esplanade yesterday at the "I Am An American" celebration.

Patriotic fervor was exemplified in true Boston spirit yesterday afternoon when 12,000 persons gathered on the Charles River Esplanade not only to observe the first national "I Am An American Day," but to participate actively in this celebration.

With a vigor that has rarely been equalled by any comparable Boston throng, the audience sang the national anthem on the sun-splashed shore while a stiff breeze rustled and snapped the massed flags which gave generous color to the spectacle.

80-MINUTE PROGRAMME

The gigantic chorus, compactly arranged in front of the Hatch Shell, provided the emotional peak to the demonstration, but it was Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra that swept the 80-minute programme toward this fervent, dramatic, almost tremulous climax.

Continued on Page 7—First Col.

CITIZEN'S DAY STIRS 12,000

Continued From First Page

It was the first time that the world-famed orchestra, at its full strength of 110 players, had been assembled at the new shell, and the occasion was noteworthy, too, in that Dr. Koussevitzky was also conducting there for the first time.

Shows His Pride

Moreover, the orchestra shattered musical tradition by playing publicly for the first time Irving Berlin's ballad "God Bless America," a piece thought by some to be unworthy of the attention of a major symphony orchestra.

These incidents, however, were the result of no accident. The full assembly of the orchestra and his own conducting were Dr. Koussevitzky's way of showing his pride at having become an American citizen.

Dr. Koussevitsky, twice decorated by the Russian Czar, possessor of knighthood in the French Legion of Honor, and honored by many nations of the world, did not trust to words alone to convey what it means to him to share the rights which all simple Americans possess. He let the music he evoked from the famed orchestra do that, and to the vast throng the experience was unforgettable.

None Like America

He prefaced the playing by the orchestra with these words: "When I realized that my life and my work belonged here, I felt that I could and should become an American citizen. I believe there is no other country today like America, where freedom of life—that vital factor of happiness for humanity—is preserved; where art—and especially musical art—is so deeply appreciated, and the importance of art, in relation to life, is so well understood. Indeed, I am proud of this great nation and proud to be an American."

Only the afternoon before had Dr. Koussevitzky decided that the opening number of the orchestra's musical programme would be Irving Berlin's hit. His explanation of the choice was simple. He set forth that "God Bless America" is genuinely a folk song, springing from the people. And the famed conductor turned the ballad into a composition of sheer beauty, as 110 of the world's finest musicians sent it forth from the beautiful shell until it echoed even as far as Beacon street, a quarter of a mile away.

From Indian Music

Next, the orchestra played John Philip Sousa's "The Stars and Stripes Forever," followed by the second and third movements of Howard Hanson's Romantic Symphony.

The Hanson symphony was chosen because Mr. Hanson, director of the Eastman School of Music at Rochester, N. Y., is a living American composer and because the third movement contains portions of the earliest of American music, borrowed from an Indian tribal dance.

The closing musical number was "The Star Spangled Banner," in the closing measures of which a huge American flag was moved slowly into the background of the shell, while the audience, led by Miss Marie Murray, sang Chief orator was U. S. Senator David I. Walsh, who shared the platform with Mayor Tobin, State Senator David Brackman, who represented Governor Saltonstall, and John F. Mulcahey, district director of immigration and naturalizatio: in the Boston district.

One of the lessons which immigrants who have been admitted to the fello- ship of American citizenship should make Americans comprehend, Senator Walsh sa' , is "the uselessness of trying to dictate to other peoples and other governments how they shall govern themselves and what shall be their moral standards."

even make us comprehend the folly of America trying to settle their century-old rivalries, jealousies and wars; the devastating results that may come to us if we attempt to settle their 'balance of power' ambitions—all of which led to the denial of you and your children of the blessings of freedom committed through the years, your kin to poverty and destitution. You may make us understand the dangers to America from the abandonment of the religious spirit of the founders and the drift toward irreligion in America."

Be Loyal His Plea

The Senator pleaded: "Citizens, be loyal to America. Accept your responsibilities as American citizens cheerfully. Combat unceasingly those unfriendly influences in our midst which seek the ruin of our institutions. Beware of foreign intrigue, even when it emanates from the land of your birth. Let not unpatriotic teaching in academic places, nor intellectual anarchy deceive you. Do not lose faith in the bravery and the spirit of sacrifice of Americans to protect our institutions, without dependency on any other nation for our safety and security. Above all, eliminate from your lives those dangerous agitators whose treasonable propaganda would crucify our free, American institutions."

One of the highlights of the programme was the presentation of a tableau, "United People of America," by the WPA Community Recreation project. The tableau was directed by Joseph A. Crossen.

I'M AN AMERICAN DAY STIRS VAST BOSTON PATRIOTIC DEMONSTRATION

Another colorful chapter in patriotism was written in Boston today after a typical celebration of Americanism by Americans and for Americans at the Hatch Shell.

In a backdrop of beauty furnished by blue skies, the green of the Esplanade and the picturesque Charles river, thousands upon thousands of citizens, old and new, gathered to reaffirm their faith in American institutions.

It was truly a great American setting for the occasion—"I Am An American" Day. For there were peanut and popcorn vendors on nearby streets, children on roller skates, young couples strolling romantically about, small picnic parties, as well as serious talks by distinguished men, and music and entertainment.

At the same time, other cities and towns in Greater Boston conducted similar celebrations in response to a proclamation by Gov. Saltonstall.

KOUSSEVITZKY THRILLS

Highlighting the impressive and colorful spectacle was the unscheduled and dramatic address of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, famed conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which he led as an expression of gratitude for his newly acquired citizenship.

"When I realized my life and my work belonged here, I felt that I could and should become an American citizen," he said. "I believe there is no other country today like America, where freedom of life—that vital factor for the happiness of humanity—is preserved, where art and especially musical art, is so deeply appreciated and the importance of art in relation to life is so well understood.

"Indeed, I am proud of this great nation and proud to be an American."

David I. Walsh, senior Sena... from Massachusetts, sounded the

Continued on Page 9, Column 1

...Y, MAY 19, 1941

Christian Science Monitor

Americanism Events Draw Great Throng

With idling boats bobbing on the peaceful Charles, and the Esplanade like the quiet City bathed in sunshine, a throng of 12,000 persons celebrated at the Hatch Memorial Shell yesterday afternoon the joy and privilege of being American citizens.

There was a pageant of American historical events by the WPA Community Recreation Project, in this observance of "I Am an American" Day. There were speeches. With massed flags lending color to the scene and a huge chorus assembled in front of the Shell, the vast audience sang the national anthem.

But the spectacle was swept to a vibrant climax when Dr. Sa... Koussevitsky, distinguished conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and newly-naturalized American citizen, spoke humbly and briefly of the privilege of citizenship, then turned to the full orchestra gathered for the first time in the Shell, and directed it in several numbers beginning with Irving Berlin's "God Bless America" and ending with the "Star-Spangled Banner."

As the audience listened respectfully and apparently moved, Dr. Koussevitsky said: "When I realized my life and work belonged here, I felt that I could and should become an American citizen. I believe there is no country today where the freedom of life, that vital factor of happiness for humanity, is preserved; where art—and especially musical art—is so deeply appreciated, and the importance of art in relation to life is so well understood. Indeed, I am proud of this great nation, and proud to be an American."

Urging his hearers to accept cherfully the responsibilities of American citizenship, Senator David I. Walsh of Massachusetts called on them to "combat unceasingly those unfriendly influences in our midst which seek the ruin of our institutions. Beware of foreign intrigue even when it emanates from the land of your birth. Let not unpatriotic teaching in academic places, nor intellectual anarchy deceive you."

Mayor Maurice J. Tobin cautioned against taking American citizenship too much for granted, and hailed the action of Dr. Koussevitsky, who was twice decorated by a Russian czar as well as by other governments, in becoming an American citizen as a splendid demonstration of the value of citizenship.

The celebration was arranged by the City Bureau of Americanization.

This Clipping From DETROIT, MICH.
TIMES
MAY 19 1941

Conductor Tells Love For U.S.

International News Service Wire

BOSTON, May 19.—A native American statesman and world-famous musician who recently acquired citizenship highlighted Boston's celebration of "I Am an American" day at Charles River esplanade.

The musician was Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Senator David I. Walsh of Massachusetts was the statesman.

His voice shaking with emotion, Doctor Koussevitsky made an unscheduled address to tell the gathering of 15,000 persons he was "proud to be an American."

"When I realized my life and my work beloned here, I felt that I could and should become an American citizen," he said. "I believe there is no other country today like America, where freedom of life, that vital factor for the happiness of humanity, is preserved. Where art, and especially musical art, is so deeply appreciated, and the importance of art in relation to life is so well understood. Indeed I am proud of this great nation and proud to be an American."

Senator Walsh warned new citizens they are not full-fledged Americans until they have learned tolerance.

"You are not a real American," he said, "if you entertain any prejudice against any other American, if you think of your fellow Americans in terms of race, creed or conditions of servitude."

Addressed by state and local dignitaries, plays, tableaux and music comprised the program.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN
MAY 19 1941

Boston

Proud of Nation, Koussevitsky Tells 15,000

BOSTON, May 19 (INS).—A native American statesman and a world-famous musician who recently acquired citizenship highlighted Boston's celebration of I Am an American Day yesterday afternoon at Charles River Esplanade.

The musician was Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Senator David I. Walsh, of Massachusetts, was the statesman.

His voice shaking with emotion, Dr. Koussevitsky told the gathering of 15,000 persons he was "proud to be an American."

FREEDOM PRESERVED.

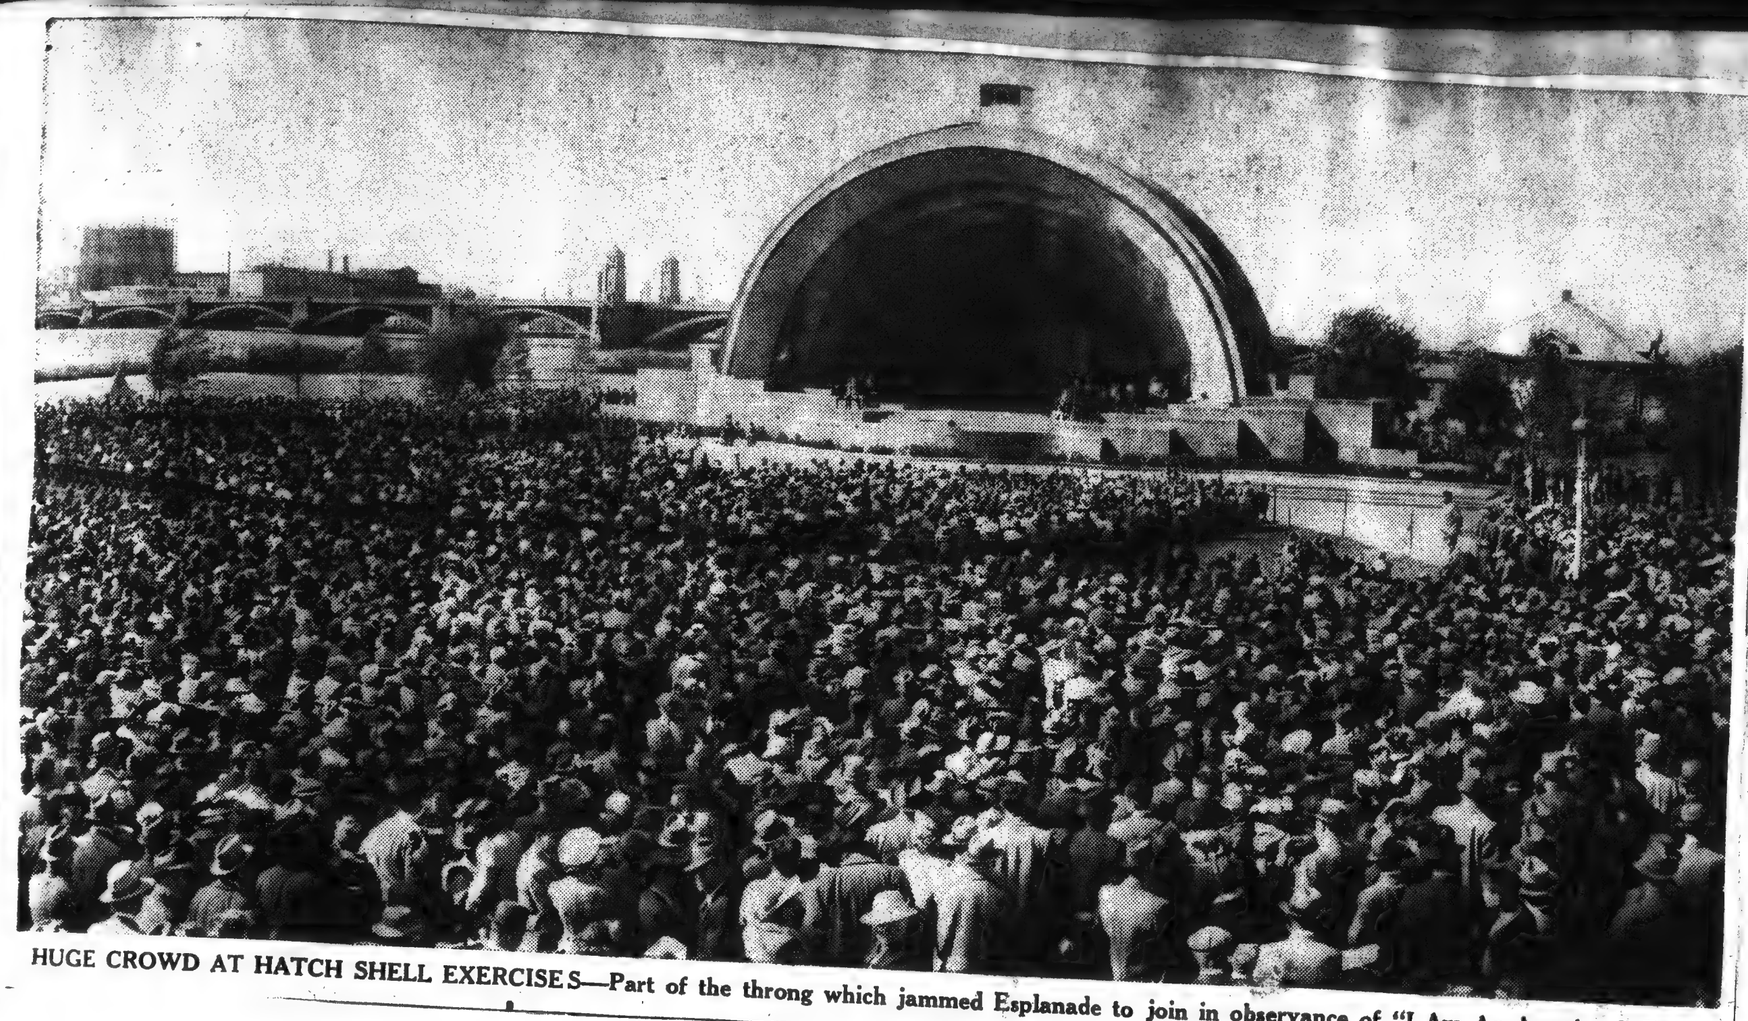
"When I realized my life and my work belonged here, I felt that I could and should become an American citizen," he said. "I believe there is no other country today like America, where freedom of life, that vital factor for the happiness of humanity, is preserved.

"I am proud of this great nation and proud to be an American."

Senator Walsh warned new citizens they are not full-fledged Americans until they have learned tolerance.

"You are not a real American," he said, "if you entertain any prejudice against any other American, if you think of your fellow-Americans in terms of race, creed or conditions of servitude."

143



HUGE CROWD AT HATCH SHELL EXERCISES—Part of the throng which jammed Esplanade to join in observance of "I Am An American" Day.

FRONT PAGE
BOSTON Globe
MAY 19, 1941

Koussevitzky Steals Show at Patriotic Observance

Throngs at Esplanade Exercises Hear Senator Walsh, Mayor Tobin

By JOSEPH F. DINNEEN

One of the greatest conductors in the world led one of the greatest orchestras in the world in 'God Bless America" yesterday afternoon in the Hatch Shell on the Esplanade. A new American, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, accidentally capped a tableau in a pageant in which he originally had no part, standing amid "Uncle Sam," "The Church," "American Business" and "Labor," directing the Symphony in "The Star-Spangled Banner."

Senator David I. Walsh had given his description of the ideal American, and told the new Americans among 12,000 gathered before the shell that they might make elder Americans comprehend the uselessness of trying to dictate to other governments how they shall govern themselves. A beautiful living Statue of Liberty, with golden crown and torch held high, had just left the stand when Dr. Koussevitzky was presented at the microphone.

He leaned over the stand before it, studied the large script on a paper before him and adjusted his glasses. The wind rustled his long silver hair in the bright sunlight, and he read:

"When I realized my life and work belonged here, I felt that I could and should become an American citizen. I believe there is no other country today like America where . . ." He could not go on for a minute. More than 12,000 spectators stopped him with their applause. "Where the freedom of life, that vital factor of happiness for humanity, is preserved; where art—and especially musical art—is so deeply appreciated, and the importance of art in relation to life is so well understood. Indeed, I am proud of this great nation, and proud to be an American."

Koussevitzky

Continued on Page 18

GLOBE—MONDAY, MAY 19, 1941

This Clipping From
COLUMBUS, OHIO
CITIZEN
MAY 20 1941

Boston Has Missed Once in 59 Years

Many a music lover misses a desired concert, but seldom does the scheduled concert itself fail to appear. In 59 years of traveling about the country, the Boston Symphony Orchestra has missed but one engagement and that was in Hartford in the famous blizzard of 1888.

The Boston is on the course of the Symphony Club for Columbus next season, with Koussevitzky scheduled to conduct. Tickets may be ordered from the club now at 34 Linwood-av or from Heaton's.

Choice among the tales of the Boston Orchestra is the request of a Midwestern city, not so long ago, which asked for a concert and said that the concert would be followed by a ball. The local manager suggested that the "leader" should bring his best dance music.

Dr. Koussevitzky is the famous conductor of the orchestra. He got his doctor's degree from Boston University and, because of the European custom of making some material acknowledgment of a doctorial honor, he gave Boston a solo on the bull fiddle which he plays like a virtuoso.

MUSIC

SYMPHONY HALL

Holland Relief Pops

The Holland Relief Fund was the beneficiary of last evening's Pops concert at Symphony Hall. The program was a special one, with Egon Petri soloist in the Tchaikovsky B-flat minor Piano Concerto, and Henri Emile Enthoven conducting as guest, for the first time in Boston, his "Music for a Pageant." Girls and women in Dutch costumes sold various articles to benefit the Relief Fund, and there was an address by A. Loudon, Netherlands Minister to the United States.

With memory of Mr. Petri's dazzling performance of Beethoven's "Emperor" Concerto at the Pops last year, in mind, one had looked forward to a warming account of the Tchaikovsky. Nor was there an iota of disappointment. Mr. Petri's interpretation of the work is his own, an interpretation of emotional depth and vigor, romantic yet of controlled ardor, with a tone of vocal fluidity and the technique of a musician who is also a virtuoso. One has heard more incandescent performances of the Tchaikovsky Concerto, in which virtuosity has gained the upper hand of expression. You would not expect that sort of playing from Mr. Petri.

A little too much pedal here and there, tempi in the first movement that were a bit on the slow side, were the only reservations to be set against the imposing grandeur of the whole. From Mr. Fiedler and the orchestra, Mr. Petri received alert collaboration. The soloist's share of the evening then passed into a group of piano solos—two "Fairy Tales" of Medtner, a Prelude and Gavotte of Prokofieff, and a brace of Richmaninoff Preludes. Mr. Petri's reception by the audience was nothing short of the noisily expressed approval indicated by the word "ovation."

Mr. Enthoven, a man now in his late 30s, who studied with Johann Wagenaar, Franz Schreker and Felix Weingartner, wrote his "Music for a Pageant" for the wedding of Crown Princess Juliana of the Netherlands and Prince Bernhard. The score, it thus follows, is ceremonial music, designed for an especial function at a great occasion, and exhibits the virtues and the shortcomings of most such. Its grave dignity and pomp reach climax at the end, where the composer joined to his own music the majestic "Wilhelmus," the Netherlands' national anthem.

The remainder of the program was conducted by Arthur Fiedler, and included Elgar's "Pomp and Circumstance," the "Egmont" Overture of Beethoven, Chabrier's "Espana," and Herbert's "American Fantasy."

C. W. D.

This Clipping From
FAIRMOUNT, W. VA.
WEST VIRGINIAN
MAY 20 1941

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony, generally knows what to expect when he raises his baton at rehearsal. But he was surprised recently, for the orchestra rose and played the Star Spangled Banner. Dr. Koussevitzky, a native of Russia, his wife and his secretary have just become American citizens.

MUSIC

NEW YORK HERALD TRIBUNE — Tuesday, May 20, 1941

By VIRGIL THOMSON

144

LONG ISLAND SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Benjamin Van Praag, conductor, fourth concert of the season Saturday night, May 17, in the Lawrence High School, Lawrence, L. I., with Maj. John C. Warner, pianist, as soloist in the following program:

Overture to "The Bartered Bride" . . Smetana
Piano concerto in A minor . . . . . Schumann
Romeo and Juliet . . . . . Tchaikovsky
Tales from the Vienna Woods . . J. Strauss

Well Trained Strings

THE Long Island Symphony Orchestra is not the only symphony orchestra seated on the island. I know of two more, and it would cause this department little surprise to learn that there are twenty. This one draws its support and clientele from that near by and southernly region known as "the farm." It rehearses weekly and gives four concerts a year under the leadership of Mr. Benjamin van Praag, a violinist of Dutch birth formerly a member of our own Philharmonic Symphony. Its membership is about 80 per cent amateur, the rest professional.

* * *

Saturday night's concert was distinctly professional in both program and execution. Neither the Tchaikowsky nor the Smesana are easy pieces, and the Schumann concerto presents many technical difficulties that are not always within the grasp of similar musical groups. A well trained body of strings, at all times under the conductor's control, and an excellent body of brass and wood-wind players (with perhaps about two exceptions) executed all this music with pungency and brilliance. The cello section in particular played with both bite and suavity, and there was among the woodwinds a constant graceful molding of phrases that bespoke good musicianship on the part of the players and sound conducting technique on the part of the leader. There was some excellent kettle-drum playing, too, in the Tchaikowsky.

* * *

Major Warner's playing of the Schumann Piano Concerto was from beginning to end a delight. It was lovely in tone, poetic in feeling and most important of all, architectural in its conception. If his emotional reticence is rather that of the gentleman than of the barnstormer, so, let us not forget, was Robert Schumann's. The tenderness and manliness of this music were there fully in all their noble rhetoric and all their detailed delicacy. When I speak of the Major's emotional reticence I mean no stiffness in his musical character. I merely mean that he doesn't throw his private feelings at the audience. He lets the music make its own points, puts a thoroughly professional pianoforte mastery of the service of the composer, only being careful to adjust the tempi and dynamic variations of the piece, as is eminently desirable when expounding a composition so well known, into a sequence that calls attention to the emotional continuity fo the work rather than to his favorite passages. Make no mistake about it. Major Warner is in every sense of the word an elegant musician.

* * *

The Strauss waltz that ended the program came off less well than the preceding numbers. I suspect these waltzes that everybody loves of being more difficult to play than is currently imagined. Certainly it is not every conductor that can take Vieniese liberties with rhytham convincingly and not every orchestra that can sound both full and flexible while this is being done. I am not certain, either, that dramatic alternations of tempo in the gypsy style are essential to their interpretation. That they are beautiful music all agree. That there is any sound tradition for playing, them I doubt. Certainly it is not often that one hears them executed in a manner thoroughly satisfactory.

A pleasant regional novelty of the Long Island Symphony concerts are the program notes written by high school students. These contain, indeed, little more false information about musical history than do those one encounters at our best concerts, excepting perhaps those of the Boston Symphony, which are better documented than most and cater less to the appreciatrades. I found the children's notes for Saturday's program lively and eminently readable, which is after all something.

This Clipping From
SAN MATEO, CALIF.
TIMES & NEWS LEADER
MAY 20 1941

THE WORLD OF MUSIC

NEW YORK, May 20.—The New York Philharmonic Symphony, in shaping its programs for next season, the orchestra's 100th birthday, announces that each of the nine distinguished conductors engaged for the centennial season will direct one or more American works.

The programs of the conductors are being compared and checked, to avoid unnecessary duplication of work or over-emphasis on one type of music. Various major works, however, have been scheduled.

With the assistance of the Westminster Choir, John Barbirolli will perform at Eastertime excerpts from Act 1 of "Parsifal," in a concert version of his own arrangement. Bruno Walter will use the same chorus for three special works: the Brahms Rhapsody and the "Song of Fate" and the Mobart Requiem, the latter in commemoration of the 150th anniversary of Mozart's death. Walter also plans to present the Mahler Fifth and the Bruckner Seventh symphonies.

Barbirrolli will do a "small Tchaikovsky festival," featuring one or two of the symphonies and the Piano Concerto with Reginald Stewart as soloist and the Violin Concerto with Mishel Piastro as soloist.

In commemoration of the 75th anniversary of the birth of Feruccio Busoni, Dimitri Mitropoulos will conduct a Busoni memorial concert on Dec. 28. Egon Petri, pianist, and Joseph Szegeti, violinist, will be soloists.

Mitropoulos, with Sergei Rachmaninoff as soloist, also will do an all-Rachmaninoff program, including the Third Symphony. His programs include Strauss' Alpine Symphony, the Mahler Ninth and his own arrangement of Purcell's Prelude and Death of Dido, from "Dido and Aeneas."

Serge Koussevitsky's basic Philharmonic-Symphony programs include two standard symphonies, the Tchaikovsky Fourth and the Beethoven "pastoral," as well as the Shostakovich Fifth.

Leopold Stokowski, who conducts the first two weeks of the symphony, will do both the Fifth and Seventh symphonies of Beethoven, and will present the Stokowski orchestration of Moussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition."

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
MAY 31 1941

Berkshire Festival Opens July 31

With Serge Koussevitzky conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival opens in Tanglewood, Mass., July 31, with a program made up of Handel's concerto for organ and orchestra, No. 10, in D minor, Villa-Lobos' Choros No. 10, and Debussy's Three Nocturnes. Nine concerts, divided into three series, are on the schedule, the last on Aug. 17.

AMITYVILLE, N.Y
RECORD
5/23/41

This Clipping From
McKEESPORT, PA.
NEWS
MAY 27 1941

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

By FREDERIC J. HASKIN

A reader can get the answer to any question of fact by writing The McKeesport Daily News Information Bureau, Frederic J. Haskin, Director, Washington, D. C. Please enclose three (3) cents for reply.

Q. Does the United States export many false teeth? T. J.

A. During the first six months of 1940, more than 20 million artificial teeth were exported from the United States.

—

Q. Who owns Tanglewood, the estate where Nathaniele Hawthorne lived? M. M. J.

A. Tanglewood, the estate at Stockbridge, Massachusetts, where the author lived was deeded to the Boston Symphony as a permanent home several years ago. It is here that the annual Berkshire Symphonic Festivals are held.

—

Q. When did the Windsor Hotel burn? J. P.

A. The Windsor Hotel fire in New York City occurred on March 17, 1899. Fifty lives were lost.

—

Q. What is canned copy? L. K. B.

A. Written information sent to newspapers by publicity bureaus of organizations, or by press agents, is so called.

—

Q. Are third class postmasters appointed for life or for a term? R. L.

A. All postmasters are now appointed to service until they reach the retirement age.

—

Q. For whom is Adelaide, Australia, named? L. P. S.

A. The city was named in honor of Queen Adelaide, consort of William IV of England.

Soloists Named for Winter Concert Series

The South Shore Civic Music Association of Bay Shore announced this week that the artists to appear in the concert series to be presented for members during the season 1941-42 will be the Ballet Russe, Luboshutz and Nemenoff, duo-pianists; William Horne, tenor, and Miriam Solovieff, violinist.

Pierre Luboshutz and his wife, Genia Nemenoff, began their duo-piano playing for the entertainment of their friends and out of that grew their public tours. Mr. Luboshutz is a Russian by birth and a graduate of the Conservatory of Moscow. He made his debut in Moscow as soloist with the Koussevitzsky Orchestra. He has appeared with the New York Philharmonic Symphony under the direction of Arturo Toscanini.

Miss Nemenoff was born in Paris and studied at the Paris Conservatoire with Isador Philipp. She made her recital debut in Paris and later toured in Algeria, Holland, Belgium, Spain and Germany.

Miriam Solovieff, described as "one of the most copiously gifted of younger American violinists," was born in San Francisco in 1921 and made her debut as guest artist with the Los Angeles Philharmonic Orchestra at the age of 11. She appeared the next year at the Hollywood Bowl with Ossip Gabrilowitsch conducting before an audience of 19,000 persons. She continued her studies with Louis Persinger, teacher of Yehudi Menuhin, and made her New York debut in 1937. Miss Solovieff went to Europe in 1938 on a concert tour which was interrupted by the outbreak of the war.

William Hornes is a native of New York City. He studied at the Peabody Conservatory of Music and also at the Curtis Institute in Philadelphia. He made guest appearances with the San Francisco Symphony under the direction of Pierre Monteux and also with the New York Philharmonic Symphony.

THIS CLIPPING FROM LIVINGSTON, MONT.
ENTERPRISE
MAY 23 1941

Memberships in Bozeman Community Concert Association Available Here; Talented Artists to Be Presented

A campaign for members in Livingston of the Bozeman Community concert association was opened here yesterday by Mrs. Kenyon Talcott, who will be in charge.

It will continue until Tuesday.

Today at 11:50 David Ferguson, eastern manager of the concert association, will speak in the high school concerning the program to be offered by the Billings and Bozeman associations next year.

Headlining the Bozeman program will be Dorothy Maynor, noted young Negro contralto, who has taken the musical world by storm during the last year.

Miss Maynor is the daughter of an obscure Methodist minister in Virginia. She hoped to be a public school music teacher, but Serge Kousevitsky of the Boston Symphony orchestra, heard her sing and said that she had a voice the world must hear.

Her debut in Town Hall, New York, was so sucessful that she was given a tour which equalled in extent and profit the most glorious names in music.

Miss Maynor has been the recipient of much publicity, including an article in Collier's a year ago entitled "Million Dollar Voice."

"We feel that we are offering Livingston people a privilege when we make Community Concert memberships available here," Mrs. Talcott said.

She added that several other outstanding artists will be available for the Bozeman concert program and that a well-balanced series will be offered.

All the artists who have appeared in Bozeman have been delighted with the accoustics of the college gymnasium, where the concerts are held, she said.

This Clipping From KANSAS CITY, MO.
TIMES
MAY 29 1941

A ROOSEVELT COUSIN DIES.

Mrs. Sarah Delano Owen Was Widow of Former K. U. Professor.

(By the Associated Press.)

LAWRENCE, KAS., May 28.—Mrs Sarah Delano Owen, 61, a third cousin of President Roosevelt, died today at her home.

Mrs. Owen, a musician, studied at the University of Illinois and the Boston, Mass., conservatory and played with the Boston Symphony orchestra.

She was the widow of the late Prof. Arthur Owen who taught romance languages at Kansas university.

She is survived by two daughters, Mrs. Minor Major of Lawrence; Mrs. Barbara Owen of Kansas City, and two brothers, Edward D. Morton, Wabash, Ind., and Walter Morton, New Bedford, Mass.

THIS CLIPPING FROM NASHUA, N. H.
TELEGRAPH
MAY 29 1941

Bachrach

WORLD FAMOUS ORGANIST—E. Power Biggs, organist of the Boston Symphony orchestra and ~~organist-choirmaster~~ of the Harvard Congregational church in Brookline, will play the organ at 8 Sunday evening at the Union Congregational church, Groton. Mr Biggs is a graduate of the Royal Academy of Music in London and has appeared in concert in London and the largest cities of the United States and Canada. The service is open gratis to the general public. An offering will be taken.

This Clipping From
ALLENTOWN, PA.
CHRONICLE
MAY 28 1941

Cosmopolitan Music Group Holds Study

Music group members of the Cosmopolitan club were guests at the home of Mrs. Charles A. Carpenter at its final program meeting of the season yesterday afternoon at her home, 1952 Highland St. Mrs. Philip W. Siekman, chairman, presided.

The group concluded its study of the book, "What to Listen for in Music," by Aaron Copland, and Mrs. Clarence M. Haines reviewed the second last chapter, "Opera and Music Drama." She illustrated her remarks with two recordings, "The Mad Scene" from "Lucia di'Lammermoor," sung by Lily Pons, and Lohengrin's "Prelude," played by the Boston Symphony orchestra.

"From Composer to Interpreter to Listener," the last chapter of the book, was discussed by Mrs. Carpenter. She entertained with illustrative selections on the piano by Mozart, Beethoven, Moussorgsky and Rameau.

Light refreshments were served by the hostess following the meeting.

MUSIC

NEW YORK HERALD TRIBUNE — Tuesday May 20, 1941

By VIRGIL THOMSON

LONG ISLAND SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Benjamin Van Praag, conductor, fourth concert of the season Saturday night, May 17, in the Lawrence High School, Lawrence, L. I., with Maj. John C. Warner, pianist, as soloist in the following program:

Overture to "The Bartered Bride" ..... Smetana
Piano concerto in A minor ..... Schumann
Romeo and Juliet ..... Tchaikovsky
Tales from the Vienna Woods ..... J. Strauss

Well Trained Strings

THE Long Island Symphony Orchestra is not the only symphony orchestra seated on the island. I know of two more, and it would cause this department little surprise to learn that there are twenty. This one draws its support and clientele from that near by and southernly region known as "the farm." It rehearses weekly and gives four concerts a year under the leadership of Mr. Benjamin van Praag, a violinist of Dutch birth formerly a member of our own Philharmonic Symphony. Its membership is about 50 per cent amateur, the rest professional.

* * *

Saturday night's concert was distinctly professional in both program and execution. Neither the Tchaikowsky nor the Smesana are easy pieces, and the Schumann concerto presents many technical difficulties that are not always within the grasp of similar musical groups. A well trained body of strings, at all times under the conductor's control, and an excellent body of brass and wood-wind players (with perhaps about two exceptions) executed all this music with pungency and brilliance. The cello section in particular played with both bite and suavity, and there was among the woodwinds a constant graceful molding of phrases that bespoke good musicianship on the part of the players and sound conducting technique on the part of the leader. There was some excellent kettle-drum playing, too, in the Tchaikowsky.

* * *

Major Warner's playing of the Schumann Piano Concerto was from beginning to end a delight. It was lovely in tone, poetic in feeling and most important of all, architectural in its conception. If his emotional reticence is rather that of the gentleman than of the barnstormer, so, let us not forget, was Robert Schumann's. The tenderness and manliness of this music were there fully in all their noble rhetoric and all their detailed delicacy. When I speak of the Major's emotional reticence I mean no stiffness in his musical character. I merely mean that he doesn't throw his private feelings at the audience. He lets the music make its own points, puts a thoroughly professional pianoforte mastery of the service of the composer, only being careful to adjust the tempi and dynamic variations of the piece, as is eminently desirable when expounding a composition so well known, into a sequence that calls attention to the emotional continuity to the work rather than to his favorite passages. Make no mistake about it. Major Warner is in every sense of the word an elegant musician.

* * *

The Strauss waltz that ended the program came off less well than the preceding numbers. I suspect these waltzes that everybody loves of being more difficult to play than is currently imagined. Certainly it is not every conductor that can take Vieniese liberties with rhytham convincingly and not every orchestra that can sound both full and flexible while this is being done. I am not certain, either, that dramatic alternations of tempo in the gypsy style are essential to their interpretation. That they are beautiful music all agree. That there is any sound tradition for playing them I doubt. Certainly it is not often that one hears them executed in a manner thoroughly satisfactory.

A pleasant regional novelty of the Long Island Symphony concerts are the program notes written by high school students. These contain, indeed, little more false information about musical history than do those one encounters at our best concerts, excepting perhaps those of the Boston Symphony, which are better documented than most and cater less to the appreciatrades. I found the children's notes for Saturday's program lively and eminently readable, which is after all something.

This Clipping From
SAN MATEO, CALIF.
TIMES & NEWS LEADER
MAY 20 1941

THE WORLD OF MUSIC

NEW YORK, May 20.—The New York Philharmonic Symphony, in shaping its programs for next season, the orchestra's 100th birthday, announces that each of the nine distinguished conductors engaged for the centennial season will direct one or more American works.

The programs of the conductors are being compared and checked, to avoid unnecessary duplication of work or over-emphasis on one type of music. Various major works, however, have been scheduled.

With the assistance of the Westminster Choir, John Barbirolli will perform at Eastertime excerpts from Act 1 of "Parsifal," in a concert version of his own arrangement. Bruno Walter will use the same chorus for three special works: the Brahms Rhapsody and the "Song of Fate" and the Mobart Requiem, the latter in commemoration of the 150th anniversary of Mozart's death. Walter also plans to present the Mahler Fifth and the Bruckner Seventh symphonies.

Barbirrolli will do a "small Tchaikovsky festival," featuring one or two of the symphonies and the Piano Concerto with Reginald Stewart as soloist and the Violin Concerto with Mishel Piastro as soloist.

In commemoration of the 75th anniversary of the birth of Feruccio Busoni, Dimitri Mitropoulos will conduct a Busoni memorial concert on Dec. 28. Egon Petri, pianist, and Joseph Szegeti, violinist, will be soloists.

Mitropoulos, with Sergei Rachmaninoff as soloist, also will do an all-Rachmaninoff program, including the Third Symphony. His programs include Strauss' Alpine Symphony, the Mahler Ninth and his own arrangement of Purcell's Prelude and Death of Dido, from "Dido and Aeneas."

Serge Koussevitsky's basic Philharmonic-Symphony programs include two standard symphonies, the Tchaikovsky Fourth and the Beethoven "pastoral," as well as the Shostakovich Fifth.

Leopold Stokowski, who conducts the first two weeks of the symphony, will do both the Fifth and Seventh symphonies of Beethoven, and will present the Stokowski orchestration of Moussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition."

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
MAY 31 1941

Berkshire Festival Opens July 31

With Serge Koussevitzky conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival opens in Tanglewood, Mass., July 31, with a program made up of Handel's concerto for organ and orchestra, No. 10, in D minor, Villa-Lobos' Choros No. 10, and Debussy's Three Nocturnes. Nine concerts, divided into three series, are on the schedule, the last on Aug. 17.

AMITYVILLE, N.Y.
RECORD
5/23/41

Soloists Named for Winter Concert Series

The South Shore Civic Music Association of Bay Shore announced this week that the artists to appear in the concert series to be presented for members during the season 1941-42 will be the Ballet Russe, Luboshutz and Nemenoff, duo-pianists; William Horne, tenor, and Miriam Solovieff, violinist.

Pierre Luboshutz and his wife, Genia Nemenoff, began their duo-piano playing for the entertainment of their friends and out of that grew their public tours. Mr. Luboshutz is a Russian by birth and a graduate of the Conservatory of Moscow. He made his debut in Moscow as soloist with the Koussevitzsky Orchestra. He has appeared with the New York Philharmonic Symphony under the direction of Arturo Toscanini.

Miss Nemenoff was born in Paris and studied at the Paris Conservatoire with Isador Philipp. She made her recital debut in Paris and later toured in Algeria, Holland, Belgium, Spain and Germany.

Miriam Solovieff, described as "one of the most copiously gifted of younger American violinists," was born in San Francisco in 1921 and made her debut as guest artist with the Los Angeles Philharmonic Orchestra at the age of 11. She appeared the next year at the Hollywood Bowl with Ossip Gabrilowitsch conducting before an audience of 19,000 persons. She continued her studies with Louis Persinger, teacher of Yehudi Menuhin, and made her New York debut in 1937. Miss Solovieff went to Europe in 1938 on a concert tour which was interrupted by the outbreak of the war.

William Hornes is a native of New York City. He studied at the Peabody Conservatory of Music and also at the Curtis Institute in Philadelphia. He made guest appearances with the San Francisco Symphony under the direction of Pierre Monteux and also with the New York Philharmonic Symphony.

THIS CLIPPING FROM LIVINGSTON, MONT.
ENTERPRISE
MAY 23 1941

Memberships in Bozeman Community Concert Association Available Here; Talented Artists to Be Presented

A campaign for members in Livingston of the Bozeman Community concert association was opened here yesterday by Mrs. Kenyon Talcott, who will be in charge.

It will continue until Tuesday.

Today at 11:50 David Ferguson, eastern manager of the concert association, will speak in the high school concerning the program to be offered by the Billings and Bozeman associations next year.

Headlining the Bozeman program will be Dorothy Maynor, noted young Negro contralto, who has taken the musical world by storm during the last year.

Miss Maynor is the daughter of an obscure Methodist minister in Virginia. She hoped to be a public school music teacher, but Serge Koussevitsky of the Boston Symphony orchestra, heard her sing and said that she had a voice the world must hear.

Her debut in Town Hall, New York, was so sucessful that she was given a tour which equalled in extent and profit the most glorious names in music.

Miss Maynor has been the recipient of much publicity, including an article in Collier's a year ago entitled "Million Dollar Voice."

"We feel that we are offering Livingston people a privilege when we make Community Concert memberships available here," Mrs. Talcott said.

She added that several other outstanding artists will be available for the Bozeman concert program and that a well-balanced series will be offered.

All the artists who have appeared in Bozeman have been delighted with the accoustics of the college gymnasium, where the concerts are held, she said.

This Clipping From KANSAS CITY, MO.
TIMES
MAY 29 1941

A ROOSEVELT COUSIN DIES.

Mrs. Sarah Delano Owen Was Widow of Former K. U. Professor.

(By the Associated Press.)

LAWRENCE, KAS., May 28.—Mrs. Sarah Delano Owen, 61, a third cousin of President Roosevelt, died today at her home.

Mrs. Owen, a musician, studied at the University of Illinois and the Boston, Mass., conservatory and played wtih the Boston Symphony orchestra.

She was the widow of the late Prof. Arthur Owen who taught romance languages at Kansas university.

She is survived by two daughters, Mrs. Minor Major of Lawrence; Mrs. Barbara Owen of Kansas City, and two brothers, Edward D. Morton, Wabash, Ind., and Walter Morton, New Bedford, Mass.

This Clipping From
McKEESPORT, PA.
NEWS
MAY 27 1941

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

By FREDERIC J. HASKIN

A reader can get the answer to any question of fact by writing The McKeesport Daily News Information Bureau, Frederic J. Haskin, Director, Washington, D. C. Please enclose three (3) cents for reply.

Q. Does the United States export many false teeth? T. J.

A. During the first six months of 1940, more than 20 million artificial teeth were exported from the United States.

Q. Who owns Tanglewood, the estate where Nathaniele Hawthorne lived? M. M. J.

A. Tanglewood, the estate at Stockbridge, Massachusetts, where the author lived was deeded to the Boston Symphony as a permanent home several years ago. It is here that the annual Berkshire Symphonic Festivals are held.

Q. When did the Windsor Hotel burn? J. P.

A. The Windsor Hotel fire in New York City occurred on March 17, 1899. Fifty lives were lost.

Q. What is canned copy? L. K. B.

A. Written information sent to newspapers by publicity bureaus of organizations, or by press agents, is so called.

Q. Are third class postmasters appointed for life or for a term? R. L.

A. All postmasters are now appointed to service until they reach the retirement age.

Q. For whom is Adelaide, Australia, named? L. P. S.

A. The city was named in honor of Queen Adelaide, consort of William IV of England.

THIS CLIPPING FROM NASHUA, N. H.
TELEGRAPH
MAY 29 1941

Bachrach

WORLD FAMOUS ORGANIST—E. Power Biggs, organist of the Boston Symphony orchestra and ~~organist-choirmaster~~ of the Harvard Congregational church in Brookline, will play the organ at 8 Sunday evening at the Union Congregational church, Groton. Mr Biggs is a graduate of the Royal Academy of Music in London and has appeared in concert in London and the largest cities of the United States and Canada. The service is open gratis to the general public. An offering will be taken.

This Clipping From
ALLENTOWN, PA.
CHRONICLE
MAY 28 1941

Cosmopolitan Music Group Holds Study

Music group members of the Cosmopolitan club were guests at the home of Mrs. Charles A. Carpenter at its final program meeting of the season yesterday afternoon at her home, 1952 Highland St. Mrs. Philip W. Siekman, chairman, presided.

The group concluded its study of the book, "What to Listen for in Music," by Aaron Copland, and Mrs. Clarence M. Haines reviewed the second last chapter, "Opera and Music Drama." She illustrated her remarks with two recordings, "The Mad Scene" from "Lucia di'Lammermoor," sung by Lily Pons, and Lohengrin's "Prelude," played by the Boston Symphony orchestra.

"From Composer to Interpreter to Listener," the last chapter of the book, was discussed by Mrs. Carpenter. She entertained with illustrative selections on the piano by Mozart, Beethoven, Moussorgsky and Rameau.

Light refreshments were served by the hostess following the meeting.

This Clipping From
ATLANTIC CITY, N. J.
PRESS
MAY 25 1941

Arts And Music

"The Gay Divorce" Opens Tomorrow At Forrest; Phila. Forum Offers Brilliant 1941-42 Series

Winding up the current Philadelphia theatrical season with one of Cole Porter's most infectious scores and an effervescent story by Dwight Taylor, "The Gay Divorce" opens an engagement tomorrow night at the Forrest Theatre, where Luella Gear, Dorothy Stone, Charles Collins, Archie Robins and Paula Stone will be seen in this hit musical comedy for two weeks.

Never before seen in the Quaker City, "The Gay Divorce" was a tremendous hit on Broadway and a bigger motion picture hit when Fred Astaire took it to the screen. It represents the expertly woven talents of such top-flight artisans of the musical stage as the aforementioned Cole Porter, who gave it some of his soundest and best song hits, including "Night and Day," Sam Hoffenstein, the poet, and Kenneth Webb, who collaborated with Dwight Taylor on the stage adaptation of the Taylor book.

Dorothy Stone, dancing daughter of the great Fred, is the lovely lady, a part she assumed opposite Fred Astaire on Broadway after the show had opened. Charles Collins, her real-life husband, is the unwilling corespondent, and Luella Gear, probably the greatest native comedienne of the stage, plays her original role of the vitriolic but well-meaning friend. Paula Stone, last seen in Dennis King's "She Had to Say Yes," Archie Robbins, Cyril Smith, Nino Ripeppi, Gynia Gray, Barrie O'Daniels, Ray Cavanaugh, Paula Novak, Stan Ross and Tom Bate are other leading players.

During its two-week engagement at the Forrest Theatre "The Gay Divorce" will be seen nightly except Sunday with matinees on Wednesday and Saturday.

Phila. Forum Announces

Elsa Maxwell will be one of the many distinguished men and women whom The Philadelphia Forum will next season bring to Philadelphia for the first time. "America's Mistress of Unceremonies," as Miss Maxwell has been called, has by her unique personality made an unrivaled place for herself in society, in the movies and wherever people gather to forget their troubles. When she comes to The Forum Elsa will ask "Where Is Your Sense of Humor?" and will answer the question with the aid of motion pictures.

Another Philadelphia first will be Arthur Train, distinguished lawyer and creator of the amazing "Mr. Tutt" stories. Still another will be the only broadcast outside the studio of "The Aldrich Family," followed by talks by the author, Clifford Goldsmith, and Ezra Stone. Amazing Carmen Amaya, "the gypsy spitfire," and her company of dancers will also be seen here for the first time, as will Alexander Borovsky, sensational Russian pianist; Whittemore and Lowe, duo-pianists in their two-piano transcriptions from Bach to Cole Porter, with Elsie Houston, the great Brazilian soprano, and Lawrence Tibbett in his extraordinary motion picture story of "India," filmed with the cooperation of the British government and Indian princes.

The Forum will also present three plays, Frederic March and his wife in "Hope for a Harvest," and two others to be announced. Helen Traubel, whom Galli-Curci calls "the greatest singer we have today," will be heard in her only Philadelphia recital, and Baccaloni, the great new comedian of the Metropolitan Opera, will be heard in his four greatest roles, supported by a company of Metropolitan Opera artists, in the only Philadelphia appearance of this company.

Among the other musical events will be Rudolf Serkin in a piano recital, the annual Philadelphia concert by the Boston Symphony; Robert Weede, leading baritone of the Metropolitan Opera, in his only Philadelphia recital; Zino Francescatti, hailed last year when he played for The Forum as the greatest new violinist since Heifetz, and Catherine Littlefield and her ballet in a new program.

The man who came to dinner, Alexander Woollcott, returns in his only Philadelphia lecture; Alfred Noyes, famous English poet, for the first time in 15 years, and Dorothy Crawford, America's foremost one-woman theatre, in a new program.

The Forum will again present the Philadelphia Award ceremonies; William Lyon Phelps on the new books and plays, and Louis J. Alber, who managed the American lecture tour of Winston Churchill, will tell amusing anecdotes of the English Premier.

Captain John D. Craig will tell of Polynesian Playgrounds, with color motion pictures; Burton Holmes, with motion pictures from his unrivaled collection, will present for the only time in Philadelphia "The England That We Knew," especially arranged and edited for The Forum. Julien Bryan will tell for the first time his motion picture story of "Brazil" with especial emphasis on the activities of the million German residents in that country, while Major James C. Sawders, who is now in Hawaii photographing the islands in color, will tell the story of the defenses and dangers of that outpost of American democracy.

From time to time The Forum will add other events dealing with world affairs as they develop.

Although from year to year the members renew most of their seats at the Academy of Music, a limited number of memberships are available to the general public at from $12 to $42.50 for the entire season of some thirty events. Application should be made to The Forum in the Lincoln-Liberty building.

This Clipping From
DAVENPORT, IA.
DEMOCRAT-LEADER
MAY 25 1941

185

Catching The Beat in Music World Today

BY

INA WICKHAM

"I shall know but one country—America,
"To it I owe my utter loyalty.
"The ends I aim at shall be for my Country,
"My God and Truth."
—National Federation of Music Clubs Collect.

IT APPEARS that Chicago will have "grand' opera next fall. According to an announcement received this week, the season will be a short one, only four weeks in length and will begin on November 8th. Fortune Gallo, founder and director of the San Carlo opera company has been engaged as general manager of the Chicago Opera company. The job of general manager has been vacant since the death of Paul Longone a couple of years ago. Mr. Gallo has been in conference with the trustees and is now in New York engaging artists for the four week season.

MR. GALLO

. . . is to "democratize opera in the grand manner." We're not quite sure what he means. But we sincerely hope that he does not mean to do away with many of the traditions of the opera and the glamour of the productions. It is said that the enormous deficit remaining from last year (and we've heard that it was anywhere from $10,000 to $100,000) was due to the fact that huge salaries were paid the stars who sang in the opera. In some instances they were paid more by the Chicago company than by the Metropolitan. Mr. Gallo will not give up his San Carlo opera company, but will direct it from afar. He is one of the few men who has been able to make opera pay.

THE SEASON PLANNED

. . . for next fall in Chicago is very short, much shorter than for many years. We have been told however, that the shortness of the season in the fall may be only because it is hoped to bring the Metropolitan opera company to Chicago when it makes its annual spring tour in 1942. A week of Metropolitan opera in Chicago would bring thousands of people to that city. Incidentally, Birmingham, Ala., will be visited by the Metropolitan for the first time. There will be one or more performances.

THE BERKSHIRE

. . . Symphonic festival at Tanglewood Mass will open on Thursday July 31 at 8:30 p. m., with the Boston Symphony orchestra directed by Serge Koussevitsky playing Handel's Concerto for Organ and orchestra No. 10 in D Minor. For the first time at Tanglewood, the Berkshire Musical Association's chorus will perform with the orchestra. They will be heard in the Villa-Lobos Chorus No. 10 and in Debussy's Three Nocturnes, "Clouds,'" "Festivals" and "Sirens" on the opening night. The Berkshire Festival Chorus will be heard on Thursday, August 14th with a quartet of soloists. This chorus is made up of students at the Berkshire Music Center.

THERE WILL BE NINE

. . . concerts at the Berkshire Music festival this summer, all given by the Boston Symphony orchestro, directed by Serge Koussevitsky, and they will feature many soloists. Outstanding symphonic numbers will be played and all indications are toward one of the finest festivals in the United States. Details of the programs will appear in this column later. Subscriptions for the concerts and box sales are far ahead of last year. The subscription sale will close on June 30 or earlier if the lists are filled. Then the tickets will be available for single concerts.

This Clipping From COLORADO SPRINGS, COLO.
TELEGRAPH
MAY 25 1941

Unprecedented Talent in Today's Generation

—Stokowski

Conductor of All-American Youth Orchestra Believes Young Folk Need Outlet to Express Music

Leopold Stokowski, founder and conductor of the All-American Youth orchestra which is scheduled to appear in the Penrose stadium on June 19, in the course of its first transcontinental tour of the United States, Canada and Mexico, has chosen his musicians from 15,000 applicants from all parts of the country. Auditions were held and Mr. Stokowski made a tour to personally select the members of the orchestra. Rehearsals were held in Atlantic city before the orchestra started on its tour to give 54 concerts in 56 days.

In his comments on the orchestra and how it came to be formed Mr. Stokowski says:

"I am often asked what first gave me the thought of the All-American Youth orchestra. The idea of forming this orchestra came to me several years ago when I was making a tour with the Philadelphia orchestra all over the United States including some parts of Canada and Mexico. We played in most of the cultural centers of the United States, and many young musicians came to me, both boys and girls, asking to play for me. I soon noticed that something new was growing up in this country—a young generation that is unprecedentedly talented in music.

I sometimes had the opportunity to talk at length with these young talented musicians and found that they were often depressed because they could find no outlet for the tremendous urge they felt inside of them to express themselves thru music. They wanted to be a living, active part of a great symphony orchestra, but some of them were born and brought up in a community that did not have its own symphony orchestra. These youthful players felt, and rightly so, that talent for music that nature has given them could and should be used as a means of service to their community and the whole nation thru the inspiring power of music. While doing this they would like to have the inner satisfaction of earning their living, as a result of an intelligent use of their faculties and especially of their musical talents.

"The All-American Youth orchestra consists of one or more of the most talented young musicians of every state in the Union, including both boys and girls. There are no restrictions as to race or color. The players are, broadly speaking, between the ages of 15 and 25, but where I have found very marked talent a little younger or a little older than these ages, I have not felt that the numbers 15 and 25 should be too arbitrary or inflexible, so these exceptionally talented players have been included. These musicians will represent their home state and will be something like 'musical ambassadors' for their native state. I have realized my hope of finding colored players for the percussion instruments, because they have such a wonderful sense of rhythm. We have already found an outstanding player who is of Indian origin.

"In forming this orchestra we shall not disturb any of the existing orchestras, so that the employment that already exists will continue.

"One of the aims of the All-American Youth orchestra is to give to our talented youthful musicians the experience that I believe will be unforgettable to them. This experience is the opportunity of playing the greatest music of all lands and all times with the standards of performance of the major symphony orchestras of the United States. This new orchestra is not like a college or amateur orchestra. It is a professional orchestra. Only those are engaged who have the same technical mastery of their instruments, and the same understanding of music, that would enable them to hold their own in such orchestras as the Boston Symphony, the New York Philharmonic, or the Philadelphia orchestra."

LEOPOLD STOKOWSKI

This Clipping From
ATLANTIC CITY, N. J.
PRESS
MAY 25 1941

Arts And Music

"The Gay Divorce" Opens Tomorrow At Forrest; Phila. Forum Offers Brilliant 1941-42 Series

Winding up the current Philadelphia theatrical season with one of Cole Porter's most infectious scores and an effervescent story by Dwight Taylor, "The Gay Divorce" opens an engagement tomorrow night at the Forrest Theatre, where Luella Gear, Dorothy Stone, Charles Collins, Archie Robins and Paula Stone will be seen in this hit musical comedy for two weeks.

Never before seen in the Quaker City, "The Gay Divorce" was a tremendous hit on Broadway and a bigger motion picture hit when Fred Astaire took it to the screen. It represents the expertly woven talents of such top-flight artisans of the musical stage as the aforementioned Cole Porter, who gave it some of his soundest and best song hits, including "Night and Day," Sam Hoffenstein, the poet, and Kenneth Webb, who collaborated with Dwight Taylor on the stage adaptation of the Taylor book.

Dorothy Stone, dancing daughter of the great Fred, is the lovely lady, a part she assumed opposite Fred Astaire on Broadway after the show had opened. Charles Collins, her real-life husband, is the unwilling corespondent, and Luella Gear, probably the greatest native comedienne of the stage, plays her original role of the vitriolic but well-meaning friend. Paula Stone, last seen in Dennis King's "She Had to Say Yes," Archie Robbins, Cyril Smith, Nino Ripeppi, Gynia Gray, Barrie O'Daniels, Ray Cavanaugh, Paula Novak, Stan Ross and Tom Bate are other leading players.

During its two-week engagement at the Forrest Theatre "The Gay Divorce" will be seen nightly except Sunday with matinees on Wednesday and Saturday.

Phila. Forum Announces

Elsa Maxwell will be one of the many distinguished men and women whom The Philadelphia Forum will next season bring to Philadelphia for the first time. "America's Mistress of Unceremonies," as Miss Maxwell has been called, has by her unique personality made an unrivaled place for herself in society, in the movies and wherever people gather to forget their troubles. When she comes to The Forum Elsa will ask "Where Is Your Sense of Humor?" and will answer the question with the aid of motion pictures.

Another Philadelphia first will be Arthur Train, distinguished lawyer and creator of the amazing "Mr. Tutt" stories. Still another will be the only broadcast outside the studio of "The Aldrich Family," followed by talks by the author, Clifford Goldsmith, and Ezra Stone. Amazing Carmen Amaya, "the gypsy spitfire," and her company of dancers will also be seen here for the first time, as will Alexander Borovsky, sensational Russian pianist; Whittemore and Lowe, duo-pianists in their two-piano transcriptions from Bach to Cole Porter, with Elsie Houston, the great Brazilian soprano, and Lawrence Tibbett in his extraordinary motion picture story of "India," filmed with the cooperation of the British government and Indian princes.

The Forum will also present three plays, Frederic March and his wife in "Hope for a Harvest," and two others to be announced. Helen Traubel, whom Galli-Curci calls "the greatest singer we have today," will be heard in her only Philadelphia recital, and Baccaloni, the great new comedian of the Metropolitan Opera, will be heard in his four greatest roles, supported by a company of Metropolitan Opera artists, in the only Philadelphia appearance of this company.

Among the other musical events will be Rudolf Serkin in a piano recital, the annual Philadelphia concert by the Boston Symphony; Robert Weede, leading baritone of the Metropolitan Opera, in his only Philadelphia recital; Zino Francescatti, hailed last year when he played for The Forum as the greatest new violinist since Heifetz, and Catherine Littlefield and her ballet in a new program.

The man who came to dinner, Alexander Woollcott, returns in his only Philadelphia lecture; Alfred Noyes, famous English poet, for the first time in 15 years, and Dorothy Crawford, America's foremost one-woman theatre, in a new program.

The Forum will again present the Philadelphia Award ceremonies; William Lyon Phelps on the new books and plays, and Louis J. Alber, who managed the American lecture tour of Winston Churchill, will tell amusing anecdotes of the English Premier.

Captain John D. Craig will tell of Polynesian Playgrounds, with color motion pictures; Burton Holmes, with motion pictures from his unrivaled collection, will present for the only time in Philadelphia "The England That We Knew," especially arranged and edited for The Forum. Julien Bryan will tell for the first time his motion picture story of "Brazil" with especial emphasis on the activities of the million German residents in that country, while Major James C. Sawders, who is now in Hawaii photographing the islands in color, will tell the story of the defenses and dangers of that outpost of American democracy.

From time to time The Forum will add other events dealing with world affairs as they develop.

Although from year to year the members renew most of their seats at the Academy of Music, a limited number of memberships are available to the general public at from $12 to $42.50 for the entire season of some thirty events. Application should be made to The Forum in the Lincoln-Liberty building.

This Clipping From
DAVENPORT, IA.
DEMOCRAT-LEADER
MAY 25 1941

145

Catching The Beat in Music World Today

BY

INA WICKHAM

"I shall know but one country—America,
"To it I owe my utter loyalty.
"The ends I aim at shall be for my Country,
"My God and Truth."
—National Federation of Music Clubs Collect.

IT APPEARS that Chicago will have "grand' opera next fall. According to an announcement received this week, the season will be a short one, only four weeks in length and will begin on November 8th. Fortune Gallo, founder and director of the San Carlo opera company has been engaged as general manager of the Chicago Opera company. The job of general manager has been vacant since the death of Paul Longone a couple of years ago. Mr. Gallo has been in conference with the trustees and is now in New York engaging artists for the four week season.

MR. GALLO

. . . is to "democratize opera in the grand manner." We're not quite sure what he means. But we sincerely hope that he does not mean to do away with many of the traditions of the opera and the glamour of the productions. It is said that the enormous deficit remaining from last year (and we've heard that it was anywhere from $10,000 to $100,000) was due to the fact that huge salaries were paid the stars who sang in the opera. In some instances they were paid more by the Chicago company than by the Metropolitan. Mr. Gallo will not give up his San Carlo opera company, but will direct it from afar. He is one of the few men who has been able to make opera pay.

THE SEASON PLANNED

. . . for next fall in Chicago is very short, much shorter than for many years. We have been told however, that the shortness of the season in the fall may be only because it is hoped to bring the Metropolitan opera company to Chicago when it makes its annual spring tour in 1942. A week of Metropolitan opera in Chicago would bring thousands of people to that city. Incidentally, Birmingham, Ala., will be visited by the Metropolitan for the first time. There will be one or more performances.

THE BERKSHIRE

. . . Symphonic festival at Tanglewood Mass will open on Thursday July 31 at 8:30 p. m., with the Boston Symphony orchestra directed by Serge Koussevitsky playing Handel's Concerto for Organ and orchestra No. 10 in D Minor. For the first time at Tanglewood, the Berkshire Musical Association's chorus will perform with the orchestra. They will be heard in the Villa-Lobos Chorus No. 10 and in Debussy's Three Nocturnes, "Clouds,'" "Festivals" and "Sirens" on the opening night. The Berkshire Festival Chorus will be heard on Thursday, August 14th with a quartet of soloists. This chorus is made up of students at the Berkshire Music Center.

THERE WILL BE NINE

. . . concerts at the Berkshire Music festival this summer, all given by the Boston Symphony orchestra, directed by Serge Koussevitsky, and they will feature many soloists. Outstanding symphonic numbers will be played and all indications are toward one of the finest festivals in the United States. Details of the programs will appear in this column later. Subscriptions for the concerts and box sales are far ahead of last year. The subscription sale will close on June 30 or earlier if the lists are filled. Then the tickets will be available for single concerts.

COLO[illegible]KINGS, COLO.
TELEGRAPH
MAY 25 1941

Unprecedented Talent in Today's Generation

—Stokowski

Conductor of All-American Youth Orchestra Believes Young Folk Need Outlet to Express Music

Leopold Stokowski, founder and conductor of the All-American Youth orchestra which is scheduled to appear in the Penrose stadium on June 19, in the course of its first transcontinental tour of the United States, Canada and Mexico, has chosen his musicians from 15,000 applicants from all parts of the country. Auditions were held and Mr. Stokowski made a tour to personally select the members of the orchestra. Rehearsals were held in Atlantic city before the orchestra started on its tour to give 54 concerts in 56 days.

In his comments on the orchestra and how it came to be formed Mr. Stokowski says:

"I am often asked what first gave me the thought of the All-American Youth orchestra. The idea of forming this orchestra came to me several years ago when I was making a tour with the Philadelphia orchestra all over the United States including some parts of Canada and Mexico. We played in most of the cultural centers of the United States, and many young musicians came to me, both boys and girls, asking to play for me. I soon noticed that something new was growing up in this country—a young generation that is unprecedentedly talented in music.

I sometimes had the opportunity to talk at length with these young talented musicians and found that they were often depressed because they could find no outlet for the tremendous urge they felt inside of them to express themselves thru music, They wanted to be a living, active part of a great symphony orchestra, but some of them were born and brought up in a community that did not have its own symphony orchestra. These youthful players felt, and rightly so, that talent for music that nature has given them could and should be used as a means of service to their community and the whole nation thru the inspiring power of music. While doing this they would like to have the inner satisfaction of earning their living, as a result of an intelligent use of their faculties and especially of their musical talents.

"The All-American Youth orchestra consists of one or more of the most talented young musicians of every state in the Union, including both boys and girls. There are no restrictions as to race or color. The players are, broadly speaking, between the ages of 15 and 25, but where I have found very marked talent a little younger or a little older than these ages, I have not felt that the numbers 15 and 25 should be too arbitrary or inflexible, so these exceptionally talented players have been included. These musicians will represent their home state and will be something like 'musical ambassadors' for their native state. I have realized my hope of finding colored players for the percussion instruments, because they have such a wonderful sense of rhythm. We have already found an outstanding player who is of Indian origin.

"In forming this orchestra we shall not disturb any of the existing orchestras, so that the employment that already exists will continue.

"One of the aims of the All-American Youth orchestra is to give to our talented youthful musicians the experience that I believe will be unforgettable to them. This experience is the opportunity of playing the greatest music of all lands and all times with the standards of performance of the major symphony orchestras of the United States. This new orchestra is not like a college or amateur orchestra. It is a professional orchestra. Only those are engaged who have the same technical mastery of their instruments, and the same understanding of music, that would enable them to hold their own in such orchestras as the Boston Symphony, the New York Philharmonic, or the Philadelphia orchestra."

LEOPOLD STOKOWSKI

146

This Clipping From
SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.
CHRONICLE
MAY 25 1941

IN THE REALM OF MUSIC

The Critic Returns To a Desert Island

(The following article, reprinted from This World of December 1, 1940, last week was awarded the second of three prizes in a Nation-wide contest for record reviewers, conducted by the RCA Victor Company. First and third prizes were won, respectively, by the record critics of the New York Journal-American and the St. Paul Pioneer-Press.)

By Alfred Frankenstein

RCA VICTOR wants the record reviewers to write a piece on the ten Victor records they would take with them to the proverbial desert island. This is a challenge to our ingenuity in several ways, and it is a particularly timely one for me, since in the past few weeks I have made out several lists of a very similar sort for readers of this column.

The record manufacturers have recently cut their prices in half, and one result of this seems to be that many who formerly shied away from record collecting because of its expense and the bewildering size and variety of the catalogues are now being tempted to take the plunge. Many are going about it quite seriously, and those of us who write about records are beginning to receive a remarkable number of requests for recommendations toward a basic record library, usually one that shall cover the literature as adequately as possible within a limited budget. It is in the light of these requests that I shall try to make out a "desert island" list. This is artificially limited, of course, through the fact that only Victor releases are dealt with, and also because RCA does not want us to include more than four album sets in their entirety. The total investment involved in acquiring the six single disks and four albums recommended below is $20.25, at current retail prices.

Adequate coverage of the literature means a good many things. It means, first of all, adequate representation of historic styles and periods. It means, secondly, sufficient variety in medium; you will want the symphony, the opera and the song, choral music, instrumental solo and chamber ensemble. And you will also want representative recordings by outstanding interpreters.

ONE SHOULD BEGIN, then, with medieval music, and the answer there is perfectly plain—the Gregorian mass, "Lux et Origo," recorded by the choir of the monks of St. Peter of Solesmes. (12538). Here is all the greatness of medieval music on one disk—its remoteness and its mystery and its other-worldly dignity. This unaccompanied monody, sung by the world's foremost authorities on music in that style, contains within itself all subsequent polyphonic development; canon and fugue grow out of it like a matted vine from a seed; it is counterpoint against the infinite many-voicedness of silence.

From polyphony implied one goes on to polyphony explicitly stated and developed to its highest degree of expressiveness. This means Bach, and if you can have but one of the thousands of Bach disks in existence, I should choose the great six voiced fugue (or "ricercar," as Bach called it), from "The Musical Offering," not in the recently recorded David version but in the older and finer arrangement by Edwin Fischer, recorded by that splendid musician with his own chamber orchestra. (8660). There is no page of Bach more profound and deep-searching and fundamental than this, and none presents greater interest to the pattern-making side of one's mind. The performance provides one of the rarest gems in the Victor list. It is majestic in its organ-like sonority, but without the nervous theatricalism common to "symphonic" transcriptions of Bach, yet its huge size still permits the bright, silvery relief of the solo violin, and for all its gigantic choiring, it is still a piece for chamber orchestra.

OF ALL THE MUSICAL FORMS employed in the latter part of the eighteenth century the most characteristic and indispensable, it seems to me, is the solo concerto. (There are good reasons for this, but it would take too long to defend them.) And of late eighteenth century solo concertos the greatest, I think, is Mozart's in D minor for piano and orchestra. Once again the Fischer recording (M-223) seems to me preferable. This work perfectly exemplifies the restlessness and morbidity on the dark face of the Mozartian medal as well as this composer's brilliance and gallantry and zest. To omit Mozart's operas from this list is heart-breaking, yet Mozart always wrote opera, more or less, regardless of the medium, and the "Romanza" that forms the slow movement of this concerto is one of the loveliest of his arias, heightened as no operatic scene could be heightened by the tempestuous middle section.

After Mozart, Beethoven, and for Beethoven, the fifth symphony as recorded by the NBC Symphony Orchestra under Toscanini. The fifth symphony, it seems to me, is one of those things one would have to invent if it did not exist. Half the Beethoven literature in the world is, rightly or wrongly, about the fifth symphony and nothing else, even when other works are discussed. It is the one composition above all others that sets the pattern of our thinking about its creator, and the one symphony above all others that sets the pattern for subsequent symphonic development. Its grand rhetoric, resolving struggle into triumph, is the very essence of what we mean when we use the adjective "symphonic"; in this a whole century may have made a mistake, but there it is, along with all its numerous progeny.

IN PICKING AN EXAMPLE of the post-Beethoven generation I shall again, without taking the space to detail my reasons for it, make the choice on the basis of the most characteristic form, which in this case is the concert song. You will want concert songs sung by a baritone here, partly because the baritone voice is central to the conceptions of Schubert and Schumann, and partly because the soprano voice appears twice later in this list. The best single disk in this classification that Victor affords is probably No. 14492, containing the last three songs of Schumann's "Dichterliebe" cycle as sung by Charles P[illegible] with Alfred Cortot at the pi[illegible]. The first of these is almost the arch-type of the romantic "Liebeslied," with Heine's fantastic poem held in check by Schumann's fine-grained restraint. The second, with its hunting calls and nature imagery, is equally the arch-type of the romantic joyful song, while the last, setting forth the figure of a huge coffin for the burial of love and sorrow, is as heroic and dramatic as the 12 giants who bear that coffin to its resting place in the sea.

The little pianistic tone poem with which Schumann surprisingly ends the last "Dichterliebe" song is eminently characteristic of romantic piano music, and leads directly to our next source of solace on a desert island, the Brahms intermezzos in E flat major and B flat minor, Opus 117, as recorded by Wilhelm Bachaus. (14133.) The popular Brahms is the Brahms of the symphonies and the concertos, but the quintessential Brahms finds expression in those late works, like these, wherein musical form is compressed and compacted into the smallest possible limits, and wherein the emotional cast is intimate, regretful or pessimistic rather than grandly rhetorical. I know of few melodies more haunting than the simple, berceuse-like tune of the E flat intermezzo, and both pieces suggest, for all their concentration of form, the characteristically romantic treatment of the piano as if it were a kind of bardic harp on which to unfold some long and varied epical tale. If the Gregorian chant foreshadows in little all the medieval choral music that was to come, the Brahms intermezzos [illegible]

BRUNO WALTER
Conducts the San Francisco Symphony at the Berkeley Festival this afternoon little all the nineteenth century piano music that had gone before.

Parallel to Brahms is Wagner, who provides this list's only excursion into opera. The choice is very hard, but I find that the Wagner album I use most frequently is the one containing Leopold Stokowski's excerpts from "Goetterdaemmerung." (M-188.) According to its labels this collection contains three episodes from the last "Ring" opera—"Siegfried's Rhine Journey," "Siegfried's Death" and "Brunnhilde's Immolation," wherein Agnes Davis sings the Valkyr's mighty music. Actually it contains these three passages and a good deal more—at least a good deal more than is commonly performed under the first two titles—and the whole provides a properly extensive slice of Wagner's passionate drama and epical fascination with doom and death and the crash of worlds. The emphasis throughout is upon the blazing glory of Wagner's orchestration as performed by one of the foremost Wagner conductors of all time.

THEN ONE WILL WANT something typical of those late nineteenth century nationalists who brought a new note of geographical or topographical suggestion into music, who discovered the folk song and new manners of music-making based upon it. In a single disk one cannot do better than the introduction to Moussorgsky's "Khovanchina" as recorded by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitsky. (14415.) This is a haunter, too. Its simple melody, simply treated, creates an unforgettable picture of a bleak and snowy land, and through it also flows that sense of the common man's tragic destiny, which Moussorgsky alone among the nationalists was great enough to perceive at the heart of national song.

Both Moussorgsky and Wagner converge upon Debussy, of whom I should choose the most exciting song in the world, "Le Tombeau des Naiades," from the "Chansons de Bilitis," marvelously recorded by Maggie Teyte and Alfred Cortot. (1772.) The song [illegible] Amants" is an excellent example of Debussy's impressionistic methods applied to a classical love-lyric, but "Le Tombeau des Naiades" is something unique and special, even for Debussy. Impressionistic sensuousness here becomes a delicate nervous titivation; it is a song of the utmost weirdness and fiendish hypnotic fascination. Its chant-like dealings with the words are historically important, too, but the most important thing about it is that it gives us impressionism in its ultimate delightful shudder.

CONTEMPORARY MUSIC is the hardest of all to pick, particularly for somebody else. Yet it seems to me that few can fail to acknowledge the essential greatness of Bela Bartok's second string quartet, recorded by the Budapest players (M-320), and the only example of chamber ensemble in this list. Like Moussorgsky's music, the quartet goes back to folk sources and creates a new idiom out of them, but unlike Moussorgsky, it employs a polyphony as elaborate as Bach's, a gusty rhythmic rhetoric as moving as Beethoven's, a concentration as tight as that of Brahms. Bartok is the fourth great B., and if his music may seem at first rather dusky and shaggy, a bit stony and blocky and insoluble, so much the better. There are going to be few distractions on that desert island, and there will be time to unravel some of the mysteries of music.

THIS HAS NOTHING to do with the "Desert Island" contest, but after speaking of rperesentative records of modern music, this seems as good a time as any to call your attention to the new series of recordings announced by the League of Composers. This organization projects a series to be called Recorded Contemporary Classics, the first of which will consist of Schoenberg's "Pierrot Lunaire." The league asks prospective subscribers to indicate their preferences as regards works to follow. Later recordings will be selected from the following list:

Marc Blitzstein—Excerpts from "No For An Answer."

Bela Bartok—Quartet No. 5.

Aaron Copland—Sextet for Piano, Clarinet and String Quartet.

Louis Gruenberg—"Daniel Jazz."

Paul Hindemith—"Das Marienleben."

Charles Ives—"Concord Sonata."

Frederick Jacobi—String Quartet No. 2.

Serge Prokofieff—Sonata for Two Violins.

Arnold Schoenberg — String Quartet No. 2 (with voice).

Roger Sessions—Piano Sonata.

Igor Stravinsky—Concerto for Two Pianos.

Virgil Thomson—"Stabat Mater." for String Quartet and Voice.

Those interested are asked to write to the league at 113 West Fifty-seventh street, New York, to suggest which of the above they would be most interested in.

MILLERTON, N.Y
NEWS
5/29/41

Music Festival Opens July 31 At Tanglewood

Serge Koussevitzky Will Again Conduct Boston Symphony; Community Chorus To Sing

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Serge Koussevitzky conducting, will open the eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival on Thursday evening, July 31, at Tanglewood, Mass., with the playing of the Concerto for Organ and Orchestra No. 10, in D Minor, by George Friedrich Handel. The concert will begin at 8:30.

Tanglewood is situated between Stockbridge and Lenox.

For the first time at Tanglewood, at the invitation of Dr. Koussevitzky, the chorus of the Berkshire Musical Association, Horace Hunt, director, will be heard with the orchestra. The singers, trained for many months by Mr. Hunt, are recruited from communities in the Berkshire area. They will be heard in the Villa-Lobos Choros, No. 10, and in Debussy's Three Nocturnes ("Clouds", "Festivals", "Sirens") on the opening night. The chorus will be heard again on Thursday evening, Aug. 7, with the orchestra under Dr. Koussevitzky's baton.

The Berkshire Festival Chorus, made up of students at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, will be heard on Thursday, Aug. 14, with a quartet of soloists. The Center, which operates for six weeks, has already received many more applications for admission than it did last year, according to Mrs. Margaret Grant, the secretary.

Subscriptions for the nine Festival concerts and box sales are said to be considerably ahead of last year's. Last fall, when the subscription sale was announced, it was stated that sales would close June 30, or earlier if the lists were filled. After the subscription sale closes, tickets will be available for single concerts at the New York and Stockbridge offices, and from numerous community chairmen. Inquiries for accommodations in the Berkshires during the Festival period may be sent to the Berkshire Hills Conference, Courthouse, Pittsfield, Mass.

In addition to Handel, Debussy, and Villa-Lobos, composers whose works will be heard on the programs include Mendelssohn, Beethoven, Shostakovitch, Schubert, Copland, Hindemith, Brahms, Mozart, Hanson, Wagner, Berlioz, Bach, Vaughan Williams, Barber, Sibelius, Strauss and Tchaikovsky.

CELINA, OHIO
DAILY STANDARD
MAY 31 1941

The Carnegie Corporation of New York has voted a grant of $5,000 to the Lewisohn Stadium concerts to improve the amplification and acoustics at the stadium, where the New York Philharmonic Symphony holds forth during the summer.

The money will be used to reconstruct the wings of the present shell, to enlarge the sound booth, improve equipment and to re-locate the sound speakers.

Five amplifiers will be used, located above the shell to create the illusion of sound coming from the stage itself. The reproducers will be so designed that complete coverage of the stadium will be possible, and still permit patrons at the front tables to hear the sound directly from the stage without amplification.

The acoustics of the stadium are variable, improving with increased attendance. To minimize the "echo" in parts of the field, the sound will be directed only to those sections that are occupied.

The eighth annual Berkshire symphonic festival, with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky, will open at Tanglewood in Massachusetts on July 31, presenting Handel's concerto for organ and orchestra, No. 10 in D Minor. On the same program will be the Berkshire Musical Association Chorus, under Horace Hunt, to be heard in the Villa Lobos "Choros" No. 10 and in Debussy's Three Nocturnes.

The festival will consist of nine concerts, lasting through July until August 17. There will be three series of three concerts each.

Vladimir Horowitz, pianist, who has completed a national tour of 32 concerts, plans an equally ambitious tour next season. After a recital in Havana in December, he will start in the United States in January, playing in Rochester on January 9. Next will come Newark, N. J., Philadelphia, Chicago, St. Louis and New York.

In February he is booked for Boston, Worcester, Hartford, Toledo, Indianapolis, Washington, Scranton, and Chicago. In March he will give recitals in Oberlin, O., and Minneapolis, and will make an extensive Pacific Coast tour, including appearances with the San Francisco Symphony.

This Clipping From
GREEN BAY, WIS.
PRESS-GAZETTE
MAY 31 1941

Serge Koussevitsky

(Conductor, Boston Symphony Orchestra)

BIRTHPLACE: RUSSIA

I waited twelve years before applying for my first American papers. When I realized that my work and life belonged to America, I felt that I could and should become an American citizen.

Koussevitzky

I believe that there is no other country today where freedom of life—that vital factor of happiness for humanity—is preserved; where art, particularly musical art, is so deeply appreciated and the importance of art in relation to life is so well understood.

Indeed, I am proud of this great nation and proud to be an American.

146

Tradition and Mr. Waldron

A scene from the much-discussed "Citizen Kane" — "the most sensational film ever made in Hollywood," as one critic described it—which has its San Francisco premiere at the Geary Theater Tuesday evening.

ORSON WELLES

By John Hobart

"YOU DON'T think I overplay this part?" asked Charles Waldron. The distinguished, white-haired actor, whose looks remind you of some noble Roman Senator of antiquity, had just finished his last-act scene with Billie Burke in "The Vinegar Tree." It was the scene in which the grouchy husband and the feather-brained wife realize, after her ill-advised little romantic sortie, how much they mean to each other, and as played by Miss Burke and Mr. Waldron it was mellow with affection and understanding.

And yet Mr. Waldron, back now in his dressing-room at the Alcazar, was worried about his performance. "You never know what you're like on the stage," he explained. "Other people have to tell you. You may think you know, but you don't—no matter

[illegible] of [illegible] have [illegible] ess
[illegible] 393,
[illegible] ve-
[illegible] he [illegible] lled
[illegible] y a [illegible] ed
[illegible] rts,
[illegible] al-
[illegible] ong
[illegible] ble,
[illegible] ht

remember I had 10 years of stock training—the training that these youngsters getting started today are denied, unfortunately. And when you're leading man in a stock company, putting on a different play almost every week, you get a chance to play everything. You may not be good, in each of those parts, but you do get the chance—that's the important thing!"

His tradition, you see, is the old one, now practically extinct. Modern summer theaters may be called stock companies, perhaps, but they are dilettante affairs compared to the year-round, hard-working organizations Mr. Waldron knew about the turn of the century—the Murray Hill Stock Company in New York, the Pike Company in Cincinnati, the Grand Opera House Stock Company here in San Francisco (on Mission street). "It's the fashion nowadays to deride stock training," says Mr. Waldron, "but every big star today who has been on the stage 25 years of more has had it—every one." He banged his fist on his dressing-room table to drive home the point.

MR. WALDRON could hardly have avoided taking on the theater as a life-work. It was in his blood. His father was George B. Waldron, a notable actor of his day, who left a career in the United States Navy (he was with Commodore Perry in Japan) to become an actor, at the age of 19. The senior Waldron served his apprenticeship with Edwin Booth and by the year 1856 when he was 24, he was playing leading roles opposite Julia Dean Hayne in young, booming San Francisco. Salt Lake City reveres George Waldron as the founder of its theater tradition.

Son Charles remembers that his mother wanted him to be a banker, but he also remembers the delight he used to take, as a small boy, in parading around the Waldron acres near Albany, N. Y., in the resplendent armor from Father's theatrical wardrobe. And so, like his father, Charles Waldron became an actor at 19.

It was a rather obscure start, as his brother-in-law had written a melodrama, called "Kidnapped," which he was taking around the ten-twent'-thirt' circuit. Young Charles was offered a part, at the bedazzling salary of $20 a week. Naturally, he took it. The tour lasted 20 weeks, ending up at Paterson, N. J., in a confusion of unpaid bills and confiscated trunks. "The train fare from Paterson to New York, I remember, was 75 cents, which was exactly the sum I had left in my pocket," Mr. Waldron reminisces.

Another vivid memory is a certain April morning in 1906, here in San Francisco. Engaged for a season of stock at the old Alcazar Theater, Mr. Waldron was living in a frame house on the corner of Jackson and Mason streets; it didn't collapse, he says, but it did burn down.

Then came a season in Australia, where he did "The Squaw

[illegible] banks of the Blue Danube. Adventure comes to her in the form of Albert Lieven, who plays a penniless Austrian aristocrat, while a more lasting but at first despised romance appears at the French customs in the bowlerhatted form of Michael Redgrave.

"Jeannie" is the first of 16 British films to be made during the next 12 months at an approximate cost of $4,000,000 by Charles M. Woolf, Oscar Deutsch, head of the Odeon Theaters, and J. Arthur Rank, one of the creators of the Pinewood Studios.

Mr. Woolf has backed and believed in British films since early days when he produced "Woman to Woman" with Betty Compson and Clive Brook as stars and Victor Saville as director.

A VETERAN of British films, Captain Paul Kimberley has been appointed to the newest type of film work available. He will supervise the use of films for speedier army training.

"This is a new phase of army [illegible]ups. Sometimes—about 1905—he had to mount his projector on old boxes at the back of the gangway. Occasionally the show was brought to an abrupt end by fire breaking out. Captain Kimberley gave the first film performance at Buckingham palace.

During the last war, he was appointed to superintend the distribution of propaganda films. He also started a scheme to train disabled soldiers and sailors as projectionists as there was then a shortage in the cinemas. His scheme was taken up by the Ministry of Labor and Captain Kimberley was give the Order of the British Empire. Some of the men he trained in 1919 are still in the business today.

Captain Kimberley supervised the first big feature film ever made in England. It was based on Sir Walter Scott's "Ivanhoe" and was produced in the open air at Chepstow castle in 1912. It was made for an American company and is thought to be the first really international picture.

—JOAN LITTLEFIELD.

Theatergoers' Guide

On the Stage

CURRAN—"Rio Rita," with Joe E. Brown, Suzanne Sten, Mary Healy and Peter Lind Hayes. Opens tomorrow night.

WINTERLAND—"Ice Follies of 1941," ice revue, with Bess Ehrhardt and Roy Shipstad. Opens Wednesday night.

ALCAZAR—"The Vinegar Tree," with Billie Burke, Paul Cavanagh and Charles Waldron. Second week.

DEL MONTE SUMMER THEATER—"The Constant Wife," with Helen Gahagan and Vincent Price. Second week.

On the Screen

GEARY—"Citizen Kane," with Orson Welles. Opens Tuesday night. (Walt Disney's "Fantasia" closes tonight.)

PARAMOUNT—"Love Crazy," with William Powell and Myrna Loy; "The People vs. Dr. Kildare."

UNITED ARTISTS—"That Uncertain Feeling," with Merle Oberon, Melvyn Douglas and Burgess Meredith.

ORPHEUM—"They Dare Not Love," with Martha Scott and George Brent; "Her First Beau," with Jane Withers.

GOLDEN GATE—"Little Men," with Jack Oakie and Kay Francis; stage show with Ella Logan. (Next: "Sunny.")

FOX—"I Wanted Wings"; "The Cowboy and the Blonde." Second week. (Due Thursday: "Blood and Sand.")

WARFIELD—"A Woman's Face," with Joan Crawford and Melvyn Douglas; "Washington Melodrama." Second week.

ST. FRANCIS—"The Great American Broadcast," with Alice Faye; "Flight From Destiny." Third week.

CLAY—"Pepe le Moko," French film, with Jean Cabin, Mireille Balin, Charpin and Line Noro. Third week.

LARKIN—"Escape Me Never," with Elisabeth Bergner, Hugh

NEW YORK HERALD TRIBUNE
MAY 25 1941

PHILHARMONIC—II

By VIRGIL THOMSON

LAST week this column animadverted on the desirability of the Philharmonic's turning its attention away from conductors and conducting, with all the sterile deification of the past that those involve, and on to the live musical issues of the day. I opined that in view of the Philharmonic's position as our national orchestra of the air, it is necessary that it offer its ten million listeners a vigorous musical policy rather than a parade of tailcoats visible only in Carnegie Hall. I referred also to the musical inefficiencies that have resulted from our orchestra's having had no serious, first-class, regular and more or less permanent drill master since well before 1900. And I concluded that in view of a possible change in its conductor (or in any renewal of the present conductor's contract), the governing board would serve both New York City and the whole United States best if it demanded of any prospective conductor a musical program aimed at putting the Philharmonic back on its feet musically and giving it the rôle to play in our national creative life to which its ancient prestige, its nation-wide public and its elevated budget all obligate it. Equally important is it, too, that the conductor who proposes any such program be given time and full authority to carry it out. A five-year plan, I called it on another occasion.

* * *

A Five-Year Plan

WHAT would such a plan entail as program? One thing only. A placing of the Philharmonic's whole weight and prestige on the side of the creative musical forces in New York City and in the United States at large. Any other policy must end by placing it in opposition to those forces, not a pretty position nor a worthy one.

I admit that its position for forty years has largely been, when you compare it to similar organizations in Boston, in Chicago, in Philadelphia even, not to speak of Minneapolis and Detroit, one of extreme conservatism about living music. And music writing has gone on just the same. So well, indeed, that America finds herself today the center of musical creation in the Western World. The present concentration of composers here is due partly to racial and to political intolerance in Europe. It is due also to the inability just now of our own men of genius to leave these shores for others that have in the past sometimes been more friendly toward creative originality. But the sum of it all is that America is now the seat of a vigorous musical culture. The number of foreign-born musicians among the leaders of that culture is not nearly so large as the number of native citizens. This fact is interesting, though of small importance. For America itself is the dominating element in practically all music made in America, just as Austria, Germany, Italy and France have always given to composers resident on their soil an inalienable orientation. This unconscious Americanism is not always easy to see from here; from abroad it is visible to practically any one's naked eye.

* * *

The Philharmonic Needs Modern Music

THAT the gigantic flowering of musical composition that is already so far advanced here could be hindered by the Philharmonic's continuing to hide its head in the sand is absurd. We have come to fruition without its aid; we can go our way without its climbing on our bandwagon. I am not certain that it can get on without us, however. The W. P. A. has changed all that, the W. P. A. and the radio. Three thousand symphony orchestras in the United States, most of them founded since 1930, are playing American music today; and millions are listening to it with pleasure. It is a relief from stale standard repertory. Composers' Forum-Laboratories in a dozen cities have sharpened the musical public's discrimination, have pierced through the composer's frustration and solitude, have shown everybody that good will toward the authorship of musical works can produce a more lively musical occasion than all the Little Caesarism in the world exercised upon the defenseless dead. If the American music lover should continue in the next few years progressively to turn his attention away from the rendition of music and to study more its design, as he does seem inclined to do, the Philharmonic will have to move over our way; or else it will be out of the picture. I understand its Crossley rating on the air fell off last year from ten million to eight and a half, and a radio executive has told me that the listening public for any orchestral program seems to care more about what is played than about who conducts. Toscanini's conducting, for instance, which can be so electrifying in a hall, is, comparatively speaking, a flop in the American home. Barbirolli gets by, so far as he does, by the fact that 3 o'clock, Eastern Standard, of a Sunday afternoon is a nationally convenient hour to listen to serious music and also by the fact that the Philharmonic, for all its jitteriness, is a better orchestra, man by man, than the N. B. C., the only other symphonic group enjoying regularly a national hook-up.

And so, if the Philharmonic wishes to keep its place in American musical life, I think it needs to face squarely the fact that America, under its very nose, is changing from a music consumer into a music producer and to put its policy in line with that change. I think, therefore, that it should ease off on repeating Brahms and Beethoven and start playing the music of our century. It should play not only Americans and American residents but all the modern European music out of which these were born. And it should chose out of the vast repertory of the Romantic, the Rococo and the Baroque masters (a repertory barely skimmed now) all the works that explain or that set off by contrast the works of the modern masters and of us their progeny, the only possible legitimate center of emphasis in a vigorous musical culture.

* * *

Modern Music Need Not Be Unpopular

TO THOSE who think sincerely that the general public doesn't like modern music I answer that it has been told not to like modern music, that modern music has been framed to flop, that it has been consistently played up by star conductors (naturally eager to hog the stage for their war horses) and by the critical ignorant either as shockingly incomprehensible or as utterly tame. That a certain shock is inevitable on first hearing a work for which one is unprepared I do not deny. But that such shock cannot be cushioned by programs which would prepare the listener to understand the new work I do deny. I have always admired Pierre Monteux for his revealing juxtapositions. When he first gave the "Sacre du Printemps" in 1922, he played Beethoven's Pastoral Symphony with it. Boston took the new piece like a lamb, because, although the musical idiom and syntax of it were strange to many, it was possible to recognize without undue cerebration that it too was a pastoral symphony, a musical picture of man's relation to soil and season.

* * *

European Precedent Supports My Plan

THE history of opera in Germany and in Russia, of orchestral music in France and in England, follows a pattern. As soon as the local creative movement has had a small basic repertory and a few composers capable of supplying more, executant organizations have always profited by backing the new movement. That movement, once it has been made the center of attention, has thereupon absorbed everything to itself. Conductors have been judged in terms of how well they played the local music, the immediate past in terms of how well it explains that music, the classics in terms of how well they complemented the contemporary tradition. Deliberate insistence on the new repertory and constant education of music lovers by critics and by executant leaders have invariably succeeded in making the public conscious of its own time and receptive to its own time's work. And since any time naturally prefers itself to the past and its own art work (when it can get it) to that of any other time and place, the public has always been extremely grateful to persons and to organizations who have put themselves to the trouble of making the age conscious of itself as beautiful.

If you want to see what can be done by backing a creative movement in its budding stage, read the history of the French orchestras in the latter half of the nineteenth century, of how the conductors Lamoureux and Colonne helped to make modern French music possible by believing in it (and all modernism) long before Debussy and Ravel were ever heard of. Compare the state of music in England fifty years ago with what it is now (both as to composition and as to performance) since Thomas Beecham has poked his baton into every cranny of it. We are more advanced here than England is. Our executants are more skillful, our composers more incisive. I mention the English case to show what can be made out of a seemingly hopeless situation. What could be done with the American situation under the leadership of our nationally respected Philharmonic surpasses all conjecture. What will certainly happen to that august outfit if it neglects its opportunity is too depressing to imagine.

Why it continues to fight the current I can't quite figure out. Unless it is that sagacious persons at the helm have already discovered that American music requires American conducting (I refer you again to the German, Russian, French and English precedents) and that they are scared stiff that the local boys can't rival Europeans at mere leadership. If Mr. Barbirolli is the European competition, I think no one need worry. Both Smallens and Barlow are far better musicians and more experienced leaders. And there are three thousand more where they came from conducting America's three thousand symphony orchestras today.

This Clipping From CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE
MAY 25 1941

All-American Group to Play Concert June 2

By Edward Barry.

Not for many seasons, if ever, has a musical event of major interest come as late as June 2. Yet the concert by Leopold Stokowski and the All-American Youth orchestra in the Civic Opera house a week from tomorrow is undoubtedly such an event. Both conductor and orchestra are unique; both have an impressive record of accomplishment behind them.

Really to grasp Stokowski's uniqueness you have to try to imagine Toscanini, Koussevitzky, and Stock leading the kind of life outside the concert hall that he does. You have to imagine them being congratulated by Mickey Mouse, co-starring with Deanna Durbin, figuring in countless newspaper stories with Greta Garbo. You have to imagine them experimenting with electrical and mechanical apparatus, burning midnight oil over treatises on acoustics, and flying all over the country listening to young bassoonists and bass players.

* * *

Comparing Stokowski to Toscanini, Koussevitzky, and Stock is not far fetched, because he, like they, has been a successful conductor of a major orchestra and a musician of very great distinction. Even those who do not like him or who deplore the character and extent of his extra-curricular interests and his frequent lapses from what may be regarded as the best taste will admit that he made the Philadelphia orchestra one of the world's great musical organizations.

Yet a man who has compelled even his enemies to bow to the greatness of his musicianship will, without turning a hair, conduct [for the movies] an arrangement of Schubert's "Ave Maria" which suggests those used in the stage shows of movie theaters during Christmas or Easter week. And he will act out a scene where an orchestra's playing of the Second Hungarian Rhapsody so inflames him that he cannot but break into the gestures of a conductor.

Stokowski is endlessly curious about the worlds which lie close to the world of conventional concert music, and his restless mind has precipitated him into them. He has worked in films, in recording, and in radio, studying sound problems and experimenting endlessly, not only with old instruments and forms but with the new and untried as well.

His importance in this respect is enormous, for he has brought a fine musical intelligence and a healthy impatience with mere tradition to bear on a variety of musical problems. He has not hesitated to challenge conventional ideas—even when those ideas have the support of generations of musicians. He will reseat the orchestra and use an acoustical reflector if he believes that by so doing the music's quality will be improved.

And he has not the ordinary musician's distrust of the mechanical and the electrical. He has realized that electrical musical instruments are being developed at a rapid rate, and he has determined that this development should be used to extend still further music's expressive power. If electrical musical instruments are to be the instruments of the future—and this seems rather likely at the present writing—their flexibility and genuine artistic value will certainly be due partly to Stokowski's interest in them during their years of development.

That the conductor has an independent, inquiring mind has been proved not alone in his work with sound but in a variety of other ways as well. He has experimented with the relationship between music and visual color, conducting the "Scheherazade" suite while a series of colors was flashed on a screen. He has tried to do away with audience applause, with stage lighting, and the baton. He has abolished the post of concert master and rotated his first violins in that position. His pictures and his views were appearing in the news sections of the newspapers even in the days when music usually was confined to a few inches on the back page.

* * *

Stokowski's musical career began in the year 1900 when he was appointed organist of St. James' church, London. [He had been born in that city 18 years before.] In 1905 he came to America and became organist of St. Bartholomew's church in New York. He acquired some conducting experience in London during a visit to his homeland in 1908, but his first important assignment of this kind came in 1909 when he was appointed conductor of the Cincinnati Symphony orchestra.

In 1912 Stokowski became conductor of the Philadelphia orchestra, and for nearly 30 years his name and that of the orchestra were almost synonomous. In 1936, it is true, he resigned the full conductorship, but it was only in this year of 1941 that he completely severed his connection with the orchestra.

Movie and sound work did not fully satisfy the restless and energetic Stokowski, and about a year and a half ago he began work on a new project—a youth orchestra. During the spring of 1940 he assembled the first All-American Youth orchestra, which consisted of about 100 boys and girls, mostly between the ages of 18 and 25, and about nine veterans from the Philadelphia orchestra. This outfit he whipped into shape in record time and took it off on a good will tour of South America.

* * *

In making up the All-American Youth orchestra of 1941 Stokowski retained about half of the 1940 membership, and to make up the remainder he once more undertook the Herculean task of traveling to every part of the country to listen to young musicians. As in 1940 he had the cooperation of the National Youth administration, which conducted preliminary auditions and presented the conductor with a comparatively small selection of the best players available in each district.

In his work with his youth orchestras Stokowski has successfully challenged still another ancient belief—the belief that a good orchestra can be created only by many years of routining and coöperative effort. He has been content to substitute youth and enthusiasm for experience and has asked only that each player have a perfect technical command of his instrument. The results, judging from reports, have been excellent.

According to present indications, the All-American Youth orchestra will be a permanent, or at least an annually recurrent, institution. It will begin work each spring after regular orchestra seasons have ended and will disband sometime during the summer. This year's plans call for a transcontinental concert tour ending on the west coast in July. In 1942 the orchestra's itinerary will include Mexico City, the capitals of the Central American republics, and both the west and east coasts of South America.

The concert of June 2 here is a benefit for the Chicago Lighthouse for the Blind. The program is not yet at hand, but will be printed in this section next Sunday.

THIS CLIPPING FROM HARPERS MAGAZINE
NEW YORK, N. Y.
JUL -- 1941

POETS

THE poets of the month include Elford Caughey, J. P. Chamberlain, and Clayton Hamilton. Mr. Chamberlain, a newcomer, went to Princeton University where he was managing editor of the Nassau Lit., and then went to work for the New York Herald Tribune. At the moment he is news editor of The Spectator, an insurance trade weekly. Mr. Caughey, who has written poetry for Harper's before, is a member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Mr. Hamilton is better known as a playwright and a dramatic commentator than as a poet. Between 1906 and 1926 he wrote six plays which were produced in New York; he has written fourteen books—mostly about the theater—and edited sixteen more. He says: "I now devote my summers to my avocation as a yachtsman."

Pops

y-Radcliffe
last night
ony Hall. T
Bertolami, p
Haft, Esther
Silberberg,
r conducted phony players
m:

March..... usic from "Ros s Festival Ove for 3 cellos and oncerto in C ma from "Der Rosen
nd Day".....
arian Dance....

vent of last
s Miss Bertol
art C major rtolami is a nd she dese cum laude, f f the Concer good techni
he qualities a om the orer, it is small in ingratiat-of Mozart's

hich shared
l Pops night, only because per for three ot in a class
as a virtuoso
e wrote both bly for that tration—and ces's enjoy-
king in this professional ft and the Silberberg. enough, all encore for
s. The rest
ue to Pops
A. W. W.

Wald

Norma Bartolami

Radcliffe student, soloist in Mozart Piano Concerto in C at the Pops Thursday night.

NEW YORK HERALD TRIBUNE
MAY 25 1941

PHILHARMONIC—II

By VIRGIL THOMSON

LAST week this column animadverted on the desirability of the Philharmonic's turning its attention away from conductors and conducting, with all the sterile deification of the past that those involve, and on to the live musical issues of the day. I opined that in view of the Philharmonic's position as our national orchestra of the air, it is necessary that it offer its ten million listeners a vigorous musical policy rather than a parade of tailcoats visible only in Carnegie Hall. I referred also to the musical inefficiencies that have resulted from our orchestra's having had no serious, first-class, regular and more or less permanent drill master since well before 1900. And I concluded that in view of a possible change in its conductor (or in any renewal of the present conductor's contract), the governing board would serve both New York City and the whole United States best if it demanded of any prospective conductor a musical program aimed at putting the Philharmonic back on its feet musically and giving it the rôle to play in our national creative life to which its ancient prestige, its nation-wide public and its elevated budget all obligate it. Equally important is it, too, that the conductor who proposes any such program be given time and full authority to carry it out. A five-year plan, I called it on another occasion.

• • •

A Five-Year Plan

WHAT would such a plan entail as program? One thing only. A placing of the Philharmonic's whole weight and prestige on the side of the creative musical forces in New York City and in the United States at large. Any other policy must end by placing it in opposition to those forces, not a pretty position nor a worthy one.

I admit that its position for forty years has largely been, when you compare it to similar organizations in Boston, in Chicago, in Philadelphia even, not to speak of Minneapolis and Detroit, one of extreme conservatism about living music. And music writing has gone on just the same. So well, indeed, that America finds herself today the center of musical creation in the Western World. The present concentration of composers here is due partly to racial and to political intolerance in Europe. It is due also to the inability just now of our own men of genius to leave these shores for others that have in the past sometimes been more friendly toward creative originality. But the sum of it all is that America is now the seat of a vigorous musical culture. The number of foreign-born musicians among the leaders of that culture is not nearly so large as the number of native citizens. This fact is interesting, though of small importance. For America itself is the dominating element in practically all music made in America, just as Austria, Germany, Italy and France have always given to composers resident on their soil an inalienable orientation. This unconscious Americanism is not always easy to see from here; from abroad it is visible to practically any one's naked eye.

• • •

The Philharmonic Needs Modern Music

THAT the gigantic flowering of musical composition that is already so far advanced here could be hindered by the Philharmonic's continuing to hide its head in the sand is absurd. We have come to fruition without its aid; we can go our way without its climbing on our bandwagon. I am not certain that it can get on without us, however. The W. P. A. has changed all that, the W. P. A. and the radio. Three thousand symphony orchestras in the United States, most of them founded since 1930, are playing American music today; and millions are listening to it with pleasure. It is a relief from stale standard repertory. Composers' Forum-Laboratories in a dozen cities have sharpened the musical public's discrimination, have pierced through the composer's frustration and solitude, have shown everybody that good will toward the authorship of musical works can produce a more lively musical occasion than all the Little Caesarism in the world exercised upon the defenseless dead. If the American music lover should continue in the next few years progressively to turn his attention away from the rendition of music and to study more its design, as he does seem inclined to do, the Philharmonic will have to move over our way; or else it will be out of the picture. I understand its Crossley rating on the air fell off last year from ten million to eight and a half, and a radio executive has told me that the listening public for any orchestral program seems to care more about what is played than about who conducts. Toscanini's conducting, for instance, which can be so electrifying in a hall, is, comparatively speaking, a flop in the American home. Barbirolli gets by, so far as he does, by the fact that 5 o'clock, Eastern Standard, of a Sunday afternoon is a nationally convenient hour to listen to serious music and also by the fact that the Philharmonic, for all its jitteriness, is a better orchestra, man by man, than the N. B. C., the only other symphonic group enjoying regularly a national hook-up.

And so, if the Philharmonic wishes to keep its place in American musical life, I think it needs to face squarely the fact that America, under its very nose, is changing from a music consumer into a music producer and to put its policy in line with that change. I think, therefore, that it should ease off on repeating Brahms and Beethoven and start playing the music of our century. It should play not only Americans and American residents but all the modern European music out of which these were born. And it should chose out of the vast repertory of the Romantic, the Rococo and the Baroque masters (a repertory barely skimmed now) all the works that explain or that set off by contrast the works of the modern masters and of us their progeny, the only possible legitimate center of emphasis in a vigorous musical culture.

• • •

Modern Music Need Not Be Unpopular

TO THOSE who think sincerely that the general public doesn't like modern music I answer that it has been told not to like modern music, that modern music has been framed to flop, that it has been consistently played up by star conductors (naturally eager to hog the stage for their war horses) and by the critical ignorant either as shockingly incomprehensible or as utterly tame. That a certain shock is inevitable on first hearing a work for which one is unprepared I do not deny. But that such shock cannot be cushioned by programs which would prepare the listener to understand the new work I do deny. I have always admired Pierre Monteux for his revealing juxtapositions. When he first gave the "Sacre du Printemps" in 1923, he played Beethoven's Pastoral Symphony with it. Boston took the new piece like a lamb, because, although the musical idiom and syntax of it were strange to many, it was possible to recognize without undue cerebration that it too was a pastoral symphony, a musical picture of man's relation to soil and season.

• • •

European Precedent Supports My Plan

THE history of opera in Germany and in Russia, of orchestral music in France and in England, follows a pattern. As soon as the local creative movement has had a small basic repertory and a few composers capable of supplying more, executant organizations have always profited by backing the new movement. That movement, once it has been made the center of attention, has thereupon absorbed everything to itself. Conductors have been judged in terms of how well they played the local music, the immediate past in terms of how well it explains that music, the classics in terms of how well they complemented the contemporary tradition. Deliberate insistence on the new repertory and constant education of music lovers by critics and by executant leaders have invariably succeeded in making the public conscious of its own time and receptive to its own time's work. And since any time naturally prefers itself to the past and its own art work (when it can get it) to that of any other time and place, the public has always been extremely grateful to persons and to organizations who have put themselves to the trouble of making the age conscious of itself as beautiful.

If you want to see what can be done by backing a creative movement in its budding stage, read the history of the French orchestras in the latter half of the nineteenth century, of how the conductors Lamoureux and Colonne helped to make modern French music possible by believing in it (and all modernism) long before Debussy and Ravel were ever heard of. Compare the state of music in England fifty years ago with what it is now (both as to composition and as to performance) since Thomas Beecham has poked his baton into every cranny of it. We are more advanced here than England is. Our executants are more skillful, our composers more incisive. I mention the English case to show what can be made out of a seemingly hopeless situation. What could be done with the American situation under the leadership of our nationally respected Philharmonic surpasses all conjecture. What will certainly happen to that august outfit if it neglects its opportunity is too depressing to imagine.

Why it continues to fight the current I can't quite figure out. Unless it is that sagacious persons at the helm have already discovered that American music requires American conducting (I refer you again to the German, Russian, French and English precedents) and that they are scared stiff that the local boys can't rival Europeans at mere leadership. If Mr. Barbirolli is the European competition, I think no one need worry. Both Smallens and Barlow are far better musicians and more experienced leaders. And there are three thousand more where they came from conductors today.

This Clipping From CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE
MAY 25 1941

All-American Group to Play Concert June 2

By Edward Barry.

Not for many seasons, if ever, has a musical event of major interest come as late as June 2. Yet the concert by Leopold Stokowski and the All-American Youth orchestra in the Civic Opera house a week from tomorrow is undoubtedly such an event. Both conductor and orchestra are unique; both have an impressive record of accomplishment behind them.

Really to grasp Stokowski's uniqueness you have to try to imagine Toscanini, Koussevitzky, and Stock leading the kind of life outside the concert hall that he does. You have to imagine them being congratulated by Mickey Mouse, co-starring with Deanna Durbin, figuring in countless newspaper stories with Greta Garbo. You have to imagine them experimenting with electrical and mechanical apparatus, burning midnight oil over treatises on acoustics, and flying all over the country listening to young bassoonists and bass players.

• • •

Comparing Stokowski to Toscanini, Koussevitzky, and Stock is not far fetched, because he, like they, has been a successful conductor of a major orchestra and a musician of very great distinction. Even those who do not like him or who deplore the character and extent of his extra-curricular interests and his frequent lapses from what may be regarded as the best taste will admit that he made the Philadelphia orchestra one of the world's great musical organizations.

Yet a man who has compelled even his enemies to bow to the greatness of his musicianship will, without turning a hair, conduct [for the movies] an arrangement of Schubert's "Ave Maria" which suggests those used in the stage shows of movie theaters during Christmas or Easter week. And he will act out a scene where an orchestra's playing of the Second Hungarian Rhapsody so inflames him that he cannot but break into the gestures of a conductor.

Stokowski is endlessly curious about the worlds which lie close to the world of conventional concert music, and his restless mind has precipitated him into them. He has worked in films, in recording, and in radio, studying sound problems and experimenting endlessly, not only with old instruments and forms but with the new and untried as well.

His importance in this respect is enormous, for he has brought a fine musical intelligence and a healthy impatience with mere tradition to bear on a variety of musical problems. He has not hesitated to challenge conventional ideas—even when those ideas have the support of generations of musicians. He will reseat the orchestra and use an acoustical reflector if he believes that by so doing the music's quality will be improved.

And he has not the ordinary musician's distrust of the mechanical and the electrical. He has realized that electrical musical instruments are being developed at a rapid rate, and he has determined that this development should be used to extend still further music's expressive power. If electrical musical instruments are to be the instruments of the future—and this seems rather likely at the present writing—their flexibility and genuine artistic value will certainly be due partly to Stokowski's interest in them during their years of development.

That the conductor has an independent, inquiring mind has been proved not alone in his work with sound but in a variety of other ways as well. He has experimented with the relationship between music and visual color, conducting the "Scheherazade" suite while a series of colors was flashed on a screen. He has tried to do away with audience applause, with stage lighting, and the baton. He has abolished the post of concert master and rotated his first violins in that position. His pictures and his views were appearing in the news sections of the newspapers even in the days when music usually was confined to a few inches on the back page.

• • •

Stokowski's musical career began in the year 1900 when he was appointed organist of St. James' church, London. [He had been born in that city 18 years before.] In 1905 he came to America and became organist of St. Bartholomew's church in New York. He acquired some conducting experience in London during a visit to his homeland in 1908, but his first important assignment of this kind came in 1909 when he was appointed conductor of the Cincinnati Symphony orchestra.

In 1912 Stokowski became conductor of the Philadelphia orchestra, and for nearly 30 years his name and that of the orchestra were almost synonemous. In 1936, it is true, he resigned the full conductorship, but it was only in this year of 1941 that he completely severed his connection with the orchestra.

Movie and sound work did not fully satisfy the restless and energetic Stokowski, and about a year and a half ago he began work on a new project—a youth orchestra. During the spring of 1940 he assembled the first All-American Youth orchestra, which consisted of about 100 boys and girls, mostly between the ages of 18 and 25, and about nine veterans from the Philadelphia orchestra. This outfit he whipped into shape in record time and took it off on a good will tour of South America.

• • •

In making up the All-American Youth orchestra of 1941 Stokowski retained about half of the 1940 membership, and to make up the remainder he once more undertook the Herculean task of traveling to every part of the country to listen to young musicians. As in 1940 he had the cooperation of the National Youth administration, which conducted preliminary auditions and presented the conductor with a comparatively small selection of the best players available in each district.

In his work with his youth orchestras Stokowski has successfully challenged still another ancient belief—the belief that a good orchestra can be created only by many years of routining and coöperative effort. He has been content to substitute youth and enthusiasm for experience and has asked only that each player have a perfect technical command of his instrument. The results, judging from reports, have been excellent.

According to present indications, the All-American Youth orchestra will be a permanent, or at least an annually recurrent, institution. It will begin work each spring after regular orchestra seasons have ended and will disband sometime during the summer. This year's plans call for a transcontinental concert tour ending on the west coast in July. In 1942 the orchestra's itinerary will include Mexico City, the capitals of the Central American republics, and both the west and east coasts of South America.

The concert of June 2 here is a benefit for the Chicago Lighthouse for the Blind. The program is not yet at hand, but will be printed in this section next Sunday.

THIS CLIPPING FROM HARPERS MAGAZINE
NEW YORK, N. Y.
JUL -- 1941

POETS

THE poets of the month include Elford Caughey, J. P. Chamberlain, and Clayton Hamilton. Mr. Chamberlain, a newcomer, went to Princeton University where he was managing editor of the Nassau Lit., and then went to work for the New York Herald Tribune. At the moment he is news editor of The Spectator, an insurance trade weekly. Mr. Caughey, who has written poetry for Harper's before, is a member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Mr. Hamilton is better known as a playwright and a dramatic commentator than as a poet. Between 1906 and 1926 he wrote six plays which were produced in New York; he has written fourteen books—mostly about the theater—and edited sixteen more. He says: "I now devote my summers to my avocation as a yachtsman."

Pops

y-Radcliffe
last night
ony Hall. T
Bertolami,
Haft, Esther
Silberberg,
conducted phony player n:
March..... usic from "Ro Festival Ove r 2 cellos and ncerto in C ma
rom "Der Rose
nd Day".....
arian Dance... vent of last
s Miss Bertol
art C major rtolami is a nd she das
cum laude, f
f the Concer good techn he qualities

om the orr, it is small n ingratiat-of Mozart's
hich shared
l Pops night,
only because per for three ot in a class
s a virtuoso
e wrote both ly for that ration—and es's enjoy-
king in this rofessional
t and the Silberberg. enough, all encore for
The rest to Pops
A. W. W.

Walt
Norma Bartolami
Radcliffe student, soloist in Mozart Piano Concerto in C at the Pops Thursday night.

VILLARD 20c ALL DAY Fredric March "VICTORY"—Edmund Lowe, "Double Date"

VILLA PARK

YORK James Stewart, Hedy Lamarr, Martha Scott "COME LIVE WITH ME" "Cheers For Miss Bishop"

ELMHURST

ROXY Hedy Lamarr, James Stewart in "COME LIVE WITH ME" Bonnie Baker, Ortin Tucker, "YOU'RE THE ONE"

BERWYN

BERWYN Open 1:00—MARTHA SCOTT "CHEERS FOR MISS BISHOP" Tommy Dorsey, Bert Wheeler, "LAS VEGAS NIGHTS"

NEW RITZ 6343 Roosevelt Rd.—Open 1 P. M. James Stewart "Come Live With Me" Hedy Lamarr Extra—Information, Please "YOU'RE THE ONE" Bonnie Baker Ortin Tucker

PALACE 5525 W. 25th 15c TO 5 Hedy Lamarr "Strawberry Blonde"—Mr. District Attorney

VILLAS 5603 W. Cermak Road—Open 1 P. M. Bonnie Baker "YOU'RE THE ONE" Ortin Tucker and His Band Jerry Colonna Plus "Come Live With Me" James Stewart Hedy Lamarr

OLYMPIC 6136 W. CERMAK ROAD DOORS OPEN 1 P. M. In Technicolor "WESTERN UNION" Randolph Scott "HIGH SIERRA" H. BOGART Ida LUPINO

CICERO

DEERPATH Barbara Stanwyck, Henry Fonda, Charles Coburn, Eugene Pallette, Eric Blore in "THE LADY EVE"

LAKE FOREST

ALCYON Arthur Kennedy, Olympe Bradna, MICKEY ROONEY—ANN RUTHERFORD "KNOCKOUT" "Andy Hardy's Private Secretary"

HIGHLAND PARK

CLENCOE 1:30 Wm. Gargan "CHEERS FOR MISS BISHOP" Plus Tommy Dorsey & Band—Bert Wheeler "LAS VEGAS NIGHTS"

MARCH OF TIME, "F. B. I.—1941"

HOMEWOOD

HOMEWOOD "WESTERN UNION" RANDOLPH SCOTT "BACK STREET," C. Boyer, M. Sullavan

DOWNERS GROVE

TIVOLI Open 1:30—MARTHA SCOTT "CHEERS FOR MISS BISHOP" Plus Tommy Dorsey, Bert Wheeler, "LAS VEGAS Nights"

DES PLAINES

DES PLAINES COOL James Stewart, Hedy Lamarr "COME LIVE WITH ME" Bonnie Baker, Ortin Tucker, "YOU'RE THE ONE"

LAKE "COME LIVE WITH ME" James Stewart, Hedy Lamarr, Bonnie Baker, Ortin Tucker, CHARLES GRAPEWIN in "TOBACCO ROAD"

SOUTHERN 828 S. Oak Park Av. COOL James CAGNEY, Olivia De HAVILLAND "STRAWBERRY BLONDE" & Carole LOMBARD Rob't MONTGOMERY, "MR. AND MRS. SMITH"

LAMAR LAKE STREET "L" COOL Robert MONTGOMERY in "RANGE LAW" Plus "EMERGENCY LANDING" & BOB HOPE COMEDY HIT "Mickey Mouse, Donald Duck"

TOWN Roosevelt at Austin Blvd. 20c ALL COOL Boris KARLOFF "THE DEVIL COMMANDS" "RAGE IN HEAVEN" Plus MICKEY ROONEY in "ANDY HARDY'S PRIVATE SECRETARY"

OAK PARK

"GONE WITH THE WIND"
STARTING TOMORROW

"GOLDEN HOOFS"
Jane Withers & Buddy Rogers

"Lone Wolf Takes a Chance"
WARREN WILLIAM

"YOU'RE THE ONE"
Bonnie Baker & BAND & Ortin Tucker

STADIUM
3 FEATURES! TODAY ONLY! START 1:45
1700 Comfort Free Parking

CORONET Starts 2:00—James Cagney, Olivia De Havilland, "STRAWBERRY BLONDE" Plus Carole Lombard, Robt Montgomery, "MR. AND MRS. SMITH"

VARSITY Sts. 1—Topper Returns "TOPPER RETURNS" Joan Blondell, "Rochester," Roland Young Plus Freddie MARCH, Margaret SULLAVAN "SO ENDS OUR NIGHT"

VALENCIA EVANSTON TODAY 3 DAYS ONLY Gone With The Wind
OPEN 12:30 P.M. CONTINUOUS FROM 1 P.M. ADULTS 55c ALL DAY TODAY CHILD 25c 10 5 P.M. Def. Tax Inc.
Nothing But But The Price!

Balaban & Katz Air-Conditioned Theatres
EVANSTON

A N ●

CHELTEN 79th-Exchange—James Cagney, "STRAWBERRY BLONDE," C. Lombard, R. Montgomery, "MR. & MRS. SMITH"

MIDWAY COOL! 3 Hits—Fredric March, DATE, G. Parker, "NOAH OF THE PRESS" "VICTORY" Edmund Lowe, "DOUBLE

WOODLAWN COOL! 3 Hits—Bob Young, "SPORTING BLOOD" Bela Lugosi, "Invisible Ghost," "Emergency Landing"

ACADIA 2739 W. 55th—Today-Tomorrow-Tues. Jane Withers, "GOLDEN HOOFS" O. De Haviland, J. Cagney, "Strawberry Blonde"

LEX 1162 E. 63rd—COOLED by Refrigeration "Come Live With Me," Stewart, Lamarr "YOU'RE THE ONE," B. Baker, Ortin Tucker

MILDA 3138 S. Halsted—Carole Lombard, "MR. AND MRS. SMITH"—Also O. De Haviland, J. Cagney, "Strawberry Blonde"

RAMOVA 3534 S. Halsted—Gene Tierney, Ronnie Baker, Ortin Tucker, "COME LIVE WITH ME" "YOU'RE THE ONE" In "TOBACCO ROAD" Phil Regan in "LAS VEGAS NIGHTS"

JACKSON PK. Private James Stewart, Hedy Lamarr, "COME LIVE WITH ME" Bonnie Baker, Ortin Tucker, "YOU'RE THE ONE"

KIMBARK 6240 Kimbark—Op. 12:30—Jane Withers, "GOLDEN HOOFS"—Boris Karloff, "DEVIL COMMANDS" & "Old Cheyenne Trail"

THOMAS MITCHELL, "TWILIGHT FROM DESTINY"

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HARPERS MAGAZINE
NEW YORK, N. Y.

JUL - - 1941

POETS

THE poets of the month include Elford Caughey, J. P. Chamberlain, and Clayton Hamilton. Mr. Chamberlain, a newcomer, went to Princeton University where he was managing editor of the Nassau Lit., and then went to work for the New York Herald Tribune. At the moment he is news editor of The Spectator, an insurance trade weekly. Mr. Caughey, who has written poetry for Harper's before, is a member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Mr. Hamilton is better known as a playwright and a dramatic commentator than as a poet. Between 1906 and 1926 he wrote six plays which were produced in New York; he has written fourteen books—mostly about the theater—and edited sixteen more. He says: "I now devote my summers to my avocation as a yachtsman."

ADOLF DEHN
Water Colors
Associated American Artists
711 FIFTH AVENUE • NEW YORK

Drama of Welsh Coal Miners Filmed at Pits Despite the War

"PROUD VALLEY," starring Paul Robeson, which is having its American stage premiere at the Little Carnegie Playhouse, dramatizes the Welsh coal fields and the struggle of the miners. The film was produced by Michael Balcon, whose Welsh ancestry prompted him to undertake a story of his people, the colliers whose courage is being epitomized also in the current Ethel Barrymore play "The Corn Is Green."

"Once a Welshman," says Balcon, "always a Welshman, who for many years nurtured the idea of a picture about Wales. Two summers ago his plans crystallized when he made an automobile trip through Wales with Pen Tennyson, the director who worked with him on "The Citadel," "A Yank at Oxford" and "Let George Do It." They were so impressed by the countryside and picturesque villages, with their quaint customs, that they decided to make the picture there. Despite the war broke out and for a time it seemed as if it would not be completed, since the actual mines had to be used as backgrounds and activity in the pits was so great that the authorities objected to the filming. Balcon, however, won permission. The section shown in the picture has become a frequent target of enemy bombers.

Paul Robeson, as Chapman, who has played on the American stage with Dame May Whitty, Rachel Thomas makes her first screen appearance as the "Proud Valley" was started just as the war broke out and for a time it was decided not to be completed, since the actual mines had to be used as backgrounds and activity in the pits was so great that the authorities objected to the filming. Balcon, however, won permission. The section shown in the picture has become a frequent target of enemy bombers.

Welsh miners, who have been described as "the most musical people in the world," are famous for their choral singing. Robeson, who is a native of Princeton, N. J., is a graduate of Rutgers University and a Phi Beta Kappa. He was a star athlete at Rutgers and played professional football for a time. He has also been a concert singer and actor on the London stage.

Welsh miners, who have been described as "the most musical people in the world," are famous for their choral singing. Robeson, who is a native of Princeton, N. J., is a graduate of Rutgers University and a Phi Beta Kappa. He was a star athlete at Rutgers and played professional football for a time. He has also been a concert singer and actor on the London stage.

Art Brevities

A special showing of wood carvings of animals in more than a dozen different varieties of woods, is being held in Forestry Hall at the Museum of Natural History. The carvings are the works of Helen E. Creighton, of Washington, who has depicted thirty breeds of dogs, several horses and caricatures of animals, all in miniature. The carvings will be on display until June 15.

* * *

Luis Quintanilla, Spanish painter and mural artist, has completed a series of fresco decorations on the subject of "Don Quixote" at the University of Kansas City. The paintings will have their initial showing today at the university.

* * *

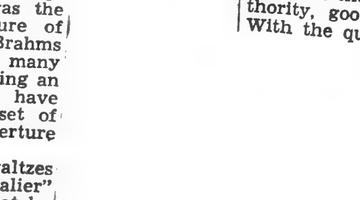
Frederic Taubes has been appointed Carnegie Visiting Professor of Art by the University of Illinois for the academic year 1941-42. Russell Limbach has received a similar appointment from Wesleyan University for the same period. The Limbach appointment also was made with the co-operation of the Carnegie Foundation. Mr. Taubes, a former Viennese artist, is the author of a recently published book, "The Technique of Oil Painting." Mr. Limbach is well known for his prints as well as paintings, and like Mr. Taubes, has had work acquired by several museums.

* * *

Eighty drypoints by Philip Kappel, dealing with sailing, life at sea, and scenes of travel in Egypt, Morocco, France, Haiti and New England, are being shown in the Davison Art Rooms, Wesleyan University. The exhibition continues a series of print shows being held by the University, and will be on view through May.

Ernest Townsend, who has painted the seacoasts from Britanny to Maine and Nova Scotia, has a small show of his oils at the Little Gallery, in the Barbizon Hotel. Some of the scenes are competently impressionistic in style, but others show a richer sense of form and color. On the latter trend, his most successful work is "The Harbor, Monhegan," a fine, substantial picture of cool, clear, scriptive symbols, within wide, unwashed borders of white background, is a characteristic device of this artist. Several studies and models for stage designs created by the artist also are shown in the exhibition. Some of these were used for the production of the baroque morality play "Cenodoxus," produced at Santa Clara University.

From the bust by Malvina Hoffman, at the Knoedler Gallery



Coastal Subjects

Ernest Townsend, who has painted the seacoasts from Britanny to Maine and Nova Scotia, has a small show of his oils at the Little Gallery, in the Barbizon Hotel. Some of the scenes are competently impressionistic in style, but others show a richer sense of form and color. On the latter trend, his most successful work is "The Harbor, Monhegan," a fine, substantial picture of cool, clear,

Flower Paintings

There are only twelve watercolors in Juliette Bendix's current show at the Durand-Ruel Gallery. All are flower subjects and very simple in style. So simple, in fact, is this artist's sense of a subject that rarely does she use more than a few blossoms of pink, white or yellow roses. She draws and paints these things, however, with great taste for color—varying the harmonies by introducing deft touches of tone in the backgrounds. An amusing detail which further accentuates the personal note in her work is the signature—worked into each design on a white visiting card. It is all very French, and quite charming.

MUSIC

SYMPHONY HALL

Radcliffe-Longy Pops

It was Radcliffe College-Longy School Night at the Pops in Symphony Hall, last evening, and there were four soloists. Norma Bertolami, Radcliffe '42, played the Mozart C major Piano Concerto (K. 467) with Arthur Fiedler and the Orchestra, and Gerard Haft, Esther Parshley and Olivia Silberberg, cellists three from the Longy School, were heard in Popper's Adagio.

Professional finish and polish characterized Miss Bertolami's performance of the delectable Mozart Concerto. Her playing was more than competent; it had a fluency, style and poise that bespoke both talent and intelligence. A carefully listening ear could pick out a few shortcomings—tone that became a little hard in loud passages, a few differences with the conductor's beat. But such were as nothing in view of the general excellence of the performance. Miss Bertolami deserved the considerable applause she received.

The three musicians from the Longy School had less opportunity to shine in Popper's conservative yet pleasant Adagio. All three nevertheless gave a satisfactory account of the music.

Mr. Fiedler's program was one of the season's best, so far. First came the "Rakoczy" March of Berlioz, then Schubert's ballet music from "Rosamunde." Especially appropriate to the evening was the "Academic Festival" Overture of Brahms. This, surely, is Brahms at his most lovable. How many other great composers, receiving an honorary degree, would not have sent a double fugue or a set of variations instead of an overture full of student songs?

Mr. Fiedler can play the waltzes from Strauss' "Der Rosenkavalier" with more brio and accent that he did last night. Cole Porter's "Night and Day"—a grand tune—and the Sixth Hungarian Dance of Brahms completed the list. The audience filled Symphony Hall. C. W. D.

The Pops

Longy-Radcliffe Night was celebrated last night at the Pops in Symphony Hall. The soloists were Norma Bertolami, pianist, and Gerard Haft, Esther Parshley and Olivia Silberberg, cellists. Arthur Fiedler conducted the orchestra of 85 symphony players in the following program:

Rakoczy March	Berlioz
Ballet Music from "Rosamunde"	Schubert
Academic Festival Overture	Brahms
Adagio for 3 cellos and orchestra	Popper
Piano Concerto in C major K. 467	Mozart
Waltzes from "Der Rosenkavalier"	Strauss
"Night and Day"	Porter
6th Hungarian Dance	Brahms

The event of last night's Pop concert was Miss Bertolami's plaiyng of the Mozart C major Piano Concerto. Miss Bertolami is a junior at Radcliffe, and she deserves a degree, magna cum laude, for her interpretation of the Concerto. She had authority, good technique and taste. With the qualities and a sympathetic accompaniment from the orchestra, under Mr. Fiedler, it is small wonder that we heard an ingratiating perofrmance of one of Mozart's concerto masterpieces.

The Longy School, which shared the honors of this special Pops night, emerged less imposingly only because the Adagio by David Popper for three cellos and orchestra is not in a class with Mozart. Popper was a virtuoso cellist (1843-1913), and he wrote both industriously and capably for that instrument. But inspiration—and consequently an auidences's enjoyment—was somewhat lacking in this adagio, in spite of the professional competence of Mr. Haft and the Misses Parshley and Silberberg. There was appreciation enough, all the same, to demand an encore for the three of them alone. The rest of the concert ran true to Pops form. A. W. W.

Wald

Norma Bartolami

Radcliffe student, soloist in Mozart Piano Concerto in C at the Pops Thursday night.

Christian Science Monitor
June 2, 1941

Huntington Avenue Changes Forecast Fast Traffic Artery

Before many moons have passed Huntington Avenue, that much be-cluttered thoroughfare where excavations and sidewalk superintendents are still a familiar sight, will be a broad, smooth traffic artery leading to the center of downtown Boston.

Trees will line its sidewalks. City-bound traffic will dip swiftly under Massachusetts Avenue at the new underpass, reaching the surface next to the Park which lies in front of The Mother Church, The First Church of Christ, Scientist.

Already the street cars have disappeared, and where the old trolley reservation used to be, workmen are installing the granite edgestones for a six-foot dividing reservation to separate inbound and outbound traffic.

Removal of the car tracks—a step made possible by completion last February of the new $8,000,000 WPA-built Huntington Avenue subway—has cleared the way for the new vehicular underpass to carry Huntington Avenue traffic under Massachusetts Avenue. Witn the excavation for the underpass now mostly completed, and a fine white slab of pavement already laid on the downtown side, traffic should be turned into the new sluiceway some time in August.

The new subway, second-largest WPA project in the United States, was of course a big improvement to the Boston Elevated Railway system. But the chief reason for it, a reason well impressed upon Bostonians by ten years of debate and countless traffic jams at the corner of Huntington and Massachusetts Avenue next to Symphony Hall, was to clear Huntington Avenue of obstructions, i.e., street cars, so it could be turned into a much-needed fast highway to the center of Boston.

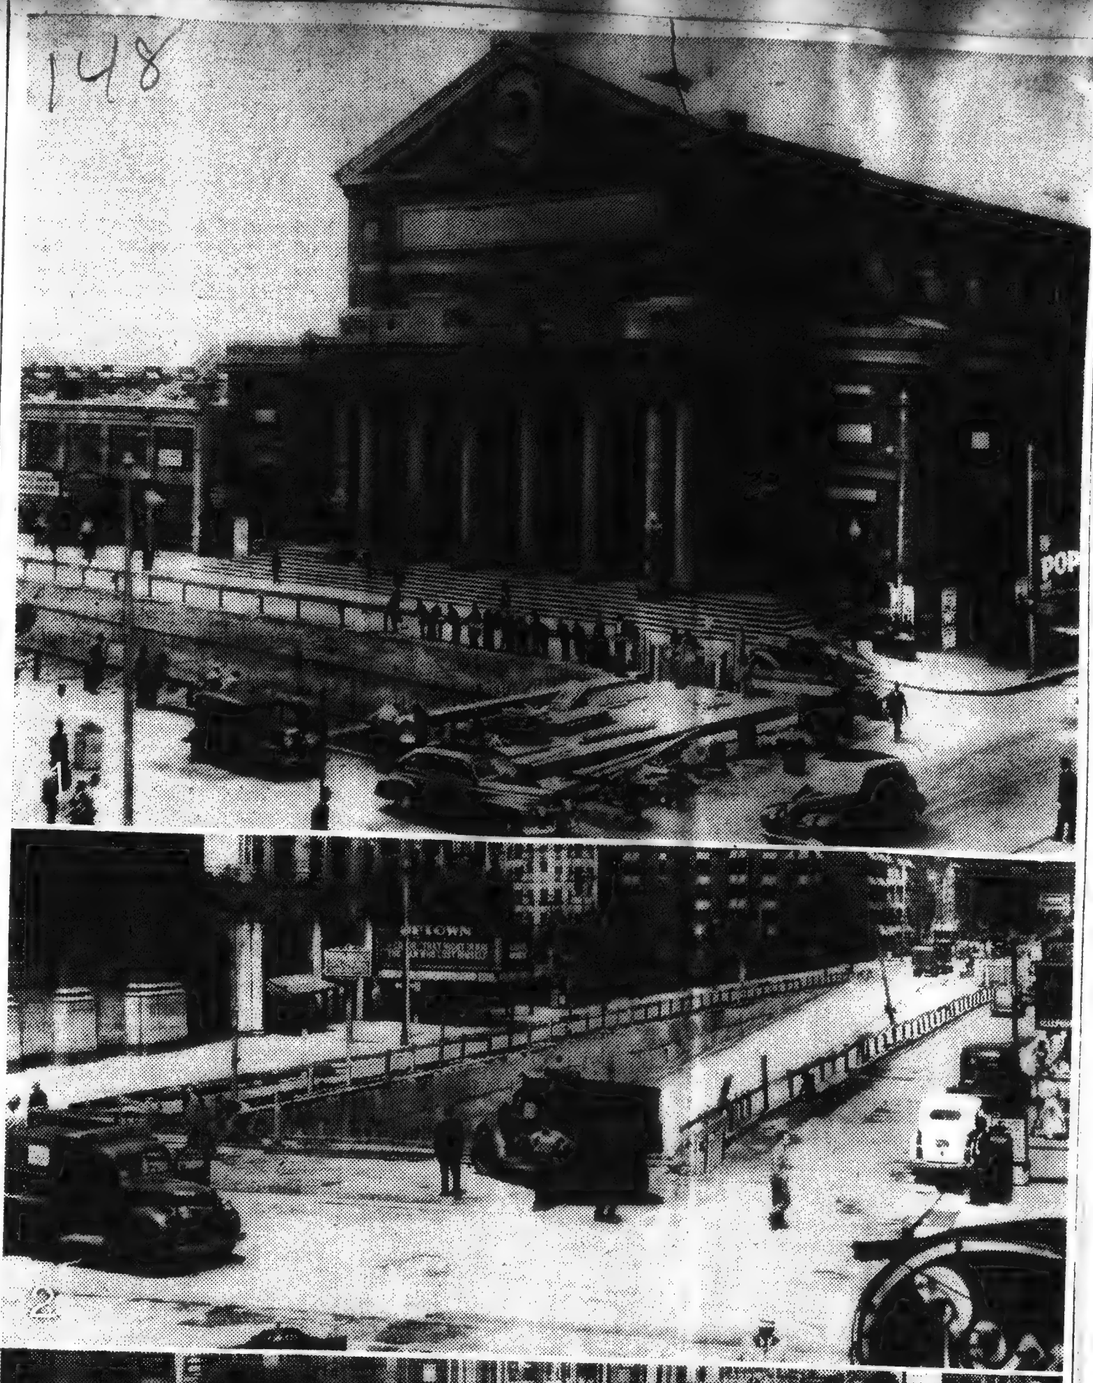
Connecting the heart of Boston with the Worcester turnpike, major highway to central Massachusetts, Connecticut and New York, the traffic factor was of outstanding importance.

The fact that two subway stations, one at Mechanics Building and the other at Massachusetts Avenue within a stone's throw of Symphony Hall, Horticultural Hall, Boston Arena and The Mother Church, replace the old block-by-block stops on the Huntington Avenue car line, means that commuters in the area are saving 5 to 30 minutes a day and riding in more comfort.

With a neat highway, tree-lined and with ornamental street-lights along the central reservation, replacing the old roadway with its noise and traffic jams, property owners of the district hope that property values along Huntington Avenue will be noticeably increased. From all indications the big improvement will result in a higher tone for the whole district.

Construction began at the Copley Square subway station in 1937, and the subway to Opera Place was completed about Feb. 15. That was the biggest job.

148



By a Staff Photographer

Changes at Intersection of Huntington and Massachusetts Avenues

1. The new underpass to carry Huntington Avenue traffic under Massachusetts Avenue will eliminate the traffic jams, with which every Bostonian is familiar, at the Hub's famous Symphony Hall. The view is looking across Huntington Avenue. Note the "sidewalk superintendents" watching construction along the railing to make sure the workmen are scooping out the underpass in proper fashion.

2. Huntington Avenue will be transformed into a fast traffic artery linking the main New York route with the center of Boston, as result of removal of the car tracks and building of the underpass. This view is looking down Huntington Avenue toward the City. In the upper center is part of the park next to The Mother Church, The First Church of Christ, Scientist. The church edifice is on Falmouth Street, one block to the left of Huntington Avenue. Symphony Station is thus only a block distant from The Mother Church.

3. The intersection as it used to be. This particular view was not taken during a rush period, or when there was a street car or two navigating the crossing, so you can imagine how busy the intersection used to be—especially just after a concert at Symphony Hall or at 5 p. m., when outbound traffic was heavy. The view is from a corner of Symphony Hall, looking south on Massachusetts Avenue.

REPUBLICAN GROUP at the fifth annual Pops concert sponsored by the Council of Young Women's Republican Clubs of Massachusetts at Symphony Hall last night. Left to right: Mrs. Julia B. Kirlin of Belmont; Mrs. Marcus A. Wells (front) of Worcester, general chairman; Miss Eleanor F. Wheeler, Brookline; Miss Jacqueline A. Harrison, Jamaica Plain; Miss Louise Rickard, Canton. Boston Herald June 7, 1941

Louis Speyer June 14
English horn soloist in "The Swan of Tuonela" at the Pops this evening. Christian Science

Christian Science Monitor
June 12, 1941

Huntington Avenue Changes Forecast Fast Traffic Artery

Before many moons have passed Huntington Avenue, that much be-cluttered thoroughfare where excavations and sidewalk superintendents are still a familiar sight, will be a broad, smooth traffic artery leading to the center of downtown Boston.

Trees will line its sidewalks. City-bound traffic will dip swiftly under Massachusetts Avenue at the new underpass, reaching the surface next to the Park which lies in front of The Mother Church, The First Church of Christ, Scientist.

Already the street cars have disappeared, and where the old trolley reservation used to be, workmen are installing the granite edgestones for a six-foot dividing reservation to separate inbound and outbound traffic.

Removal of the car tracks—a step made possible by completion last February of the new $8,000,000 WPA-built Huntington Avenue subway—has cleared the way for the new vehicular underpass to carry Huntington Avenue traffic under Massachusetts Avenue. Witn the excavation for the underpass now mostly completed, and a fine white slab of pavement already laid on the downtown side, traffic should be turned into the new sluiceway some time in August.

The new subway, second-largest WPA project in the United States, was of course a big improvement to the Boston Elevated Railway system. But the chief reason for it, a reason well impressed upon Bostonians by ten years of debate and countless traffic jams at the corner of Huntington and Massachusetts Avenue next to Symphony Hall, was to clear Huntington Avenue of obstructions, i.e., street cars, so it could be turned into a much-needed fast highway to the center of Boston.

Connecting the heart of Boston with the Worcester turnpike, major highway to central Massachusetts, Connecticut and New York, the traffic factor was of outstanding importance.

The fact that two subway stations, one at Mechanics Building and the other at Massachusetts Avenue within a stone's throw of Symphony Hall, Horticultural Hall, Boston Arena and The Mother Church, replace the old block-by-block stops on the Huntington Avenue car line, means that commuters in the area are saving 5 to 30 minutes a day and riding in more comfort.

With a neat highway, tre and with ornamental stree along the central reservati placing the old roadway w noise and traffic jams, p owners of the district hop property values along Hun Avenue will be noticeab creased. From all indicatio big improvement will resu higher tone for the whole

Construction began at th ley Square subway station i and the subway to Opera was completed about Feb. 1 was the biggest job.

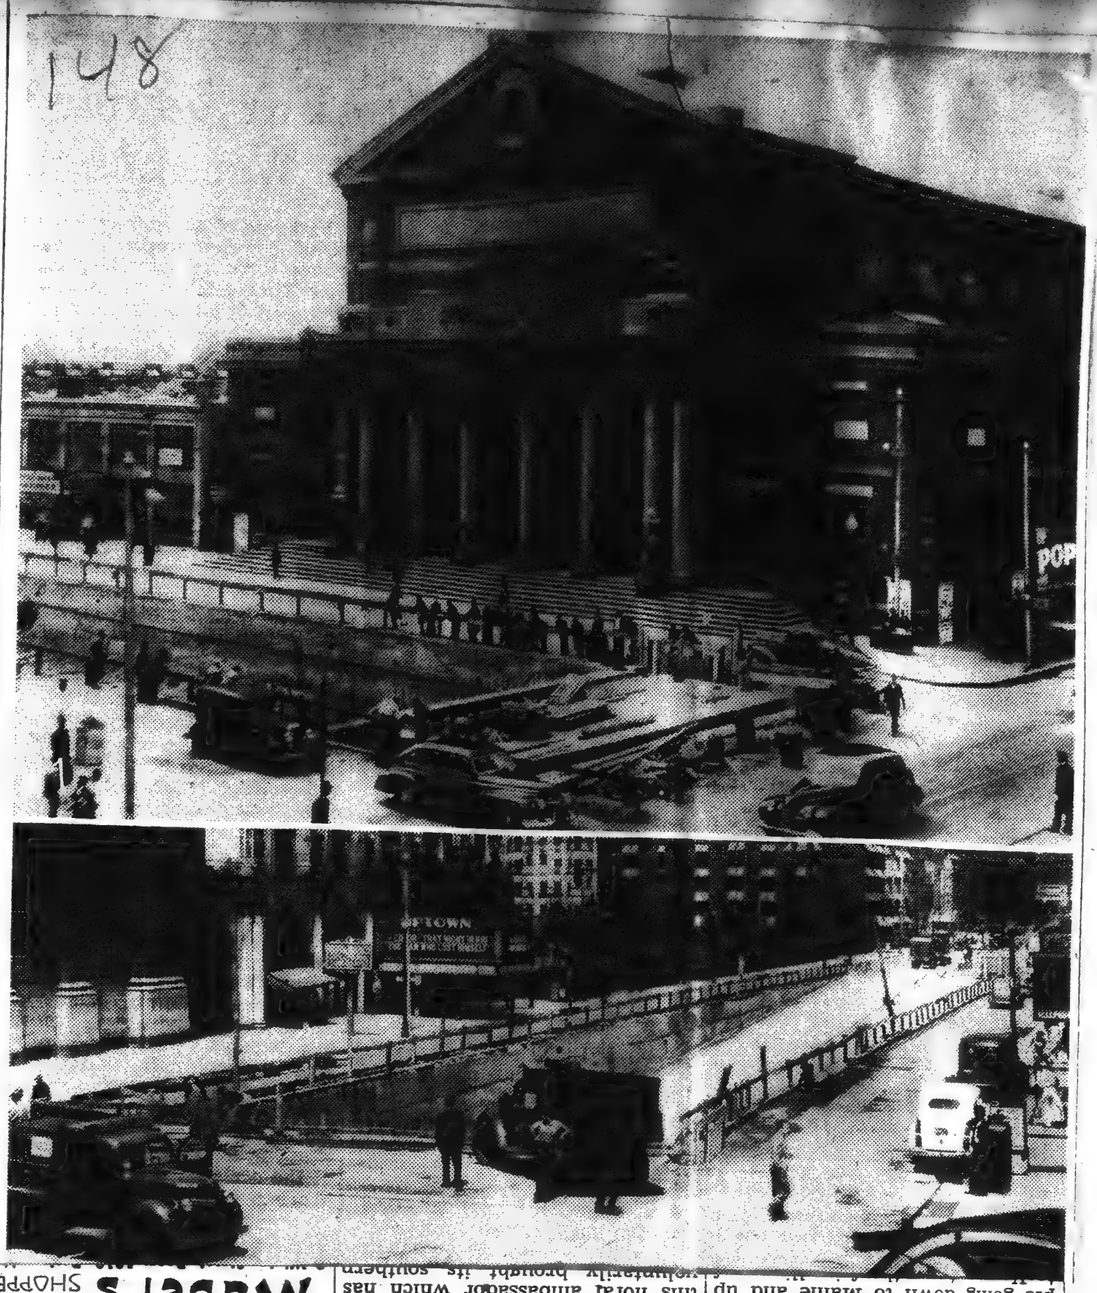
148



Mabel's BEAUTY SHOPPE

Bring out the beauty of your hair

A new Permanent Wave now will make you comfortable and happy for your summer activities. All other branches of beauty culture.

REPUBLICAN GROUP at the fifth annual Pops concert sponsored by the Council of Young Women's Republican Clubs of Massachusetts at Symphony Hall last night. Left to right: Mrs. Julia B. Kirlin of Belmont; Mrs. Marcus A. Wells (front) of Worcester, general chairman; Miss Eleanor F. Wheeler, Brookline; Miss Jacqueline A. Harrison, Jamaica Plain; Miss Louise Rickard, Canton. Boston Herald June 7, 1941

Louis Speyer June 16
English horn soloist in "The Swan of Tuonela" at the Pops this evening. Christian Science

149

4th Week of Pops; E. Biggs, Sheyne, Goding, Soloists

The Pop Concerts in Symphony Hall will enter upon the fourth week of their 56th season with tonight's Sunday concert, in which E. Power Biggs, the celebrated organist, will appear as soloist with the orchestra. Mikhail Sheyne, the noted Russian pianist, will make his Pops debut on Tuesday night in Rachmaninoff's Second Piano Concerto. Mikhail Sheyne was born in Petrograd, studied there and in Moscow, making a considerable career for himself in eastern Europe and the Orient before he came to America in 1937, when he made notable appearances in New York, Boston, and other cities. Howard Goding, the pianist, who is a favorite Pops soloist of past seasons, will appear on Saturday in Liszt's E flat Concerto. There will be no concert on Sunday, June 1. The programs of the week follow:

TODAY

Overture to Abu Hassan.....Weber
Prelude and Love-Death, Tristan and Isolde.....Wagner
Karelian Rhapsody.....Klami
Concerto in F major (No. 13) for organ and orchestra.....Handel
Sonata in C major (No. 12) for orchestra with organ.....Mozart
Concerto in one movement for organ and string orchestra with kettle drums.....Poulenc
Soloist, E. Power Biggs
Voices of Spring, waltzes.....Strauss
Bach Goes to Town.....Alec Templeton
Russian Sailors' Dance from The Red Poppy.....Gliere

MONDAY

Introduction to Act III, Lohengrin..Wagner
Romeo and Juliet, overture-fantasia, Tchaikovsky
Chester, New England revolutionary hymn.....William Billings
Hungarian march, Rakoczy.....Berlioz
Ballet music from Faust.....Gounod
Prayer of Thanksgiving old Dutch hymn.....Valerius
Prelude to The Mastersingers of Nuremberg.....Wagner
Tales from the Vienna Woods waltzes, Strauss
The Toy Trumpet.....Scott
Entrance of the Gladiators.....Fucik

TUESDAY

Marche Militaire.....Schubert
Overture to The Marriage of Figaro..Mozart
Scherzo from the Symphony No. 3, Eroica.....Beethoven
Bolero.....Ravel
Piano Concerto No. 2 in C minor, Rachmaninoff
Soloist, Michael Sheyne
Emperor waltzes.....Strauss
Intermezzo Souvenir of Vienna....Prevost
Fifth Hungarian Dance.....Brahms

WEDNESDAY

Calling All Workers.....Eric Coates
Overture to Zampa.....Herold
Spring, for string orchestra.....Grieg
Procession of Bacchus, from the ballet Sylvia.....Delibes
Ballet Suite.....Rameau-Mottl
Danse.....Debussy-Ravel
Second Hungarian Rhapsody.....Liszt
Briar Rose waltz, from Sleeping Beauty, Tchaikovsky
Jazz Pizzicato.....Anderson
American Patrol.....Meacham

THURSDAY

Entrance of the Boyards.....Halvoren
Overture to Sakuntala.....Goldmark
Song of India.....Rimsky-Korsakov
Music of the Spheres, waltzes..Josef Strauss
Ballet suite from Aida.....Verdi
Meditation from Thais.....Massenet
Violin solo, Julius Theodorowicz
Finale, Fourth Symphony....Tchaikovsky
Pop Goes the Weasel.....arr. by Caillet
Prelude in G minor.....Rachmaninoff
On the Mall, march.....Goldman

FRIDAY

Second Connecticut March.....Reeves
Overture to Mignon.....Thomas
Drink to Me Only with Thine Eyes, arr. by Pochon
Waltz scene from Faust.....Gounod
Ballet suite, Nutcracker.....Tchaikovsky
Largo.....Handel
Solo violin, Julius Theodorowicz
Marche Slav.....Tchaikovsky
Victor Herbert Favorites...arr. by Sanford
Yankee Doodle Went to Town..Morton Gould
American Fantasy.....Herbert

SATURDAY

Overture to The Queen of Sheba....Gounod
Prelude to La Traviata.....Verdi
Scherzo from A Midsummer Night's Dream.....Mendelssohn
Ouverture Solenelle 1812.....Tchaikovsky
Piano Concerto No. 1, in E flat.....Liszt
Soloist Howard Goding
Songs by Colby Junior College glee club.
Tales from the Vienna Woods, waltzes, Strauss
Smoke Gets in Your Eyes, from Roberta Kern
Strike up the Band.....Gershwin

Guest Conductor, New Music and Soloists at the Pops This Week

Tomorrow night in Symphony Hall the Pop Concerts will begin their fifth week. Arthur Fiedler will conduct the orchestra of 85 Symphony players in programs which follow the Pops custom of combining standard favorites and popular classics with such new music as merits the Pops standard. There will be no Sunday concert tonight or next week.

Tomorrow Paul Cherkassky will appear as conductor, introducing a Suite by Nicolas Slonimsky which is to have its first hearing in the full orchestral version. Mr. Cherkassky will also introduce the violinist, Robert Brink, who will make his Pops debut.

On Thursday, Albion Metcalf, pianist who is a Pops favorite, will be heard in Liszt's "Dance of Death," and Strauss's tone poem, "Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks," will have its first hearing of the season at the Pops.

Saint-Saens's musical joke, "The Animals' Carnival," will be a feature of Friday's concert. On Saturday there will be two soloists: Leo Litwin, to be heard in the "Rhapsody in Blue"; and Louise Came, the harpist.

Concerts begin at 8:30 p. m. Programs of the week:

MONDAY. Wedding March from "Le Coq d'Or," Rimsky-Korsakov; Overture to "Prince Igor," Borodin; "None But the Lonely Heart," Tchaikovsky- Caillliet; "A Night on Bald Mountain," Fantasy, Moussorgsky; Four Simple Pieces: Little Overture, Dreams and Drums, Music Box, Automobile Waltz, Slonimsky; Violin Concerto in G minor, No. 1, Bruch, Soloist: Robert Brink; "Where the Citrons Bloom," Waltzes, Strauss; Night and Day, Porter; March, "Oxford Street," from "London Again," Eric Coates.

Pops Rest for Tonight

TOMORROW night in Symphony Hall the Pops will begin their fifth week. Arthur Fiedler will conduct the orchestra of 85 in programs which follow the Pops custom of combining standard favorites and popular classics with such new music as merits the Pops standard. There will be no Sunday concert tonight or next week.

Tomorrow, Monday, Paul Cherkassky will conduct and introduce a Suite by Nicholas Slonimsky. Mr. Cherkassky will also introduce the violinist, Robert Brink, who will make his Pops debut.

MONDAY AT 8:30

Wedding March from "Le Coq d'Or" Rimsky-Korsakov
Overture to "Prince Igor" Borodin
"None But the Lonely Heart" Tchaikovsky-Caillliet
"A Night on Bald Mountain," Fantasy Moussorgsky
Four Simple Pieces Slonimsky
Little Overture
Dreams and Drums
Music Box
Automobile Waltz
Violin Concerto in G minor, No. 1 Bruch
Soloist: Robert Brink
"Where the Citrons Bloom," Waltzes Strauss
Night and Day Porter
March, "Oxford Street," from "London Again" Eric Coates

TUESDAY

Overture to "Marriage of Figaro" Mozart
First Movement, "Unfinished" Symphony Schubert
"Fugato on a Well-Known Theme" McBride
Russian Dance from "Petrouchka" Stravinsky
"Finlandia," Symphonic Poem Sibelius
Triumphal March from "Peter and the Wolf" Prokofieff
"Capriccio Espagnole" Rimsky-Korsakov
"Artist's Life," Waltzes Strauss
"Star Dust" Carmichael-Gould
Prelude to "Carmen" Bizet

Fifth Week of Pops

The Symphony Hall Pop Concerts will enter on their fifth week next Monday. There will be no Sunday concert for the next two weeks.

On Monday, Paul Cherkassky will appear as conductor, introducing a Suite by Nicholas Slonimsky which is to have its first hearing in the full orchestral version. Mr. Cherkassky will also introduce the violinist, Robert Brink, who will make his Pops debut.

On Thursday, June 5, Albion Metcalf, pianist, will be heard in Liszt's "Dance of Death," for piano and orchestra. Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks" will have its first hearing of the season at the Pops, and the "Sevilla" of Albeniz will be heard. Saint-Saën's "The Animals' Carnival" will be a feature of the concert of June 6. On June 7 there will be two soloists: Leo Litwin, to be heard in the "Rhapsody in Blue," and Louise Came, harp virtuoso. The programs of the week follow:

Monday, June 2, at 8:30

Wedding March from "Le Coq d'Or" Rimsky-Korsakoff
Overture to "Prince Igor" Borodin
"None But the Lonely Heart" Tchaikovsky-Caillliet
"A Night on Bald Mountain," Fantasy Moussorgsky
Four Simple Pieces Slonimsky
Little Overture
Dreams and Drums
Music Box
Automobile Waltz
Violin Concerto in G minor, No. 1 Bruch
Soloist: Robert Brink
"Where the Citrons Bloom," Waltzes Strauss
"Night and Day" Porter
March, "Oxford Street," from "London Again" Eric Coates

Tuesday, June 3, at 8:30

Overture to "Marriage of Figaro" Mozart
First Movement, "Unfinished" Symphony Schubert
"Fugato on a Well-Known Theme" McBride
Russian Dance from "Pétrouchka" Stravinsky
"Finlandia," Symphonic Poem Sibelius
Triumphal March from "Peter and the Wolf" Prokofieff
"Capriccio Espagnole" Rimsky-Korsakoff
"Artist's Life," Waltzes Strauss
"Star Dust" Carmichael-Gould
Prelude to "Carmen" Biset

Wednesday, June 4, at 8:30

"On the Mall," March Goldman
Symphony No. 5 in E minor, Second Movement Tchaikovsky
Prelude in C sharp minor Rachmaninoff
Overture to "The Barber of Seville" Rossini
Irish Rhapsody Herbert
Ave Maria Bach-Gounod
"Tales from the Vienna Woods." Waltzes Strauss
Country Gardens Grainger
Song Fest, Medley
"The Star-Spangled Banner" H. S. Smith

Thursday, June 5, at 8:30

March from "A Midsummer Night's Dream" Mendelssohn
Overtude to "Abu Hassan" Weber
Largo from "Xerxes" Handel
Bolero Ravel
"Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks" R. Strauss
"Todtentanz," for Piano and Orchestra Liszt
Soloist: Albion Metcalf
Austrian Peasant Dances Schönherr
Sevilla Albeniz
"Only One Vienna," March Schrammel

Friday, June 6, at 8:30

March, "Stars and Stripes Forever" Sousa
Overture to "Masaniello" Auber
"Entrance of the Little Fauns" Pierné
Bacchanale from "Samson and Delilah" Saint-Saëns
"The Animals' Carnival" Saint-Saëns
Pianos: Jesús María Sanromá, Leo Litwin
Overture to "Tanhäuser" Wagner
"The Skaters," Waltzes Waldteufel
"Tiger Rag" La Rocca
American Fantasy Herbert

Saturday, June 7, at 8:30

Prelude to "Carmen" Bizet
"Romeo and Juliet," Overture-Fantasia Tchaikovsky
Moto Perpetuum ("Circus") Smetana-Byrns
"Ride of the Valkyries" Wagner
"Féerique" for Harp and Orchestra Tournier
Soloist: Louise Came
Marche Slave Tchaikovsky
Songs by the Massachusetts Institute of Technology Glee Club
Rhapsody in Blue Gershwin
Soloist: Leo Litwin
Pavane from American Symphonette Morton Gould
"Knightsbridge," March from "London" Suite Eric Coates

THE POPS PROGRAMMES

MONDAY, JUNE 2

Wedding March from "Le Coq d'Or," Rimsky-Korsakov
Overture to "Prince Igor" Borodin
"None But the Lonely Heart," Tchaikovsky-Caillliet
"A Night on Bald Mountain," Fantasy, Moussorgsky
Four Simple Pieces Slonimsky
Little Overture Music Box
Dreams and Drums Automobile Waltz
Violin Concerto in G minor, No. 1 Bruch
Solist: Robert Brink
"Where the Citrons Bloom," Waltzes Strauss
Night and Day Porter
March, "Oxford Street," from "London Again" Eric Coates

TUESDAY, JUNE 3

Overture to "Marriage of Figaro" Mozart
First Movement, "Unfinished" Symphony, Schubert
"Fugato on a Well-Known Theme" McBride
Russian Dance from "Petrouchka" Stravinsky
"Finlandia," Symphonic Poem Sibelius
Triumphal March from "Peter and the Wolf" Prokofieff
"Capriccio Espagnole" Rimsky-Korsakov
"Artist's Life," Waltzes Strauss
"Star Dust" Carmichael-Gould
Prelude to "Carmen" Bizet

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 4

"On the Mall," March Goldman
Symphony No. 5 in E minor, Second Movement Tchaikovsky
Prelude in C-sharp minor Rachmaninoff
Overture to "The Barber of Seville" Rossini
Irish Rhapsody Herbert
Ave Maria Bach-Gounod
"Tales from the Vienna Woods," Waltzes Strauss
Country Gardens Grainger
Song Fest, Medley:
"Pack Up Your Troubles," "Smiles," "Till We Meet Again," "In the Shade of the Old Apple Tree," "My Wild Irish Rose," "Take Me Out to the Ball Game," "Sweet Adeline," "Put On Your Old Gray Bonnet," There Is a Tavern in the Town," "Maine Stein Song," "Let Me Call You Sweetheart."
The Star-Spangled Banner" H. S. Smith

THURSDAY, JUNE 5

March from "A Midsummer Night's Dream, Mendelssohn
Overture to "Abu Hassan" Weber
Largo from "Xerxes" Handel
Bolero Ravel
"Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks," Rondo in the Old-Fashioned, Roguish Manner R. Strauss
"Todtentanz," for Piano and Orchestra Liszt
Soloist: Albion Metcalf
Austrian Peasant Dances Schonherr
Sevilla Albeniz
"Only One Vienna," March Schrammel

FRIDAY, JUNE 6

March, "Stars and Stripes Forever" Sousa
Overture to "Masaniello" Auber
"Entrance of the Little Fauns" Pierne
Bacchanale from "Samson and Delilah," Saint-Saens
The Animals' Carnival, Grand Zoological Fantasia Saint-Saens
Pianos: Jesus Maria Sanroma, Let Litwin
Overture to "Tannhauser" Wagner
"The Skaters," Waltzes Waldteufel
"Tiger Rag" La Rocca
American Fantasy Herbert

SATURDAY, June 7

Prelude to "Carmen" Bizet
"Romeo and Juliet," Overture-Fantasia, Tchaikovsky
Moto Perpetuum (Circus) Smetana-Byrns
"Ride of the Valkyries" Wagner
"Feerique" for Harp and Orchestra. Tournier
Soloist: Louise Came
Marche Slave Tchaikovsky
Songs by the Massachusetts Institute of Technology Glee Club
Rhapsody in Blue Gershwin
Soloist: Leo Litwin
Pavane from the American Symphonette, Morton Gould
"Knightsbridge," March from London Suite Eric Coates

SYMPHONY HALL—COM. 1492
(NO CONCERT TONIGHT)
TOMORROW at 8:30
POPS
ARTHUR FIEDLER—Conductor
WED., JUNE 18
REQUEST NIGHT
Tickets .50 .75 $1. $1.50 (No Tax)

5th Week of Pops; Cherkassky Leads; Metcalf Soloist

Tomorrow night at 8:30 in Symphony Hall the Pop Concerts will begin their fifth week. Arthur Fiedler will conduct the orchestra of 85 Symphony players in programs which follow the Pops custom of combining standard favorites and popular classics with such new music as merits the Pops standard. There will be no Sunday concert tonight or next week. Tomorrow, Monday, Paul Cherkassky will appear as conductor, introducing a Suite by Nicholas Slonimsky, which is to have its first hearing in the full orchestral version. Mr. Cherkassky will also introduce the violinist, Robert Brink, who will make his Pops debut. On Thursday, Albion Metcalf, the brilliant pianist, who is a Pops favorite, will be heard in Liszt's "Dance of Death," a brilliant paraphrase for piano and orchestra. Strauss' tone poem, "Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks," will have its first hearing of the season at the Pops, and the "Sevilla" of Albeniz will be heard. Saint-Saen's musical joke, "The Animals' Carnival," will be a feature of Friday's concert. On Saturday there will be two soloists, Leo Litwin, to be heard in the Rhapsody in Blue; and Louise Came, the talented harp virtuoso.

The programs of the week follow:

MONDAY

Wedding march from Le Coq d'Or Rimsky-Korsakov
Overture to Prince Igor.....Borodin
None but the Lonely Heart Tchaikovsky-Caillliet
A Night on Bald Mountain, fantasy Moussorgsky
Four simple pieces .....Slonimsky
Little Overture
Dreams and Drums
Music Box
Automobile Waltz
Violin Concerto in G minor, No. 1....Bruch
Soloist, Robert Brink
Where the Citrons Bloom, waltzes..Strauss
Night and Day ..... Porter
March, Oxford Street, from London Again Eric Coates

TUESDAY

Overture to Marriage of Figaro....Mozart
First movement, Unfinished Symphony, Schubert
Fugato on a Well-Known Theme..McBride
Russian dance from Petrouchka.Stravinsky
Finlandia, symphonic poem..... Sibelius
Triumphal march from Peter and the Wolf .....Prokofieff
Capriccio Espagnole.....Rimsky-Korsakov
Artist's Life, waltzes.....Strauss
Star Dust .....Carmichael-Gould
Prelude to Carmen.....Bizet

WEDNESDAY

On the Mall, march.....Goldman
Symphony No. 5 in E minor, second movement .....Tchaikovsky
Prelude in C-sharp minor...Rachmaninoff
Overture to The Barber of Seville, Rossini
Irish Rhapsody.....Herbert
Ave Maria..... Bach-Gounod
Tales from the Vienna Woods, waltzes, Strauss
Country Gardens.....Grainger
Song Fest, medley:
Pack up Your Troubles, Smiles, Till We Meet Again, In the Shade of the Old Apple Tree, My Wild Irish Rose, Take Me Out to the Ball Game, Sweet Adeline, Put On Your Old Gray Bonnet, There Is a Tavern in the Town, Maine Stein Song, Let Me Call You Sweetheart.
The Star-Spangled Banner....H. S. Smith

THURSDAY

March from A Midsummer Night's Dream .....Mendelssohn
Overture to Abu Hassan.....Weber
Largo from Xerxes.....Handel
Bolero .....Ravel
Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks, rondo in the old-fashioned roguish manner, R. Strauss
Todtentanz, for piano and orchestra, Liszt
Soloist, Albion Metcalf
Austrian Peasant Dances.....Schonherr
Sevilla .....Albeniz
Only One Vienna, march.....Schrammel

FRIDAY

March, Stars and Stripes Forever...Sousa
Overture to Masaniello.....Auber
Entrance of the Little Fauns.....Pierne
Bacchanale from Samson and Delilah, Saint-Saens
The Animals' Carnival, grand zoological fantasia .....Saint-Saens
Pianos, Jesus Maria Sanroma-Leo Litwin
Overture to Tannhauser.....Wagner
The Skaters, waltzes.....Waldteufel
Tiger Rag.....La Rocca
American Fantasy.....Herbert

SATURDAY

Prelude to Carmen.....Bizet
Romeo and Juliet, overture-fantasia, Tchaikovsky
Moto Perpetuum (Circus)..Smetana-Byrns
Ride of the Valkyries.....Wagner
Feerique for harp and orchestra..Tournier
Soloist, Louise Came
Marche Slave .....Tchaikovsky
Songs by the Massachusetts Institute of Technology Glee Club.
Rhapsody in Blue.....Gershwin
Soloist, Leo Litwin
Pavane from American Symphonette, Morton Gould
Knightsbridge march from London Suite, Eric Coates

SYMPHONY HALL—COM. 1492
(NO CONCERT TONIGHT)
TOMORROW at 8:30
POPS
ARTHUR FIEDLER—Conductor
WED., JUNE 18
REQUEST NIGHT
Tickets .50 .75 $1. $1.50 (No Tax)

Boston Traveler June 3, 1941

150

MUSIC

The Pop concert last night in Symphony Hall was conducted by Paul Cherkassky. The soloist was Robert Brink, violinist, and the special program was in part as follows:

Rimsky-Korsakov....Wedding March from "Coq d'Or" Borodin.....Overture to "Prince Igor"
Tchaikovsky....None But the Lonely Heart, arranged by Lucien Caillet
Moussorgsky....A Night on Bald Mountain
Nicolas Slonimsky.....Four Simple Pieces
Bruch.....Violin Concerto in G minor

Last night's Pop concert was interesting for various reasons, though chiefly on account of the soloist, Robert Brink. Mr. Brink is 17 years old and is already a violinist of much skill and taste. His performance of the thoroughly rewarding Bruch Concerto was distinctly worth hearing. In the adagio he had the poetic tenderness that must be expressed at all costs, and in the finale he had that verve and technical dash which the spirit of the movement requires. Mr. Cherkassky led the orchestra in a sympathetic accompaniment.

Bruch's music, we suppose, is nowadays banned in Germany because of his Jewish blood. With the exception of this concerto it is not much heard anywheres. It is probable, though, that his choral and other music would be well worth reviving; and a smart conductor might do worse than look through his scores.

Mr. Cherkassky began the concert with a number of popular Russian works, including a sentimental version for orchestra of Tchaikovsky's song, "None But the Lonely Heart." There followed four disarmingly simple and agreeable pieces by Nicolas Slonimsky, the celebrated scholar and conductor of modern music. Mr. Slonimsky was in the audience to acknowledge the cordial applauses for his pieces, of which the Automobile Waltz was so much liked that it was repeated on the spot. There was also an ovation for Mr. Brink.

A. W. W.

SIXTH WEEK OF POPS

THE POPS in Symphony Hall, under the direction of Arthur Fiedler, will open the sixth week of their season tomorrow night, when Boston University will have their special celebration.

The soloist for Tuesday will be Elizabeth Travis, young pianist. Leo Litwin will be soloist on Wednesday, and Sheldon Rotenberg, violinist, on Thursday, which is to be Tufts' Night.

On Friday Sanroma will be soloist in Mendelssohn's Concerto. On Saturday, New England Conservatory Night, there will be three guest conductors, and Dorothy Louise Johnson, violinist, as soloist.

On Sunday evening, June 15, there will be a special concert by the Pops Orchestra at the Boston Garden, with a popular program to be followed by a quiz contest for prizes.

MONDAY

Military Polonaise Chopin-Glazounov
Seventh Slavonic Dance, in C maj. Dvorak
"Valse Triste" Sibelius
Ouverture Solennelle, "1812" Tchaikovsky
"Ride of the Valkyries" Wagner
Bolero Ravel

Boston University Songs
"Clarissima" B. C. Patterson
"Hail, Boston University" Mrs. M. H. Gulesian
"Boston University Hymn" Dr. Marshall
"Tales from the Vienna Woods," Waltzes Strauss
Pavane from the "American Symphonette" Gould
"Stars and Stripes Forever," March Sousa

TUESDAY

"Schechenyi Indulo," March Fahrbach
Overture to "Russian and Ludmilla" Glinka
"Nobody Knows de Trouble I've Seen" Arranged by Jacchia
Bolero Ravel
"Danse Macabre," Symphonic Poem Saint-Saens
Pianoforte Concerto in G minor, No. 2 Saint-Saens
Soloist: Elizabeth Travis
"Wine, Woman, and Song," Waltzes Strauss
"On the Trail," from the "Grand Canyon" Suite Grofe
"God Bless America" Berlin

Symphony Hall Pop Concerts Enter Sixth Week Tomorrow Night

The Pop Concerts in Symphony Hall, under the direction of Arthur Fiedler, will enter the sixth week of the season tomorrow night, when Boston University will have a special celebration.

The soloist for Tuesday will be Elizabeth Travis, the young pianist who, since her last appearance at the Pops, has made tours of North and South America. Leo Litwin will be soloist, Wednesday, and Sheldon Rotenberg, violinist, on Thursday, which is to be Tufts Night.

On Friday, Jesus Maria Sanroma will play Mendelssohn's Concerto. Saturday, New England Conservatory Night, there will be three guest conductors, and Dorothy Louise Johnson, violinist, as soloist.

Concerts begin at 8:30. The program of the week follows:

MONDAY—Military Polonaise, Chopin-Glazounov; Seventh Slavonic Dance, in C major, Dvorak; "Valse Triste," Sibelius; Ouverture Solennelle, "1812," Tchaikovsky; "Ride of the Valkyries," Wagner; Bolera, Ravel; Boston University Songs, "Clarissima," B. C. Patterson; "Hail, Boston University," Mrs. M. H. Gulesian; "Boston University Hymn," Dr. John P. Marshall; "Tales from the Vienna Woods," Waltzes, Strauss; Pavane from the "American Symphonette," Gould; "Stars and Stripes Forever," March, Sousa.

TUESDAY — "Schechenyi Indulo," march, Fahrbach; Overture to "Russian and Ludmilla," Glinka; "Nobody Knows de Trouble I've Seen," arranged by Jacchia; Bolero, Ravel; "Danse Macabre," Symphonic Poem, Saint-Saens; Pianoforte Concerto in G Minor, No. 2, Saint-Saens (Soloist, Elizabeth Travis); "Wine, Woman and Song," waltzes, Strauss; "On the Trail," from the "Grand Canyon" Suite, Grofe; "God Bless America," Berlin.

WEDNESDAY — "Pomp and Circumstance," march, Elgar; Overture to "Light Cavalry," Suppe; "Kammenoi-Ostrow" ("Reve Angelique"), Rubinstein; "Spirit of the Warrior," Grossman; "Les Preludes," Symphonic Poem, Liszt; "Rhapsody in Blue," Gershwin (Soloist, Leo Litwin; "Invitation to the Dance," Weber-Berlioz; "Prima Donna," Gould: Dance from "La Vida Breve," Falla.

THURSDAY—Hungarian March, "Rakoczy," Berlioz; "Finlandia," Symphonic Poem, Sibelius; Scherzo from Symphony No. 3, "Eroica," Beethoven; Suite from "Carmen," Bizet; Violin Concerto in G minor, No. 1, Bruch; Soloist: Sheldon Rotenberg; Conducted by Leo R. Lewis; Tuftonia's Day, E. W. Hayes; Spell It Out, A. T. Williams; Medley-Fantasia on Tufts Airs, J. W. Morton; Dear Alma Mater, L. R. Lewis.

FRIDAY—"Calling All Workers," Eric Coates; Twelve Contra-Dances (Played without pause), Beethoven; Intermezzo, "Cavalleria Rusticana," Mascagni; "Peer Gynt" Suite, Grieg; Overture to "A Midsummer Night's Dream," Mendelssohn; Piano Concerto No. 1, in G minor, Mendelssohn, Soloist: Jesus Maria Sanroma; Austrian Peasant Dances, Schonherr; "Yankee Doodle Went to Town," Morton Gould; "Washington Post,, March, Sousa.

SATURDAY—Quincy Porter, guest conductor: Procession of Bacchus, from "Sylvia," Delibes; Overture to "Semiramide," Rossini; Suite from "Henry VIII," German; Pan-Americana, Arnold A. Chaitman; Wallace Goodrich, guest conductor: "Psyche and Eros," from "Psyche," Franck; First Movement, Violin Concerto, Tchaikovsky, soloist: Dorothy Louise Johnson; "Jubilee, from the "Symphonic Sketches," Chadwick; Francis Findlay, guest conductor; "Vienna Blood," Waltzes, Strauss; The New England Conservatory Chorus—Chorus of Bacchantes, from "Philemon and Baucis," Gounod; "Charm Me Asleep, Leslie, (unaccompanied); Choral and Finale from "Die Meistersinger von Nurnberg," Wagner.

Boston's 'Pops' Lead Again

For years the Boston 'Pops' Orchestra has been the leader in worthwhile and many revolutionary Musical events. Under the sponsorship of the Boston Herald another and most entertaining feature—called 'MUSIQUIZ'—will be introduced to the public. Read Sunday's Herald for details.

New York Herald Tribune June 1, 1941

BOSTON'S POPS

By VIRGIL THOMSON

EVERY city has some kind of summer concert series offering a mixed repertory of music old and new from which the frankly lighter veins of composition are not excluded. New York takes its Philharmonic concerts at the Lewisohn Stadium without much admixture of popular tunes. The Goldman Band provides us our dosage necessary of military marches, of selections from operetta, of Viennese waltzes, of popular overtures and suites no longer considered respectable to hear at two-dollar concerts, or even at the Stadium.

* * *

How the Pops Work

BOSTON'S particular version of all this is its famous Pop Concerts. These take place in Symphony Hall with the full Boston Symphony playing (renamed for ten weeks each year "The Boston Pops Orchestra") and Arthur Fiedler leading. (I should like to add his name to those of Smallens and Barlow as an excellent and thoroughly experienced American conductor.) For the Pops season all the seats are removed from the main floor and the inclination of this made level so that it can be filled with tables. Food and drink is offered reasonably. The balcony seats are sold to non-consuming listeners for 75, 50 and 25 cents.

This set-up seems normal enough, though no other American city has ever been able to reproduce it. What the Boston customers get is all the pleasures of a Continental café plus a concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. There are no outdoor noises or bugs. The air-conditioning is mild. Smoking is permitted. The service is silent and satisfactory. The repertory is uninhibited. The house is packed with music lovers of all ages, and there are lots of young men with their girls. This is the fifty-sixth season of the series and Mr. Fiedler's twelfth as conductor.

* * *

Why They Are So Pleasant

THE charm of these evenings is partly due to food and tobacco and democratic assembly and partly, of course, to the music. Really it is due to the contiguity of all these. But the music itself has a charm quite rare and unexpected these days that is due to the application of the Boston Symphony's excellent musicianship to a whole range of musical repertory that seldom gets properly played at all. The standard symphonies are always getting themselves well played. The Sousa marches and the more popular overtures occasionally get themselves rendered well enough. But there is a whole section of the musical library that seems destined either to constantly inadequate execution or to complete neglect. I mean pieces like Handel's Largo, the waltzes of Strauss and Waldteufel, Schubert's Serenade, Saint-Saens's "The Animal's Carnaval," Chabrier's "España," Tchaikovsky's "Marche Slave" and "1812" and many another work perennially loved by all.

This repertory, known to the music publishing trades as "popular classics and semi-classics," is the bridge between simple song and the high art realms of music. It is what enables everybody to understand Beethoven and Mozart. It is the door through which young people enter into the magic domain of musical comprehension. It is infinitely touching to hear it played with loving care by such a band and listened to with lively ears by such an alert audience as Boston's.

* * *

Grandeur, Sentiment and Novelty

A WEEK ago I wandered into Symphony Hall and after some difficulty (for the house was sold out, as usual) obtained entry. The orchestra was playing the Waltz Scene from "Faust." I have known the piece, as every one else has, since I was a baby. For thirty years I haven't cared much for it. I only realized the other night that it has been at least that long since I have heard it well played. Even at the opera houses they don't always have enough strings. And besides, one isn't always willing to sit through "Faust" just to hear the Prelude and the Waltz and the final Trio. At the Pops it was perfect. So was Tchaikovsky's "Nut Cracker" suite that followed. Hearing this light but charming music from the back of the hall played with all the tonal beauty and dynamic perspective that it was intended to have, I was carried back in fancy to the brilliance of the great opera houses of thirty and more years ago. And I remembered Igor Stravinsky's description once of what he had hoped to do in his rather similar ballet scores, "Le Baiser de la Fée" and "Jeu de Cartes." "I wanted," he said, "to evoke the memory of the brilliance and the charm of the ballet spectacles of our former Imperial Opera."

Also on the program was a selection of favorite melodies from Victor Herbert. The audience was visibly transported to remembrance of light opera days. There was also a piece about a mosquito that had to be repeated. And a set of variations on "Yankee Doodle" by Mr. Morton Gould. The latter purported to be a swing version, but only one chorus really got off the ground. That was this citizen's opinion. The rest of the audience enjoyed the piece enough to demand its repetition. But even this crotchety spoil-sport is glad to have heard the work. Mr. Fiedler, in the course of putting some of every kind of music on every program, plays a great deal of serious music by living composers. He even commissions new works from time to time. Walter Piston's ballet "The Incredible Flutist" was the result of such a commission; and it was given its first and, to my knowledge, only choreographic rendition at those concerts.

* * *

Informality and Ease

KOUSSEVITZKY rehearses the orchestra three times for each of his programs, and he prepares twenty-four programs during his season of thirty weeks. Fiedler has two rehearsals for every seven programs, and he plays about sixty-five concerts (with very little repeating in them) during the Pops season of ten weeks. That means that familiar symphonies and such, as at our own Stadium concerts, rarely get rehearsed at all. New pieces and revivals (I noticed Weber's "Abu Hassan" overture on the bill for last week) get read through. This seems to be sufficient, even for most of the gramophone recordings. For the Boston Pops, before a ruling of the American Federation of Musicians forbade further recordings by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has long been a favorite with record buyers.

The Boston Pops are really a lovely success story. They have no budget troubles. They have no audience troubles. They have no program troubles. They just play everything and play it beautifully, and everybody loves them and comes every night to hear them and to eat sandwiches with beer or to sip cool punches and juleps in the friendly ambience of good old Symphony Hall.

MUSIC AND MUSICIANS

Seventh Week of Pops Will Feature Soloists and Music By Sibelius

The seventh week of the Pop Concerts in Symphony Hall, under the direction of Arthur Fiedler, will begin Monday with a program featuring the music of Jean Sibelius, in honor of the 75th year of the Finnish composer. This program will be conducted by Paul Cherkassky.

Tuesday's concert, by exception, has been taken over by the Harvard class of 1916, and that on Friday, by the American Library Association. The concerts for the other nights are open to the public.

Wednesday will be the annual Request Night, with Messrs. Sanroma and Litwin as soloists in two numbers, and on Thursday, Selma Kramer, the pianist of international reputation, will appear with the orchestra in Grieg's Concerto. On Saturday, June 21, Leo Litwin will be the soloist in Weber's "Concertstuck," and Arthur Fiedler will give the first presentation of Laszlo's Improvisations on "Oh, Susanna," in the styles of various composers.

Concerts will begin at 8:30 p. m. Programs of the week:

Monday, Hungarian March, "Rakoczy," Berlioz; Overture to "The Magic Flute," Mozart; Scherzo from the Octet, Mendelssohn; "Les Preludes," Symphonic Poem, Liszt; "King Christian II" (Incidental Music); "The Swan of Tuonela," Sibelius, English horn solo, Louis Speyer); "Finlandia" (Symphonic Poem), Sibelius; "Gold and Silver" Waltzes, Lehar; "Deep River," Negro Spiritual, arranged by Jacchia; Eighth Slavonic Dance in G minor, Dvorak.

Tuesday — Hungarian March, "Rakoczy," Berlioz; Overture to "Mignon," Thomas; Largo, Handel; Prelude to "The Mastersingers of Nuremberg," Wagner; Symphonic Variations for Piano and Orchestra, Franck—Soloist, Mrs. Harold Amory; "Wine, Woman and Song," Waltzes, Strauss; Fantasy on Gershwin Melodies; March, "Up the Street," Morse.

Wednesday—"Stars and Stripes Forever," March, Sousa; "Tales from the Vienna Woods," Waltzes, Strauss; Largo from "Xerxes," Handel; "The Ride of the Valkyries," Wagner; Bolero, Ravel; "The Animals' Carnival," Grand Zoological Fantasia, Saint-Saens—Pianos, Jesus Maria Sanroma, Leo Litwin; Rhapsody in Blue, Gershwin—Soloist, Jesus Maria Sanroma; "Pomp and Circumstance," March, Elgar.

Thursday—Military Polonaise, Chopin-Glazounov; Overture to "William Tell," Rossini; Concert Etude, Mayseder-Hellmesberger; Scherzo from Symphony No. 5, Shostakovitch; Concerto for Pianoforte in A minor, Grieg—Soloist: Selma Kramer; "Wine, Woman and Song," Waltzes, Strauss; "Andalucia," Lecuona-Gould; American Fantasy, Herbert.

Friday—"Pomp and Circumstance," March, Elgar; "Finlandia," Symphonic Poem, Sibelius; Overture to "The Marriage of Figaro," Mozart; "The Ride of the Valkyries," Wagner; Bolero, Ravel; Variations of the theme, "Pop Goes the Weasel," Cailliet; "Prayer of Thanksgiving," Old Dutch Hymn, Valerius; "Oxford Street," March from "London Again," Eric Coates.

Saturday—"On the Esplanade," March, Bodge; Overture to "Euryanthe," Weber; "Tambourin Chinois," Kreisler; Waltz Scene from "Faust," Gounod; Introduction to Act III, "The Mastersingers of Nuremberg," Wagner; Improvisations on Stephen Foster's "Oh, Susanna," Laszlo; Concertstuck for Piano and Orchestra, Weber—Soloist: Leo Litwin; Austrian Peasant Dances, Schonherr; Song of the Volga Bargemen, Arranged by Glaszounov; "Bahn Frei" ("Fast Track"), Galop, Eduard Strauss.

BOSTON GARDEN

TONIGHT AT 8

MUSIQUIZ POPS ORCHESTRA

ARTHUR FIEDLER—Conductor
J. M. SANROMA—Soloist

ALL SEATS .25

DOORS OPEN AT 6:30 P. M.
GARDEN BOX OFFICE OPEN AT 9 A. M.

Figures in Impending Pop Concerts

Above, Jesús María Sanromá, piano soloist Wednesday. Right, top to bottom, Selma Kramer, pianist, Thursday, June 19; Leo Litwin, pianist, Wednesday, and Quincy Porter, guest conductor Saturday, New England Conservatory Night.

Christian Science Monitor
June 12, 1941

Seventh Week of Pops

The seventh week of Symphony Hall Pop Concerts will begin Monday with a program featuring the music of Jean Sibelius, in honor of the 75th anniversary of the Finnish composer. This program will be presented by Paul Cherkassky.

Tuesday's concert, by exception, has been taken over by the Harvard Class of 1916, and that of Friday, June 20, by the American Library Association. The concerts for each other night are open to the public.

Wednesday, June 18, will be the annual Request Night, with Messrs. Sanromá and Litwin as soloists in two numbers, and on Thursday Selma Kramer, pianist, will appear with the orchestra in Grieg's Concerto. On Saturday, June 21, Leo Litwin will be the soloist in Weber's "Concertstück," and Arthur Fiedler will give the first presentation of Laszlo's Improvisations on "Oh, Susanna" in the styles of various composers.

Tonight will bring the first, and next Sunday the second, of two concerts in the Boston Garden. The programs of the week follow:

Monday, June 16, at 8:30

Hungarian March, "Rakóczy".....Berlioz
Overture to "The Magic Flute".....Mozart
Scherzo from the Octet .... Mendelssohn
"Les Preludes" .....Liszt
"King Christian II," Incidental Music
"The Swan of Tuonela"
English Horn Solo: Louis Speyer
"Finlandia," Symphonic Poem
..... Sibelius
"Gold and Silver" Waltzes .....Lehár
"Deep River," Negro Spiritual
..... Arranged by Jacchia
Eighth Slavonic Dance in G minor
Dvořák

Tuesday, June 17, 1941

Hungarian March, "Rakóczy".....Berlioz
Overture to "Mignon".....Thomas
Largo.....Handel
Prelude to "Meistersinger".....Wagner
Symphonic Variations for Piano and Orchestra .....Franck
Soloist: Mrs. Harold Amory
"Wine, Woman, and Song" Waltzes
Strauss
Fantasy in Gershwin Melodies
March, "Up the Street".....Morse

Wednesday, June 18, 1941

"Stars and Stripes Forever".....Sousa
"Tales from the Vienna Woods," Waltzes
Strauss
Largo from "Xerxes" ..... Handel
"The Ride of the Valkyrs" .... Wagner
"Bolero" ..... Ravel
"The Animals' Carnival" .... Saint-Saëns
Pianos: Jesús María Sanromá—Leo Litwin
Rhapsody in Blue.....Gershwin
Soloist: Jesús María Sanromá
"Pomp and Circumstance" ..... Elgar

Thursday, June 19, 1941

Military Polonaise...Chopin-Glazounoff
Overture to "William Tell".....Rossini
Concert Etude...Mayseder-Hellmesberger
Scherzo from Symphony No. 5.....
..... Shostakovitch
Concerto for Pianoforte in A minor....
..... Grieg
Sololist: Selma Kramer
"Wine, Woman, and Song" Waltzes...
..... Strauss
"Andalucia" ..... Lecuona-Gould
American Fantasy ..... Herbert

Friday, June 20, at 8:30

"Pomp and Circumstance".....Elgar
"Finlandia" ..... Sibelius
Overture to "The Marriage of Figaro"
Mozart
"The Ride of the Valkyrs".....Wagner
"Bolero" ..... Ravel
Variations on "Pop Goes the Weasel"
Cailliet
"Prayer of Thanksgiving," Old Dutch Hymn ..... Valerius
"Oxford Street," March from "London Again" ..... Eric Coates

Saturday, June 21, at 8:30

"On the Esplanade".....Bodge
Overture to "Euryanthe".....Weber
"Tambourin Chinois".....Kreisler
Waltz Scene from "Faust".....Gounod
Introduction to Act III, "Meistersinger"
Wagner
Improvisations on "Oh, Susanna," Laszlo
Concertstück for Piano and Orchestra
Weber
Soloist: Leo Litwin
Austrian Peasant Danses.....Schönherr
Song of the Volga Bargemen
Arranged by Glazounoff
"Bahn Frei" ("Fast Track"), Galop
Eduard Strauss

7th Week of Pops; Sibelius Program; Request Night

The 7th week of the Pop concerts in Symphony Hall under the direction of Arthur Fiedler will begin Monday with a program featuring the music of Jean Sibelius, in honor of the 75th year of the Finnish composer. This program will be presented by Paul Cherkassky. Tuesday's concert, by exception, has been taken over by the Harvard class of 1916, and Friday, June 20, by the American Library Association. The concerts for each other night are open to the public.

Wednesday, June 18, will be the annual request night, with Messrs. Sanroma and Litwin as soloists in two numbers, and on Thursday Selma Kramer, the pianist of international reputation, will appear with the orchestra in Grieg's Concerto. On Saturday, June 21, Leo Litwin will be the soloist in Weber's "Concertstuck," and Arthur Fiedler will give the first presentation of Laszlo's Improvisations on "Oh, Susanna," in the styles of various composers. Tonight will bring the first, and next Sunday the second, of the two special events in the Boston Garden, combining a concert by the Pops orchestra and a guessing contest.

The prgrams of the week follow:

MONDAY

Hungarian march, Rakoczy.....Berlio
Overture to The Magic Flute.....Mozart
Schero, from the Octet.....Mendelssohn
Les Preludes, symphonic poem.....Liszt
King Christian II, incidental music..Sibelius
The Swan of Tuonela.....Sibelius
English horn solo, Louis Speyer
Finlandia, symponic poem
Gold and Silver, waltzes.....Lehar
Deep River, Negro spiritual. Arr. by Jacchia
Eighth Slavonic Dance in G minor..Dvorak

TUESDAY

This evening's concert has been taken over by the Harvard Class of 1916 and is not open to the public.

Hungarian march, Rakoczy.....Berlioz
Overture to Mignon.....Thomas
Largo .....Handel
Prelude to The Mastersingers of Nuremberg .....Wagner
Symphonic Variations for Piano and Orchestra .....6 Franck
Soloist, Mrs. Harold Amory
Wine, Woman and Song, waltzes...Strauss
Fantasy on Gershwin melodies
March, Up the Street.....Morse

WEDNESDAY

Stars and Stripes Forever, march....Sousa
Tales from the Vienna Woods, waltes
Strauss
Largo, from Xerxes.....Handel
The Ride of the Valkyries.....Wagner
Bolero .....Ravel
The Animals' Carnival (grand zoological fantasia) .....Saint-Saens
Pianos, Jesus Maria Sanroma, Leo Litwin
Rhapsody in Blue.....Gershwin
Soloist, Jesus Maria Sanroma
Pomp and Circumstance, march.....Elgar

THURSDAY

Military Polonaise.....Chopin-Glazounov
Overture to William Teil.....Rossini
Concert Etude.....Mayseder-Hellmesberger
Schero, from Symphony No. 5.Shostakovitch
Concerto for Pianoforte in A minor...Grieg
Soloist, Selma Kramer
Wine, Woman and Song, waltzes...Strauss
Andalucia .....Lecuona-Gould
American Fantasy .....Herbert

FRIDAY

This evening's concert has been taken over by the American Library Association and is not open to the public.

Pomp and Circumstance, march.....Elgar
Finlandia, symphonic poem.....Sibelius
Overture to The Marriae of Fiaro....Moart
The Ride of the Valkyries.....Waner
Bolero .....Ravel
Variations of the theme: Pop, Goes the Weasal .....Cailliet
Prayer of Thanksivin, old Dutch hymn
Valerius
Oxford Street, march, from London Again
Eric Coates

SATURDAY

On the Esplanade, march.....Bodge
Overture to Euryanthe .....Weber
Tambourin Chinois .....Kreisler
Waltz scene, from Faust .....Gounod
Introduction to act 3, The Mastersingers of Nuremberg .....Wagner
Improvisations on Stephen Foster's Oh, Susanna .....Laszlo
Concertstuck for Piano and Orchestra
Weber
Soloist, Leo Litwin
Austrian Peasant Dances.....Schonherr
Song of the Volga Bargemen
Arr. by Glazounov
Bahn Frei (Fast Track), galop
Eduard Strauss

Pops Tonight In Boston Garden

Arthur Fiedler and the full Pops Orchestra will venture for the first time out of Symphony Hall in a public Pop Concert, when they form in the Boston Garden tonight at 8 and next Sunday as well. The entire garden will be thrown open to the public at a fee of 25 cents, proceeds of which will be devoted to the Pension Fund of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Each event will consist of a concert, at which Jesus Maria Sanroma will appear with the Pops Orchestra as soloist; this to be followed by a guessing contest for prizes, the contest being open to any and all in the audience. The contest will consist largely of identification of excerpts which will be played by Arthur Fiedler and the orchestra. The semi-final and final elimination meetings will be held in Symphony Hall later in the month. Tonight's event will open with the following program:

Pomp and Circumstance, march.....Elgar
Overture to The Merry Wives of Winsor
Nicolai
Third Movement, from Pathetic Symphony
Tchaikovsky
Rhapsody in Blue.....Gershwin
Soloist, Jesus Maria Sanroma

-New England Conservatory Night at Pops

Three Guest Conductors Take Charge of Program

Ternary rhythm found itself alive under the persuasion of Francis Findlay, New England Conservatory instructor, at the Symphony Hall Pops on Saturday evening. Mr. Findlay, who supervises the Division of School Music at the Conservatory, took a turn as conductor along with Quincy Porter, Dean of the Faculty, and Wallace Goodrich, the Director, distinguishing himself in a performance of the "Vienna Blood" dances in 1-2-3 time of Strauss, and making a smart go as well in pieces by Gounod ("Philemon and Baucis") and Wagner ("Meistersinger") with the Conservatory Chorus assisting, and in a piece in unaccompanied four-part song form ("Sing Me Asleep") by Leslie.

Rather extraordinarily for a pedagogue, Mr. Findlay evinced not only theoretical but also practical understanding of an orchestra, and he led the Boston Symphony men in paths and bypaths of the waltz which they are none too much accustomed to and which they showed plain delight in traveling. Nor did the action and the style seem something sought out by study and put on like a costume for the occasion; but convincingly to anyone in the audience, they were the man himself. His flexible right hand indicated the measure and the shading in a way that people on the floor or in the balconies oculd apprehend as unmistakably as could the players on the platform.

It was music for the eye, then, no less than for the ear, as sometimes, though not invariably, happens when a gifted artist holds the baton. As for that, matters were on a high artistic plane all through the program; and Mr. Findlay may have been at a certain advantage for the very reason that the good fortune was his to have the waltzes to do. For duple rhythms largely prevailed before his chance came, and the contrast of the triple figure was a particular relief.

Regarding Mr. Porter, his conducting of the Rossini Overture to "Semiramide" was something memorable. To judge by his mastery of the situation on New England Conservatory Night, it is not surprising that things have started up since he became Dean quite new in the activities of the institution.

Mr. Goodrich had a special preoccupation that made it impossible for him to go after acclaim for himself. He directed a presentation of the Tchaikovsky Violin Concerto, the first movement (Allegro moderato), with Dorothy Louise Johnson of the Class of 1941 as soloist. He had the responsibility of making a brilliant pupil of his school shine before the public, and he succeeded.

W. P. T.

TONIGHT AT THE POPS

Arthur Fiedler will conduct the symphony orchestra in the Pops series tonight at 8:30 in Symphony Hall. Mikhail Sheyne, pianist, is the soloist. The program is as follows:

Marche Militaire ..... Schubert
Overture to The Marriage of Figaro.. Mozart
Scherzo from the Symphony No. 3, Eroica ..... Beethoven
Bolero ..... Ravel
Piano Concerto No. 2 in C minor, Rachmaninoff
Soloist, Michael Sheyne
Emperor waltzes ..... Strauss
Intermezzo Souvenir of Vienna..... Prevost
Fifth Hungarian Dance..... Brahms

RHAPSODY IN BLUE—Noted for his thrilling interpretation of George Gershwin's "Rhapsody in Blue," Jesus Maria Sanroma, excellently captured in pencil in Nishan's drawing above, will be soloist in the first Boston Herald Musiquiz in the Boston Garden Sunday night, June 15.

JOIN HERALD MUSIQUIZ, AID POPS PENSION FUND

By RUDOLPH ELIE, JR.

About this time of year virtually every organization or school or charity, from the Lamplighters Benevolent Society to Trunks for Timbuctoo, decides to have a big benefit affair. And what do they do?

Well, they are very likely to go to Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops orchestra and the next thing they know that magnificently co-operative Boston institution has arranged one of its sensationally popular Old Timers nights and has sold out Symphony Hall to the rafters.

Every one agrees that this is a delightful and excellent method for raising funds for worthwhile causes. But what can the Boston Pops orchestra do when it must put on a benefit for its own highly important Pension Fund?

The answer this year is The Boston Herald Musiquiz, the most unusual and entertaining musical event ever conceived.

It works this way: On the Sunday nights of June 15 and June 22 in the Boston Garden, the Boston Pops orchestra of 90 Boston Symphony musicians under its dynamic, enormously popular leader, Arthur Fiedler, will present two programs of all-time Pops favorites to be chosen by music-lovers of Greater Boston by ballot.

After each program — and here's where the fun begins—comes the Musiquiz itself, which is open to all comers regardless of age, height, weight, musical I. Q. or anything else.

Here's what happens: Every person who attends the monster Pops festival in the Boston Garden on both nights will be handed a ballot. After the concert, the master of ceremonies—who, incidentally, is a sufficient attraction unto himself—will ask questions of a musical nature, each one of which will be illustrated by the orchestra or by solo musicians.

Some of the questions will be of the true or false nature; others will be simply check questions, but all—and this is vastly important—will be based on the Victor records made by both the Boston Symphony orchestra and the Boston Pops orchestra.

Aside from the 25 cents admission charge to benefit the Pension Fund of the Boston Symphony orchestra, there is no obligation whatever.

The first two Musiquizzes are, in fact, great elimination contests designed primarily to provide as much amusement and color and spectacle as possible for the greatest number of people. After the first 400 highest-ranking contestants—200 at each Musiquiz — have been chosen, the semi-finals will be held in Symphony Hall to be followed shortly by the finals, also in Symphony Hall, for $800 worth of prizes.

While thousands will prefer to come and listen to the music or to watch the spectacle or to see the fun, those seriously interested in winning one of the prizes would do well to study the Victor record list of Boston Symphony orchestra and Boston Pops orchestra. Every single question both in the Musiquizzes and the finals will be derived from them.

Another good idea is to drop in to see your local Victor record dealer. He can give you many a pointer as well as supply you with detailed information about every phase of The Boston Herald Musiquiz.

Music and The Dance
SYMPHONY HALL—COM. 1492
TONIGHT at 8:30
POPS
ARTHUR FIEDLER—Conductor
ADMISSION 25c—1st BALCONY RESERVED, .50, .75, $1. No Tax. ALL TICKETS ON SALE 2 WEEKS IN ADVANCE.

Watertown Boy To Play World's Rarest Violin At Pop Concert Tonight

BOSTON, June 2 (U.P.)—One of the world's rarest violins—a $75,000 Stradivarius—has been loaned to a 17-year-old schoolboy for a concert tonight because musical authorities here describe him as an hitherto unknown genius.

But Robert Brink of Watertown, a Boston lawyer's son, thinks the fuss over his violin wizardry is nonsense and prefers tennis, swimming or sailing, to practice on a fiddle.

However, he'll play with the Boston Pops Concert Orchestra at Symphony Hall, and in so doing will become the first youth to play as a great artist in the orchestra's three-quarter century history.

The youth's appearance stems from the efforts of his teacher, Joseph Malkin, to get him interested in the violin as a career. Malkin was forced to get Brink's father to intercede before the boy would consent to appear at the great music hall for an audition.

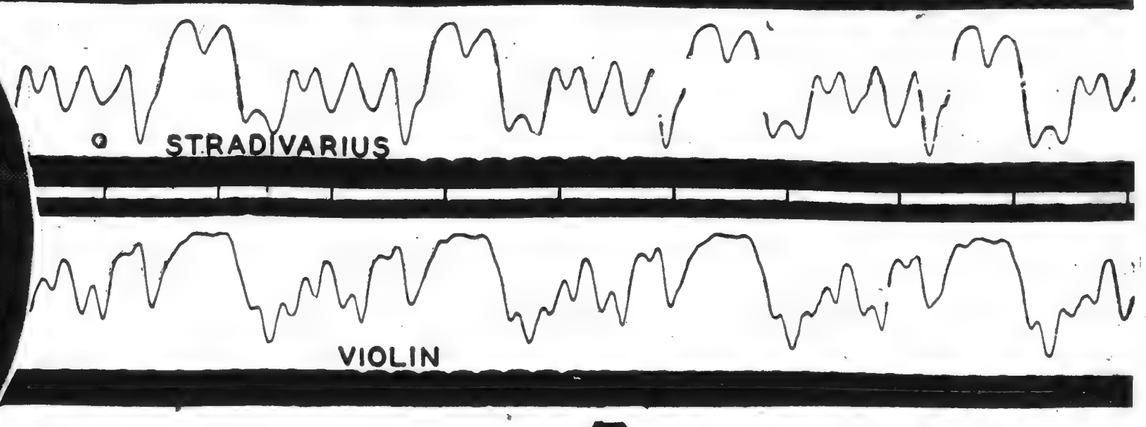
The audition was barely started—young Brink fiddling on an inexpensive violin to a piano accompaniment—when the Pops Orchestra conductor, Arthur Fiedler, stepped to the stage, thrust the pianist aside and began to play the boy's accompaniment.

Together they played, Fiedler smiling and nodding and occasionally muttering "Grown up young artist", "Excellent", "Genius." The outcome was a request that Brink play a concerto in G-minor with the orchestra.

J. A. Gould, Boston violin dealer, has entrusted him with the rare instrument for tonight's concert.

ONE OF 540

153



Upper left: Robert Brink and the $50,000 "Darnley" Stradavarius he will play at Pops tonight. Upper right: Photographic track of vibrations from a "Strad" and an ordinary fiddle. Note the eveness of the larger peaks or tone fundamentals and the regularity of the smaller peaks or overtones in the upper chart. The ordinary violin tones, lower line of chart, shows flattened and distorted peaks and widely fluctuating overtones caused by echoes set up within the violin. Lower photo is a closeup of a "Strad," but the reader cannot see the golden varnish, the figured work and the flowing lines that make the instrument a thing of beauty to the eye, as well as producing tones of beauty to the ear.

The following is the history, as far as same is known to us, of the Stradivari violin of the year 1712, certificate for which accompanies this letter.

I first became acquainted with the instrument when Major Bligh, grandson of the Earl of Darnley, brought it to my father in the 80's of the last century. I gathered frum him that both this violin and a Stradivari 'cello were purchased from J. B. Vuillaume of Paris, which transaction, to the best of my knowledge, took place about 1850.

Major Bligh was a pass... good amat... ina showed a lik...

Lad of 17 Plays 'Strad' In Solo at Pops Tonight

By TOM O'SULLIVAN

When the lights in Symphony Hall dim tonight and the gay Pops audience sits back in quiet anticipation to hear the Bruch G-minor Concerto, the featured young soloist in that number will add another brilliant chapter to an almost unbelievable story.

The artist's name is Robert Brink and this article has to do with his discovery as an outstanding musician and the combination of circumstances that sees him playing a "name" Stradivarius violin valued at $50,000.

VIOLIN STUDY INCIDENTAL

Robert is 17, the son of an attorney, and lives in Watertown. He attends Browne & Nichols School in Cambridge and takes violin lessons on the side at the Malkin Conservatory of Music in Boston. While his father is an enthusiastic music lover and has played the violin most of his life, he has never attempted to have the boy make music the major interest in life.

Consequently, no one was more surprised than the father, Virgil Brink, when Joseph Malkin, director of the conservatory, told him he wanted the boy to have an audition by Arthur Fiedler at Symphony Hall, with the thought in mind that he would play a solo at Pops.

"But I have played the violin all my life and would hardly venture that myself," was the father's reply. "And Robert is only——"

"Robert is only pretty close to being a genius," was the reply of the kindly, but artistically hyper-critical Malkin, who had watched closely the progress of his young student.

Harry Ellis Dickson, a member of the Boston Symphony and also a member of the conservatory faculty, had been and is the youth's teacher but his glowing praise of his pupil's ability had caused the elderly school director to follow the lessons very closely.

PLAYS HIKE ARTIST

So, an audition date was arranged and Fiedler listened to the boy for a time, then sat down at the piano and took over the accompaniment himself, a sure sign of his great interest in his player. The famous pianist, Jesus Sanroma, present in the hall for a conference with Fiedler, cocked his head attentively when he heard the boy play, then stepped to the piano and replaced Fiedler as accompanist.

At the end of the solo Fiedler said simply: "He doesn't play like a boy. He plays like a grown artist."

Robert Brink, 17, then and there was definitely listed to be soloist at the Pops June 2. But his father, pleased that his belief in the ability of his son had been vindicated, was unwilling to credit the evidence of his ears and to make certain his son was all that so many competent music judges said he was, he arranged for him to play with the Quincy Orchestral Society prior to the Symphony Hall appearance.

He took the lad to the noted Boston violin dealers, J. A. Gould and Son, to rent an extra fine instrument. After hearing Robert play on one violin, Gould invited him to try another that he produced from an inner part of the store. The lad's comment was that it seemed to him much better than the first.

"Correct," the dealer replied laconically. "Pietro Guarnieri made it."

"But you wouldn't allow me——" was the startled reply of the lad.

"I would be very pleased to entrust it to such a fine young artist," Gould answered.

PLEASED AT RESULTS

At the Quincy concert the last week of April three especially critical listeners heard Robert Brink. They were, besides his father, Joseph Malkin and Mr. Gould. All were pleased.

"On the strength of that performance of your son, Mr. Brink, I am going to give him a still better fiddle for Symphony Hall," Gould promised.

When Robert and his father returned to the Gould shop the dealer placed in the boy's hand an instrument he handled with special care.

"Why I barely touch the bow to it and it gives out the fullest and sweetest tone I've ever drawn," the boy explained with delight.

"Young man," answered Gould, "it is partly because you have the hands, the ears and the temperament to do it. The rest is due to Antonio Stradivari."

Father and son were equally awed and eagerly examined the statement which attested the instrument was the work of the great violin maker. But young Robert had already named the tokens of the master's craftsmanship—sweetness combined with power and, above all, instantaneous response to the most effortless touch of the bow.

It is for this reason that musicians pay almost fabulous prices for such violins. They know that the instrument will always be dependable and their minds are released from physical effort and can freely soar in flights of interpretation.

540 INSTRUMENTS REAL

The greatest authority in the world on violins by Stradivari and other master makers is the firm of Hill and Sons in London. They have definite evidence of the genuineness of 540 instruments made by Stradivari and now existing after exposure to two centuries of fire, flood and war.

To the list of famous name violins should be added that of the "Darnley," named for the British Earl of that title and to be played by Robert Brink tonight. Illustrating this story is part of the signed statement by the firm attesting the authenticity of this fiddle.

But it is to Gould and the unnamed owner of the instrument that Robert and his father are most grateful.

The former, because of his interest in the youth, the latter because it was at his insistence that this instrument, valued, according to Gould, at $50,000, was loaned to the lad. He entrusted its sale to Gould but when he heard of the boy's ability insisted he should be allowed to show his talents on an instrument worthy of his genius.

450 TAKE PART TODAY IN MUSIQUIZ SEMI-FINAL

Boston Traveler — June 26, '54

About 450 men and women, young and old, from Massachusetts communities will sit with pencils and ballots at floor tables in Symphony Hall this afternoon at 4 o'clock for the semi-final contest of the Boston Herald Musiquiz. They are the successful survivors of the two big Musiquiz contests at Boston Garden.

From these 450, the 50 whose marks are the highest following this afternoon's contest will take part in the final contest for $800 worth of prizes next Monday at 4 P. M. in Symphony Hall.

Added features for this afternoon's contest program were announced last night by the Symphony Hall management. All contestants will be supplied by the management with ballots of one color and the spectators in the free balcony seats will get ballots of another color so they may join in or follow the fun of the contest.

The ballots of the spectators will not, of course, be turned in or marked. The ballots of the contestants will be deposited in locked ticket boxes attended by ushers as the contestants leave the floor of the hall.

As a special treat for contestants and spectators, a brand new RCA-Victor recording of a Pops selection will be played for the first time in Boston at this afternoon's contest.

The semi-final contest this afternoon will start promptly at 4 P. M., under the direction as masters of ceremonies of Rudolph Elie, Jr., Herald Musiquiz Editor, and George A. Kuyper, advertising manager of Symphony Hall. Doors will be opened at 3:30 P. M. The program will last about one hour. Contestants are requested to bring their own pencils.

All music played this afternoon will be from RCA-Victor recordings of Symphony and Pops selections. It will be played on a combination RCA-Victor radio and record player of the same model which will be awarded as first prize in the Musiquiz.

The floor of Symphony Hall will be reserved this afternoon for contestants but the balcony will be open to the public free of charge. The correct answers to the questions asked this afternoon will be published in tomorrow's Boston Herald.

The names and addresses of the 50 who qualify for the final contest next Monday afternoon will be published in The Sunday Herald but they will receive their tickets by mail before Sunday.

While several who entered the Garden contests to test their skill and for the fun may have qualified, it was again pointed out last night that under no circumstances may any of the following qualify for prizes:

Members or relatives of employes of Boston Symphony Hall, Boston Symphony Orchestra, Boston Herald-Traveler, RCA-Victor and the Eastern Company, distributors of Victor records.

(Photo by Bachrach)

SEMI-FINALIST — Jacob H. Strauss, assistant treasurer of the Leopold Morse Clothing Co., and a frequent conductor of the Macdowell Symphony, who qualified for the semi-finals in The Herald's second Musiquiz.

154

PARADE OF SPORTS

In the meantime other sport events came along in popularity to replace the original boxing spectacles, and soon the Garden was jammed to the girders with the audiences for horse shows, dog shows, bicycle races, winter sports meets, midget auto racing, football games, aquatic sports, sportsman's shows and soft ball tournaments.

Having long since abandoned its Andrew Square and Sullivan Square sites, the circus became a regular yearly visitor to the Gard as did the rodeo and, more recent the Garden's own Ice Follies. And of course, the fabulously successful Herald Book Fair, having held its second assembly in the Garden last year, is now a regular visitor.

Maintaining a skeleton crew of about 20 men who are trained to erect ski jumps or cooking schools at a moment's notice, the Garden has often been forced to hire as many as 20[illegible] extra workers to make [illegible] quick chan[illegible] trans[illegible] the o[illegible]

FIRST VIOLIN SECTION relaxes between numbers.

(Photos by John B. Sanroma)

GAIL PATRICK with an autographed copy of the latest Pops recording from Arthur Fiedler.

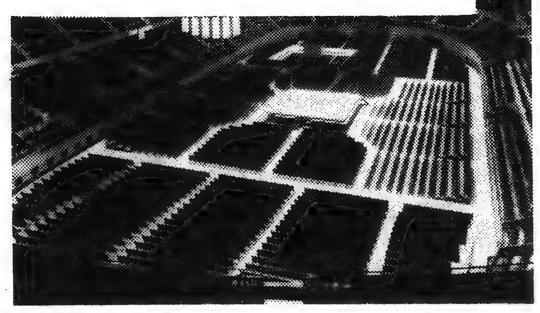
ARTHUR FIEDLER AND WALTER PISTOR, noted New England composer, talk over a score for the Musiquiz.

JESUS SANROMA practicing for tone quality.

Boston Garden Ready For Herald Musiquiz

Acoustics Engineers of Big North Station Amphitheater Solve Problem Of Affording Every Person in Audience 'Best Seat' at Novel Entertainments

By Rudolph Elie, Jr.



THE BOSTON GARDEN as arranged for sporting events, with a seating capacity of 19,000, lends itself admirably to the Musiquiz.

Taking things as they come, from a revival to a rally or from a circus to a symphony, the Boston Garden is ready and willing to shuttle scenery, trapeze, ski runs, swimming tanks and the remains of 500-plate banquets in and out of its mammoth storerooms in eight and a half jiffies. Yet something new in the way of scene shifting is currently under contemplation in preparation for The Herald Musquizzes which will take place there on the Sunday nights of June 15 and June 22 before capacity audiences consisting of 17,804 people.

Walter Brown (who runs the Garden) says that there's never been a job too big for it. Under extreme pressure he may admit, like Cap't Corcoran of H. M. S. Pinafore, who never, never quaked in any gale "well, hardly ever." But it's safe to say that this monstrous meeting place has yet to turn down an event because it was too hard to handle.

Coping with problems has long been a specialty in the Garden. Designed in the hey-day of boxing (circa 1926) as a great sporting palace, the Garden's 65 ushers had no sooner got the seating plans memorized than boxing entered its dotage. With the prospect of a magnificent white elephant upon their hands, the managers got busy and commenced to explore its possibilities.

Before doing that however, it occurred to them to explore the Garden itself. They discovered acres of special storage rooms, hidden nooks and cranies, the most modern technical contrivances, conference and dressing rooms; all the paraphernalia in fact to cope with just about any situation.

Aside from the boxing matches, wrestling shows, track meets and hockey games the Garden naturally drew, conventions, political rallies and revivals began to appear on the bulletin boards. Then in rapid succession came banquets, dances, balls (one of which, incidentally, drew 51,000 people, one of the largest indoor assemblies ever held anywhere); expositions, concerts and theatrical productions.

PARADE OF SPORTS

In the meantime other sporting events came along in popularity to replace the original boxing spectacles, and soon the Garden was jammed to the girders with the audiences for horse shows, dog shows, bicycle races, winter sports meets, midget auto racing, football games, aquatic sports, sportsman's shows and soft ball tournaments.

Having long since abandoned its Andrew Square and Sullivan Square sites, the circus became a regular yearly visitor to the Garden, as did the rodeo and, more recently, the Garden's own Ice Follies. And of course, the fabulously successful Herald Book Fair, having held its second assembly in the Garden last year, is now a regular visitor.

Maintaining a skeleton crew of about 20 men who are trained to erect ski jumps or cooking schools at a moment's notice, the Garden has often been forced to hire as many as 200 extra workers to make one of its famous quick changes. The record for magical transitions seems to be held for the occasion of a hockey game to be followed in the evening by a beer garden party.

The afternoon hockey game went into one overtime period after another with the result that the ice was finally unpopulated at 6 o'clock. Before the last goal was scored, steam was sent hissing through the 13 miles of pipe which lie below the floor—and which are used to freeze the ice—and by the time the last cheer had died away, the melting process was well under way.

As the ice turned to water, suction machines drew it off, then the floor was thoroughly dried by means of wind machines. Once dry, the task of setting up a rural scene with evergreen trees, boxed flowers and potted petunias was begun while men cleaned the stands from top to bottom. By that time the musicians commenced to arrive, so a stage was hastily set up, and tables, chairs, linen and dinner service were set to the accompaniment of dance music. At last all was ready and at 7:45, so the story goes, several thousand people were dining and dancing—in a rural hofbrau.

It was the Garden's technicians' turn for an eye-opener, however; the day carpenters from the K. V. Wolsey company started work on a Cape Cod house in the Garden during The Herald's 1940 Book Fair at 8 o'clock in the morning and were nailing the roof on at noon.

While no such heroic measures are contemplated in the arrangement of the Herald Musiquiz, the fact is it all presents an unusual situation. Being both spectacle and concert, musiquiz and entertainment, the proper setting seemed to be something of a problem in affording every last person in the audience a "best" seat.

Should the stage be a shell-like affair at one end of the Garden? Or should it be perched somewhere in the balcony, and if so, how? And no matter what was done, how could the musicians and Arthur Fiedler be facing every which way at once?

While they had had the benefit of Stokowski's recent concert in the Garden with his Youth Orchestra to learn something about the Garden's acoustics, Stokowski had brought with him his own specially designed shell. Generally speaking, the result was excellent but there were, strangely enough, a number of "dead" spots which baffled the acoustical engineers, men, incidentally, who do not baffle too easily.

Too, with Stokowski's orchestra, there was no capacity audience to reckon with. With all prospects pointing to a capacity audience for the Herald Musiquizzes, the importance of providing a "reserved" seat for everyone became paramount. It is a well established fact that the Garden just doesn't have any "dead" spots either visual or acoustical if the focal point is directly in the center of the floor. The obvious solution, then, was to place the Pops concert smack dab in the middle and—but telling all now would be like revealing the tag line of a mystery play.

The problem has been solved; there's been a dress rehearsal and all, and perfect sight lines and hearing lines may be unqualifiedly guaranteed.

For those who came in here, it might be well to relate exactly what the Herald Musquiz is. Actually, it is a concert of all-time Pops favorites, being chosen by popular ballot, and being presented by the Boston Pops orchestra under Arthur Fiedler to benefit the Pension Fund of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. There will be two Herald Muisquizzes, one on Sunday night June 15 at 8 P. M. and the second on the following Sunday also at 8 P. M.

Each concert will last about an hour, and each will be followed by a musical questionnaire in which all may participate at will. The Herald will provide ballots to all who want them, and each question asked by the master of ceremonies will be followed by musical examples played by the orchestra.

The whole thing is designed primarily for entertainment, but those who seriously intend to compete for one of the 29 fine musical prizes must remember that all musical questions will be derived from the Victor records of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Pops Orchestra and that the list consequently bears studying. Further details and record lists may be secured from your neighborhood Victor record dealer who will be glad to help you all he can. Tickets may likewise be purchased at your Victor record dealer at 25 cents each or directly from Symphony Hall, the Boston Garden or the Herald-Traveler.

The Boston Herald, Boston, Mass.

BOSTON HERALD MUSIQUIZ EDITOR:

I vote for.....by.....
(name of composition) (composer)

as the all-time Pops favorite, and request that it be included on one of the programs of The Boston Herald Musiquizes to be held in the Boston Garden on the nights of June 15 and 22.

Please send me ( ) Sample Blanks, which will contain a complete list of Boston Pops and Boston Symphony Orchestra Victor Red Seal Records.

Name .....
(Please Print)

Street .....

City ..... State .....

NOTE: It is not necessary to enter the Contest nor to send for Sample Contest Blanks in order to vote.

ARTHUR FIEDLER (right) and his librarian of music, Leslie Rogers.

(Photos by John B. Sanroma)

JESUS SANROMA, distinguished symphony musician, at the piano.

SPECIAL REHEARSAL of a section of the Boston Symphony Orchestra just prior to the making of a phonograph record.

VIEW OF POPS MUSICIANS in full action as seen from the wings.

Big Prize Contest For Music Lovers

Boston Herald 'Musiquiz' to Be Held in Boston Garden on Sundays of June 15 and 22 A Novel and Entertaining Festival in Which Audience Will Share Valuable Awards

ARTHUR FIEDLER as he faces the musicians.

By Rudolph Elie, Jr.

If you have a scrap of music in your bones; if the sight and sound of a great symphony orchestra thrills you from stem to stern, and if the levelling of a question at you is an irresistible challenge, then take out your biggest red pencil and make a huge circle around the dates June 15 and June 22.

For on those evenings at the Boston Garden there will occur the reddest-lettered day of musical fun in the history of Greater Boston—the First Boston Herald Musiquiz.

Having made your mark on those two Sunday nights in June, you'd better keep your pencil to a fighting point. If you know how to use it you stand a whale of a chance to win a musical contest which pays off with a $275 RCA-Victor radio-phonograph combination with $50 worth of Victor records of your own choice; a trip to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival of the Boston Symphony Orchestra (convertible into $150 cash if you desire); a pair of $100 tickets to the 24 regular Saturday night concerts of the Boston Symphony for next season; $50 worth of Victor records, and 15 equally desirable musical prizes.

The four grand prizes are but a small part of the fun, though, for the first 17,000 music-lovers who are lucky enough to get tickets for the Boston Herald Musiquiz on the successive Sunday nights are in for the time of their lives.

Never before possible, let alone dreamed of, the Boston Herald Musiquiz stands as another great "first" for the Boston Herald as well as for the most original and entertaining musical festival ever conceived. Behind it stands the entire institution of the 56-year-old Boston Pops Orchestra, which has long proved itself a vital part of the musical life of this great community of 2,000,000 people and now, under the compelling leadership of its conductor, Arthur Fiedler, recognized as the most famous musical organization of its kind in the world.

CULTURAL RENASCENCE

The Boston Herald Musiquiz is all that the name implies and a great deal more. Believing that the current phenomenal interests in really fine music performed by the world's greatest orchestras is signal evidence of the cultural renascence of the United States, the Boston Pops Orchestra under the baton of Arthur Fiedler will present an hour's concert of your favorite classical and semi-classical compositions, to be followed by an hour's novel musical quiz based on selections to be played by the orchestra.

No entry blanks, no conditions, no rules and regulations, no red tape, no jokers in the pack; nothing whatever to interfere with the enjoyment of great music and the opportunity to participate in a hilarious musical quiz with an all-star board of experts consisting of 90 of the finest orchestral virtuosos in the world.

The concert which precedes the actual quiz period will of itself be worth the price of admission—which incidentally is 25 cents for each Musiquiz, every cent of it going to the Pension Fund of the Boston Symphony Orchestra—for Arthur Fiedler is going to play the all-time favorites of the Pops' 56 years, including the famous George Gershwin "Rhapsody in Blue," with Jesus Maria Sanroma as piano soloist.

The Musiquiz to follow the concert is not restricted to any age group or class, nor do you have to enter it at all if you don't want to. As you enter the Boston Garden, you will be handed a Musiquiz blank. Some may prefer to make paper arrows of them and float them around the Garden while listening to the music, for there is no obligation whatever. But if you have your eye on one of those magnificent prizes, you'll hold on to your blank for all you're worth.

After the concert, a famous celebrity (whose name you know as well as your own) will act as master of ceremonies for the Musiquiz. He will present six groups of three questions each, ranging from the very easy to the moderately difficult, but he will absolutely not spring any questions of a "trick" nature.

IN SEALED ENVELOPES

Every question will be illustrated by the orchestra or by the soloists, who will play musical selections entirely unknown to them up to the instant of performance, since the music will be given to them in sealed envelopes. After each question and selection, sufficient time will be allowed for the contestants to write down their answers on the blanks. At the conclusion of the Musiquiz, ushers will collect the blanks, and the names of the 200 people who turn in the best set of answers will be published in the Boston Herald before the second Musiquiz is given the following Sunday night.

Now, if you are not among the 200 winners of the first Musiquiz, you are perfectly welcome to try again at the second Herald Musiquiz to be conducted exactly in the same manner as the first one on Sunday night, June 22. Even those who because of a previous engagement cannot attend the first Musiquiz, may try their hand at the second concert with an equal chance of qualifying for the grand prizes.

In other words, the 400 people whose blanks are selected on merit—200 each Sunday night—may qualify for the semi-finals, which will be held in Symphony Hall on Thursday afternoon, June 26, beginning at 4 o'clock.

The final contest for the prizes will be at Symphony Hall, Monday afternoon, June 30.

Since the whole idea of the Musiquiz is to have fun and lots of it, while at the same time benefiting a most worthwhile cause, it is important to remember that the questions to be asked at both Musiquizzes will be within the scope of the average music-lover. And here's a tip, straight from Mr. Fiedler. Not a single question will be asked to which the answer does not lie in one of the Pops Orchestra or Boston Symphony Orchestra Victor recordings.

For instance, neither orchestra has recorded, say, Beethoven's "Battle of Waterloo." It isn't likely that they ever will, praise be, but since they haven't, there isn't a chance that the Musiquizzers will call upon the contestants to identify a strain from it during the contest.

On the other hand, the Pops Orchestra's latest recording of the Mendelssohn G minor Piano Concerto, with Sanroma as soloist, an album which Victor is featuring for the month of June, may well be the basis of a musical question. Use the coupon below right now to secure your complete list of Pops and Boston Symphony Orchestra recordings from which all questions will be derived.

OFFERS FINE TRAINING

Obviously, then, if that magnificent RCA Victor radio-phonograph has stirred your imagination, or if you dream of an idyllic week at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, or if you can see yourself attending all 24 of the Boston Symphony orchestra's concerts next season, you had better go in training for the Herald Musiquiz right now. The easiest and best way to do it is to study the great musical compositions as interpreted by both orchestras on Victor records.

It may be that you already have a number of them. That makes it all the easier. If you haven't yet acquired a Pops repertoire, go to your phonograph and record dealer and enlist his aid. He'll be glad to help you all he can to secure the source material. Further, your dealer will be able to provide you soon with your tickets to the Herald Musiquiz as well as your contest blanks and any additional information you may seek.

As an additional aid to contestants, every night at the regular Pops concerts beginning tomorrow night, Arthur Fiedler and the orchestra have arranged something in the way of a preview to the Herald Musiquiz. It is perfectly possible that they may give away many a clue to the keen-eared in the Pops audience.

A RARE OPPORTUNITY

In case you don't care to enter the Musiquiz but have a deep and abiding love for great symphonic music, you will find the Herald Musiquizzes the most enjoyable musical events you've ever attended. In addition to the music and the Musiquiz, the spectacle, the color, the excitement, the celebrities and all the myriad special events which have been arranged will in themselves lend fascination to the events.

Every year more than 750,000 people hear the concerts of the various Boston Symphony Orchestra activities, but the surface hasn't been scratched. There are still thousands of Greater Bostonians who have yet to hear a fine symphony concert in the flesh. What an opportunity this is!

A few paragraphs back it was stated that such an undertaking as the Herald Musiquiz would have been fantastic before now. Nothing could be more certain.

Where Beethoven ten years ago was considered a long-haired dodo whose music was guaranteed to induce a coma, today every school child analyzes, studies and loves his music. The same holds true even for Bach, Mozart, Brahms, Schumann and others of the world's musical geniuses. If you're from Missouri musically, and have to see it to believe it, then begin making your plans right now to be on hand at the Boston Garden on Sunday, June 15. Those 17,000 tickets are going to disappear as quickly as Hess from the front page.

To recapitulate, then, in form suitable for pasting in hats:

The first Boston Herald Musiquiz, sponsored by The Boston Herald and the Boston Pops orchestra in association with RCA-Victor and its affiliated dealers throughout metropolitan Boston, will be held on the nights of June 15 and June 22 in the Boston Garden.

The Musiquiz will consist of a concert of your musical favorites performed by the Boston Symphony orchestra under Arthur Fiedler, with Jesus Maria Sanroma as piano soloist and a musical questionnaire in which all persons may participate.

Admission will be 25 cents for each Musiquiz, the proceeds benefiting the Pension Fund of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

The 400 winning contestants (200 to be chosen at each Musiquiz) qualify for the contest finals to be held subsequently at Symphony Hall.

The prizes, totalling $800 in value, are: First prize, one RCA Victor radio-phonograph, model 301, list price $275 and $50 worth of records of the winner's choice; second prize, a trip to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, convertible into $150 cash if desired; third prize, a pair of tickets to the 24 Saturday night concerts of the Boston Symphony orchestra, value $100; fourth prize, $50 worth of Victor records of the winner's choice. Besides these grand prizes there will be 10 prizes of $10 worth of Victor records and 15 prizes of $5 worth of records.

Tickets, sample blanks and additional information may soon be secured from Symphony Hall, your own record dealer or Musiquiz Contest Editor, the Boston Herald.

BOSTON HERALD MUSIQUIZ EDITOR:
The Boston Herald, Boston, Mass.

I vote for.....by.....
(name of composition) (composer)

as the all-time Pops favorite, and request that it be included on one of the programs of The Boston Herald Musiquizes to be held in the Boston Garden on the nights of June 15 and 22.

Please send me ( ) Sample Blanks, which will contain a complete list of Boston Pops and Boston Symphony Orchestra Victor Red Seal Records.

Name .....
(Please Print)

Street .....

City ..... State .....

NOTE: It is not necessary to enter the Contest nor to send for Sample Contest Blanks in order to vote.

REDUCTION

RATIO

19x

2.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

PM-MGP 13"x18"
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

200 mm

150 mm

100 mm

A5

A4

A3

1.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

2.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century

A&P

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

4.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

3.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

3.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

Take One

SYMPHONY HALL

56TH SEASON

POPS

85 SYMPHONY PLAYERS

ARTHUR FIEDLER, Conductor

Music—Refreshments—Smoking

SIXTH WEEK

Monday Evening, June 9, at 8:30

*Military Polonaise ..... Chopin-Glazounov
*Seventh Slavonic Dance, in C major ..... Dvořák
"Valse Triste" ..... Sibelius
*Ouverture Solennelle, "1812" ..... Tchaikovsky

"Ride of the Valkyries" ..... Wagner
*Bolero ..... Ravel
Boston University Songs

"Tales from the Vienna Woods," Waltzes ..... Strauss
*Pavane from the "American Symphonette" ..... Gould
*"Stars and Stripes Forever," March ..... Sousa

Tuesday Evening, June 10

"Schechenyi Indulo," March ..... Fahrbach
*Overture to "Russlan and Ludmilla" ..... Glinka
*"Nobody Knows de Trouble I've Seen" .... Arranged by Jacchia
*Bolero ..... Ravel

"Danse Macabre," Symphonic Poem ..... Saint-Saëns
Pianoforte Concerto in G minor, No. 2 ..... Saint-Saëns
Soloist: ELIZABETH TRAVIS

*"Wine, Woman, and Song," Waltzes ..... Strauss
"On the Trail," from the "Grand Canyon" Suite ..... Grofé
"God Bless America" ..... Berlin

Wednesday Evening, June 11

*"Pomp and Circumstance," March ..... Elgar
Overture to "Light Cavalry" ..... Suppé
*"Kamennoi-Ostrow" ("Rêve Angélique") ..... Rubinstein
"Spirit of the Warrior" ..... Grossman

"Les Préludes," Symphonic Poem ..... Liszt
*Rhapsody in Blue ..... Gershwin
Soloist: LEO LITWIN

"Invitation to the Dance" ..... Weber-Berlioz
"Prima Donna" ..... Gould
Dance from "La Vida Breve" ..... Falla

Thursday Evening, June 12

Hungarian March, "Rakoczy" ..... Berlioz
"Finlandia," Symphonic Poem ..... Sibelius
Scherzo from Symphony No. 3, "Eroica" ..... Beethoven
Allegro vivace
Suite from "Carmen" ..... Bizet
Aragonaise — Intermezzo — Gypsy Dance

Violin Concerto in G minor, No. 1 ..... Bruch
Soloist: SHELDON ROTENBERG

Conducted by Leo R. Lewis:
Tuftonia's Day ..... E. W. Hayes
Spell It Out ..... A. T. Williams
Medley-Fantasia on Tufts Airs ..... J. W. Morton
Dear Alma Mater ..... L. R. Lewis

Friday Evening, June 13

"Calling All Workers" ..... Eric Coates
Twelve Contra-Dances ..... Beethoven
*Intermezzo, "Cavalleria Rusticana" ..... Mascagni
"Peer Gynt" Suite ..... Grieg

*Overture to "A Midsummer Night's Dream" ..... Mendelssohn
*Piano Concerto No. 1, in G minor ..... Mendelssohn
Soloist: JESÚS MARÍA SANROMÁ

*Austrian Peasant Dances ..... Schönherr
"Yankee Doodle Went To Town" ..... Morton Gould
*"Washington Post" March ..... Sousa

Saturday Evening, June 14

Quincy Porter, Guest Conductor:
Procession of Bacchus, from "Sylvia" ..... Delibes
Overture to "Semiramide" ..... Rossini
Suite from "Henry VIII" ..... German
Morris Dance — Shepherd's Dance — Torch Dance
Pan-Americana ..... Arnold A. Chaitman

Wallace Goodrich, Guest Conductor:
"Psyche and Eros," from "Psyché" ..... Franck
First Movement, Violin Concerto ..... Tchaikovsky
Allegro moderato
Soloist: DOROTHY LOUISE JOHNSON
"Jubilee," from the "Symphonic Sketches" ..... Chadwick

Francis Findlay, Guest Conductor:
"Vienna Blood," Waltzes ..... Strauss
The New England Conservatory Chorus
Chorus of Bacchantes, from "Philemon and Baucis" ..... Gounod
"Charm Me Asleep" ..... Leslie
(Unaccompanied)
Chorale and Finale from "Die Meistersinger von Nürnberg" ..... Wagner

*Pops Recording

Table Seats (reserved)	$1.00	Telephone Commonwealth 1492
First Balcony (reserved)	50c., 75c., & $1.00
Unreserved Seats	25 cents

All nights open to the Public.

Sunday Evening, June 15, at 8

at the BOSTON GARDEN

The numbers now leading in the popular balloting, which will be played, include:

POMP AND CIRCUMSTANCE

RHAPSODY IN BLUE with

JESÚS MARÍA SANROMÁ, Pianist

All Seats 25 cents — on Sale Now

BOSTON HERALD MUSIQUIZ — BOSTON GARDEN — POPS ORCHESTRA — ARTHUR FIEDLER, CONDUCTOR — SUNDAYS JUNE 15 AND JUNE 22

BOSTON HERALD MUSIQUIZ — BOSTON GARDEN — SUNDAYS, JUNE 15 AND JUNE 22 — ADMISSION 25 CENTS — TICKETS NOW ON SALE

REDUCTION

RATIO

14x

PM-MGP 13″x18″
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

200 mm

150 mm

100 mm

A5

A4

A3

1.0

1.1

1.25

1.4

1.6

1.8

2.0

2.2

2.5

2.8

3.2

3.6

4.0

4.5

5.0

5.6

6.3

7.1

8.0

9.0

10.0

11.2

12.5

14.0

16.0

18.0

20.0

22.4

25.0

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.0 mm

1.5 mm

2.0 mm

2.5 mm

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century

A&P

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

Take One

SYMPHONY HALL

56TH SEASON

POPS

85 SYMPHONY PLAYERS

ARTHUR FIEDLER, Conductor

Music—Refreshments—Smoking

SIXTH WEEK

Monday Evening, June 9, at 8:30

*Military Polonaise ..... Chopin-Glazounov
*Seventh Slavonic Dance, in C major ..... Dvořák
"Valse Triste" ..... Sibelius
*Ouverture Solennelle, "1812" ..... Tchaikovsky

"Ride of the Valkyries" ..... Wagner
*Bolero ..... Ravel
Boston University Songs

"Tales from the Vienna Woods," Waltzes ..... Strauss
*Pavane from the "American Symphonette" ..... Gould
*"Stars and Stripes Forever," March ..... Sousa

Tuesday Evening, June 10

"Schechenyi Indulo," March ..... Fahrbach
*Overture to "Russlan and Ludmilla" ..... Glinka
*"Nobody Knows de Trouble I've Seen" .... Arranged by Jacchia
*Bolero ..... Ravel

"Danse Macabre," Symphonic Poem ..... Saint-Saëns
Pianoforte Concerto in G minor, No. 2 ..... Saint-Saëns
Soloist: ELIZABETH TRAVIS

---

*"Wine, Woman, and Song," Waltzes ..... Strauss
"On the Trail," from the "Grand Canyon" Suite ..... Grofé
"God Bless America" ..... Berlin

Wednesday Evening, June 11

*"Pomp and Circumstance," March ..... Elgar
Overture to "Light Cavalry" ..... Suppé
*"Kamennoi-Ostrow" ("Rêve Angélique") ..... Rubinstein
"Spirit of the Warrior" ..... Grossman

"Les Préludes," Symphonic Poem ..... Liszt
*Rhapsody in Blue ..... Gershwin
Soloist: LEO LITWIN

"Invitation to the Dance" ..... Weber-Berlioz
"Prima Donna" ..... Gould
Dance from "La Vida Breve" ..... Falla

Thursday Evening, June 12

Hungarian March, "Rakoczy" ..... Berlioz
"Finlandia," Symphonic Poem ..... Sibelius
Scherzo from Symphony No. 3, "Eroica" ..... Beethoven
Allegro vivace
Suite from "Carmen" ..... Bizet
Aragonaise — Intermezzo — Gypsy Dance

Violin Concerto in G minor, No. 1 ..... Bruch
Soloist: SHELDON ROTENBERG

Conducted by Leo R. Lewis:
Tuftonia's Day ..... E. W. Hayes
Spell It Out ..... A. T. Williams
Medley-Fantasia on Tufts Airs ..... J. W. Morton
Dear Alma Mater ..... L. R. Lewis

Friday Evening, June 13

"Calling All Workers" ..... Eric Coates
Twelve Contra-Dances ..... Beethoven
*Intermezzo, "Cavalleria Rusticana" ..... Mascagni
"Peer Gynt" Suite ..... Grieg

---

*Overture to "A Midsummer Night's Dream" ..... Mendelssohn
*Piano Concerto No. 1, in G minor ..... Mendelssohn
Soloist: JESÚS MARÍA SANROMÁ

---

*Austrian Peasant Dances ..... Schönherr
"Yankee Doodle Went To Town" ..... Morton Gould
*"Washington Post" March ..... Sousa

Saturday Evening, June 14

Quincy Porter, Guest Conductor:
Procession of Bacchus, from "Sylvia" ..... Delibes
Overture to "Semiramide" ..... Rossini
Suite from "Henry VIII" ..... German
Morris Dance — Shepherd's Dance — Torch Dance
Pan-Americana ..... Arnold A. Chaitman

Wallace Goodrich, Guest Conductor:

SUNDAYS JUNE 15 AND JUNE 22 — BOSTON HERALD MUSIQUIZ — BOSTON GARDEN — SUNDAYS, JUNE 15 AND JUNE 22 — ADMISSION 25 CENTS — POPS ORCHESTRA — ARTHUR FIEDLER, CONDUCTOR — SUNDAYS JUNE 15 AND JUNE 22 — BOSTON HERALD MUSIQUIZ — BOSTON GARDEN — SUNDAYS, JUNE 15 AND JUNE 22 — ADMISSION 25 CENTS — POPS ORCHESTRA — ARTHUR FIEDLER, CONDUCTOR

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA — ARTHUR FIEDLER, CONDUCTOR — BOSTON GARDEN — POPS — BOSTON HERALD MUSIQUIZ — JUNE 15 AND JUNE 22 — ADMISSION 25 CENTS — TICKETS NOW ON SALE

Tuesday Evening, June 10

"Schechenyi Indulo," March ..... Fahrbach
*Overture to "Russlan and Ludmilla" ..... Glinka
*"Nobody Knows de Trouble I've Seen" .... Arranged by Jacchia
*Bolero ..... Ravel

"Danse Macabre," Symphonic Poem ..... Saint-Saëns
Pianoforte Concerto in G minor, No. 2 ..... Saint-Saëns
Soloist: ELIZABETH TRAVIS

---

*"Wine, Woman, and Song," Waltzes ..... Strauss
"On the Trail," from the "Grand Canyon" Suite ..... Grofé
"God Bless America" ..... Berlin

Wednesday Evening, June 11

*"Pomp and Circumstance," March ..... Elgar
Overture to "Light Cavalry" ..... Suppé
*"Kamennoi-Ostrow" ("Rêve Angélique") ..... Rubinstein
"Spirit of the Warrior" ..... Grossman

"Les Préludes," Symphonic Poem ..... Liszt
*Rhapsody in Blue ..... Gershwin
Soloist: LEO LITWIN

"Invitation to the Dance" ..... Weber-Berlioz
"Prima Donna" ..... Gould
Dance from "La Vida Breve" ..... Falla

Thursday Evening, June 12

Hungarian March, "Rakoczy" ..... Berlioz
"Finlandia," Symphonic Poem ..... Sibelius
Scherzo from Symphony No. 3, "Eroica" ..... Beethoven
Allegro vivace
Suite from "Carmen" ..... Bizet
Aragonaise — Intermezzo — Gypsy Dance

Violin Concerto in G minor, No. 1 ..... Bruch
Soloist: SHELDON ROTENBERG

Conducted by Leo R. Lewis:
Tuftonia's Day ..... E. W. Hayes
Spell It Out ..... A. T. Williams
Medley-Fantasia on Tufts Airs ..... J. W. Morton
Dear Alma Mater ..... L. R. Lewis

Friday Evening, June 13

"Calling All Workers" ..... Eric Coates
Twelve Contra-Dances ..... Beethoven
*Intermezzo, "Cavalleria Rusticana" ..... Mascagni
"Peer Gynt" Suite ..... Grieg

---

*Overture to "A Midsummer Night's Dream" ..... Mendelssohn
*Piano Concerto No. 1, in G minor ..... Mendelssohn
Soloist: JESÚS MARÍA SANROMÁ

---

*Austrian Peasant Dances ..... Schönherr
"Yankee Doodle Went To Town" ..... Morton Gould
*"Washington Post" March ..... Sousa

Saturday Evening, June 14

Quincy Porter, Guest Conductor:
Procession of Bacchus, from "Sylvia" ..... Delibes
Overture to "Semiramide" ..... Rossini
Suite from "Henry VIII" ..... German
Morris Dance — Shepherd's Dance — Torch Dance
Pan-Americana ..... Arnold A. Chaitman

Wallace Goodrich, Guest Conductor:
"Psyche and Eros," from "Psyché" ..... Franck
First Movement, Violin Concerto ..... Tchaikovsky
Allegro moderato
Soloist: DOROTHY LOUISE JOHNSON
"Jubilee," from the "Symphonic Sketches" ..... Chadwick

Francis Findlay, Guest Conductor:
"Vienna Blood," Waltzes ..... Strauss
The New England Conservatory Chorus
Chorus of Bacchantes, from "Philemon and Baucis" ..... Gounod
"Charm Me Asleep" ..... Leslie
(Unaccompanied)
Chorale and Finale from "Die Meistersinger von Nürnberg" ..... Wagner

*Pops Recording

Table Seats (reserved) $1.00	Telephone Commonwealth 1492
First Balcony (reserved) 50c., 75c., & $1.00
Unreserved Seats . . . . . 25 cents

All nights open to the Public.

Sunday Evening, June 15, at 8

at the BOSTON GARDEN

The numbers now leading in the popular balloting, which will be played, include:

POMP AND CIRCUMSTANCE
RHAPSODY IN BLUE with
JESÚS MARÍA SANROMÁ, Pianist

All Seats 25 cents — on Sale Now

Tickets Go on Sale Today For Herald Musiquizzes

By RUDOLPH ELIE, JR.

Today is the day that tickets for the Boston Herald Musiquiz officially go on sale. To be held in the Boston Garden on the Sunday nights of June 15 and June 22, with the Boston Pops orchestra, under Arthur Fiedler, the Herald Musiquizzes are the most unusual evenings of musical entertainment—as well as the first mass musical quizzes—ever to be held anywhere.

It is safe to say that tickets for these two unique events which culminate in the awarding of $800 worth of highly desirable musical prizes, may now be purchased in almost every Victor record and phonograph shop in the Greater Boston area, as well as a number of similar shops throughout New England.

So great has been the demand so far that many independent ticket agencies have also requested blocks of Musiquiz tickets. The result is that no one planning to enjoy the fun at the Boston Garden on either Musiquiz evening should have the least difficulty in securing their tickets easily and conveniently.

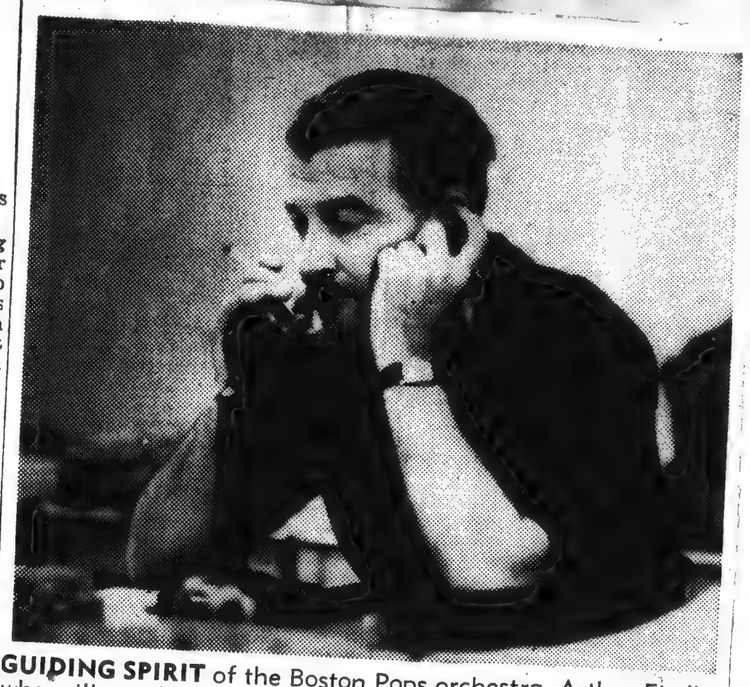
In the first place, the Musiquiz tickets are 25 cents each. Everybody knows that this insignificant charge is to benefit the Pension Fund of the Boston Symphony orchestra of course, and so there is no "extra charge" of any kind. Musiquiz ballots, contest blanks and program are to be furnished without charge by The Boston Herald to every person who goes to the Garden on Musiquiz nights. Naturally, The Herald will not undertake to furnish all the contestants with pencils, so all who intend to enter the Musiquiz must bring their own.

Although seats are not reserved, no one need for a moment fear being unable to see or hear. It is common knowledge that every seat in the Garden is a sort of private vantage point from which to view a spectacle, and the Musiquizzes, besides being magnificent musical events, are nothing if not spectacular. Thus, while early-comers will of course find the very best seats, the fact is there are about 20,000 "best" seats available.

One other thing before listing some of the larger ticket offices for The Herald Musiquiz: Those who intend to attend both Musiquizzes—and it begins to look as though thousands will do just that—must secure separate tickets for each event. For instance, the purchase of a seat for June 15 does not include June 22d's Musiquiz also. On the other hand, there is certainly no obligations to purchase tickets for both Musiquizzes if you plan to go to the first.

Tickets, then, may be secured in the following downtown places:

The Boston Herald-Traveler street floor counter, 80 Mason street; Symphony Hall; the Boston Garden; White's; Gilchrist's; Jordan's (record shop and ticket office); Filene's balcony ticket office; Boston Music Co.; Homeyer's; Steinert's; The Phonograph and Record Shop; Mosher's and Krey's. Before the week's end a number of other downtown offices will have Musiquiz tickets for sale and these will be listed in further articles. In addition to tickets, most of the Victor record dealers in the entire area will have a supply of Herald Musiquiz editions which contain complete details of the Musiquiz contest as well as a list of the prizes.



GUIDING SPIRIT of the Boston Pops orchestra, Arthur Fiedler, who will conduct his orchestra in the Herald Musiquizzes at the Boston Garden June 15 and June 22.

TONIGHT AT THE POPS

Robert Brink, the talented violinist, will make his Pops debut at Symphony Hall tonight which will be under the direction of Paul Cherkassky. The program is as follows:

Wedding March from "Le Coq d'Or" ..... Rimsky-Korsakov
Overture to "Prince Igor" ..... Borodin
"None But the Lonely Heart" ..... Tchaikovsky-Cailliet
"A Night on Bald Mountain," Fantasy ..... Moussorgsky
Four Simple Pieces
Little Overture
Dreams and Drums
Music Box
Automobile Waltz
Violin Concerto in G minor, No. 1 ... Bruch
Soloist: Robert Brink
"Where the Citrons Bloom," Waltzes ..... Strauss
Night and Day ..... Porter
March, "Oxford Street," from "London Again" ..... Eric Coates

15b

BOLERO—Swinging into the final bars of Ravel's celebrated "Bolero," Arthur Fiedler poises on the downbeat. The Pops orchestra, here shown, presents the first of its two Boston Herald Musiquizzes in the Boston Garden on Sunday night, June 15.

Herald Musiquiz Offers Fun and Profit; Enter Brand-New Musical Contest Now

By RUDOLPH ELIE, JR.

Assuming that the lure of New England's beaches and countryside tore you away from your customary habit of reading yesterday's Herald from front to back—or, if you're left handed, from back to front—you'd better drop practically everything and find out right here and now what The Boston Herald Musiquiz is all about.

In a handful of words, The Boston Herald Musiquiz is a musical contest being presented by The Herald in collaboration with the Boston Pops Orchestra under its amazingly popular conductor Arthur Fiedler, to be held Sunday night, June 15, in the Boston Garden. Price? 25 cents—every penny of which goes into the pension fund of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

But more than that, The Herald Musiquiz has a number of sensational "firsts" about it.

So far as we can find out, it's the first musical contest of its kind ever to be held, anywhere.

It's open to all comers, regardless of age, class, musical I.Q. and/or color of hair.

You don't have to tear off the top of your piano and mail it in to enter; besides the 25-cent admission charge, there is no obligation whatever.

And that leads to the top distinction of The Herald Musiquiz: It is the only contest we ever heard of that has no rules, no regulations, no "do's" and "don't's," no fancy fiddle-diddle of any kind. Everybody can enter the contest; even the Musiquiz Editor is thinking seriously of going in there and trying to capture one of the prizes. Actually, of course, all connected with the Musiquiz cannot compete.

Totalling $800 in value, the prizes are enough to stir the imagination of everyone who loves music. The first prize is an RCA-Victor console model 301 radio-phonograph, the best machine that RCA-Victor turns out (value $275) with $50 worth of Victor records of the winner's choice.

The second prize is a de-luxe trip for two to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, the goal of every music-lover in the country. If the winner wishes, however, he may convert this prize into $150 cash.

For third prize, the Herald Musiquiz offers a pair of the best available seats to the 24 regular Saturday night concerts of the Boston Symphony orchestra, valued at $100.

The fourth prize is a batch of Victor records of the winner's selection, $50 worth.

In addition, there are 10 prizes of $10 worth of Victor records and fifteen prizes of $5 worth of Victor records, all of the winner's own choosing.

But The Herald Musiquiz is by no means purely a contest. The Musiquiz part of it, amusing and profitable although it is, only occupies part of the evening.

To begin with, the Boston Pops orchestra, after 56 years as much of an institution as the bean, will present a program of its all-time favorites, including George Gershwin's famous "Rhapsody in Blue" featuring Boston's internationally renowned piano soloist Jesus Maria Sanroma.

The musical favorites to be played will be chosen by you. There's hardly a Bostonian now alive who has not at one time or another both attended the Pops and voted for his favorite composition on one of Mr. Fiedler's enormously popular "request" nights.

When the thousands of ballots—like that printed below—begin to come in to The Herald however, as an amazing number already have, the Musiquiz program on June 15 will consist of the all-time Pops favorites by popular acclaim. This is a musical opportunity, aside from the fun and spectacle of the Musiquiz, which no music lover can conceivably afford to miss.

Between the music and the Musiquiz, 25 cents is a trifling amount to lay out, especially in such a worthwhile and home-grown cause as the Pension Fund of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. But the music and the Musiquiz are but a small part of the evening's entertainment.

There'll be a master of ceremonies whose presence alone is sufficient to fill the garden to the eaves; there'll be personalities, musical stunts, celebrities, and a number of special events which only those who attend will find out.

Daily from now on, both The Herald and The Traveler will contain up-to-the-minute news and developments of the forthcoming Herald Musiquiz, as well as hints on how to win one of the prizes, and additional information may be secured from your local Victor record dealer. Use the ballot below to vote for your Pops favorite, and remember, the first Herald Musiquiz will be held at the Boston Garden on Sunday night, June 15.

BOSTON HERALD MUSIQUIZ EDITOR:
The Boston Herald, Boston, Mass.

I vote for.....(name of composition).....by.....(composer).....

as the all-time Pops favorite, and request that it be included on one of the programs of The Boston Herald Musiquizes to be held in the Boston Garden on the nights of June 15 and 22.

Please send me ( ) Sample Blanks, which will contain a complete list of Boston Pops and Boston Symphony Orchestra Victor Red Seal Records.

Name .....(Please Print)

Street .....

City ..... State .....

NOTE: It is not necessary to enter the Contest nor to send for Sample Contest Blanks in order to vote.

ANCIENT POPS PROGRAMS SHOW CHANGES IN TASTE

By RUDOLPH ELIE, JR.

We suppose the young whippersnappers of 1997 will be poring over present-day Pops programs and poking fun at us in quiet sort of way just as we are today rustling through the mouldy old Pops programs of 1885 and being very, very smug about it all.

It's not a particularly penetrating observation to say that popular musical tastes have undergone a tremendous rise in cultural level since the '80s, but who would have dreamed it possible even 10 years ago to conduct a musical quiz such as the Herald Musiquiz in which 18 or 20,000 people would be rattling off the answers to such questions as "How many sympohnies did Brahms write?" or "What's the difference between a tone poem and a symphony?"

Certainly there were cultivated musical audiences in the '80s whose tastes were unimpeachable; there always have been such enlightened audiences. Indeed, they have kept the music of Palestrina and Gluck and the hundreds of other early musical geniuses alive. But we're speaking of the great mass of people who before the advent of radio had very likely never heard anything, but vague rumors to the effect that there was a composer whose name was Bach.

For instance, here's a small portion of one of Austin's Popular Sunday Sacred Concert of the middle '80s; concerts, incidentally, which were the talk of the town.

Besides the Seven Sunderland Sisters ("Seven Bewitching Damsels Berobed in Endless Tresses Who Sing Like Very Nightingales"—and who by the way sold hair tonic on the side), the program offers much musical delights as a "novel repertoire of Imitations of Cornets, Trombones, etc.;" a solo on a silver bell ("itself worth the price of admission"); a female saxophonist ("who has completely carried by storm every audience") and an "always favorite reader, who will Render the "Death of Marmion" in the Finished Style for which She is Noted."

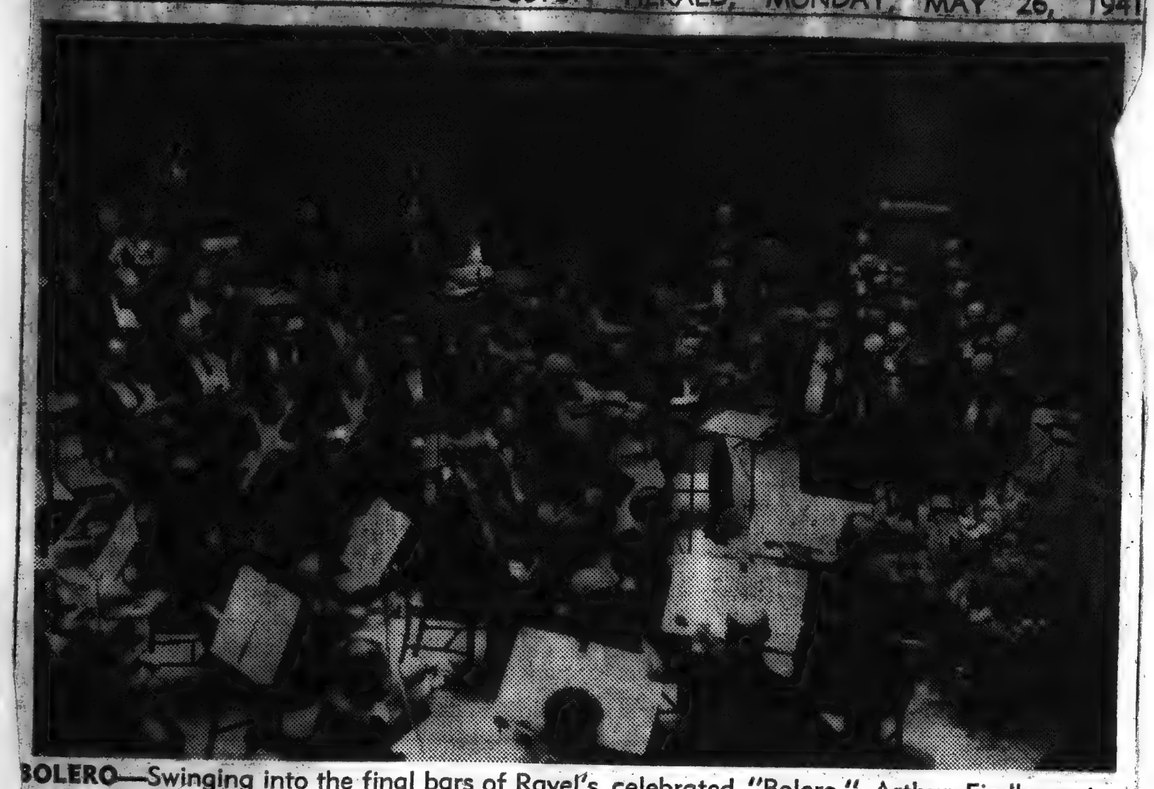
What do you suppose would have happened to a matter of ceremonies who got up and asked the audience to identify a theme from a Beethoven symphony?

Meanwhile the Pops, aside from a scattering of solid compositions which even today remain favorites, were offering a frenzied assortment of galops, paraphrases, "selections," grand fantasias, comic tatoos and grand quadlibets. The most enchanting effect, it seems, was the gradual crescendo and decrescendo of a march tune representing the passing of a parade. It never failed to bring down the house, and men's cloth caps were thrown so high they often got stuck on the chandeliers.

Well, who are we of 1941 to talk? What will the Pops audiences of 1997 think about some of the currently favorite Pops novelties? The point is, though, that we don't care what they do think. Taking it by and large, we feel we have good cause to consider ourselves a fairly enlightened musical audience and becoming more so all the time. And i fthere are any who don't quite agree, we'd suggest that they join the rest of us in The Herald Musiquiz being held to benefit the Pension Fund of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Boston Garden on June 15 and June 22. We'll find out then pretty much what is what along the musical front, and have a grand time doing so. Tickets, it may be added, are now on sale at 25 cents each at most Victor record dealers as well as at The Herald, the Boston Garden and Symphony Hall.

CUTTING GROOVES during a Victor recording session, the Pops orchestra under Arthur Fiedler works with Paul Hindemith, celebrated composer (in the background between Mr. Fiedler and the harp).

15e



BOLERO—Swinging into the final bars of Ravel's celebrated "Bolero," Arthur Fiedler poises on the downbeat. The Pops orchestra, here shown, presents the first of its two Boston Herald Musiquizzes in the Boston Garden on Sunday night, June 15.

Herald Musiquiz Offers Fun and Profit; Enter Brand-New Musical Contest Now

By RUDOLPH ELIE, JR.

Assuming that the lure of New England's beaches and countryside tore you away from your customary habit of reading yesterday's Herald from front to back—or, if you're left handed, from back to front—you'd better drop practically everything and find out right here and now what The Boston Herald Musiquiz is all about.

In a handful of words, The Boston Herald Musiquiz is a musical contest being presented by The Herald in collaboration with the Boston Pops Orchestra under its amazingly popular conductor Arthur Fiedler, to be held Sunday night, June 15, in the Boston Garden. Price? 25 cents—every penny of which goes into the pension fund of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

But more than that, The Herald Musiquiz has a number of sensational "firsts" about it.

So far as we can find out, it's the first musical contest of its kind ever to be held, anywhere.

It's open to all comers, regardless of age, class, musical I.Q. and/or color of hair.

You don't have to tear off the top of your piano and mail it in to enter; besides the 25-cent admission charge, there is no obligation whatever.

And that leads to the top distinction of The Herald Musiquiz: It is the only contest we ever heard of that has no rules, no regulations, no "do's" and "don't's," no fancy fiddle-diddle of any kind. Everybody can enter the contest; even the Musiquiz Editor is thinking seriously of going in there and trying to capture one of the prizes. Actually, of course, all connected with the Musiquiz cannot compete.

Totalling $800 in value, the prizes are enough to stir the imagination of everyone who loves music. The first prize is an RCA-Victor console model 301 radio-phonograph, the best machine that RCA-Victor turns out (value $275) with $50 worth of Victor records of the winner's choice.

The second prize is a de-luxe trip for two to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, the goal of every music-lover in the country. If the winner wishes, however, he may convert this prize into $150 cash.

For third prize, the Herald Musiquiz offers a pair of the best available seats to the 24 regular Saturday night concerts of the Boston Symphony orchestra, valued at $100.

The fourth prize is a batch of Victor records of the winner's selection, $50 worth.

In addition, there are 10 prizes of $10 worth of Victor records and fifteen prizes of $5 worth of Victor records, all of the winner's own choosing.

But The Herald Musiquiz is by no means purely a contest. The Musiquiz part of it, amusing and profitable although it is, only occupies part of the evening.

To begin with, the Boston Pops orchestra, after 56 years as much of an institution as the bean, will present a program of its all-time favorites, including George Gershwin's famous "Rhapsody in Blue" featuring Boston's internationally renowned piano soloist Jesus Maria Sanroma.

The musical favorites to be played will be chosen by you. There's hardly a Bostonian now alive who has not at one time or another both attended the Pops and voted for his favorite composition on one of Mr. Fiedler's enormously popular "request" nights.

When the thousands of ballots—like that printed below—begin to come in to The Herald however, as an amazing number already have, the Musiquiz program on June 15 will consist of the all-time Pops favorites by popular acclaim. This is a musical opportunity, aside from the fun and spectacle of the Musiquiz, which no music lover can conceivably afford to miss.

Between the music and the Musiquiz, 25 cents is a trifling amount to lay out, especially in such a worthwhile and home-grown cause as the Pension Fund of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. But the music and the Musiquiz are but a small part of the evening's entertainment.

There'll be a master of ceremonies whose presence alone is sufficient to fill the garden to the eaves; there'll be personalities, musical stunts, celebrities, and a number of special events which only those who attend will find out.

Daily from now on, both The Herald and The Traveler will contain up-to-the-minute news and developments of the forthcoming Herald Musiquiz, as well as hints on how to win one of the prizes, and additional information may be secured from your local Victor record dealer. Use the ballot below to vote for your Pops favorite, and remember, the first Herald Musiquiz will be held at the Boston Garden on Sunday night, June 15.

BOSTON HERALD MUSIQUIZ EDITOR:
The Boston Herald, Boston, Mass.

I vote for.....(name of composition) by.....(composer)

as the all-time Pops favorite, and request that it be included on one of the programs of The Boston Herald Musiquizes to be held in the Boston Garden on the nights of June 15 and 22.

Please send me ( ) Sample Blanks, which will contain a complete list of Boston Pops and Boston Symphony Orchestra Victor Red Seal Records.

Name .....
(Please Print)

Street .....

City ..... State .....

NOTE: It is not necessary to enter the Contest nor to send for Sample Contest Blanks in order to vote.

ANCIENT POPS PROGRAMS SHOW CHANGES IN TASTE

By RUDOLPH ELIE, JR.

We suppose the young whippersnappers of 1997 will be poring over present-day Pops programs and poking fun at us in quiet sort of way just as we are today rustling through the mouldy old Pops programs of 1885 and being very, very smug about it all.

It's not a particularly penetrating observation to say that popular musical tastes have undergone a tremendous rise in cultural level since the '80s, but who would have dreamed it possible even 10 years ago to conduct a musical quiz such as the Herald Musiquiz in which 18 or 20,000 people would be rattling off the answers to such questions as "How many sympohnies did Brahms write?" or "What's the difference between a tone poem and a symphony?"

Certainly there were cultivated musical audiences in the '80s whose tastes were unimpeachable; there always have been such enlightened audiences. Indeed, they have kept the music of Palestrina and Gluck and the hundreds of other early musical geniuses alive. But we're speaking of the great mass of people who before the advent of radio had very likely never heard anything, but vague rumors to the effect that there was a composer whose name was Bach.

For instance, here's a small portion of one of Austin's Popular Sunday Sacred Concert of the middle '80s; concerts, incidentally, which were the talk of the town.

Besides the Seven Sunderland Sisters ("Seven Bewitching Damsels Berobed in Endless Tresses Who Sing Like Very Nightingales"—and who by the way sold hair tonic on the side), the program offers much musical delights as a "novel repertoire of Imitations of Cornets, Trombones, etc.;" a solo on a silver bell ("itself worth the price of admission"); a female saxophonist ("who has completely carried by storm every audience") and an "always favorite reader, who will Render the "Death of Marmion" in the Finished Style for which She is Noted."

What do you suppose would have happened to a matter of ceremonies who got up and asked the audience to identify a theme from a Beethoven symphony?

Meanwhile the Pops, aside from a scattering of solid compositions which even today remain favorites, were offering a frenzied assortment of galops, paraphrases, "selections," grand fantasias, comic tatoos and grand quadlibets. The most enchanting effect, it seems, was the gradual crescendo and decrescendo of a march tune representing the passing of a parade. It never failed to bring down the house, and men's cloth caps were thrown so high they often got stuck on the chandeliers.

Well, who are we of 1941 to talk? What will the Pops audiences of 1997 think about some of the currently favorite Pops novelties? The point is, though, that we don't care what they do think. Taking it by and large, we feel we have good cause to consider ourselves a fairly enlightened musical audience and becoming more so all the time. And i fthere are any who don't quite agree, we'd suggest that they join the rest of us in The Herald Musiquiz being held to benefit the Pension Fund of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Boston Garden on June 15 and June 22. We'll find out then pretty much what is what along the musical front, and have a grand time doing so. Tickets, it may be added, are now on sale at 25 cents each at most Victor record dealers as well as at The Herald, the Boston Garden and Symphony Hall.

CUTTING GROOVES during a Victor recording session, the Pops orchestra under Arthur Fiedler works with Paul Hindemith, celebrated composer (in the background between Mr. Fiedler and the harp).

Boston Herald June 7, 1941

157

A FEW HINTS HOW TO WIN THE HERALD'S MUSIQUIZ

By RUDOLPH ELIE, JR.

For the benefit of the uncounted thousands who have decided to win first prize in the Herald Musiquiz, the two grand elimination Musiquizzes of which are being held in the Boston Garden on June 15 and 22, we have been devoting considerable time lately to the question of how to win that $275 RCA Victor radio-phonograph combination with its $50 worth of Victor records.

Not being eligible for the Musiquiz, but being pretty envious just the same, we have been working out our spite by sizing up the competition and placing it neatly into its proper brackets for future reference. Having heard a number of people say recently they didn't believe they had a chance, we are now, for the first time, making our files public.

THE ERUDITE TYPE

In the first place, there's the We'll Win in a Walk class. This consists of gigantic musical intellects who write histories of the use of plagal cadences in Chippewa folk songs and who can tell you the difference between a Dorian proslambanomenos and a Hypolydian mese. They may be treated with instant dismissal since they actually don't like music at all and will doubtless be measuring intervals during the Musiquizzes. Besides, the questions will be so untechnical that they will be utterly confused. Pay no attention to them.

Rather more dangerous is the Doesn't That Remind You of Blue class, which has a phenomenal memory if there's a mental picture to be conjured for the music. A Bach Invention usually stumps it, but when it comes to a Strauss waltz or any piece conceivably suited to pictorial interpretation, look out. Still, they're a little too instinctive to be greatly feared.

Equally dangerous is the I'll Wait Till I Get There class. The French call this "System C," and while they won the last war with it, they seem to have lost this one through it. It amounts to a daring and audacious neglect to tackle a problem too far in advance, depending entirely upon last-minute inspiration and a deft ability to think on the feet. When it works it is miraculous and brilliant, but when it doesn't, alas.

Then there's the Text Books Here I Come system. This is the crammers' department and it, too, has its dangerous aspects. Crammers plough through millions of pages of text with photographic minds. If they happen to choose the same texts that the inquisitors got their quesions from, the results are astonishing. Unfortunately, the inquisitors often do not.

THIS NARROWS THE FIELD

But most dangerous of all—and smartest—are those who read all the directions and plan their campaign accordingly. Insofar as the Musiquiz is concerned, the main point stressed is the fact that all questions are being derived from the Victor recordings of the Boston Pops and Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Obviously, the thing to do is to study the list carefully, listen to all the unfamiliar pieces, glance over the composer's biography, pictures, and so forth and review, if possible, even those pieces which are as familiar as "America." Then, with a touch of "System C," a little luck and a sharp pencil, that radio-phonograph is in your living room.

The main thing is not to fear that the Musiquizzes are either technical or atrociously difficult. They are designed so that all may enjoy them as indeed, the entire evening is planned for musical entertainment. Many of course will not even plan to try their hand at the Musiquiz, and will be delightfully surprised at the great number of questions they can answer. Further details are published in this column daily, and additional information and tickets may be secured from your neighborhood Victor record dealer.

There are indeed two grand, popular shows with loads of fun and music entertainment for 25 cents, all for the benefit of the Symphony pension fund.

DEBUT—The first Boston Symphony orchestra as it looked in 1881 after its first season under Georg Henschel. There seem to be 70 men here on the stage of the old Music Hall as against the 110 men of the modern orchestra. Three years after this picture was taken, the Pops began.

POPS DEVOTEES MAY TAX CAPACITY OF MUSIQUIZ

By RUDOLPH ELIE, JR.

Discovering by means of a encil and an old "multilication made easy" table that more than 125,000 people visit the Pops every year in the two short months of May and June, we have been wondering what would happen if only half of them decided to attend the Herald Musiquizzes in the Boston Garden on June 15 and June 22.

The way it looks now, only 10 days after the first commencement of the spectacular musical event being presented by Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops orchestra, it's not such a fantastic speculation at that. Tickets for both events went on sale on Monday at nearly all Victor record dealers in the vicinity as well as most ticket agencies, and first reports indicate phenomenal interest in the Herald Musiquiz.

Come to think of it, there's nothing peculiar about that. After all, the Pops have an enormons following, even though skeptics may point out that some enthusiasts go as many as three times a week. Be that as it may, Symphony Hall experts say that about 75,000 different people go to the Pops every season, and a hasty perusal of the names of clubs, schools, associations and groups that take a section of the floor reads like a blue book of New England organizations.

The attendance of colleges is an old tradition, dating from the '80s when scores of them would snake-dance their way up Tremont street to the Old Music Hall, anihilate the music with raucous laughter and snake-dance down Tremont street with chairs, tables and other portable knick-knacks tucked under their turtle-neck sweaters. Occasionally two or three colleges would be present on one night to the utter consternation of the effete and the terror of the constabulary.

Today school and college students conduct themselves a little more discreetly. And almost every night throughout the season, Pops-goers may see by the banners that some school is in attendance. Among the regulars are Harvard, Tufts, Wellesley, M. I. T., Radcliffe, Jackson, Wheaton, Simmons, Regis, Boston University, Boston College, Northeastern, Colby, Huntington, Smith, Brimmer, May, Portia, Wheelock, Lasell, Longy, New England Conservatory of Music, Malkin, Bryant and Stratton, Fisher, Burdett, Chandler and a number of others.

Schools and colleges are but a small part of special Pops audiences. Doctors and nurses come in hordes from such hospitals as Peter Bent Brigham, New England Baptist, Beth Israel, Massachusetts General, Newton, Cambridge, the Massachusetts Womens', Faulkner, Carney, and, well, name your own. Business people are equally keen Pops-goers.

For instance, the New Haven Traffic Department Club, the General Office Social Club of the Boston & Maine, the Firnabank Club, the Firnabank Club, the Wednesday Night Club, the John Hancock Chorus, the B. F. Goodrich Company, the Liberty Mutual Club, the American Electroplaters Society, the Community Health Association, the Boston Retail Druggists and, here again, name your own.

On the social and political front, consider the Eastern Star, the Catholic Union, the Daughters of Zion, the Junior Hadassah, the National Library Association, the Appalachian Mountain Club, the Owl Association, the Harvard Women's Club, the 301st Infantry Veterans, the League of Nations Association and, on Sunday, June 29, the pretty exclusive National Governor's Club.

This list hardly dents the surface, but in view of the facts that the Herald Musiquiz is open to all music-lovers, that its 25-cent admission benefits the Pension Fund of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and that it promises to be the most unusual and entertaining musical concert and quiz ever held, is there any wonder we're beginning to wonder if the Boston Garden is going to be big enough on June 15? See your Victor record dealer for complete details, tickets and information on how to win one of the 29 Musiquiz prizes, and follow the latest developments daily in this column.

Overflow Throng Expected At 2d Musiquiz on Sunday

When you get Bill Cunningham and Neal O'Hara, two of the nation's top writers and speakers, to act as masters of ceremonies in conjunction with Charles O'Connell, for the second Boston Herald Musiquiz you have an incomparable attraction. The second Musiquiz will be held next Sunday night in the Boston Garden with the Boston Pops Orchestra under the direction of Arthur Fiedler for the benefit of the pension fund of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

BIG MUSIQUIZ SECTION

In Friday's Herald and Traveler, a big Musiquiz section will be published. In this section will be a special article by Bill Cunningham, who will be presiding officer Sunday, and also the names of 200 persons who qualified last Sunday night in the semi-finals for the grand prizes.

Two hundred more will qualify at next Sunday night's Musiquiz, so don't fail to read The Herald and Traveler on Friday.

Ten thousand people attended the first contest last Sunday night, and they were thrilled with the program that kept them at high tension throughout the evening. From the enthusiasm last Sunday night it is evident that the whole 10,000 will be back, and that, because during the week they will spread the news from person to person, 7000 more, filling the Garden, will be there.

(Continued on Page Seven)

Huge Musiquiz Throng Likely

(Continued from First Page)

90 PER CENT. PARTICIPATE

More than 90 per cent. of the audience at the Garden last Sunday night took part in the Musiquiz following the one-hour concert of the Pops Orchestra.

No event in years has given such value for the money involved. Twenty-five cents is the price and there are no reserved seats. Doors open at 6:30 P. M., an das the people came early last week, they will come early this week.

Boston Traveler June 11, 1941

Record Throng to Attend Musiquiz Sunday Night

Championship hockey teams and political campaigns have filled the Boston Garden in the past, but it begins to look now as if all records for attendance would be broken next Sunday night when The Boston Herald Musiquiz is to be held there.

Letters pouring in to the Musiquiz Editor from all points tell of people in the city or town who are coming in delegations. They come from the south of Boston and the north of Boston, from the west and from the east. Large parties are coming from Malden, Milton, from various parts of Boston proper, from Somerville, Reading, Belmont, Winchester, Winthrop, Newton, Medford and countless other localities.

NO RESERVED SEATS

People everywhere are talking about the great opportunity to hear the famous Pops symphony orchestra, under the direction of Arthur Fiedler, for the small sum of 25 cents. All tickets are 25 cents. There are no reserved seats. It will be simply "first come, first served," and the doors will open at 6:30 P. M

The vast throng which promises to be present has another incentive to be there, for following an hour's concert by the Pops orchestra—and by the way, this will be the largest Pops concert in history—the Musiquiz will start, and ballots will be given to the audience. They should bring their own pencils. Then they will be given an opportunity to show their knowledge of music and musical personalities. It will be great fun, and those who answer most correctly will have a chance at winning very valuable prizes.

Throngs Await Musiquiz

(Continued from First Page)

VALUABLE PRIZES

These prizes include a $275 R. C. A. Victor radio-phonograph combination, with $50 worth of records of your own choice; a trip to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, convertible into $150 cash if you desire; a pair of $100 tickets to the 24 regular Saturday night concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for next season; $50 worth of Victor records, ad 15 other equally desirable musical prizes.

Never before possible, let alone dreamed of, the Boston Herald Musiquiz stands as another great "first" for the Boston Herald as well as being one of the most original and entertaining musical festivals ever conceived; and it's all for 25 cents with no reserved seats. Behind it stands the entire institution of the 56-year-old Boston Pops Orchestra, which has long proved itself to be a vital part of hte life of thsi community and now, under the compelling leadership of its conductor, Arthur Fiedler, recognized as the most famous musical organization of its kind in the world.

FAMOUS AIDES NAMED

The important announcement was made in today's Herald that Ted Cott, the famous and popular quizzer of the high Crosley rated "So You Think You Know Music," and Charles O'Connell, assistant conductor of the Philadelphia orchestra and musical director of R. C. A. Victor, have been chosen to act as masters of ceremonies for the first Boston Herald Musiquiz at the Garden Sunday night.

Fun will fly thick and fast. Plan to go now, and you will have one of the greatest musical treats of your life—and perhaps you may win one of the valuable prizes.

Remember, all tickets are 25 cents. This enables whole families to go.

158

First Musiquiz Proves Success

Boston Traveler June 16, 1941

Big Crowd Gathers at Boston Garden; Second Concert to Be Next Sunday

The pension fund of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was materially increased today by the proceeds of the big Pops concert and musical quiz attended by more than 10,000 persons at the Boston Garden last night. Arthur Fiedler, famous onductor, expressed deep satisfaction over the results.

Mayor Tobin, John F. Fitzgerald, former mayor of Boston, and others paid high tribute to the Boston Herald and Traveler, as sponsors of the Musiquiz, and to the young people appearing in the concert for its success. Another Musiquiz will be held at the Boston Garden June 22.

CROWD GATHERS EARLY

Several hundred persons had gathered before the doors were open. The concert began at 8. More than 1500 Musiquizzers had arrived with pencils in hand, at 6:30. Bob Murphy, superintendent of the Garden, found that by 7 o'clock in the evening the entire floor and lower tier had been filled with 3500.

From then on, the crowd became larger. For 15 minutes before the concert opened, the enthusiastic audience listened to the 95 musicians tune up. The concert opened with Elgar's famous "Pomp and Circumstance." The program, selected by popular vote, consisted of Nicolai's Overture to "The Merry Wives of Windsor," the march-scherzo from Tchaikovsky's "Sixth Symphony," and Gershwin's "Rhapsody in Blue."

There were two encores. Mayor Tobin served as chairman of the Musiquiz and described the purpose of the concert. He was loudly applauded. He paid tribute to the Boston Symphony orchestra and the Boston Pops Orchestra and then presented Arthur Fiedler, who, he said had raised the Pops to new heights of popularity.

Jesus Maria Sanroma, piano soloist, was then presented. The mayor then turned over the program to Charles O'Connell, musical director of RCA Victor, who outlined the Musiquiz as a musical contest in which everybody could participate. He pointed out the part the sponsors, RCA-Victor, The Herald, Symphony hall, Boston Garden and all enighborhood Victor record dealers had had in the Musiquiz. O'Connell then presented Ted Cott, who directed the contest. His informality scored a hit with the audience. It was estimated more than 90 per cent. of the audience participated in the contest.

Names of winners in the first elimination will be announced at the Herald and Traveler within a few days. Winners, as well as others, are eligible to go to the second Musiquiz at the Garden next Sunday night. There are indications that the second concert will attract a capacity audience.

The admission is the same—25 cents for everything.

There were many children, with their parents, in the audience, and they appeared to enjoy the concert as much as the adults. There were ruddy-faced soldiers in khaki, and sailors. There were high school class groups and many graduates of Greater Boston colleges. There were cripples and country folk, all equally enthusiastic over hearing good music and being part of a happy crowd joined in one purpose—helping a good cause.

What Musiquiz Is All About

Boston

The Boston Herald Musiquizzes are concerts by the Boston Pops orchestra in the Boston Garden.

They will be held on the Sunday nights of June 15 and June 22, at 8 P. M.

Tickets at 25 cents each may be obtained from Symphony Hall, The Herald-Traveler, your neighborhood Victor record dealer or from the Boston Garden.

The entire proceeds benefit the pension fund of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

The Musiquiz itself follows the concert, and is a general musical questionnaire given orally by the master of ceremonies and illustrated by musical examples played by the Pops orchestra.

Contestants will be supplied with answer blanks, upon which they may indicate in pencil the correct answers to the questions.

The Musiquizzes are open to all comers (sponsors excepted), and there are no "rules and regulations."

There is no contest entrance fee; one 25-cent admission covers everything but a pencil.

Audiences may participate in either or both Musiquizzes, but no one is obligated to enter the contest.

The prizes, 29 in all, are valued at $800.

The questions to be asked are not of a technical nature; every music-lover has a winner's chance.

The Musiquizzes are designed for musical enjoyment, spectacle and fun; first the concert, then the Musiquiz, and all for 25 cents.

HOMEYER'S will help you WIN the "MUSIQUIZ"

We invite you to listen to any or all of the recordings of the "Boston Pops and Boston Symphony Orchestra" entirely without obligation. Be sure to ask for the new Mendelssohn "G" minor Piano concerto played by Sanroma & Boston Pops Orchestra. MUSI QUIZ entry Blanks & tickets and other information at

CHAS. W. HOMEYER & CO., INC.
498 Boylston Street
Kenmore 3510

INFORMATION OBSCURED

Boston Herald 6/13/41

N. E. Music Lovers, Stirred Over Musiquiz, Eager for Next Sunday

By RUDOLPH ELIE, Jr.

Blitzkrieging whatever doubts any one may conceivably have had as to the outcome of the first Herald Musiquiz in the Garden Sunday night, the music lovers of New England swarmed into the auditorium 10,000 strong to hear the most unusual and entertaining musical event ever held, and left no question they were coming back to the Garden next Sunday night, bringing every friend they could find.

That all 10,000 would return for the second fascinating session was beyond doubt, judging by the telephone calls, letters and messages which yesterday poured into The Herald office, Symphony Hall and the Boston Garden, as well as by the enthusiastic word-of-mouth comment which swept through New England.

NEW PROGRAM, NEW QUIZ

And that all 10,000 could return for the second Musiquiz was the battle cry throughout the day of every neighborhood Victor record dealer and sponsor presenting the absorbing musical game. By no means the least of the unique aspects of the Herald Musiquizzes was and is the fact that there are no rules of any kind. This means that everybody can come to and enter the second Musiquiz, even those who filed winning question ballots.

Moreover, those who came to the first will have an entirely new program, an entirely new Musiquiz and an entirely new cast of stars, while those who could not attend the first will forget their disappointment in the glamor and fascination of the second.

Aside from the universal enthusiasm the first Musiquiz generated, the main comment being heard on all sides yesterday was "I'd like to have a Musiquiz every week!"

Others expressed astonishment at the smoothness with which the entire event went off. There were no untoward incidents of any nature, and one policeman remarked he had never "had less to do" at a public function involving so many people.

There was no question that the Musiquiz audience could be equalled in intelligence and smartness of appearance only by The Herald Book Fair audience. While it was, generally speaking, youthful, its youth was by no means confined to its age.

CALLERS OFFER IDEAS

Those who called in to The Herald office all day yesterday seemed to have an almost possessive attitude. They seemed to feel that the Musiquizzes were their especial pets, and dozens of them had excellent suggestions for improvement. Many of these suggestions are being acted on, and next Sunday's Musiquiz promises to be even more exciting and entertaining than the first.

Insistent, too, were those who wanted to have the semi-finals and the finals conducted in the Garden in the same manner, with the eligible contestants being seated on the floor and spectators allowed to view the fun from the balconies. While too many factors enter in to make such an exciting spectacle possible this year, it's certainly something to bear in mind.

Performing before a larger indoor audience than it had ever faced before, the Boston Pops orchestra under Arthur Fiedler played with a brilliance and virtuosity it has seldom equalled. Causing as much amazement as anything else about The Herald Musiquiz was the gratifying acoustical quality of the Garden. Few persons were heard to say that a "bounce" or echo was present, and these were confined to certain small sections.

Considering the size and construction of the Garden, the acoustics must be held perfect. So, too, was the placing of the orchestra in a wide circle with the conductor in the center. Situated as it was in the exact middle of the Garden, the orchestra was closer, by actual measurement, than it is to persons in the rear seats of Symphony Hall.

BREATH-TAKING VIEW

Although the natural tendency of the audience was to secure seats nearest the orchestra, those who did sit in the upper balconies found themselves in the very choicest seats. Viewed from above, the scene was breath-taking; one of the most impressive scenes imaginable. Furthermore, the acoustics from the topmost point in the balconies were nothing short of phenomenal.

The capacity audience which comes to the Garden next Sunday—and no one for a moment now questions that it will be capacity—may consequently be assured that it will not miss the softest tones of the flute or the gentlest intonation of the voice.

Hard at work today were the Symphony Hall judges, sorting, counting and sitting in judgment on the thousands of Musiquiz ballots which were turned in. One of the judges expressed his surprise that so many had entered the Musiquiz, for it was estimated that all but a handful of the 10,000 present had filed their ballots.

While a number of perfect ballots had already been discovered, there was no indication yesterday that perfect ballots would be found in sufficient numbers to prevent persons with less perfect scores from qualifying.

Yet whether they qualified or not was a small matter to the vast majority of Musiquizzers, who were coming back, come what may, to the second Musiquiz. For even a perfect score in the first Musiquiz does not mean exclusion from the second Musiquiz.

HOUR'S CONCERT

As in the first Musiquiz, the second next Sunday night will present Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops orchestra in an hour's concert program to be followed by an hour's general musical quiz in which all may take part.

All tickets are 25 cents, no seats reserved (excepting a very few for official guests); and the entire proceeds benefit the Pension Fund of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. See your neighborhood Victor record dealer for additional information as well as tips on how to win one of the magnificent musical prizes. But most important of all, come on down to the Garden next Sunday night!

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM
JUN 18 1941

In And Out Of the News

By CHARLES HAMILTON

THE QUIZ SUPREME

The quiz-type program, long established as entertainment by jazz bands and information experts, became supreme in the entertainment world Sunday night when 95 musicians from the Boston Symphony Orchestra staged a "musicquiz" at the Boston Garden. Ten thousand people — many of whom probably know little about music—attended and answered six sets of questions about selections played by the Boston Pops Orchestra (part of the Symphony Orchestra) directed by Arthur Fiedler, and about music history.

Classical music played by an experienced orchestra was one feature of this first program, but the desire to impart one's knowledge was definitely another factor in bringing together the large audience.

Questions concerned identification of pieces played by the orchestra and identification of the composers. They also dealt with technical knowledge as to form, use of instruments, history of the pieces played and other technicalities.

The majority of the people present found delight in answering the questions and it is reported that there was no collaboration in question answering among contestants.

However, a number of people attended the contest equipped with opera glasses and it was thought they perhaps intended to get a clue about the musical selections being played by looking at the musician's scores. But Conductor Fiedler had given his musicians orders to open their musical scores from back to front to the place indicated. No member of the orchestra knew what selections he was to play until the time of playing, for each selection was handed the musician in a sealed envelope when the contest began.

* * *

Sunday night there will be a second musicquiz. Two hundred winners will be selected from the number participating in each and a semi-final contest will be held June 26 with the finals taking place on June 30th. Prizes will be awarded. The contest, for which there is a 25 cent admission charge, is being held for the benefit of the pension fund of the Boston Symphony orchestra. A concert precedes each musicquiz program.

Thus, the 60-year old Boston Symphony orchestra—considered as conservative as the Boston accent is broad—has found a way to combine the world's finest music with a recent entertainment innovation in contributing to a worthy cause.

* * *

SIGN

. . . On an antiquated green jallopy parked in a lot by High School of Commerce . . . "Don't laugh! We all grow old."

* * *

FEWER TREES, BETTER FORESTS

We don't need more trees, we need fewer, stronger trees, according to A. C. Cline, director of the Harvard forest at Petersham.

"Forestry should begin with the forest, and not with a field of new trees, set out in rows," explains Mr. Cline, who has recently abandoned the tree nursery at the Harvard forest and is now concentrating the school's work upon developing trees growing naturally in the forest.

There are thousands of acres of naturally stocked woodland in New England, according to Mr. Cline, and it is on this large area of land, which Nature has restocked in her own way with trees, shrubs, plants and animal life, where forestry should begin. The seeds have found their natural resting place in soil that is adapted for their growth and it is this soil that is best fitted to tree culture, rather than pasture or garden land that has been accustomed to another type of vegetation.

Thus, starting with the forest, Mr. Cline recommends weeding and not planting of trees to develop our crop of useful trees. Small trees, such as gray birches, poplars and pincherries, should be weeded out along with trees which crowd others and do not give the useful hardwoods and pines space in which to brow.

Working on our natural forests will not only give us enough wood to meet our needs, according to Mr. Cline, but will also be an economy, for the trees that are planted naturally in soil adapted to them are healthier and less likely to contract diseases and the cost of "weeding" is considerably lower than the cost of planting new trees on new 159.

---

NEW AT THE POPS

by RUDOLPH ELIE, JR.
Musiquiz Editor, Boston Herald

BEING the least complicated as well as the most unusual musical event ever held in Boston, the Boston Herald Musiquiz has the additional distinction of being the only contest in history, practically, which has no rules and regulations. Come to think of it, there is just one requirement —competitors must bring their own pencils.

It works this way: On the Sunday nights of June 15 and June 22 at 8 P.M., the Boston Pops orchestra under its enormously popular conductor Arthur Fiedler, will give two concerts in the Boston Garden to benefit the Pension Fund of the Boston Symphony orchestra. The sole admission charge is 25 cents; no extras, premiums or fancy programs at fancy prices, and every cent goes to that most worthy of musical benefits.

An hour's concert program made up of all-time Pops favorites (being chosen, incidentally, by popular ballot), precedes the Musiquiz. Consisting of musical questions being derived from the Victor records of the Boston Symphony orchestra and the Pops orchestra, the Musiquiz follows the concert. Any or all of the people may take part in it and each will be given a special ballot by the Herald as he enters the Garden.

Each question put by the master of ceremonies will be followed by the actual playing of a musical example, and that will be followed by the scratching of pencils as those taking part write down their answers. None of the questions will require an oral answer and no one will be called forward to recite.

Two hundred people will be chosen at each Musiquiz, and the 400 preliminary winners will then gather in Symphony Hall on the following Thursday (June 26) for the finals. The prizes are, 1st, a magnificent Victor radio-phonograph valued at $275 and $50 worth of Victor records of the winner's choice; 2d, a de luxe trip for two to the Berkshire Festival valued at $150 (or cash if the winner desires); 3rd, a pair of seats to the regular Saturday night concerts of the Boston Symphony orchestra valued at $100 and 4th, $50 worth of victor records of the winner's choice. There are, as well, 10 prizes of $10 worth of Victor records and 15 prizes of $5 worth, all of the winner's choice.

Well, that's about all there is to it. Designed primarily as musical entertainment with the best of popular classical music the world has to offer, the emphasis is on informality. No one has to enter the Musiquiz; many, of course, will come for the music and the spectacle. No matter what anybody comes for, if even to get out of the sun, he can be assured a hilarious and exciting musical evening. But if he has his eye on one of the prizes, he'd better bring his pencil. Further details, incidentally, are published daily in the Herald and Traveler, and all Victor record dealers will be happy to supply additional information.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

N. E. Music Lovers, Stirred Over Musiquiz, Eager for Next Sunday

By RUDOLPH ELIE, Jr.

Blitzkrieging whatever doubts any one may conceivably have had as to the outcome of the first Herald Musiquiz in the Garden Sunday night, the music lovers of New England swarmed into the auditorium 10,000 strong to hear the most unusual and entertaining musical event ever held, and left no question they were coming back to the Garden next Sunday night, bringing every friend they could find.

That all 10,000 would return for the second fascinating session was beyond doubt, judging by the telephone calls, letters and messages which yesterday poured into The Herald office, Symphony Hall and the Boston Garden, as well as by the enthusiastic word-of-mouth comment which swept through New England.

NEW PROGRAM, NEW QUIZ

And that all 10,000 could return for the second Musiquiz was the battle cry throughout the day of every neighborhood Victor record dealer and sponsor presenting the absorbing musical game. By no means the least of the unique aspects of the Herald Musiquizzes was and is the fact that there are no rules of any kind. This means that everybody can come to and enter the second Musiquiz, even those who filed winning question ballots.

Moreover, those who came to the first will have an entirely new program, an entirely new Musiquiz and an entirely new cast of stars, while those who could not attend the first will forget their disappointment in the glamor and fascination of the second.

Aside from the universal enthusiasm the first Musiquiz generated, the main comment being heard on all sides yesterday was "I'd like to have a Musiquiz every week!"

Others expressed astonishment at the smoothness with which the entire event went off. There were no untoward incidents of any nature, and one policeman remarked he had never "had less to do" at a public function involving so many people.

There was no question that the Musiquiz audience could be equalled in intelligence and smartness of appearance only by The Herald Book Fair audience. While it was, generally speaking, youthful, its youth was by no means confined to its age.

CALLERS OFFER IDEAS

Those who called in to The Herald office all day yesterday seemed to have an almost possessive attitude. They seemed to feel that the Musiquizzes were their especial pets, and dozens of them had excellent suggestions for improvement. Many of these suggestions are being acted on, and next Sunday's Musiquiz promises to be even more exciting and entertaining than the first.

Insistent, too, were those who wanted to have the semi-finals and the finals conducted in the Garden in the same manner, with the eligible contestants being seated on the floor and spectators allowed to view the fun from the balconies. While too many factors enter in to make such an exciting spectacle possible this year, it's certainly something to bear in mind.

Performing before a larger indoor audience than it had ever faced before, the Boston Pops orchestra under Arthur Fiedler played with a brilliance and virtuosity it has seldom equalled. Causing as much amazement as anything else about The Herald Musiquiz was the gratifying acoustical quality of the Garden. Few persons were heard to say that a "bounce" or echo was present, and these were confined to certain small sections.

Considering the size and construction of the Garden, the acoustics must be held perfect. So, too, was the placing of the orchestra in a wide circle with the conductor in the center. Situated as it was in the exact middle of the Garden, the orchestra was closer, by actual measurement, than it is to persons in the rear seats of Symphony Hall.

BREATH-TAKING VIEW

Although the natural tendency of the audience was to secure seats nearest the orchestra, those who did sit in the upper balconies found themselves in the very choicest seats. Viewed from above, the scene was breath-taking; one of the most impressive scenes imaginable. Furthermore, the acoustics from the topmost point in the balconies were nothing short of phenomenal.

The capacity audience which comes to the Garden next Sunday—and no one for a moment now questions that it will be capacity—may consequently be assured that it will not miss the softest tones of the flute or the gentlest intonation of the voice.

Hard at work today were the Symphony Hall judges, sorting, counting and sitting in judgment on the thousands of Musiquiz ballots which were turned in. One of the judges expressed his surprise that so many had entered the Musiquiz, for it was estimated that all but a handful of the 10,000 present had filed their ballots.

While a number of perfect ballots had already been discovered, there was no indication yesterday that perfect ballots would be found in sufficient numbers to prevent persons with less perfect scores from qualifying.

Yet whether they qualified or not was a small matter to the vast majority of Musiquizzers, who were coming back, come what may, to the second Musiquiz. For even a perfect score in the first Musiquiz does not mean exclusion from the second Musiquiz.

HOUR'S CONCERT

As in the first Musiquiz, the second next Sunday night will present Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops orchestra in an hour's concert program to be followed by an hour's general musical quiz in which all may take part.

All tickets are 25 cents, no seats reserved (excepting a very few for official guests); and the entire proceeds benefit the Pension Fund of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. See your neighborhood Victor record dealer for additional information as well as tips on how to win one of the magnificent musical prizes. But most important of all, come on down to the Garden next Sunday night!

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM
JUN 18 1941

159.

In And Out Of the News

By CHARLES HAMILTON

THE QUIZ SUPREME

The quiz-type program, long established as entertainment by jazz bands and information experts, became supreme in the entertainment world Sunday night when 95 musicians from the Boston Symphony Orchestra staged a "musicquiz" at the Boston Garden. Ten thousand people — many of whom probably know little about music—attended and answered six sets of questions about selections played by the Boston Pops Orchestra (part of the Symphony Orchestra) directed by Arthur Fiedler, and about music history.

Classical music played by an experienced orchestra was one feature of this first program, but the desire to impart one's knowledge was definitely another factor in bringing together the large audience.

Questions concerned identification of pieces played by the orchestra and identification of the composers. They also dealt with technical knowledge as to form, use of instruments, history of the pieces played and other technicalities.

The majority of the people present found delight in answering the questions and it is reported that there was no collaboration in question answering among contestants.

However, a number of people attended the contest equipped with opera glasses and it was thought they perhaps intended to get a clue about the musical selections being played by looking at the musician's scores. But Conductor Fiedler had given his musicians orders to open their musical scores from back to front to the place indicated. No member of the orchestra knew what selections he was to play until the time of playing, for each selection was handed the musician in a sealed envelope when the contest began.

* * *

Sunday night there will be a second musicquiz. Two hundred winners will be selected from the number participating in each and a semi-final contest will be held June 26 with the finals taking place on June 30th. Prizes will be awarded. The contest, for which there is a 25 cent admission charge, is being held for the benefit of the pension fund of the Boston Symphony orchestra. A concert precedes each musicquiz program.

Thus, the 60-year old Boston Symphony orchestra—considered as conservative as the Boston accent is broad—has found a way to combine the world's finest music with a recent entertainment innovation in contributing to a worthy cause.

* * *

SIGN

. . . On an antiquated green jallopy parked in a lot by High School of Commerce . . . "Don't laugh! We all grew old."

* * *

FEWER TREES, BETTER FORESTS

We don't need more trees, we need fewer, stronger trees, according to A. C. Cline, director of the Harvard forest at Petersham.

"Forestry should begin with the forest, and not with a field of new trees set out in rows," explains Mr. Cline, who has recently abandoned the tree nursery at the Harvard forest and is now concentrating the school's work upon developing trees growing naturally in the forest.

There are thousands of acres of naturally stocked woodland in New England, according to Mr. Cline, and it is on this large area of land, which Nature has restocked in her own way with trees, shrubs, plants and animal life, where forestry should begin. The seeds have found their natural resting place in soil that is adapted for their growth and it is this soil that is best fitted to tree culture, rather than pasture or garden land that has been accustomed to another type of vegetation.

Thus, starting with the forest, Mr. Cline recommends weeding and not planting of trees to develop our crop of useful trees. Small trees, such as gray birches, poplars and pincherries, should be weeded out along with trees which crowd others and do not give the useful hardwoods and pines space in which to brow.

Working on our natural forests will not only give us enough wood to meet our needs, according to Mr. Cline, but will also be an economy, for the trees that are planted naturally in soil adapted to them are healthier and less likely to contract diseases and the cost of "weeding" is considerably lower than the cost of planting new trees [illegible]

NEW AT THE POPS

by RUDOLPH ELIE, JR.

Musiquiz Editor, Boston Herald

BEING the least complicated as well as the most unusual musical event ever held in Boston, the Boston Herald Musiquiz has the additional distinction of being the only contest in history, practically, which has no rules and regulations. Come to think of it, there is just one requirement —competitors must bring their own pencils.

It works this way: On the Sunday nights of June 15 and June 22 at 8 P.M., the Boston Pops orchestra under its enormously popular conductor Arthur Fiedler, will give two concerts in the Boston Garden to benefit the Pension Fund of the Boston Symphony orchestra. The sole admission charge is 25 cents; no extras, premiums or fancy programs at fancy prices, and every cent goes to that most worthy of musical benefits.

An hour's concert program made up of all-time Pops favorites (being chosen, incidentally, by popular ballot), precedes the Musiquiz. Consisting of musical questions being derived from the Victor records of the Boston Symphony orchestra and the Pops orchestra, the Musiquiz follows the concert. Any or all of the people may take part in it and each will be given a special ballot by the Herald as he enters the Garden.

Each question put by the master of ceremonies will be followed by the actual playing of a musical example, and that will be followed by the scratching of pencils as those taking part write down their answers. None of the questions will require an oral answer and no one will be called forward to recite.

Two hundred people will be chosen at each Musiquiz, and the 400 preliminary winners will then gather in Symphony Hall on the following Thursday (June 26) for the finals. The prizes are, 1st, a magnificent Victor radiophonograph valued at $275 and $50 worth of Victor records of the winner's choice; 2d, a de luxe trip for two to the Berkshire Festival valued at $150 (or cash if the winner desires); 3rd, a pair of seats to the regular Saturday night concerts of the Boston Symphony orchestra valued at $100 and 4th, $50 worth of victor records of the winner's choice. There are, as well, 10 prizes of $10 worth of Victor records and 15 prizes of $5 worth, all of the winner's choice.

Well, that's about all there is to it. Designed primarily as musical entertainment with the best of popular classical music the world has to offer, the emphasis is on informality. No one has to enter the Musiquiz; many, of course, will come for the music and the spectacle. No matter what anybody comes for, if even to get out of the sun, he can be assured a hilarious and exciting musical evening. But if he has his eye on one of the prizes, he'd better bring his pencil. Further details, incidentally, are published daily in the Herald and Traveler, and all Victor record dealers will be happy to supply additional information.

JUNE 13, 1941

160

MUSIQUIZ

What is it?

It's a musical contest open to everybody--It's a concert for all to enjoy--It's the biggest event in musical history • It's the top in musical fun--But if you really want to know,

TURN TO PAGE 2

This Special MUSIQUIZ Edition comes to you with the compliments of
The BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
R.C.A.-VICTOR DEALERS and the
The BOSTON GARDEN

BOSTON HERALD

MUSIQUIZ CONTEST PRIZES FUN FOR ALL

MUSIQUIZ!

WHAT IS IT?
WHERE IS IT?
WHEN IS IT?
WHO TAKES PART?

By Rudolph Elie

What Is It All About?

The Boston Herald Musiquiz is first of all a concert to be given by the world-famous Boston Pops orchestra of 90 Boston Symphony orchestra musicians under its enormously popular conductor, Arthur Fiedler.

When Will It Be Held?

There will be two Boston Herald Musiquizzes, the first to be given in the Boston Garden on Sunday night, June 15 at 8 o'clock, and the second on the following Sunday night, June 22, also at 8 o'clock.

Why Is It Being Held?

To benefit the Pension Fund of the Boston Symphony orchestra; certainly one of the most worthy musical causes for which a concert has ever been given.

What Is the Admission?

The admission to each concert is 25 cents, every penny of which goes to the Pension Fund of the orchestra. There are no "additional charges" whatever.

Who Is Behind It All?

The Boston Herald with the co-operation of the Boston Symphony orchestra, the RCA-Victor Company and its affiliated dealers in Greater Boston. The Herald Musiquiz, however, is not a "promotion." Its purpose is to help the Pension Fund of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

If, however, two or three new Herald friends are found or if the local RCA-Victor dealers gain wider record sales, the sponsors will not be chagrined. In other words, the Boston Herald Musiquiz may be compared with the Herald's world-famous autumn Book Fair as a cultural event, except that its appeal is to music lovers.

What Music Will Be Played?

Your favorite compositions, to be chosen by popular ballot. In the 56 years of the famous Pop concerts, a number of compositions have been proved favorites: Handel's "Largo"; Ravel's "Bolero"; Elgar's "Pomp and Circumstance" and dozens of others. The Musiquiz concert will present the all-time favorites based on a New England-wide vote of music-lovers.

How Long Will the Concert Last?

Each concert will last about an hour, including the encores for which the Pops orchestra is noted.

Will There Be a Soloist?

Definitely yes! And he will be Jesus Maria Sanroma, overwhelmingly the favorite pianist of the Boston Pops It may be definitely stated—without waiting to count the ballots—that he will play George Gershwin's celebrated "Rhapsody in Blue" on the night of June 15.

What Is the "Musiquiz?"

The Herald Musiquiz is a contest in which every person, regardless of age, occupation, sex, height, weight or anything else may participate in at will. It will take place immediately following the concert, and will consist of a series of questions of a musical nature, to be answered spontaneously by the audience on a ballot sheet to be provided free of charge by the Boston Herald to each person who enters the Boston Garden.

Is There Any Obligation?

None whatever. Those who attend may listen to the music, watch the contest or take part in the Musiquiz in whole or in part, as they prefer. Nor need participants fear being called on to speak, come forward to the conductor's stand or embarass themselves in any way.

Is There Any Entry Fee?

No. The purchase of a ticket of admission at 25 cents grants you the right to enter the Musiquiz or not as you prefer. But BRING YOUR OWN PENCIL IF YOU INTEND TO ENTER THE MUSIQUIZ!

Where May Tickets Be Secured?

Tickets of admission to the Musiquiz may be purchased at 25 cents each at Symphony Hall; at your local RCA-Victor dealer; at the box offices of the Boston Garden and on the street floor counter of the Boston Herald.

What Sort of Questions Will Be Asked?

Musiquiz questions will be in six groups of six questions each. (See the sample ballots in the adjoining column). For instance, the first question in Group 1 might have the names "Beethoven"—"Mendelssohn"—"Schuman" printed in a box. The orchestra will then play a selection. When the musical example is finished, the master of ceremonies will ask contestants to draw a circle around the name of the composer he thinks wrote the selection played. The second question might be a "true or false" statement, and so on.

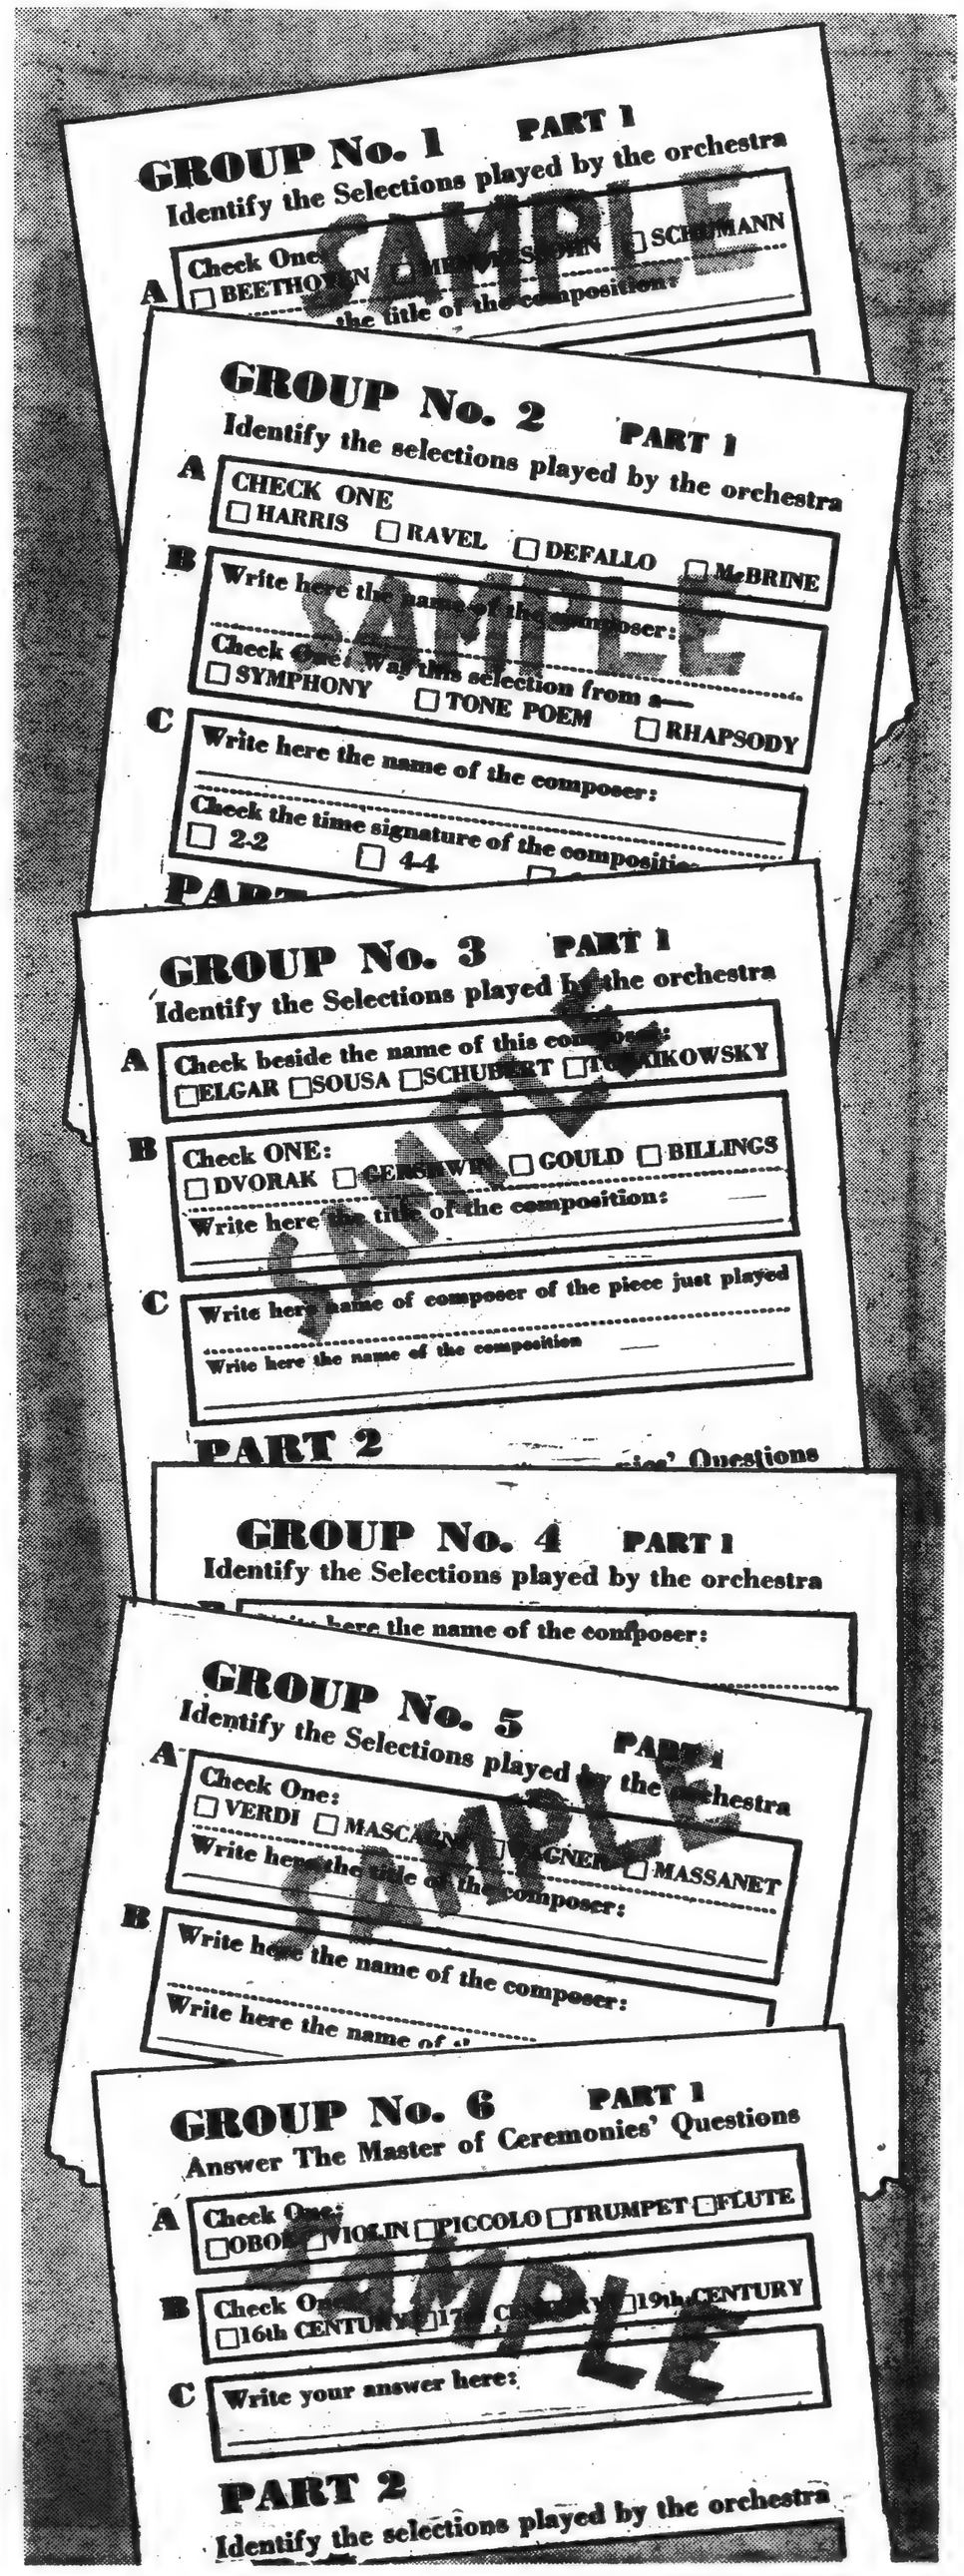
Are the Questions Limited?

Yes. Every single question to be asked will concern a composition or composer or a musical fact which will have been DERIVED FROM ONE OF THE VICTOR RECORDS OF THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA UNDER SERGE KOUSSEVITSKY OR THE BOSTON POPS ORCHESTRA UNDER ARTHUR FIEDLER. For example, neither orchestra has recorded "O Sole Mio." You will not, then, be asked to identify it or its composer. On the other hand, the Boston Symphony orchestra has recorded Tchaikovsky's "Romeo and Juliet" overture. A question concerning it is therefore legitimate. THOSE WITH AN EYE ON THE PRIZES MUST BEAR THIS FACT IN MIND AND SHOULD, IN ORDER TO WIN, CAREFULLY STUDY THE OFFICIAL LIST OF VICTOR RECORDS ON THE OPPOSITE PAGE.

Will the Questions Be Difficult?

No one should get the impression that the Herald Musiquiz is a contest in which only those with great musical knowledge may participate or enjoy. The fact is, both Herald Musiquizzes are more entertaining than formidable. No questions of a "trick" nature will be asked, nor any of a technical flavor. THE HERALD MUSIQUIZZES ARE DESIGNED PRIMARILY SO THAT ALL WHO LOVE GOOD MUSIC MAY TEST THEMSELVES IN THE FIRST MASS MUSICAL EXAMINATION EVER HELD . . . AND HAVE A WONDERFUL TIME DOING SO.

INFORMATION ON PRIZES AND VOTING CONTINUED ON PAGE 4



MUSIQUIZ ENTERTAINMENT TICKETS 25c

VICTOR RED SEAL RECORDS by the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY Conducting

Bolero Album M-352	Ravel
Damnation of Faust: Minuet Waltz; Rakoczy; March;	Berlioz	14230-1
Danse	Debussy-Ravel	7414
Daphnis et Chloe—Suite No. 2	Ravel	7143-4
Elegie (Violoncello solo: Jean Bedetti)	Faure	14577
Enchanted Lake	Liadov	14078
Fair Harvard	Arr. by Koussevitzky	4333
Gymnopedie No. 1	Erik Satie-Debussy	7252

Capriccio (Jesus Maria Sanroma, Soloist) Album M-685	Stravinsky
Concerto for Orchestra in D major Album M-559	Bach

Missa Solemnis Album M-758	Beethoven

Classical Symphony	Prokofieff	7196-7
Symphony No. 1 in B-flat major ("Spring") Album M-655	Schumann
Symphony No. 2 in D major Album M-625	Beethoven
Symphony No. 2 in D major Album M-272	Sibelius
Symphony No. 3 Album M-651	Harris

Fruhlingsstimmen—Waltzes ("Voices of Spring")	Strauss	6903

CONCERT PIECES

Khovanstchina—Prelude	Moussorgsky	14415
La Valse	Ravel	7413-4
La Mer ("The Sea") Album M-643	Debussy
Lieutenant Kije—Suite	Prokofieff	14948-9-50
Love for Three Oranges—Scherzo and March	Prokofieff	7197
Ma Mere L'Oye (Mother Goose)	Ravel	7370-1
Peter and the Wolf Album M-566	Prokofieff
Pictures at an Exhibition Album M-102	Moussorgsky-Ravel

CONCERTOS

Concerto in D major (Jascha Heifetz, Soloist) Album M-581	Brahms

MASSES

Passion According to Saint Matthew	Bach

SYMPHONIES

Symphony No. 4 in A major ("Italian") Album M-294	Mendelssohn
Symphony No. 4 in E minor Album M-730	Brahms
Symphony No. 4 in M minor Album M-327	Tchaikovsky
Symphony No.5 in E-flat major Album M-474	Sibelius

WALTZES

Waltz (from "String Serenade")	Tchaikovsky	14189

Pohjola's Daughter Album M-474	Sibelius
Romeo and Juliet—Overture-Fantasia	Tchaikovsky
Rosamunde—Ballet Music Album M-319	Schubert
Salon Mexico Album M-546	Copland
Sarabande Album M-102	Debussy-Ravel
Song of the Volga Boatmen Album M-546	Arr. by Stravinsky
Swanwhite ("The Maiden with Roses")	Sibelius	14355
Also Sprach Zarathustra Album M-257	Strauss

Concerto No. 2 (Jascha Heifetz (Soloist) Album M-450	Prokofieff
Concerto No. 12—Larghetto	Handel	14231

(Three Albums) Albums M-411, 412, 413

Symphony No. 6 in B minor ("Pathetique") Album M-85	Tchaikovsky
Sym. No. 7 in F major Album M-336	Beethoven
Sym. No. 8 in B minor ("Unfinished") Album M-319	Schubert
Sym. No. 94 in G major ("Surprise") Album M-55	Haydn
Sym. No. 102 in B-flat major Album M-529	Haydn

Wiener Blut—Waltzes ("Vienna Blood")	Strauss	6903

VICTOR RED SEAL RECORDS by the BOSTON POPS ORCHESTRA, ARTHUR FIEDLER, Conductor

10-inch, 75 cents — 12-inch $1.00

		No.
Barber of Seville	Paisiello	12519
Bartered Bride	Smetana	4498
Carneval (Opus 92) Parts 1 and 2	Dvorak	12159
Consecration of the House. Album M-618	Beethoven	Price $2.50
1812 (Ouverture Solennelle) Album M-515	Tchaikowsky	Price $2.50
Freischutz—Parts 1 and 2	von Weber	12040

		No.
Aida—Ballet Suite—Parts 1 and 2	Verdi	11985
Aida—Grand March (Act 2)	Verdi	11885
Aida—Grand March (Act 2)	Verdi	11897
Cavalleria Rusticana—Intermezzo	Mascagni	4303
Eugen Onegin—Polonaise	Tchaikovsky	12429

		No.
Austrian Peasant Dances	Schoenherr	4489
Ave Maria	Schubert	13589
Bolero	Moszkowski	4532
Bolero Album M-552	Price $2.50	Ravel
Capriccio Espagnol Parts 1 and 2	Rimsky-Korsakov	11827
Parts 3 and 4	Rimsky-Korsakov	11828
Capriccio Italien Album M-632	Price $2.50	Tchaikovsky
Caucasian Sketches	Ippolitov-Ivanov
In the Mosque		4526
In the Mountain Pass		12460
In the Village		11883
Procession of the Sardar		11883
Chanson Triste	Tchaikovsky	4527
Cradle Song (Wiegenlied) (Arr. by G. H. L. Smith)	Brahms	4435
Dances from Austria	Schoenherr	4490
Divertissement	Ibert	11951
Divertissement	Ibert	11952
Introduction—Cortege—Nocturne—Valse—Parade—Finale)
Drink to Me Only with Thine Eyes	Arranged by Pochon	4322
Eili, Eili	Arranged by Jacchia	12536
Entrance of the Little Fauns	Pierne	4319

		No.
Aida—Ballet Suite—Parts 1 and 2	Verdi	11985
Coppelia Ballet—Suite (Czardas—Dance of the Automatons—Waltz)	Delibes	12527
Dance of the Hours (from "La Gioconda") Parts 1 and 2	Ponchielli	11833
Ritual Dance of Fire (No. 7 from "El Amor Brujo")	de Falla	12160

Artists' Life Waltz	Strauss	12194
Cagliostro Waltz	Strauss	4479
Citronen Waltz	Strauss	11894
Doctrinen Waltz	Edward Strauss	12428
Emperor Waltz	Strauss	12195

America	S. F. Smith and Carey	4430
Arkansas Traveler	Arranged by Guyon	4502
Carioca	Youmans	4287
Chester (Revolutionary Hymn)	Billings	4502
Continental, The	Conrad	4287
Deep River	Arranged by Jacchia	4428
Foster Gallery Album M-727	Price $2.50	Gould
Fugato on a Well-Known Theme	McBride	4378

Aida—Grand March (Act 2)	Verdi	11885
El Capitan	Sousa	4501
Entrance of the Boyards	Halvorsen	12175
March of the Little Lead Soldiers	Pierne	4314
Marche Militaire	Schubert	4314

Piano Concerto in A minor, Op. 17 Album M-614	Price $4.50	Paderewski
Piano Concerto in F Album M-690	Price $4.00	Gershwin

OVERTURES

		No.
Merry Wives of Windsor	Nicolai	12533
Midsummer Night's Dream Parts 1 and 2	Mendelssohn	11919
Part 3	Mendelssohn	11920
Mignon—Parts 1 and 2	Thomas	12038
Morning, Noon and Night	von Suppe	12479
Oberon—Parts 1 and 2	von Weber	12043
Poet and Peasant	von Suppe	11986

OPERA

		No.
Goyescas—Intermezzo	Granados	12429
Jewels of the Madonna—Dance of the Camorristi	Wolf-Ferrari	4330
La Gioconda—Dance of the Hours—Parts 1 and 2	Ponchielli	11833

CONCERT PIECES

		No.
Espana Rapsodie (Spanish Rhapsody) Parts 1 and 2	Chabrier	4375
5 Miniatures (including Mosquito Dance	White	4429
Hora Staccato (Roumanian Dance)	Dinicu-Heifetz	4413
Hungarian Dances Nos. 5 and 6	Brahms	4321
Hungarian Rhapsody No. 1	Liszt	13596
In a Persian Market—Parts 1 and 2	Ketelbey	4338
In the Mosque (from "Caucasian Sketches")	Ippolitov-Ivanov	4526
In the Mountain Pass (from "Caucasian Sketches")	Ippolitov-Ivanov	12460
In the Village (from "Caucasian Sketches")	Ippolitov-Ivanov	11883
Jalousie (Jealousy) (Tango Tzigane)	Gade	12160
Kamennoi Ostrow (Reve Angelique)	Rubinstein	12191
Largo (from "Xerxes")	Handel	11887
La Golondrina (Arr. for srings by Findlay)	Serradell	4434
La Paloma	Yradier	4434
L'Arlesienne Suite No. 2 Album M-683	Price $2.50	Bizet
Le Tambourin	Leclair	4432
Malaguena (from Suite "Andalusia")	Lecuona	4330
March of the Little Lead Soldiers	Pierne	4314
Marche Slave—Parts 1 and 2	Tchaikovsky	12006
Music Box	Liadov	4390

BALLET MUSIC

		No.
Sleeping Beauty Ballet—Waltz	Tchaikovsky	11932
The Incredible Flutist—Suite from Album M-621	Piston	Price $2.50
3 Ballet Pieces for Orchestra (Arr. by E. Motti)
No. 1—Minuet from "Platee"	J. P. Rameau	4431

WALTZES

Espana Waltz	Waldteufel	4461
Danube Waves	Ivanovici	12510
Lagoon Waltz	Strauss	4480
New Vienna Waltz	Strauss	4478
Loves of the Poet Waltz	Strauss	4477

AMERICANA

Jingle Jangle	McBride	12597
Mosquito Dance	White	4319
Nobody Knows de Trouble I've Seen	Arranged by Jacchia	4428
Old Timers Night at the Pops	Arranged by Lake	4395

Ta-Ra-Ra Boom-De-Ay—The Bowery—Sidewalks of New York—Sweet Rosie O'Grady—Daisy Bell (On a Bicycle Built for Two)—Comrades—Little Annie Rooney—She May Have Seen Better Days

MARCHES

Marche Slave—Parts 1 and 2	Tchaikovsky	12006
Toy Trumpet	Scott	4456
Turkey in the Straw	Guion	4390
Virginia Reel	Coffey	4466
Pomp and Circumstance	Elgar	11885

CONCERTOS—JESUS MARIA SANROMA, Soloist

Piano Concerto No. 1 in G minor Album M-780	Price $3.50	Mendelssohn
Piano Concerto No. 2 in D minor, Op. 23	MacDowell	11948-49-50

		No.
Reinzi Album M-569	Price $2.50	Wagner
Roman Carnival (Le Carnaval Romain)	Berlioz	12135
Russlan and Ludmilla	Glinka	4427
Sakuntala	Goldmark	12610
Secret of Suzanne	Wolf-Ferrari	4412
William Tell Album M-456	Rossini	Price $2.00
Zampa Overture	Herold	13647

		No.
Natoma—Dagger Dance	Herbert	11932
Samson and Delilah—Bacchanale	Saint-Saens	12318
Tannhaeuser—Entrance of the Guests	Wagner	12448
Thais—Meditation	Massenet	11887

		No.
None but the Lonely Heart (Arr. by Cailliet)	Tchaikovsky	4413
Panis Angelicus	Franck	13589
Perpetuum Mobile	Strauss	4435
Polonaise Militaire in A major (orch. by Glazounov)	Chopin	11947
Prayer of Thanksgiving	Old Dutch Air	4322
Prelude in C-sharp minor	Rachmaninoff	11922
Prelude in G minor	Rachmaninoff	11922
Procession of the Sardar (No. 4 from "Caucasian Sketches")	Ippolitov-Ivanov	11883
Rachem	Mana-Zucca	12536
Reve Angelique (Kamennoi Ostrow)	Rubinstein	12191
Scherzo (from String Octet)	Mendelssohn	11947
Slavonic Dance in C major, No. 15	Dvorak	4412
Song of India (from "Sadko")	Rimsky-Korsakov	4303
Song of the Volga Boatman	Arranged by Glazounov	4527
Soviet Iron Foundry	Mossolov	4378
Spanish Dance in G minor	Moszkowski	4532
Tambourin	Leclair	4432
Thunder and Lightning—Polka	Strauss	4319
Waltz in A-flat (arr. by G. H. L. Smith)	Brahms	4435
Wedding March (from "Le Coq d'Or")	Rimsky-Korsakov	4526
Wedding March (from "Midsummer Night's Dream")	Mendelssohn	11920

		No.
No. 2—Musette from "Les Fetes d'Hebe"		4431
No. 3—Tambourin from "Les Fetes d'Hebe"		4431
Three-Cornered Hat—Dances (Neighbors—Dance of the Millers—Final Dance) Album M-505	Price $2.00	de Falla

Skaters Waltz	Waldteufel	4396
Sleeping Beauty Waltz	Tchaikovsky	11932
Vienna Blood Waltz	Strauss	12193
Voices of Spring Waltz	Strauss	4387
Where the Citrons Bloom	Strauss	11894
Wine, Woman and Song Waltz	Strauss	12192

—Band Played On—After the Ball—A Hot Time in the Old Town

Orchestral Rehearsal	Cella	4537
Pavane	Gould	4456
Pop Goes the Weasel	Arranged by Cailliet	4397
Star-Spangled Banner	Key, Smith and Arnold	4430
Swing Stuff	McBride	12597
Virginia Reel	Coffey	4466

Semper Fidelis	Sousa	4392
Stars and Stripes Forever	Sousa	4392
Strike Up the Band	Gershwin	11823
Washington Post March	Sousa	4501
Wedding March—Midsummer Night's Dream	Mendelssohn	11920

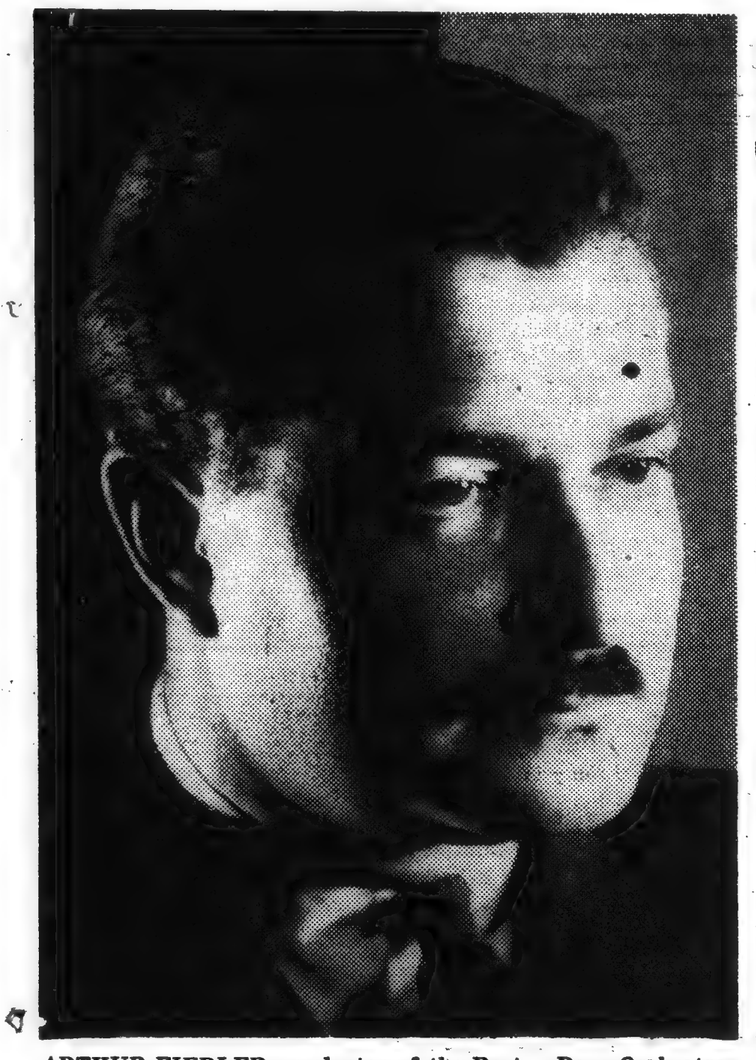
Rhapsody in Blue Album M-358	Price $2.50	Gershwin
Todtentanz (Dance of Death) Album M-392	Price $2.50	Liszt

MUSIQUIZ!

WHAT IS IT?—CONTINUED



ARTHUR FIEDLER, conductor of the Boston Pops Orchestra

How Are the Prizes Awarded?

The first two Herald Musiquizes are in effect, mass elimination contests. At each Musiquiz, the 200 people who file the best papers will be eligible for the finals. Thus, 400 in all may compete for the grand prizes. Following the first Musiquiz, the names of the 200 winners will be published in The Herald. Incidentally, if your name does not appear among the first 200, you are welcome to try again at the second Musiquiz.

On Thursday, June 26, at 4 P. M. in Symphony Hall, the 400 preliminary winners will engage in the semi-finals under the personal direction of Arthur Fiedler. His questions, of course, will be more difficult than those to be asked at the Musiquizzes, although still based on the same Victor records.

On Monday, June 30, also in Symphony Hall at 4 P. M., the finals will take place, to determine the winners of the grand prizes.

WHAT ARE THE PRIZES?

The first prize is an RCA-Victor model 301 console-phonograph valued at $275 with $50 worth of Victor records of the winner's own choice, total value, $325.

The second prize is a deluxe trip for two to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, convertible to $150 cash if the winner so desires.

Third prize is a pair of tickets to the 24 regular Saturday night concerts of the Boston Symphony orchestra under Serge Koussevitsky, valued at $100.

Fourth prize is $50 worth of Victor records of the winner's selection.

In addition there will be ten prizes of $10 worth of Victor records and 15 prizes of $5 worth of Victor records, all of the winner's own choosing.

HOW CAN I VOTE FOR MY FAVORITE?

The coupon on page 4 may be filled out and mailed either to The Herald Musiquiz Editor at The Boston Herald, or it may be mailed directly to Arthur Fiedler, Symphony Hall, Boston.

JESUS MARIA SANROMA, piano soloist of the Boston Pops Orchestra

Tips for Contestants

All questions will be derived from Victor recordings of Boston Symphony and Boston Pops orchestra selections.

Study the official list of Victor records printed on page 3.

Familiarize yourself with the music and with details of the composer's life.

Enlist the help of your neighborhood Victor record dealer.

Remember, there will be no questions of a trick nature.

The 200 contestants (400 in all) who turn in the best papers at each Musiquiz are eligible for the semi-finals.

The semi-finals will be held in Symphony Hall under the direction of Arthur Fiedler on Thursday, June 26, at 4 P. M.

The finals will be held on Monday, June 30, also at 4 P. M., in Symphony Hall. There are 29 prizes in all, totalling $800.

BRING YOUR OWN PENCIL!

Points to Bear in Mind

The Boston Herald Musiquiz is open to all comers.

There are no "rules and regulations." There is no contest entry fee.

The 25-cent admission charge covers everything but a pencil.

Seats are not reserved.

There will be two Musiquizzes: Sunday, June 15, and Sunday, June 22.

The Musiquizzers may participate in either or both Musiquizzes.

No one is obliged by his presence to enter the Musiquiz.

The Musiquiz consists of an hour's concert, followed by an hour's quiz.

No questions of a technical nature will be asked.

The primary idea is musical entertainment, but you'd better

BRING YOUR OWN PENCIL!

NO RESERVED SEATS

BUY YOUR TICKETS NOW

TICKETS 25¢

at any of the following offices
BOSTON SYMPHONY HALL
BOSTON GARDEN
AT ALL VICTOR RECORD DEALERS

BOSTON HERALD - 80 MASON ST. - BOSTON

The Boston Herald, Boston, Mass.
BOSTON HERALD MUSIQUIZ EDITOR:

I vote for ..... (name of composition) by ..... (composer)

as the all-time Pops favorite, and request that it be included on one of the programs of The Boston Herald Musiquizes to be held in the Boston Garden on the nights of June 15 and 22.

Name .....
(Please Print)

Street .....

City ..... State .....

NOTE: It is not necessary to enter the Contest in order to vote.

12,000 Flock to Boston Garden For Second Herald Musiquiz

(Continued from First Page)

It was then Cunningham's turn to be led to the pianistic slaughter, but he crashed through with a magnificent primo to Sanroma's secondo of "Turkey in the Straw," and, as an encore, carried out his threat to play "Smoke Gets In Your Eyes." He brought down the house with his solo offering, and unblushingly consented to play an encore, again with Sanroma, which the audience soon discovered to be none other than "McNamara's Band." Actually, Bill's piano playing was amazingly solid for an amateur.

The pandemonium of applause which this number brought forth was silenced only by the continuation of the Musiquiz itself under the facile guidance of O'Hara.

O'HARA DOES ASIDES

Going with even more smoothness and deftness of timing than it did last week the Musiquiz found the audience clutching its pencils like mad to the bitter end. In point of fact, the end was surprisingly unbitter this week, the quiz being considerably easier than it was last week.

Stated with absolute clarity and precision, if a spot on the phonetic side by O'Hara whose asides would have rolled the audience into the aisles if they hadn't been afraid of being scorched, the second set of Musiquiz questions proved to be more satisfactory than the first because of Arthur Fiedler's liberality with his musical examples.

Portions of practically every one of the Pops favorite were included as musical examples from a snatch of Schubert's Unfinished Symphony to the Hymn of Thanksgiving, and the audience gobbled them up with obvious relish. In fact, when the song of the Volga Boatmen was included as one the illustrations, the audience joined in and hummed the refrain double forte.

Moreover, a quick check revealed an even larger percentage of the Musiquiz audience took part in the quiz than last week's audience did, which means that 6000 ballots, at least, were cast out of the audience of 12,000.

Prepared for such a contingency, the Symphony Hall judges were rolling up their sleeves at a late hour last night to plunge into the task of checking the ballots so as to complete the job in time to make the deadline for the publishing of the second batch of qualifiers in Wednesday's Herald.

These qualifiers, along with the 205 who qualified at the first Herald Musiquiz, will take part in the semi-finals Thursday at 4 P.M. in Symphony Hall. Each qualifier will receive a printed ticket for a floor seat at a table, and each is invited to bring along guests as the balcony will be open to the public free of charge to watch the semi-finals.

Beginning to arrive as early as 4 P.M. the vast audience was the equal of last Sunday's both as to conduct, appearance and enthusiasm. Coolly and attractively dressed in the smartest of summer fashions, it raced to find its own choice of seats and by 7 o'clock, a full hour before concert time, had filled the floor and the stadium to the gunwales.

Stunned by the numbers of people brought out to a public indoor event on such an atrociously hot day, Garden officials again were forced to open the main doors long before the official opening time. Crowd experts, putting a finger to the wind and an eye to the melting thermometers, ruefully estimated during the sultry afternoon a top crowd of 5000 and were dumbfounded as the crowd exceeded 5000 at 7 o'clock, swelled to 7000 by 7:30 and hit its peak at 8 o'clock when an official estimated audience of 12,000 was on hand.

Starting on the dot of 8 o'clock with the stirring fanfare of Sousa's "Stars and Stripes Forever," the concert brought even more enthusiasm than it did last Sunday night. The crowd could hardly wait for Ravel's "Bolero," the second item on the program, and a ripple of anticipation went through the audience as the drums announced the odd, piquant rhythms of the celebrated piece.

It was "Bolero" which crossed the winning line in a hand gallop in the recent Herald voting to determine the all-time Pops favorite.

Following the "Bolero" came Gershwin's Concerto in F for piano and orchestra, also a celebrated Pops favorite.

The audience went wild as Sanroma finished his brilliant performance of the work, and called him back time and again. At least five times Sanroma and Fiedler returned to the stand to receive their ovation, while the more vociferous of the audience shouted for more. Knowing what was to come, however, Sanroma declined an encore.

Taking advantage of last week's experience, thousands sought the vantage points of superior visual and auditory qualities of the upper balcony. Viewed from above, the orchestra, placed on a striking circular stage decorated to appear as a giant Victor red-seal disc, presented a magnificent spectacle.

As was the case last week, the audience was seated with an astonishing minimum of confusion, and its conduct throughout the entire evening was nothing short of miraculous. There were no hoots or catcalls what of t the no its and com

Weather is something that a New Englander takes in stride—six giant strides backward, if he can have his say in the matter—and although the waving of programs in time to the music was almost as much a part of the show as the Musiquiz, there were no evidences of serious developments through the heat.

Actually, the Garden's giant air-cooling system was pouring thousands of gallons of chilled air into the Garden every minute, but in the face of the hottest sun of the year, was fighting a touch and go battle.

As the evening progressed and the sun had dipped over the B. & M.'s freight yards, the air-cooling system asserted its power, and by the half-way mark, the atmosphere was markedly cooler.

After the first number, Fiedler spoke through the microphone system, asking permission of the vast audience for the musicians to remove their coats. Permission the audience loudly granted, and seemed to be amused at the various hues of suspenders in consequence revealed.

Making his appearance in a white suit, Bill Cunningham achieved a welcome as warm as the weather and twice as gratifying.

Speaking in a baritone as husky as himself, he made an instant hit with the audience, capturing its attention with as colorful a vocabulary as his fans expect of him in his regular Herald column.

"First of all," Bill said, "the composer, like the athlete, binds himself to respect the rules of the game. The virtuoso musician, in this case the entire orchestra, is notable, like the champion athlete, for nerve control, precision, timing and rhythm. In sports language, these boys work in perfect teamwork."

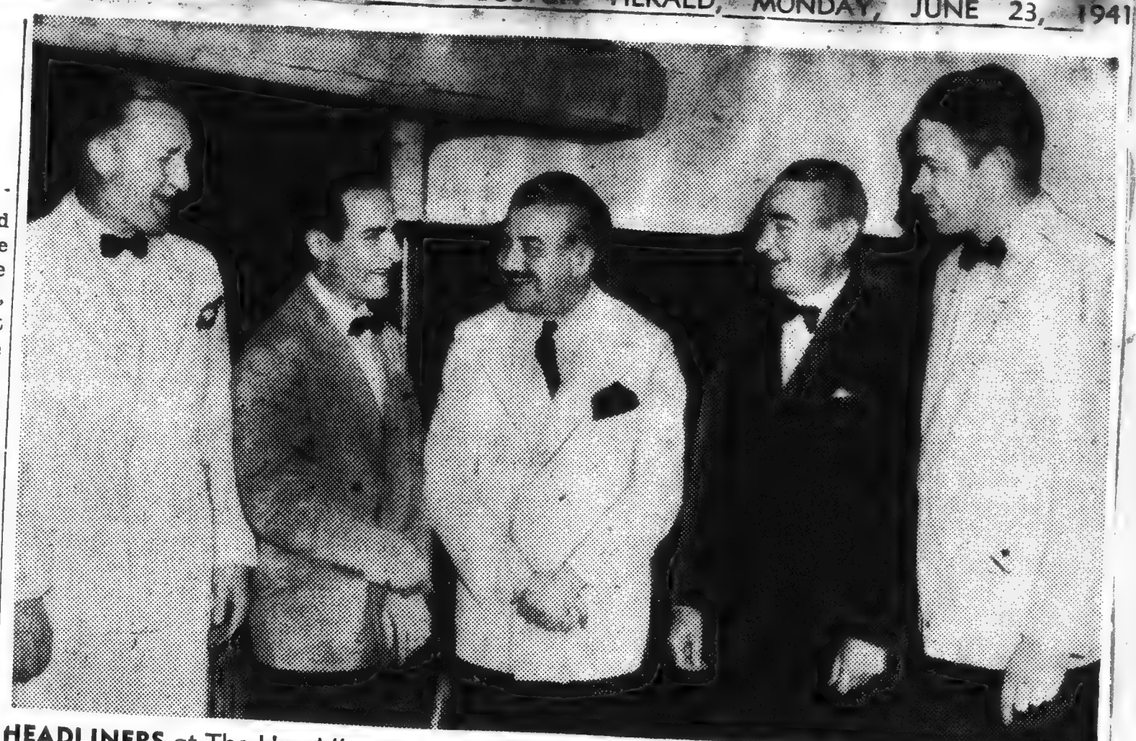
Going on to introduce Fiedler, the brilliant leader of the Pops orchestra, and Sanroma, its equally brilliant piano virtuoso, Cunningham introduced Neal O'Hara, nationally prominent Traveler columnist and humorist who was master of ceremonies, and Charles O'Connell, artistic director of RCA-Victor.

Speaking first, O'Connell praised the people of Boston for their discrimination, claiming that "such an event as the Herald Musiquiz would be patently impossible outside of Boston."

When O'Hara took the microphones, the second Herald Musiquiz was on in full cry.

It is indeed, testimony to the potent attraction that the Musiquizzes have had on Boston's musical public to consider that an audience in excess of 12,000 people was induced to venture out into the scorching bliaze of a setting sun which had at its zenith rolled up the stinging total of 96 points of Fahrenheit.

In short, the second Musiquiz was every bit the success of the first, and appears indisputably to have been the musical idea of the century.



HEADLINERS at The Herald's successful second Musiquiz and Pops Orchestra concert at the Boston Garden last night were, left to right, Bill Cunningham, Herald columnist, chairman; Jesus Maria Sanroma, piano soloist; Arthur Fiedler, conductor; Neal O'Hara, Traveler columnist, and Charles O'Connell, musical director of RCA-Victor.

12,000 Flock to Boston Garden for Pops Concert, Herald Musiquiz, Fun with Cunningham, O'Hara

By RUDOLPH ELIE, JR.

Laughing when he sat down to play, the Musiquiz audience changed its tune to a roar of applause in A flat as Bill Cunningham, coming from behind, put over "Smoke Gets in Your Eyes" before a delighted and astonished audience of more than 12,000 Musiquizzers at the second of The Herald's phenomenally popular Musiquizzes in the Boston Garden last night. Bill's musical stunt was the sensation of an evening crammed with musical brilliance, spectacle, excitement, humorous chit-chat and a slight spot of heat.

Not far behind Cunningham with his musical prowess and magnificent assurance was Neal O'Hara, whose excruciating naivete as master of ceremonies kept the vast and broiling audience in great good humor throughout the entire Musiquiz. Both renowned gentlemen of the press may now add to their long list of distinctions, "performed with the Boston Pops orchestra," a kudos guaranteed to brig awe to the journalistic and sporting brethren from here to Hollywood.

Nonetheless, they faced their pianistic joshing in rare spirits as they took on Jesus Maria Sanroma, the brilliant official pianist of the Boston Symphony, who accepted Bill's challenge for the orchestra, and their joint efforts as pianists all but stole the show from Pops orchestra, Musiquiz and thermometer.

Aside from Cunningham's version of the famous Kern melody, the keyboard shennanigans were entirely unrehearsed, even though O'Harra had said he'd learned the only "spontaneous thing he knew was combustion." Actually, the two star performers had merely been told by Sanroma to expect practically anything. The quick-witted piano virtuoso acted as master of ceremonies for the off-the-record display of artistic temperaments.

Playing his own peculiar conception of "Chopsticks," O'Hara thumped away with two fingers—some observers were certain he used but one—while Sanroma, probably unequalled as an improvisator, provided a polka-like accompaniment.

(Continued on Page Eleven)

Special Guests At Musiquiz

Among the guests of The Boston Herald, the Boston Pops Orchestra and the RCA Victor Company at the Musiquiz in the Boston Garden last night were Mr. and Mrs. Alan Steinert, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph P. Maloney, Mr. Charles Van Maanen, all of the Eastern Company, Cambridge. Others attending were Mrs. Jesus Maria Sanroma, Mrs. Neal O'Hara and Joan O'Hara, Mrs. F. O. Blanchard, Mrs. W. B. Chipman, Susan Claire Steinert, Randolph Steinert, Mr. and Mrs. Del Castillo, Mrs. Nina Del Castillo, Mrs. A. Alena Elie, Miss Gertrude Sands, Katherine Jones, Mrs. Arthur Cone, Mrs. L. H. Johnson, Mrs. Frank F. Hill, Mrs. Ethel M. Jones, Edward C. Park, Jr., Mrs. Leslie MacDill, Miss Jean MacDill, Miss Fiona Munro, Mrs. C. L. Robinson, Virginia Robinson, Carroll L. Robinson, R. A. Callhan, Bertha V. Clancy, Mrs. Philip Eiseman, Mrs. Fred Penne, Miss Rose Ann Penne, Miss Priscilla N. Owens, Charlotte Levens, Ernest Levens, Jeanette Herman, Morton Blender, K. Baxter, Virginia Baxter, Bess Jervis, Miss Marion Cummings, Muriel Hass Carpenter, Virginia Drew, Jessica Darling, Florence Cronin, Mr. and Mrs. P. J. Flaherty, Mr. and Mrs. J. Robert Morse, Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin DeGroot, Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Romau.

ANSWERS TO MUSIQUIZ

GROUP A—

Questions by the announcer:

1. Q.—Of what does the "Surprise" in Haydn's Surprise symphony consist? A.—A loud chord.

2. Q.—What is the solo instrument in the recorded arrangement of "Eili Eili"? A.—Trumpet.

3. Q.—The same tune appears in Chabrier's "Espana Rhapsody" and Waldteufel's "Espana Waltz." A.—True.

Excerpts played by the orchestra:
1. Wagner 2. Italian 3. 1812 Overture

GROUP B—

Questions by the announcer:

1. Q.—The meditation from "Thais" was originally written for what solo instrument? A.—Violin.

2. Q.—Which of the following composers are American? A.—All 3.

3. Q.—Is Prokofieff's "Classical Symphony" the longest or shortest symphony in the Boston Symphony record list? A.—The shortest.

Excerpts played by the orchestra:
1. Persia 2. Opera 3. Wagner.

GROUP C—

Questions by the announcer:

1. Q.—Schumann named his four symphonies after the four seasons? A. False.

2. Q.—Karl Phillip Emanuel Bach, composer of the original concerto in D, was what relation to Johann Sebastian Bach? A.—Son.

3. Q.—The bolero as a dance came originally from what country? A.—Spain.

Excerpts played by the orchestra:
1. ¾ 2. Schubert 3. Volga.

GROUP D—

Questions by the announcer:

1. Q.—Was "Rienzi" Wagner's first successful opera? A.—Yes.

2. Q.—The song "La Paloma" signifies what bird? A.—The dove.

3. Q.—Which instrument is played solo, off stage, at the opening and closing of Prokofieff's "Lieutenant Kije Suite"? A.—Trumpet.

Excerpts played by the orchestra:
1. Sonja Henie. 2. Tango. 3. Boston Herald.

GROUP E—

Questions by the announcer:

1. Q.—How many movements has Debussy's "La Mer"? A.—Three.

2. Q.—Which instrument represents the cat in Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf"? A.—Clarinet.

3. Q.—Of the following composers, which are Russian? A.—Tchaikovsky and Rubinstein.

Excerpts played by the orchestra:
1. French Horn 2. Spring 3. Aida.

GROUP F—

Questions by the announcer:

1. Q.—Which of these pieces has an unexpected ending? A.—Perpetuum Mobile.

2. Q.—In the second symphony of Sibelius are the last two movements played without pause? A.—Yes.

3. Q.—Liadov's "Music Box" is written primarily for which instrument? A.—For wind instruments.

Excerpts played by the orchestra:
1. Thanksgiving 2. Arkansas Traveler 3. New York.

12,000 Flock to Boston Garden For Second Herald Musiquiz

(Continued from First Page)

It was then Cunningham's turn to be led to the pianistic slaughter, but he crashed through with a magnificent primo to Sanroma's secondo of "Turkey in the Straw," and, as an encore, carried out his threat to play "Smoke Gets In Your Eyes." He brought down the house with his solo offering, and unblushingly consented to play an encore, again with Sanroma, which the audience soon discovered to be none other than "McNamara's Band." Actually, Bill's piano playing was amazingly solid for an amateur.

The pandemonium of applause which this number brought forth was silenced only by the continuation of the Musiquiz itself under the facile guidance of O'Hara.

O'HARA DOES ASIDES

Going with even more smoothness and deftness of timing than it did last week the Musiquiz found the audience clutching its pencils like mad to the bitter end. In point of fact, the end was surprisingly unbitter this week, the quiz being considerably easier than it was last week.

Stated with absolute clarity and precision, if a spot on the phonetic side by O'Hara whose asides would have rolled the audience into the aisles if they hadn't been afraid of being scorched, the second set of Musiquiz questions proved to be more satisfactory than the first because of Arthur Fiedler's liberality with his musical examples.

Portions of practically every one of the Pops favorite were included as musical examples from a snatch of Schubert's Unfinished Symphony to the Hymn of Thanksgiving, and the audience gobbled them up with obvious relish. In fact, when the song of the Volga Boatmen was included as one the illustrations, the audience joined in and hummed the refrain double forte.

Moreover, a quick check revealed an even larger percentage of the Musiquiz audience took part in the quiz than last week's audience did, which means that 6000 ballots, at least, were cast out of the audience of 12,000.

Prepared for such a contingency, the Symphony Hall judges were rolling up their sleeves at a late hour last night to plunge into the task of checking the ballots so as to complete the job in time to make the deadline for the publishing of the second batch of qualifiers in Wednesday's Herald.

These qualifiers, along with the 205 who qualified at the first Herald Musiquiz, will take part in the semi-finals Thursday at 4 P.M. in Symphony Hall. Each qualifier will receive a printed ticket for a floor seat at a table, and each is invited to bring along guests as the balcony will be open to the public free of charge to watch the semi-finals.

Beginning to arrive as early as 4 P.M. the vast audience was the equal of last Sunday's both as to conduct, appearance and enthusiasm. Coolly and attractively dressed in the smartest of summer fashions, it raced to find its own choice of seats and by 7 o'clock, a full hour before concert time, had filled the floor and the stadium to the gunwales.

Stunned by the numbers of people brought out to a public indoor event on such an atrociously hot day, Garden officials again were forced to open the main doors long before the official opening time. Crowd experts, putting a finger to the wind and an eye to the melting thermometers, ruefully estimated during the sultry afternoon a top crowd of 5000 and were dumbfounded as the crowd exceeded 5000 at 7 o'clock, swelled to 7000 by 7:30 and hit its peak at 8 o'clock when an official estimated audience of 12,000 was on hand.

Starting on the dot of 8 o'clock with the stirring fanfare of Sousa's "Stars and Stripes Forever," the concert brought even more enthusiasm than it did last Sunday night. The crowd could hardly wait for Ravel's "Bolero," the second item on the program, and a ripple of anticipation went through the audience as the drums announced the odd, piquant rhythms of the celebrated piece.

It was "Bolero" which crossed the winning line in a hand gallop in the recent Herald voting to determine the all-time Pops favorite.

Following the "Bolero" came Gershwin's Concerto in F for piano and orchestra, also a celebrated Pops favorite.

The audience went wild as Sanroma finished his brilliant performance of the work, and called him back time and again. At least five times Sanroma and Fiedler returned to the stand to receive their ovation, while the more vociferous of the audience shouted for more. Knowing what was to come, however, Sanroma declined an encore.

Taking advantage of last week's experience, thousands sought the vantage points of superior visual and auditory qualities of the upper balcony. Viewed from above, the orchestra, placed on a striking circular stage decorated to appear as a giant Victor red-seal disc, presented a magnificent spectacle.

As was the case last week, the audience was seated with an astonishing minimum of confusion, and its conduct throughout the entire evening was nothing short of miraculous. There were no hoots or catcalls; nor any sign of rowdyism whatever, an indisputable evidence of the quality and intelligence of the Musiquiz audience. Yet it made no bones whatever about shouting its enthusiasm.

While everybody was hot, nobody complained much about the heat. Weather is something that a New Englander takes in stride—six giant strides backward, if he can have his say in the matter—and although the waving of programs in time to the music was almost as much a part of the show as the Musiquiz, there were no evidences of serious developments through the heat.

Actually, the Garden's giant air-cooling system was pouring thousands of gallons of chilled air into the Garden every minute, but in the face of the hottest sun of the year, was fighting a touch and go battle.

As the evening progressed and the sun had dipped over the B. & M.'s freight yards, the air-cooling system asserted its power, and by the half-way mark, the atmosphere was markedly cooler.

After the first number, Fiedler spoke through the microphone system, asking permission of the vast audience for the musicians to remove their coats. Permission the audience loudly granted, and seemed to be amused at the various hues of suspenders in consequence revealed.

Making his appearance in a white suit, Bill Cunningham achieved a welcome as warm as the weather and twice as gratifying.

Speaking in a baritone as husky as himself, he made an instant hit with the audience, capturing its attention with as colorful a vocabulary as his fans expect of him in his regular Herald column.

"First of all," Bill said, "the composer, like the athlete, binds himself to respect the rules of the game. The virtuoso musician, in this case the entire orchestra, is notable, like the champion athlete, for nerve control, precision, timing and rhythm. In sports language, these boys work in perfect teamwork."

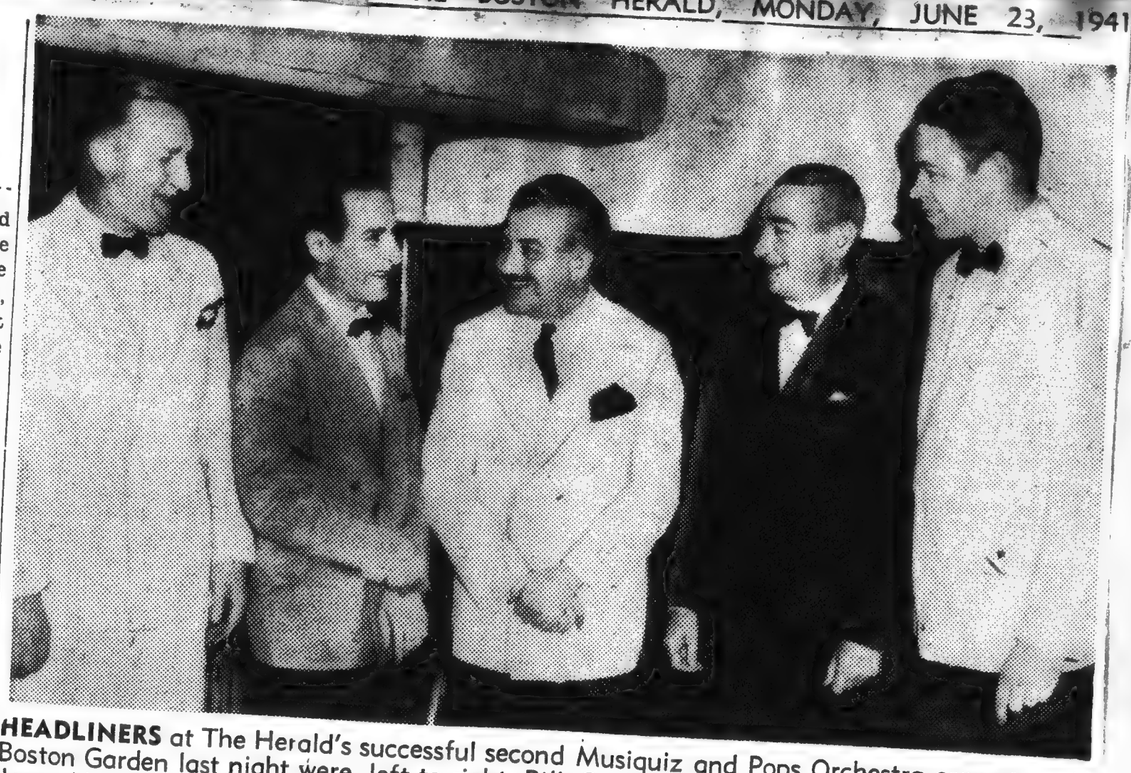
Going on to introduce Fiedler, the brilliant leader of the Pops orchestra, and Sanroma, its equally brilliant piano virtuoso, Cunningham introduced Neal O'Hara, nationally prominent Traveler columnist and humorist who was master of ceremonies, and Charles O'Connell, artistic director of RCA-Victor.

Speaking first, O'Connell praised the people of Boston for their discrimination, claiming that "such an event as the Herald Musiquiz would be patently impossible outside of Boston."

When O'Hara took the microphones, the second Herald Musiquiz was on in full cry.

It is indeed, testimony to the potent attraction that the Musiquizzes have had on Boston's musical public to consider that an audience in excess of 12,000 people was induced to venture out into the scorching bliaze of a setting sun which had at its zenith rolled up the stinging total of 95 points of Fahrenheit.

In short, the second Musiquiz was every bit the success of the first, and appears indisputably to have been the musical idea of the century.



HEADLINERS at The Herald's successful second Musiquiz and Pops Orchestra concert at the Boston Garden last night were, left to right, Bill Cunningham, Herald columnist, chairman; Jesus Maria Sanroma, piano soloist; Arthur Fiedler, conductor; Neal O'Hara, Traveler columnist, and Charles O'Connell, musical director of RCA-Victor.

Special Guests At Musiquiz

Among the guests of The Boston Herald, the Boston Pops Orchestra and the RCA Victor Company at the Musiquiz in the Boston Garden last night were Mr. and Mrs. Alan Steinert, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph P. Maloney, Mr. Charles Van Maanen, all of the Eastern Company, Cambridge. Others attending were Mrs. Jesus Maria Sanroma, Mrs. Neal O'Hara and Joan O'Hara, Mrs. F. O. Blanchard, Mrs. W. B. Chipman, Susan Claire Steinert, Randolph Steinert, Mr. and Mrs. Del Castillo, Mrs. Nina Del Castillo, Mrs. A. Alena Elie, Miss Gertrude Sands, Katherine Jones, Mrs. Arthur Cone, Mrs. L. H. Johnson, Mrs. Frank F. Hill, Mrs. Ethel M. Jones, Edward C. Park, Jr., Mrs. Leslie MacDill, Miss Jean MacDill, Miss Fiona Munro, Mrs. C. L. Robinson, Virginia Robinson, Carroll L. Robinson, R. A. Callhan, Bertha V. Clancy, Mrs. Philip Eiseman, Mrs. Fred Penne, Miss Rose Ann Penne, Miss Priscilla N. Owens, Charlotte Levens, Ernest Levens, Jeanette Herman, Morton Blender, K. Baxter, Virginia Baxter, Bess Jervis, Miss Marion Cummings, Muriel Hass Carpenter, Virginia Drew, Jessica Darling, Florence Cronin, Mr. and Mrs. P. J. Flaherty, Mr. and Mrs. J. Robert Morse, Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin DeGroot, Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Romau.

Toward Hitler Feels Interests Lie With German Side

[Boston Herald-N. Y. Times Wireless]

VICHY, June 22—Official circles here observe the attitude that the opening of Germano-Soviet hostilities is outside the interests of a nation in France's position. Authorized quarters did not, however, conceal today that their interests are now with the German side for two main reasons.

First, since France is now proposing to collaborate in a new order in Europe it is held that the econ-cent assurance was Neal O'Hara, whose excruciating naivete as master of ceremonies kept the vast and broiling audience in great good humor throughout the entire Musiquiz. Both renowned gentlemen of the press may now add to their long list of distinctions, "performed with the Boston Pops orchestra," a kudos guaranteed to brig awe to the journalistic and sporting brethren from here to Hollywood.

Nonetheless, they faced their pianistic joshing in rare spirits as or Pops Concert, ingham, O'Hara

they took on Jesus Maria Sanroma, the brilliant official pianist of the Boston Symphony, who accepted Bill's challenge for the orchestra, and their joint efforts as pianists all but stole the show from Pops orchestra, Musiquiz and thermometer.

Aside from Cunningham's version of the famous Kern melody, the keyboard shennanigans were entirely unrehearsed, even though O'Harra had said he'd learned the only "spontaneous thing he knew was combustion." Actually, the two star performers had merely been told by Sanroma to expect practically anything. The quick-witted piano virtuoso acted as master of ceremonies for the off-the-record display of artistic temperaments.

Playing his own peculiar conception of "Chopsticks," O'Hara thumped away with two fingers—some observers were certain he used but one—while Sanroma, probably unequalled as an improvisator, provided a polka-like accompaniment.

(Continued on Page Eleven)

ANSWERS TO MUSIQUIZ

GROUP A—

Questions by the announcer:

1. Q.—Of what does the "Surprise" in Haydn's Surprise symphony consist? A.—A loud chord.

2. Q.—What is the solo instrument in the recorded arrangement of "Eili Eili"? A.—Trumpet.

3. Q.—The same tune appears in Chabrier's "Espana Rhapsody" and Waldteufel's "Espana Waltz." A.—True.

Excerpts played by the orchestra:
1. Wagner 2. Italian 3. 1812 Overture

GROUP B—

Questions by the announcer:

1. Q.—The meditation from "Thais" was originally written for what solo instrument? A.—Violin.

2. Q.—Which of the following composers are American? A.—All 3.

3. Q.—Is Prokofieff's "Classical Symphony" the longest or shortest symphony in the Boston Symphony record list? A.—The shortest.

Excerpts played by the orchestra:
1. Persia 2. Opera 3. Wagner.

GROUP C—

Questions by the announcer:

1. Q.—Schumann named his four symphonies after the four seasons? A. False.

2. Q.—Karl Phillip Emanuel Bach, composer of the original concerto in D, was what relation to Johann Sebastian Bach? A.—Son.

3. Q.—The bolero as a dance came originally from what country? A.—Spain.

Excerpts played by the orchestra:
1. ¾ 2. Schubert 3. Volga.

GROUP D—

Questions by the announcer:

1. Q.—Was "Rienzi" Wagner's first successful opera? A.—Yes.

2. Q.—The song "La Paloma" signifies what bird? A.—The dove.

3. Q.—Which instrument is played solo, off stage, at the opening and closing of Prokofieff's "Lieutenant Kije Suite"? A.—Trumpet.

Excerpts played by the orchestra:
1. Sonja Henie. 2. Tango. 3. Boston Herald.

GROUP E—

Questions by the announcer:

1. Q.—How many movements has Debussy's "La Mer"? A.—Three.

2. Q.—Which instrument represents the cat in Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf"? A.—Clarinet.

3. Q.—Of the following composers, which are Russian? A.—Tchaikovsky and Rubinstein.

Excerpts played by the orchestra:
1. French Horn 2. Spring 3. Aida.

GROUP F—

Questions by the announcer:

1. Q.—Which of these pieces has an unexpected ending? A.—Perpetuum Mobile.

2. Q.—In the second symphony of Sibelius are the last two movements played without pause? A.—Yes.

3. Q.—Liadov's "Music Box" is written primarily for which instrument? A.—For wind instruments.

Excerpts played by the orchestra:
1. Thanksgiving 2. Arkansas Traveler 3. New York.

MUSIQUIZ SURPRISES PROMISED FOR SUNDAY

By RUDOLPH ELIE, JR.

While Arthur Fiedler and the Pops orchestra were busy tucking new Musiquiz surprises up their sleeves for next Sunday night's keenly anticipated event in the Boston Garden, Symphony Hall judges were completing all arrangements for publishing the complete list of the first batch of 200 elimination winners of the first Herald Musiquiz in tomorrow's Herald.

On the heels of the official announcement yesterday by the Boston Pops orchestra that Bill Cunningham, one of the nation's most colorful columnists and commentators, had been selected to act as chairman of the second Herald Musiquiz being held in the Boston Garden Sunday night, The Herald office became the recipient of hundreds of messages urging it to induce Bill to play the piano as one of the features of the Musiquiz.

Whether or not Bill would agree to such a plan was unknown late last night since the famous columnist was in New York. However, his close friend Arthur Fiedler,

(Continued on Page Eighteen)

SUMMER SCHOOL
JUNE 30
Training which meets the need of business, government. Regular and special courses. Push your personal preparedness program forward. Train for business in a business atmosphere, under experienced instructors, with modern equipment. Ask for bulletin. Enroll now.
BURDETT COLLEGE
156 Stuart St.
Han. 6300

BOSTON THURSDAY, JUNE 19, 1941

GIANT DISC OF BOSTON POPS MUSICIANS as they appeared from the balcony of the Boston Garden during the first Herald Musiquiz held last Sunday night in the Boston Garden. This is the way they will look next Sunday night at the second Herald Musiquiz.

Fiedler Promises Surprises For Musiquiz Next Sunday

(Continued from First Page)

who conducts the celebrated Pops orchestra, was delighted with the idea, and said he'd be honored to be the first to shake Bill's hand after his performance of whatever he chose to perform, no matter how he performed it.

"Actually," said Mr. Fiedler, "Bill is a natural. It may be that he hasn't kept up with his scales lately, but I'd put him up against any amateur pianist I know. And while I'm at it," Mr. Fiedler said, "let me say here and now that the first Herald Musiquiz exceeded my wildest expectations.

"Everything went off, so far as the orchestra and I are concerned, in extraordinary fashion, and we have never performed before such an enthusiastic, intelligent and wide-awake audience. We're all looking forward," he concluded, "to meeting all the Musiquizzers next Sunday night, and be sure to tell them we've got some surprises."

Familiar now to the 10,000 people who took part in last Sunday night's Musiquiz were the fascinating details of the Musiquiz. But for those who could not be there to take part in the fun, the Musiquizzers simply are concerts by the Boston Pops orchestra in the Boston Garden to benefit the Pension Fund of the Symphony orchestra, with tickets at the all-inclusive price of 25 cents, no seats reserved. (A few boxes for official guests excluded).

ENTIRELY NEW PROGRAM

After the concert, which next Sunday night is an entirely new program, consisting of Sousas' "Stars and Stripes Forever," Ravel "Bolero," and Gershwin's Concerto in F for piano and orchestra with Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist, as well as a number of encores, the Musiquiz begins.

This is a general musical questionnaire in which all people, regardless of age, height, weight and color of hair can take part at will. As Musiquizzers enter the Garden, they help themselves to Herald Musiquiz ballots. The ballots contain six groups of six questions each, three of each group consisting of "identification" questions, based on musical illustrations played by the orchestra. All the questions are answered by means of a pencil; no one is called upon to speak or to be embarrassed in any way. The only rules are: bring your own pencil and file your ballot in the proper places if you want to win one of the prizes.

The one idea is musical entertainment. Whether or not you plan to enter the Musiquiz—and by the way, it's going to be just as easy next Sunday night—you will have as grand a time as last week's 10,000 did.

With Arthur Fiedler, the Boston Pops orchestra, Jesus Maria Sanroma, Bill Cunningham, Neal O'Hara and Charles O'Connell as its star performers, the second Herald Musiquiz promises to provide an even greater galaxy of audience "stars" than it did last Sunday.

DISTINGUISHED GROUPS

Besides delegations of music-lovers from all sections of New England, distinguished groups from every section of the country were said to be making plans to attend, as well as a very large group from the American Libraries Association convention now in session in the Statler Hotel.

There are quantities of choice seats available right up to 8 o'clock, the hour the Musiquiz begins, and no one need for a moment fear being unable to hear or see everything. The fact of the matter is, the best seats are those in the balconies, from which point the scene below presents a magnificent spectacle as well as perfect acoustics. It is naturally a convenience to purchase tickets in advance, but even this is quite unnecessary.

Tomorrow's Herald and Traveler will contain complete details of the second Musiquiz besides an entertaining feature article by Bill Cunningham, a complete list of Victor record dealers and others who can supply tickets as well as additional information, and the names of the first group of contest winners.

A minimum of 200 more semi-finalists will be chosen at the second Musiquiz next Sunday night, and these 400 will be eligible to take part in the semi-finals a week from today in Symphony Hall.

Tickets, at 25 cents each, may now be obtained from the Herald-Traveler building, Symphony Hall, the Boston Garden, practically every department store ticket agency in the city and at your neighborhood Victor record dealer. The dealers, indeed, are admirably equipped to provide Musiquizzers with tips on how to win the Musiquiz, since all questions to be asked are derived from the Victor records of the Boston Pops and Boston Symphony orchestra. Be sure to watch for tomorrow's Herald and Traveler. But most important, go to the Garden next Sunday night at 8 o'clock. It'll be the brightest and biggest event the musical horizon has ever been lighted up with.

162

Boston Herald June 5

INTEREST IN SYMPHONY AROUSED BY MUSIQUIZ

By RUDOLPH ELIE, JR.

As if it were not the case even without such an absorbing musical event as the Herald Musiquiz to stir up even greater interest, the question of what goes on in the inner circle of Boston Symphony musicians has long been the subject of considerable—and pardonable— curiosity in the minds of music-lovers.

Holding down as he does one of the most interesting as well as one of the most taxing and difficult tasks in the world, a symphony musician invariably commands the interest of all who meet him socially, and he is forthwith cornered and pommelled with such questions as "what is Dr. Koussevitzky really like?" and "does Arthur Fiedler arrange all the Pops programs?" and "what do you think about when you are not actually playing?"

So far as the last question is concerned, most of them like to recall the famous but apocryphal tale of the kettle drummer who, finding during a rehearsal that he had a 125 measure rest, went down to the bar, had a glass of beer, returned to his post on the 124th measure, thumped out a thunderous thump on scheduled time and discovered to his horror that the orchestra was now rehearsing another piece.

Actually, however, charming raconteurs though they are, most symphony musicians have the exasperating facility of seeming to tell all while conveying nothing. Thus it is most of us have to depend on such disarming events as the orchestra's spontaneous observation of the 50th anniversary of one of its members' association with the orchestra to realize how sincere they are.

Joseph Mann came to the orchestra in 1891 as a trumpet player. As one season drifted into another, he became increasingly popular and, when he retired some years ago, he was appointed assistant to chief librarian Leslie Rogers. Possessing a fine hand, a profound knowledge of musical theory and a thorough understanding of orchestral problems, he was given the most responsible and exacting task of preparing instrumental parts for performance.

When in 1938, just before the performance of a new work by Sibelius, it was discovered that four of the most important orchestral parts were missing, it was Joseph Mann's task to decode the all but illegible music which was radioed by Sibelius from Helsinki. He worked all night to do it, but the parts were on the stands in the morning, and the performance went off as scheduled.

Well, last week during a pause in the Pops rehearsal, Arthur Fiedler shouted for Mr. Mann. Sensing a dressing down for making a tiny error in copying, he came to the stage. As he entered, he was further embarrassed to see the entire orchestra rise. It looked pretty bad for Mr. Mann. Up stepped the five official spokesmen of the orchestra, headed by Joseph Singer. It looked even worse for Mr. Mann. They handed him a paper. He unfolded it nervously. "Pay to the order of Joseph Mann . . ." it read. Then they all went out and had their pictures taken.

Musiquiz tickets are now available at practically all Victor record dealers at 25 cents each. The Musiquiz benefits the Pension Fund of the Boston Symphony orchestra, of course, but it also promises two evenings (June 15 and June 22) of the best musical entertainment ever held in Boston as well as a general musical questionnaire in which all people may participate for 29 splendid musical prizes. Watch this column daily for further news and developments in the popular balloting to determine the all-time Pops favorite.

EVENING
Boston Traveler
IN THE COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS

larmed!

or the C.E.P., or any other branch or service.
r permission, of course---as a word-of-mouth aining and worthwhile musical event in the Musiquiz to benefit the Boston Symphony oston Herald Bookfair, which each autumn oston Garden to hear the world's most ople.

ating musical contest in which everybody, regard-participate, with a wonderful list of musicnificent $275 Victor radio-phonograph with mer's choice. The second prize is a trip $150 in cash; the third prize a $100 pair ght concerts of the Boston Symphony orches-cords of the winner's choice, and 15 ade no rules, regulations, entry fees or red the Boston Garden on Sunday, June 15 at under Arthur Fiedler with Jesus Maria e Musiquiz, the orchestra will present an ites, to be chosen by ballot. And all this which goes to the Pension Fund of the ler are each day publishing the latest news l as details of the enormous interest that unusual event. Your local record dealer

Then why have you been drafted? Only for the pleasant purpose of telling your friends about the Musiquiz and perhaps coming down to the Boston Garden yourself on June 15 to win one of those prizes.

Musiquizically yours,

Rudolph Elie. Jr.

Musiquiz Editor
Boston Herald

MUSIQUIZ SURPRISES PROMISED FOR SUNDAY

By RUDOLPH ELIE, JR.

While Arthur Fiedler and the Pops orchestra were busy tucking new Musiquiz surprises up their sleeves for next Sunday night's keenly anticipated event in the Boston Gar- first batch of 200 elimination winners of the first Herald Musiquiz in tomorrow's Herald.

On the heels of the official announcement yesterday by the Boston running- t color- entators, s chair- Musiquiz Garden l office undreds ues Bill the fea- l agree vn late famous How- Fiedler, en) ared from the balcony of the Sunday night in the Boston the second Herald Musiquiz.

INTEREST IN SYMPHONY AROUSED BY MUSIQUIZ

By RUDOLPH ELIE, JR.

As if it were not the case even without such an absorbing musical event as the Herald Musiquiz to stir up even greater interest, the question of what goes on in the inner circle of Boston Symphony musicians has long been the subject of considerable—and pardonable— curiosity in the minds of music-lovers.

Holding down as he does one of the most interesting as well as one of the most taxing and difficult tasks in the world, a symphony musician invariably commands the interest of all who meet him socially, and he is forthwith cornered and pommelled with such questions as "what is Dr. Koussevitzky really like?" and "does Arthur Fiedler arrange all the Pops programs?" and "what do you think about when you are not actually playing?"

So far as the last question is concerned, most of them like to recall the famous but apocryphal tale of the kettle drummer who, finding during a rehearsal that he had a 125 measure rest, went down to the bar, had a glass of beer, returned to his post on the 124th measure, thumped out a thunderous thump on scheduled time and discovered to his horror that the orchestra was now rehearsing another piece.

Actually, however, charming raconteurs though they are, most symphony musicians have the exasperating facility of seeming to tell all while conveying nothing. Thus it is most of us have to depend on such disarming events as the orchestra's spontaneous observation of the 50th anniversary of one of its members' association with the orchestra to realize how sincere they are.

Joseph Mann came to the orchestra in 1891 as a trumpet player. As one season drifted into another, he became increasingly popular and, when he retired some years ago, he was appointed assistant to chief librarian Leslie Rogers. Possessing a fine hand, a profound knowledge of musical theory and a thorough understanding of orchestral problems, he was given the most responsible and exacting task of preparing instrumental parts for performance.

When in 1938, just before the performance of a new work by Sibelius, it was discovered that four of the most important orchestral parts were missing, it was Joseph Mann's task to decode the all but illegible music which was radioed by Sibelius from Helsinki. He worked all night to do it, but the parts were on the stands in the morning, and the performance went off as scheduled.

Well, last week during a pause in the Pops rehearsal, Arthur Fiedler shouted for Mr. Mann. Sensing a dressing down for making a tiny error in copying, he came to the stage. As he entered, he was further embarrassed to see the entire orchestra rise. It looked pretty bad for Mr. Mann. Up stepped the five official spokesmen of the orchestra, headed by Joseph Singer. It looked even worse for Mr. Mann. They handed him a paper. He unfolded it nervously. "Pay to the order of Joseph Mann . . ." it read. Then they all went out and had their pictures taken.

Musiquiz tickets are now available at practically all Victor record dealers at 25 cents each. The Musiquiz benefits the Pension Fund of the Boston Symphony orchestra, of course, but it also promises two evenings (June 15 and June 22) of the best musical entertainment ever held in Boston as well as a general musical questionnaire in which all people may participate for 29 splendid musical prizes. Watch this column daily for further news and developments in the popular balloting to determine the all-time Pops favorite.

MORNING AND SUNDAY

THE BOSTON HERALD

BY THE BOSTON HERALD TRAVELER CORPORATION

EVENING

Boston Traveler

IN THE COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS

Dear Friend:

You've been drafted----but don't be alarmed!

It's not into the A.R.P., the R.A.F. or the C.E.P., or any other branch or service. You've simply been drafted---with your permission, of course---as a word-of-mouth supporter of the most unusual, entertaining and worthwhile musical event in the history of Boston---the Boston Herald Musiquiz to benefit the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

You know all about the world-famous Boston Herald Bookfair, which each autumn attracts thousands of people to the Boston Garden to hear the world's most distinguished authors and literary people.

Well, The Herald Musiquiz is a fascinating musical contest in which everybody, regardless of age or class, or anything may participate, with a wonderful list of musical prizes for the winners.

For instance, the first prize is a magnificent $275 Victor radio-phonograph with $50 worth of Victor records of the winner's choice. The second prize is a trip to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival of $150 in cash; the third prize a $100 pair of seats to the regular 24 Saturday night concerts of the Boston Symphony orchestra; the fourth $50 worth of Victor records of the winner's choice, and 15 additional musical prizes. Yet there are no rules, regulations, entry fees or red tape whatever!

Now the first Musiquiz takes place at the Boston Garden on Sunday, June 15 at 8 P.M. with the Boston Pops orchestra under Arthur Fiedler with Jesus Maria Sanroma as piano soloist. Prior to the Musiquiz, the orchestra will present an hour's concert of all-time Pops favorites, to be chosen by ballot. And all this for 25 cents admission---every cent of which goes to the Pension Fund of the Boston Symphony orchestra!

The Boston Herald and the Boston Traveler are each day publishing the latest news and features about the Musiquiz as well as details of the enormous interest that has already been evidence in this most unusual event. Your local record dealer also can keep you posted.

Then why have you been drafted? Only for the pleasant purpose of telling your friends about the Musiquiz and perhaps coming down to the Boston Garden yourself on June 15 to win one of those prizes.

Musiquizically yours,

Rudolph Elie. Jr.

Musiquiz Editor
Boston Herald

163

GOOD NEIGHBOR POLICY—Carmen Amaya, sensational Spanish Flamenco dancer now appearing on the Ritz Roof, selling tickets for the Second Herald Musiquiz to Eunice Kennedy and Joseph P. Kennedy, Jr., son and daughter of Joseph P. Kennedy, former U. S. Ambassador to England.

CUNNINGHAM AS SOLOIST IN MUSIQUIZ TOMORROW

By RUDOLPH ELIE, Jr.

Springing from his piano stool to defend the honor of the Cunninghams to the last crashing chord of the seventh, Bill Cunningham, celebrated columnist, humorist and amateur pianist, who will act as chairman at the second Herald Musiquiz tomorrow night in the Boston Garden, yesterday hurled a musical challenge at Arthur Fiedler and the Pops orchestra to a duel to the death, using "Smoke Gets in Your Eye" at 16 beats to the bar.

Resulting from a remark in jest by Arthur Fiedler, Bill's good friend, who said he'd be "honored to be the first to shake his hand after the performance of whatever he chose

(Continued on Page Thirteen)

Cunningham's Challenge

CLASS OF SERVICE
This is a full-rate Telegram or Cable-gram unless its de-ferred character is in-dicated by a suitable symbol above or pre-ceding the address.

WESTERN UNION

SYMBOLS
DL=Day Letter
NT=Overnight Telegram
LC=Deferred Cable
NLT=Cable Night Letter
Ship Radiogram

N. S. WHITE, PRESIDENT
NEWCOMB CARLTON, CHAIRMAN OF THE BOARD
J. C. WILLEVER, FIRST VICE-PRESIDENT

The filing time shown in the date line on telegrams and day letters is STANDARD TIME at point of origin. Time of receipt is STANDARD TIME at point of destination

BY218 DPR COLLECT=NBN NEWYORK NY 19 226P
GEORGE MINOT=
1941 JUN 19 PM 3 24
:MANAGING EDITOR THE BOSTON HERALD DSH=

JUST SAW TODAYS HERALD. TELL ARTHUR FIEDLER, I HEREWITH CHALLENGE HIS ENTIRE ORCHESTRA, OR ANY PORTION THEREOF, TO A ONE ROUND CHAMPIONSHIP BATTLE IN THE HERALD MUSIQUIZ AT THE BOSTON GARDEN SUNDAY NIGHT. MY WEAPON, THE PIANO OR ELECTRICAL ORGAN, THE PIECE "SMOKE GETS IN YOUR EYES" IN THE ORIGINAL KEY OF E FLAT, NO HOLDS BARRED, MARQUIS OF METRONOME RULES TO APPLY AND IF EITHER FIGHTER IS KNOCKED DOWN, OTHER RETIRES TO A NEUTRAL CORNER IMMEDIATELY. REQUEST JESUS MARIA SANROMA IN MY CORNER, BUT OTHERWISE MR FIEDLER CAN WRITE HIS OWN TICKET. AS THEFELLOW SAID, I MAY NOT PLAY GOOD BUT I DO PLAY LOUD. HE'D BETTER HAVE HIS HORN TOOTERS AND FIDDLE SCRAPERS IN SHAPE FOR THIS ONE. BEST REGARDS=
:BILL CUNNINGHAM.

Cunningham Vows He'll Perform Solo in Musiquiz Tomorrow

(Continued from First Page)

to perform, no matter how he performed it," Bill challenged the entire Pops orchestra "or any portion thereof" to a one-round championship battle in E flat, no holds barred.

Cunningham requested the services of Jesus Maria Sanroma as his second but "otherwise," he said, "Mr. Fiedler can write his own ticket."

That Arthur Fiedler would do just that was indicated yesterday when The Herald conveyed Cunningham's challenge to him at his Commonwealth avenue apartment.

"My horn tooters and fiddle scrapers—as Bill puts it," Fiedler said, "have never been in better shape than they are right now. We will achieve our peak fighting trim tomorrow night at 8 o'clock and our morale is excellent.

COMFORT ASSURED

"The only thing that has us worried," Fiedler went on, "are Bill's tricky modulations. However, the Pops orchestra is pretty fast on its harmonic feet too, and provided Bill sticks to the Marquis of Metronome rules, as he says he will, we can promise a whirlwind concerto grosso."

More than that the popular Pops leader would not say, so just what is going to happen between the opening Pops concert and the Musiquiz session to be conducted by Neal O'Hara was anybody's guess. That musical fireworks would develop, however, was beyond question.

While the stars were thus issuing statements, Garden officials were completing all arrangements to provide the second Musiquiz audience with the coolest atmosphere and the pleasantest seating arrangements in town.

Noted for the excellence of its acoustics as well as the perfect sight lines it provides, the Garden is further distinguished by its even, comfortable temperature which is uninfluenced by outside conditions. A year-round temperature of 70 degrees is maintained at all times, and no matter what the thermometer may read, Musiquizzers may be unconditionally guaranteed comfort.

Tickets, on sale all day today at your neighborhood Victor record dealer as well as the Herald-Traveler, Symphony Hall, department store ticket agencies and the Boston Garden, have had a tremendous advance sale for the second Musiquiz, but the sponsors were positive in their statements that there would be plenty of room for all comers, even those arriving as late as 8 o'clock.

BRING YOUR PENCIL

No seats are reserved, excepting a handful for official guests, and the proceeds of the ticket sale (at 25 cents each) benefit solely the Pension Fund of the Symphony orchestra. The only rule is: bring your own pencil. Everybody is welcome, evn those who qualified at the first Musiquiz to enter the semi-finals, and no one is obligated to enter the Musiquiz part of the program. The one idea is musical fun. And 10,000 had the times of their lives last Sunday night!

With all the lights ahead being green for tomorrow night so far as both sponsors and Musiquiz audience were concerned, Symphony Hall judges released additional information concerning the Musiquiz balloting.

From the beginning it was evident that many of the Musiquizzers were nonplussed by all the Strausses. There were Richard and Johann and Johann Jr., and Eduard. As to which was which, many Musiquizzers were uncertain. However, one bright young man, putting down the right answer, wrote on the margin, "How'm I doin'?"

Another group of six or eight, evidently a little baffled by one of the questions, seemed to have overheard somebody whispering what they thought was the correct answer. At any rate, "The Dance of the Hours" came out on every one as "The Dance of the Owls."

Cesar Franck, composer of the great D minor symphony, was thought by a vast majority to be a French composer. He was, of course, one of the leaders of the French school and spent most of his life in Paris. Yet he was a Belgian.

Which if the three piano concertos was in one movement was an equally difficult question. Many were saved, however, by the fact that they were familiar with the Mendelssohn and the MacDowall, which left Liszt's "Todtentanz" as the only—and correct—choice.

REMEMBER NAME, ADDRESS

Unfortunately, a number of contestants omitted to place their names and addresses on their ballos. This always happens to a greater or lesser degree in every contest. In each case, the ballot was disqualified. Musiquizzers must, therefore, if they wish to win a place among the finalists to compete for the magnificent musical prizes, write their names on their ballots.

Anohtre point the judges brought was the fact that a great number of people answered MORE than they were asked. That is, if the title of the composition was asked, Musiquizzers supplied title, composer, his birthplace, age, sex, weight, height and any other oddments of information they could think of. This was interesting reading, but not in the least necessary.

The most important point, of course, is to go to the second Musiquiz tomorrow night. Once there, the main things are: 1—To secure your own ballot as you enter. 2—Write your name and address clearly upon it. 3—Fill it out as clearly and accurately as you can during the Musiquiz. 4—Place it in the receptacle marked "Drop Your Ballot Here" as you leave. And 5—Have a good time (As though you wouldn't in any case!)

MUSIQUIZ WINS PRAISE OF SALTONSTALL, TOBIN

By RUDOLPH ELIE, JR.

Official indorsement of state and city was given to the first Boston Herald Musiquiz being held in the Boston Garden tomorrow evening in letters sent yesterday by Gov. Saltonstall and Mayor Tobin to Robert B. Choate, assistant general manager of The Herald.

Taking place tomorrow in the Garden at 8 o'clock with Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops orchestra presenting a unique concert and musical questionnaire to benefit the Pension Fund of the orchestra, The Herald Musiquiz has unquestionably proved itself an irresistible magnet for music lovers throughout New England, a thought expressed in hundreds of letters besides those received from the governor and the mayor.

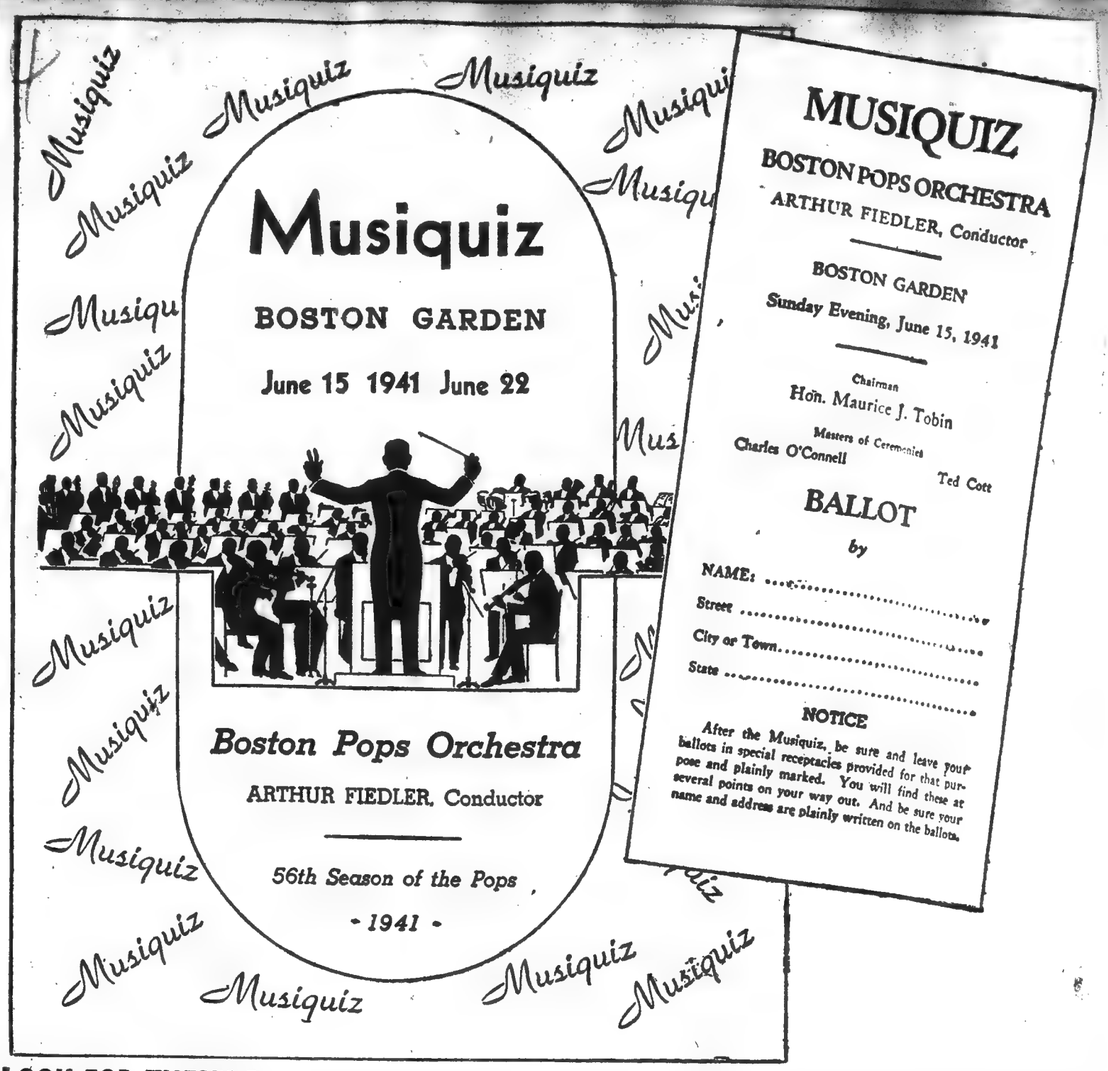
Gov. Saltonstall wrote:

"There is no institution in Boston which has contributed more to the intellectual and cultural life of this city than the Boston Symphony orchestra.

"I find it, therefore, a distinct pleasure to offer my wholehearted co-operation to help insure the success of the Boston Herald Musiquiz being held in the Bostoon Garden on June 15. . . .

"The idea of conducting such a sound and entertaining musical event," the Governor concludes, "strikes me a far step forward in bringing great music within the (price) range of every music lover, and I shall be surprised indeed if the Herald Musiquizzes are not hosts to record audiences on both occasions."

(Continued on Page Fourteen)



LOOK FOR THESE! Programs and Musiquiz ballots will be prominently placed on tables for all to obtain just inside the main entrances of the Boston Garden tomorrow night. Bring your pencil, get your program and ballot as you enter, and you'll have the most entertaining musical evening with the Boston Pops orchestra it's possible to have.

Gov. Saltonstall, Mayor Tobin Indorse Musiquiz Contest

(Continued from First Page)

Reflecting an equally enthusiastic and sincere viewpoint was the Mayor's letter. Mayor Tobin, incidentally, has agreed to act as chairman of the Herald Musiquiz, and will personally introduce Arthur Fiedler, the enormously popular conductor of the Pops orchestra, as well as Jesus Maria Sanroma, the distinguished piano soloist on the program; Ted Cott and Charles O'Connell, who will act as quizzers and masters of ceremonies, and all the other distinguished guests of honor.

The Mayor's letter was as follows:

"Having followed the interesting daily accounts in the Herald of the Boston Herald Musiquizzes to be held in the Boston Garden on June 15 and 22 with the Boston Pops orchestra performing under Arthur Fiedler to benefit the Pension Fund of the Boston Symphony orchestra, and realizing, as I do, the great asset we of the city of Boston have in such a magnificient musical institution, I want to convey my wishes for a most successful conclusion of the events.

"At the same time," the Mayor's letter continued, "I should be honored to lend whatever assistance I can to guarantee the success of such a worthy venture. If I can be of assistance, please do not hesitate to call upon me at any time."

While similiar letters from hundreds of distinguished Bostonians were pouring into The Herald office, final arrangements for the Musiquiz were completed and the Boston Garden was gleaming and spotless in preparation for the record crowds. The novel seating plan for the orchestra had long since been completed and tested in every conceivable manner to absolutely guarantee perfect sight and sound lines for every person planning to attend.

In a dress rehearsal yesterday, it was found that every seat was a "best" seat, so no one need for a moment be swerved from his plans to attend the Musiquiz through the belief that he will be unable to see and hear perfectly from any point in the Garden. In addition to the care that has been taken in making every seat the best seat in the house, the Garden has taken every precaution to provide perfect lighting and has, to boot, gone quite overboard in making arrangements for striking and novel effects to be used during the concert which preceeds the Musiquiz.

Other appointments to insure the comfort and convenience of the Musiquiz audience have likewise been secured.

While Musiquizzers now are fully cognizant of all the various aspects to the Musiquiz itself—and those who are not are coming anyhow for the sheer spectacle and musical entertainment—it is being not redundant to point out once again how the ballots are being handled.

Everyone who enters the Garden tomorrow night will see huge tables just beyond the ticket takers. Carefully attended by the Garden's highly-trained corps of ushers, the tables will be loaded with Musiquiz ballots, provided free of charge by The Herald for all who wish them.

Musiquizzers must help themselves to these ballots. Signs will be in plain view pointing to them, and no one can possibly miss seeing them.

Besides the Musiquiz ballots being supplied by The Herald, beautiful souvenir programs are being provided by the Pops orchestra, and these, too, will be in plain sight on the ballot tables near the entrances. The program will contain many interesting sidelights on the conductor, the soloist and the musicians and also the complete program of the second Musiquiz being held the following Sunday night in exactly the same manner as the first Musiquiz tomorrow night.

TICKETS ON SALE TODAY

Contestants still have a whole day in which to prepare for the Musiquiz if they wish, but such preparation is not by any means required tor record dealers are co-operating in order to enjoy the Musiquiz. Vic- splendidly in this phase of the Msiquiz, and can supply many interesting tips of great benefit to contestants.

Tickets will be on sale at your neighborhood Victor record dealer, Symphony Hall, the Herald-Traveler building and the Boston Garden box office all day today at 25 cents each, monies will do all the rest!

165

STARS OF HERALD MUSIQUIZ—Arthur Fiedler, conductor of Pops orchestra; Jesus M. Sanroma, featured piano soloist; Charles O'Connell, music director of RCA-Victor, and master of ceremonies, and Ted Cott, popular radio musiquizzer, and the other master of ceremonies at Boston Garden tonight.

Herald's First Musiquiz Slated at Garden Tonight

(Continued from First Page)

weather, the season of the year, the unsurpassed performance records of the Pops orchestra, the popularity of Arthur Fiedler and Jesus Maria Sanroma as well as that of Ted Cott and Charles O'Connell who are acting as masters of ceremonies and all the other factors which are a delight to professional prognosticators.

READY FOR THRONG

Following a final and complete check-up of the Garden plans and arrangements last night, Supt. Robert Murphy of the Garden announced that his staff was groomed to perfection to take care of a vast capacity audience.

"The Musiquiz," he said, "is an event every one of us believes will establish a new high mark for popular entertainment in Boston. It combines the irresistible attraction of a concert by an immensely popular orchestra and a contest conducted by two very popular masters of ceremonies, one famous for his achievements in the world of the music and the other noted for his fun making on his radio quiz.

"Our ticket office will be open all day today from 10 o'clock on to serve last-minute ticket purchasers, and the Garden doors will be open at 6:30.

"The stage from where the orchestra will play and from which Mayor Tobin, Ted Cott and Charles O'Connell will conduct the Musiquiz is in the exact center of the garden so that every person, wherever seated, will be able to see and hear everything. Considering that there are 17,800 seats, that means something!

"Our own sound experts," Mr. Murphy continued, "have had the close working co-operation of the RCA engineering staff to make certain that the softest violin tones will be carried to every seat in the Garden.

"We have ready a large force of ushers, Boston and Garden police and watchmen to assure the complete comfort, convenience and safety of every person and to help everyone find a seat as easily as possible.

POPULAR CAUSE

"The knowledge that all the proceeds of the Musiquizzes at the Boston Garden tonight and next Sunday night," Mr. Murphy concluded, "will go to the Pension Fund of the Boston Symphony orchestra, has made the appeal all the more popular, and we believe that the attendance will more than justify the confidence of all who have striven to make the Musiquizzes the greatest success the musical world has ever seen."

Railroads and airlines reported that large crowds were making arrangements to come to the Musiquiz from all points in New England. Musiquiz parties have been organized in the dozens of towns and cities within a 20-mile radius of the Garden which together make Boston a community of more than 2,000,000 people.

Parties of school children, students, music clubs and individuals were reported from Dorchester, Jamaica Plain, Quincy, Arlington, Winchester, Malden, Somerville, Cambridge, Brookline, Newton, Allston, Medford, Everett, Lynn and Belmont, while the American Airlines announced it was flying one large group from Hartford, Ct.

Still paramount in the minds of the thousands who plan to attend the Musiquiz tonight was the question: "What do we have to do besides bring a pencil?"

WHAT TO REMEMBER

Actually, there are but three things that Musiquizzers have to bear in mind.

First, they should help themselves to one of the Herald Musiquiz ballots. These will be in plain view on tables just inside the main entrances to the Garden. Signs will indicate where they are, or, if you miss them, ask an usher.

Second, Musiquizzers must deposit their own ballots into the receptacles provided for the purpose when the Musiquiz is over. They must, of course, sign their names and addresses on the ballots. These receptacles will be in broad view all through the Garden, and will also be plainly marked with signs.

Third, Musiquizzers and music-lovers alike, whether they are coming to listen to the music, watch the fun or enter the contest, should help themselves to a souvenir program which contains a number of fascinating articles on the Musiquiz and the musicians and soloists besides the complete program for both Musiquizzes. These will be on tables with the ballots.

Yet it must be remembered that no one is in any way obligated to do anything. No one has to enter the contest if he doesn't want to; Musiquizzers can listen to the music and answer some of the questions, all of the questions or none of the questions. They can come merely as spectators—as, indeed, thousands will. There are no "additional charges" whatever. The original 25 cent charge covers everything but a pencil. Ballots, programs, concert, Musiquiz, spectacle, special lighting effects and absolutely everything else is included in the initial charge.

QUESTIONS SIMPLE

It is by no means necessary to be a music-lover or a professional musician to enjoy the show. Many hundreds of people are coming who have never before heard a symphony orchestra, let alone seen one in action Nor is it in the least necessary to be a cultivated musical person to have a chance to place in the Musiquiz. Absolutely no "trick" or difficult technical questions will be asked, and everybody has a chance to become eligible for the finals.

All those who turn in winning ballots will become eligible for the finals, the minimum being 200 people. That is, if one person turns in a perfect paper, 199 additional winners will be selected according to merit. On the other hand, if 500 turn in perfect papers, all 500 will be eligible for the finals.

The names of the first elimination winners will be printed in the Herald as soon as possible after the first Musiquiz. Whether you find your name there or not, you can go to the second Musiquiz next Sunday night and try again. The fact that you find yourself eligible certainly doesn't prevent you from enjoying the second Musiquiz.

While the Victor records of the Boston Symphony orchestra and the Boston Pops orchestra contain all the clues to the questions to be asked, no recordings whatever will be used at the Musiquiz. All the musical examples as well as the opening concert will be played by the Boston Pops orchestra under Arthur Fiedler.

Aside from all of these considerations, though, the facts which keep emerging are these: The Herald Musiquiz is a musical entertainment open to all comers, capable of being enjoyed by all people of all ages, having no restrictions, regulations, obligations, extra charges or red tape of any kind, and guaranteed to be the most wholesome and amusing evening's entertainment ever devised. And our final word is, COME AND SEE!

The Program

Besides the encores with which Arthur Fiedler and the Pops orchestra is always prodigal, the concert program for the first Musiquiz in the Boston Garden to benefit the Pension Fund of the Boston Symphony orchestra is as follows:

"Pomp and Circumstance"..Elgar
"Merry Wives of Windsor" overture ..... Nicolai
March-Scherzo from "Pathetic Symphony" Tschaikovsky
"Rhapsody in Blue".....Gershwin, (Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist)

The Prizes

FIRST—An RCA-Victor model 301 radio-Phonograph console, value $275 AND $50 worth of Victor records of the winner's choice.
SECOND—A de luxe trip for two to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, value $150. (Convertible to cash if the winner elects.)
THIRD—A pair of tickets to the 24 regular concerts of the Boston Symphony orchestra, value $100.
FOURTH—A winner's choice of $50 worth of Victor records.
FIFTH TO FOURTEENTH (INCLUSIVE)—A winner's choice of $10 worth of Victor records.
FIFTEENTH TO TWENTY-NINTH (INCLUSIVE)—A winner's choice of $5 worth of Victor records.

FIRST HERALD MUSIQUIZ AT THE GARDEN TONIGHT

By RUDOLPH ELIE, Jr.

Prepared to present the first Herald Musiquiz with the Boston Pops orchestra under Arthur Fiedler in the Boston Garden tonight at 8 o'clock, the Garden and Symphony Hall officials had completed arrangements to handle the largest crowd of music-lovers from all over New England ever assembled in one place.

Viewed as without parallel in the history of mass entertainment, aside from its musical aspects, the Musiquiz has brought astonished response from the nation's top entertainment executives who are coming to Boston tonight to see with their own eyes the phenomenon of thousands of people being brought out to hear a crack symphony orchestra and to take part in the first mass musical quiz ever conducted.

Yet that is exactly what will happen tonight according to experts who have analyzed the unheard-of advance sale of tickets (at 25 cents each, and unreserved at that), the

(Continued on Page Nineteen)

THUMBNAIL SKETCH OF HERALD MUSIQUIZ

THE EVENT:
The Boston Herald Musiquiz

THE DATE:
Tonight

THE PLACE:
Boston Garden

THE TIME:
8 o'clock

THE PRICE:
25 cents

THE SEATS:
Unreserved

THE PURPOSE:
To benefit the Pension Fund of the Boston Symphony orchestra

THE PERFORMERS:
The Boston Pops orchestra under Arthur Fiedler and Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist.

THE CHAIRMAN:
Mayor Maurice J. Tobin

THE MASTERS OF CEREMONIES:
Ted Cott and Charles O'Connell

THE SPONSORS:
The Boston Herald, the Boston Symphony orchestra, RCA-Victor and your neighborhood Victor record dealer

THE IDEA:
Musical entertainment

THE RULES:
None

166

COMFORT, FUN PROMISED AT TONIGHT'S MUSIQUIZ

By RUDOLPH ELIE, JR.

"The coolest place in town tonight will be the Boston Garden."

With these emphatic words, Walter A. Brown, general manager of the huge air-conditioned auditorium, today echoed the sentiments of the vast audience of Musiquizzers which will be on hand tonight to take part in the second of the highly entertaining musical events sponsored by The Herald to benefit the pension fund of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

Comparing the Garden to an enormous underground chamber which, as everybody knows, is always the coolest place during a warm spell, Brown said "every effort has been made and will be made to maintain the temperature at a solid 70 degrees, regardless of outside conditions.

"All you have to do," Brown said, "is to put on as good a show as

(Continued on Page Eighteen)

Musiquiz Tonight At Boston Garden

Pops Orchestra Concert and Contest—All Seats 25 cents—Boston Garden Ticket Office Open All Day Sunday—Doors Open 6:30 P.M.—Concert Starts at 8 P.M.

Cool Comfort, Fun Promised At Tonight's Herald Musiquiz

(Continued from First Page)

you did last week and let us take care of the temperature. I'm here to tell you that Mark Twain was wrong when he said 'everybody talks about the weather but nobody does anything about it.' The Garden has been doing something about the weather for years."

Taking him at his word, the sponsors of the second Herald Musiquiz summed up the elements of their program and were satisfied that they were presenting the biggest 25 cents worth of musical entertainment ever offered.

In the first place, there is the Boston Pops orchestra, a world-famous organization which needs no further encomiums in these columns. Attracting as it does more than 120,000 persons from all parts of the nation during its season—which means a "sold-out" sign up every night—the orchestra has achieved a peak of virtuosity and renown untouched by any other orchestra in the world. Its repertory consists of 500 pieces, many of them never performed by any other major symphony orchestra, and its Victor records have been on the classical hit parade for years.

In the second place there's Arthur Fiedler, its conductor. His undeniable qualities of musicianship and leadership aside, few conductors have ever more completely captured the fancy of the public. Unassuming and unspoiled, he has a knack for making a program that everybody likes and then giving it a verve and a lift which instantly captures the fancy of the audience.

Then there's Jesus Maria Sanroma, known off the record as "Choo-Choo." Official pianist of the Boston Symphony orchestra, Sanroma is a one-man good neighbor conference besides being one of the most brilliant piano virtuosi of the day. Famous for his atrocious puns, his quick wit, his ability to do anything on a piano — including "The Blue Danube" with his feet—he has long been a sensational figure in the world of music, and certainly has as wide a range of fans as any musician now living.

And then Bill Cunningham. Nationally-known columnist, sportswriter, speaker, humorist and occasional pianist and organist, Bill will act as chairman at the second Musiquiz tonight, and is willing, to boot, to engage in a free-for-duel with the Boston Pops orchestra or any portion thereof, as he puts it, in the key of E flat.

It came about when his friend Fiedler cast a whimsical aspersion on his pianistic prowess, and Bill forthwith whipped out his gage, hurled it onto the conductor's stand, and challenged the orchestra to a duel with "Smoke Gets in Your Eyes."

Exactly what is going to happen in the Garden tonight as a result is anybody's guess, but both camps issued stirring communiques, stating they were in top form and spoiling for battle. So while Fiedler honed his baton to a razor point, Bill was having his piano tuned to an inch of its life, and no odds were being quoted at a late hour last night. There were hints Sanroma might take up Bill's challenge.

But such goings-on are still a small part of the second Musiquiz program.

NEAL O'HARA REFEREE

Acting as the all-important master of ceremonies is Neal O'Hara, on a par with Bill Cunningham as a journalistic tycoon. The famous Traveler columnist, humorist and speaker has long since found national prominence with his syndicated column "Take It From Me," which consists of curious snatches of lore, inside news, and odd bits of vastly entertaining information.

Upon O'Hara will fall the job of asking the Musiquiz questions, refereeing the Cunningham-Pops bout, keeping the Musiquiz running smoothly and the audience alert. That he would do so was beyond any question in the minds of his thousands of admirers today.

Speaking for the sponsors is Charles O'Connell, musical director of RCA-Victor. Gaining hundreds of friends last week with his winning manner and his authoritative background, O'Connell will again tell what the Musiquiz means to music.

Yet even these personalities are but a part of the Musiquiz spectacle!

The main course, naturally, is the concert itself. This consists of an hour's concert of established Pops favorites, chosen by popular ballot in the recent Herald voting.

BRING YOUR PENCIL

Winning the vote by a wide margin was Ravel's "Bolero." The work will consequently appear as the principal piece on the program. Besides the encores which Fiedler is famous for, the rest of the program lists Sousa's "Stars and Stripes Forever" and Gershwin's Concerto in F with Sanroma as pianist.

Following the concert will come the Musiquiz itself. Everybody with a pencil can take part in this original and entertaining event.

Everyone who enters the Garden may help himself to a Musiquiz ballot provided free of charge by The Herald. After the concert is over, O'Hara will ask questions and all those who know the answers may indicate them on the Musiquiz ballots, which are so arranged that an "X" or check mark in the proper place is usually sufficient. Other questions are of an identification nature, and these questions will be illustrated musically by the orchestra.

The whole proceedure is so simple that a child can take part—as indeed, hundreds did last week.

The one point to bear in mind is that your name and address must be placed in the proper space on the ballot and that you must file your own ballot in the proper receptacles which are posted throughout the Garden.

The Program

"Stars and Stripes Forever"...Sousa
Bolero .....Ravel
Concerto in F.....Gershwin
(Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist)

The Prizes

FIRST—An RCA-Victor model 301 radio-Phonograph console, value $275 AND $50 worth of Victor records of the winner's choice.
SECOND—A de luxe trip for two to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, value $150. (Convertible to cash if the winner elects.)
THIRD—A pair of tickets to the 24 regular concerts of the Boston Symphony orchestra, value $100.
FOURTH—A winner's choice of $50 worth of Victor records.
FIFTH TO FOURTEENTH (INCLUSIVE)—A winner's choice of $10 worth of Victor records.
FIFTEENTH TO TWENTY-NINTH (INCLUSIVE)—A winner's choice of $5 worth of Victor records.

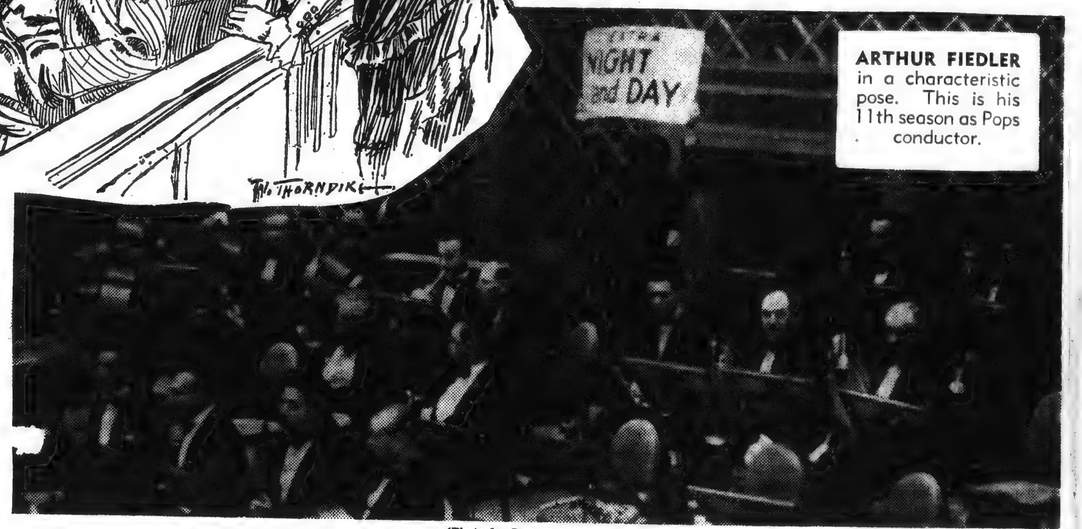
CAUGHT IN THE ACT—These pencil sketches by Martha Burnham, made on the spot during last Sunday night's Musiquiz, have captured much of the flavor of the entertaining events. The central figure is Arthur Fiedler in a characteristic pose. Taking Ted Cott's place tonight is Neal O'Hara, while Bill Cunningham will be the chairman. Tonight's Musiquiz begins at 8 o'clock.

Favorite Melodies in Herald Musiquiz Poll

(Photo by John B. Sanroma)

"WHAT'S THE SCORE?", ask Arthur Fiedler, Ignaz Paderewski, and Jesus Sanroma during the Pops' seventh inning.

NAUGHTY-TWO—Between Boston's 15 or 20 colleges, the Pops are kept pretty busy, with Harvard nights and so forth. Here's an old drawing of the Harvard class of '02 absorbing music among other things. Pipe the promtrotter mooning at the bustled belle.



ARTHUR FIEDLER in a characteristic pose. This is his 11th season as Pops conductor.

(Photo by John B. Sanroma)

PROGRAMS, PLUS. The little extras which form an important part of the colorful career of Boston symphony have endeared the Popular Concerts to three generations of music lovers, even after the rough young Pops were pulled out from under piled up tables and sobered considerably.

Musical Programs at Boston Garden On June 15 and 22 Suited to the Public's Wishes Promise Interesting Feature at Which Audience Will Contest for Valuable Awards

By Rudolph Elie, Jr.

Before the Gay Nineties class in Pops history comes to order, we must make our first report on the returns of last Sunday's initial announcement of The Boston Herald Musiquiz, to be held at the Boston Garden on Sunday night, June 15.

So far, Ravel's "Bolero" is far and away at the top of the balloting, closely followed by Handel's "Largo," Gershwin's "Rhapsody in Blue" (which will be played anyhow), and Elgar's "Pomp and Circumstance."

Each mail brings a heavier stack of ballots; if you haven't yet voted for your idea of the all-time Pops favorite, you'd better send in your ballot right now. In the mean time, watch for further results of the balloting in these columns. And now about the Pops, that phenomenon of musical history:

In the beginning there was the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The story goes that the Pops came about four years later, because Henry Lee Higginson, the orchestra's venerable founder, didn't like to see his musicians sitting around all summer long vegetating, as it were, if indeed they didn't fly the coop entirely, never to return.

At any rate, in the spring of 1885, Wilhelm Gericke, the orchestra's second conductor, who became largely responsible for establishing its traditions, turned his musicians over to the leadership of Adolf Neunendorff in the old Tremont street Music Hall. With Wagner's overture to the "Flying Dutchman," there commenced a Boston tradition now as sacred as the bean, the cod and the Cabots.

From the very first, the Pops (or Popular Concerts as they were known for the first 10 minutes) had a tendency to be hilarious affairs attended, as Gericke put it, by "tobacco and other physical solaces." Although Neunendorff strove to rivet his Pops audiences to their hard-backed chairs with Wagner, Hadyn, Beethoven and Mozart, the minute he turned his back, the audience would cross its beer glasses and resume physical solace.

POPS TOOK HOLD

A programmatic about-face ensued, and Wagner was promptly replaced by E. Geise's "Forget-me-not"; Mozart was sent scurrying by Moses (who wrote "Our Little Nestlings,"); Beethoven ducked for cover, from Bial's "Shooting Star Galop" and Haydn retreated fron Gungl, whose masterpiece "Dreams on the Ocean" no living person remembers. Be that as it may, the Pops took fast hold and in their second year became nightly affairs where in their first, they were tentatively offered but three times a week.

It didn't take college students long to discover the Pops, either. Those of us who go to the Pops today and see swarms of them gently tippling a Pop punch to the off beats of Ravel's "Bolero" find it hard to believe their legendary activities of, say, the late '80s. Done up in turtle neck sweaters and button shoes, the undergraduates of former days seem to have been intent on seeing if they could pile the tables high enough to reach the ceiling of the old Music Hall, for what purpose not even the youngest can now remember.

POPS CALLED COPS

They almost succeeded on one celebrated night in June until one of the more realistic of them perceived constables issuing from under the stage, where they had been inspecting the bar-room (purely in the line of duty) which was there located. How to get the tables down turned out to be more of a problem for the managers than how to get them up was to the students.

College men in those days practically never went anywhere except in snake-dance formation, especially to more or less glamorous affairs like the Pops. They never arrived at them consequently in any other way, and great was the confusion thereof both in the Hall and along Tremont Street. Talk about traffic jams in 1941!

On such evenings the Music Hall posted a number of extra constables in the bar-room in case a table-piling episode developed beyond five tiers high or in case, as was also the custom, the students departed after the concert with tables, chairs, waiter's trays and other knick-knacks.

There is one school of thought which deplores such activities. But we, who have been examining the incunabula of the days, must needs bring forth extenuating circumstances. It is our theory that the boys were inspired—and justly—by the lyric outbursts of the current advertisements in the program, the chiefest of which we forthwith print:

HINDA! HINDA!

I smoke none but the Hinda,
They are delightfully delicious
To all tastes that are capricious;
Smoke none but the Hinda,
Fragrant Hinda! Pure Hinda!
For sale everywhere at ten ($.10) cents straight.

Ah, well! By 1905, however, the Pops had lost much of their early exuberance. There was no lack of gayety or glamour, or indeed fol-de-rol, but Pops audiences commenced to realize that the music was after all the main attraction and physical solaces secondary. This state of affairs came about naturally enough, but behind the scenes there was the concerted efforts of the Pops conductors, who had been waging an unperceived campaign to enlighten their audiences.

While a duet for hand bells or the Imperial Banjo Quartet (which possesses a reputation second to none in any country—every number we render is a gem) was sufficient unto the musical day of 1885, by 1905 the musical tastes had subtly changed. Still present on the program of the Pops were the galops, reveries and morceaux de salon, but in diminished quantity.

Beethoven again began to appear; Mozart caught up with and anihilated Moses; even dark-horse Bach overtook Conradi's "War Rockets" and left it gasping on the back stretch. The trend to classical music developed with increasing potency right up to the 20's. Then the dreary days of prohibition set in. Physical solace was no more, unless a bottle of sarsaparilla deserves that encomium, and even Lady Nicotine lost her allure.

CLASSICS ON TOP

Faced with this gloomy prospect, Agide Jacchia turned more than ever to classical literature. After all, what was the use of playing the "Comic Tattoo" when you couldn't do the pre-prohibition version of a whoops-a-daisy with a beer glass when you got to the refrain? Astonishingly enough, however, Jacchia won thousands of new friends of classical music; must of the present-day classical favorites got their "P" during prohibition. The Pops achieved their prohibition peak with the three-year term of Alfredo Casella, whose genius for program-building almost made up for the lack of draughts of the nut-brown. Then in 1930 Arthur Fiedler, who all but grew up with the orchestra, took over.

What happened then is too recent history for re-statement here. His unerring knack for making a program that was at once musicianly and popular, classical and novel, immediately established the Pops aas the most celebrated popular concert in all the world. His dynamic personality at once caught the imagination of the public, while his compelling leadership of the orchestra kept the Symphony musicians at the peak form of their regular season. And when prohibition bit the dust in 1933 the Pops came into their own again. It is an unusually terrible night outside nowadays that Symphony Hall is not sold out to the statues.

Last year more than 120,000 persons heard the Pops in two months. The Pops orchestra gave something like two dozen benefits, Lord knows how many college nights, presented heaven knows how many young and deserving solo artists, and turned people away in droves every time it gave a request night, gay nineties night, old-timers' night, or presented Jesus Maria Sanroma in George Gershwin's "Rhapsody in Blue."

Its Victor records are sold all over the world; Mr. Fiedler gets letters of recording-requests from British soldiers in Egypt and bomb shelter workers in London. Consisting as it does of nearly 500 time-tested compositions, Mr. Fiedler's repertory is by all odds unique in the musical world. No other orchestra plays them, let alone records them, so the Boston Pops orchestra has a corner of a market it has no danger of ever losing. In short, the Boston Pops orchestra under Arthur Fiedler holds a place of eminence in the world of music and an affection in the hearts of all Bostonians that is nothing short of astounding.

Small wonder then that the Boston Herald Musiquiz with the Boston Pops orchestra has, in the short week since its announcement, brought forth an unprecedented response. It's not our intention to cram the details into this article; suffice it to say that the Boston Herald Musiquizzes will be held in the Boston Garden on the Sunday nights of June 15 and June 22; that the 25-cent admission charge goes straight into the Pension Fund of the Boston Symphony orchestra; that there are 29 magnificent prizes and musical fun and entertainment for all. Further details may be found daily in the Herald and Traveler or may be secured from your neighborhood Victor record dealer. And don't forget to vote for the all-time Pops favorite!

POINTS TO REMEMBER ABOUT THE BOSTON HERALD MUSIQUIZ

The Boston Herald Musiquiz is a concert by the Boston Pops orchestra under Arthur Fiedler to be followed by a general musical questionnaire.

It is open to all comers.

There are no "rules and regulations."

There is no contest entrance fee; one 25-cent admission covers everything but a pencil.

There will be two Musiquizzes: Sunday, June 15 and Sunday, June 22 at 8 P. M.

Seats are not reserved.

The Musiquiz audience may participate in either or both Musiquizzes.

No one is obliged to enter the contest.

The questions will not be technical; every music-lover has a winner's chance.

The prizes total $800 in value.

The primary idea is musical entertainment.

The proceeds benefit the Pension Fund of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

(See List of Ticket Sales Offices in News Section)

The Boston Herald, Boston, Mass.

BOSTON HERALD MUSIQUIZ EDITOR:

I vote for..... by.....
(name of composition) (composer)

as the all-time Pops favorite, and request that it be included on one of the programs of The Boston Herald Musiquizes to be held in the Boston Garden on the nights of June 15 and 22.

Please send me ( ) Sample Blanks, which will contain a complete list of Boston Pops and Boston Symphony Orchestra Victor Red Seal Records.

Name .....
(Please Print)

Street .....

City ..... State .....

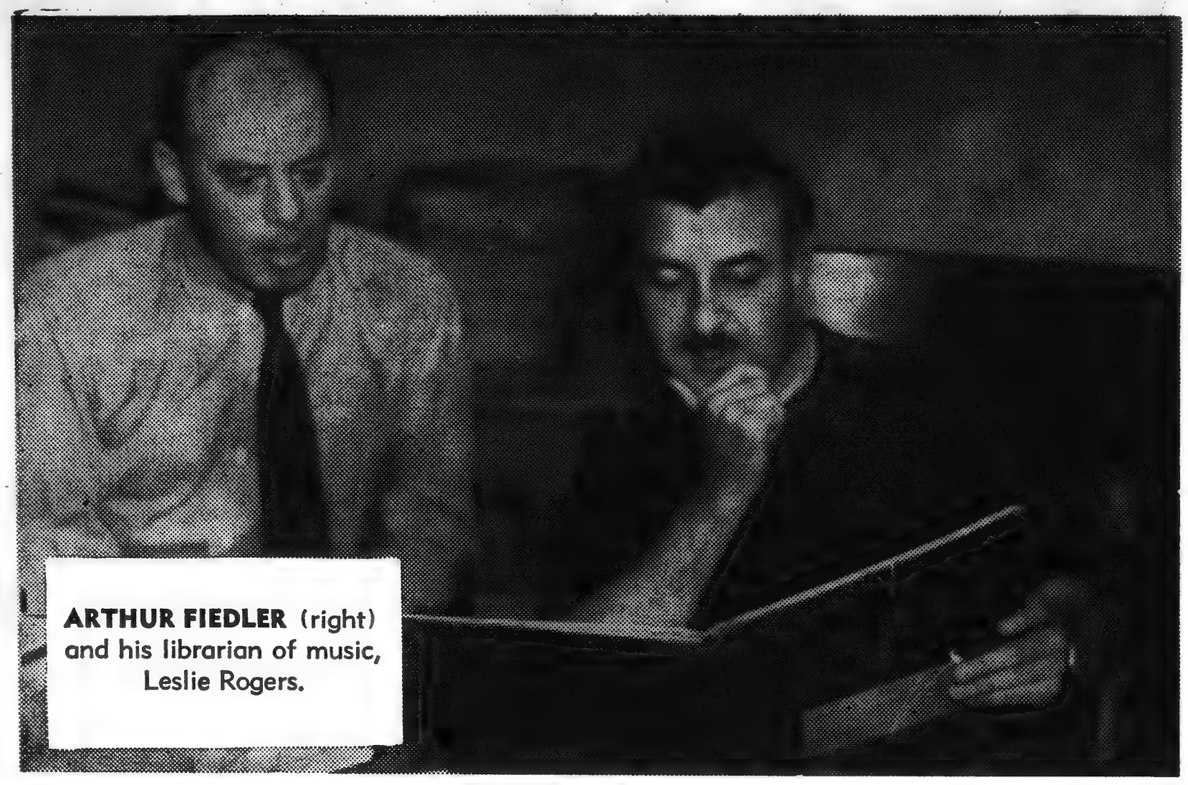
NOTE: It is not necessary to enter the Contest nor to send for Sample Contest Blanks in order to vote.

168



ARTHUR FIEDLER (right) and his librarian of music, Leslie Rogers.

Big Prize Contest For Music Lovers

Boston Herald 'Musiquiz' to Be Held in Boston Garden on Sundays of June 15 and 22 A Novel and Entertaining Festival in Which Audience Will Share Valuable Awards

By Rudolph Elie, Jr.

If you have a scrap of music in your bones; if the sight and sound of a great symphony orchestra thrills you from stem to stern, and if the levelling of a question at you is an irresistible challenge, then take out your biggest red pencil and make a huge circle around the dates June 15 and June 22.

For on those evenings at the Boston Garden there will occur the reddest-lettered day of musical fun in the history of Greater Boston—the First Boston Herald Musiquiz.

Having made your mark on those two Sunday nights in June, you'd better keep your pencil to a fighting point. If you know how to use it you stand a whale of 'a cult, but he will absolutely not spring any questions of a "trick" nature.

ARTHUR FIEDLER as he faces the musicians.

those who because of a previous engagement cannot attend the first Musiquiz, may try their hand at (Photos by John

JESUS SANROMA, distinguis the piano.

For instance, neither orchestra has recorded, say, Beethoven's "Battle of Waterloo." It isn't likely that they ever will, praise be, but since they haven't, there isn't a chance that the Musiquizzers will call upon the contestants to identify a strain from it during the contest.

On the other hand, the Pops Orchestra's latest recording of the Mendelssohn G minor Piano Concerto, with Sanroma as soloist, an

ARTHUR FIEDLER (right) and his librarian of music, Leslie Rogers.

(Photos by John B. Sanroma)

JESUS SANROMA, distinguished symphony musician, at the piano.

SPECIAL REHEARSAL of a section of the Boston Symphony Orchestra just prior to the making of a phonograph record.

VIEW OF POPS MUSICIANS in full action as seen from the wings.

Big Prize Contest For Music Lovers

Boston Herald 'Musiquiz' to Be Held in Boston Garden on Sundays of June 15 and 22 A Novel and Entertaining Festival in Which Audience Will Share Valuable Awards

By Rudolph Elie, Jr.

ARTHUR FIEDLER as he faces the musicians.

If you have a scrap of music in your bones; if the sight and sound of a great symphony orchestra thrills you from stem to stern, and if the levelling of a question at you is an irresistible challenge, then take out your biggest red pencil and make a huge circle around the dates June 15 and June 22.

For on those evenings at the Boston Garden there will occur the reddest-lettered day of musical fun in the history of Greater Boston—the First Boston Herald Musiquiz.

Having made your mark on those two Sunday nights in June, you'd better keep your pencil to a fighting point. If you know how to use it you stand a whale of a chance to win a musical contest which pays off with a $275 RCA-Victor radio-phonograph combination with $50 worth of Victor records of your own choice; a trip to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival of the Boston Symphony Orchestra (convertible into $150 cash if you desire); a pair of $100 tickets to the 24 regular Saturday night concerts of the Boston Symphony for next season; $50 worth of Victor records, and 15 equally desirable musical prizes.

The four grand prizes are but a small part of the fun, though, for the first 17,000 music-lovers who are lucky enough to get tickets for the Boston Herald Musiquiz on the successive Sunday nights are in for the time of their lives.

Never before possible, let alone dreamed of, the Boston Herald Musiquiz stands as another great "first" for the Boston Herald as well as for the most original and entertaining musical festival ever conceived. Behind it stands the entire institution of the 56-year-old Boston Pops Orchestra, which has long proved itself a vital part of the musical life of this great community of 2,000,000 people and now, under the compelling leadership of its conductor, Arthur Fiedler, recognized as the most famous musical organization of its kind in the world.

CULTURAL RENASCENCE

The Boston Herald Musiquiz is all that the name implies and a great deal more. Believing that the current phenomenal interests in really fine music performed by the world's greatest orchestras is signal evidence of the cultural renascence of the United States, the Boston Pops Orchestra under the baton of Arthur Fiedler will present an hour's concert of your favorite classical and semi-classical compositions, to be followed by an hour's novel musical quiz based on selections to be played by the orchestra.

No entry blanks, no conditions, no rules and regulations, no red tape, no jokers in the pack; nothing whatever to interfere with the enjoyment of great music and the opportunity to participate in a hilarious musical quiz with an all-star board of experts consisting of 90 of the finest orchestral virtuosos in the world.

The concert which precedes the actual quiz period will of itself be worth the price of admission—which incidentally is 25 cents for each Musiquiz, every cent of it going to the Pension Fund of the Boston Symphony Orchestra—for Arthur Fiedler is going to play the all-time favorites of the Pops' 56 years, including the famous George Gershwin "Rhapsody in Blue," with Jesus Maria Sanroma as piano soloist.

The Musiquiz to follow the concert is not restricted to any age group or class, nor do you have to enter it at all if you don't want to. As you enter the Boston Garden you will be handed a Musiquiz blank. Some may prefer to make paper arrows of them and float them around the Garden while listening to the music, for there is no obligation whatever. But if you have your eye on one of those magnificent prizes, you'll hold on to your blank for all you're worth.

After the concert, a famous celebrity (whose name you know as well as your own) will act as master of ceremonies for the Musiquiz. He will present six groups of three questions each, ranging from the very easy to the moderately difficult, but he will absolutely not spring any questions of a "trick" nature.

IN SEALED ENVELOPES

Every question will be illustrated by the orchestra or by the soloists, who will play musical selections entirely unknown to them up to the instant of performance, since the music will be given to them in sealed envelopes. After each question and selection, sufficient time will be allowed for the contestants to write down their answers on the blanks. At the conclusion of the Musiquiz, ushers will collect the blanks, and the names of the 200 people who turn in the best set of answers will be published in the Boston Herald before the second Musiquiz is given the following Sunday night.

Now, if you are not among the 200 winners of the first Musiquiz, you are perfectly welcome to try again at the second Herald Musiquiz to be conducted exactly in the same manner as the first one on Sunday night, June 22. Even those who because of a previous engagement cannot attend the first Musiquiz, may try their hand at the second concert with an equal chance of qualifying for the grand prizes.

In other words, the 400 people whose blanks are selected on merit—200 each Sunday night—may qualify for the semi-finals, which will be held in Symphony Hall on Thursday afternoon, June 26, beginning at 4 o'clock.

The final contest for the prizes will be at Symphony Hall, Monday afternoon, June 30.

Since the whole idea of the Musiquiz is to have fun and lots of it, while at the same time benefiting a most worthwhile cause, it is important to remember that the questions to be asked at both Musiquizzes will be within the scope of the average music-lover. And here's a tip, straight from Mr. Fiedler. Not a single question will be asked to which the answer does not lie in one of the Pops Orchestra or Boston Symphony Orchestra Victor recordings.

For instance, neither orchestra has recorded, say, Beethoven's "Battle of Waterloo." It isn't likely that they ever will, praise be, but since they haven't, there isn't a chance that the Musiquizzers will call upon the contestants to identify a strain from it during the contest.

On the other hand, the Pops Orchestra's latest recording of the Mendelssohn G minor Piano Concerto, with Sanroma as soloist, an album which Victor is featuring for the month of June, may well be the basis of a musical question. Use the coupon below right now to secure your complete list of Pops and Boston Symphony Orchestra recordings from which all questions will be derived.

OFFERS FINE TRAINING

Obviously, then, if that magnificent RCA Victor radio-phonograph has stirred your imagination, or if you dream of an idyllic week at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, or if you can see yourself attending all 24 of the Boston Symphony orchestra's concerts next season, you had better go in training for the Herald Musiquiz right now. The easiest and best way to do it is to study the great musical compositions as interpreted by both orchestras on Victor records.

It may be that you already have a number of them. That makes it all the easier. If you haven't yet acquired a Pops repertoire, go to your phonograph and record dealer and enlist his aid. He'll be glad to help you all he can to secure the source material. Further, your dealer will be able to provide you soon with your tickets to the Herald Musiquiz as well as your contest blanks and any additional information you may seek.

As an additional aid to contestants, every night at the regular Pops concerts beginning tomorrow night, Arthur Fiedler and the orchestra have arranged something in the way of a preview to the Herald Musiquiz. It is perfectly possible that they may give away many a clue to the keen-eared in the Pops audience.

A RARE OPPORTUNITY

In case you don't care to enter the Musiquiz but have a deep and abiding love for great symphonic music, you will find the Herald Musiquizzes the most enjoyable musical events you've ever attended. In addition to the music and the Musiquiz, the spectacle, the color, the excitement, the celebrities and all the myriad special events which have been arranged will in themselves lend fascination to the events.

Every year more than 750,000 people hear the concerts of the various Boston Symphony Orchestra activities, but the surface hasn't been scratched. There are still thousands of Greater Bostonians who have yet to hear a fine symphony concert in the flesh. What an opportunity this is!

A few paragraphs back it was stated that such an undertaking as the Herald Musiquiz would have been fantastic before now. Nothing could be more certain.

Where Beethoven ten years ago was considered a long-haired dodo whose music was guaranteed to induce a coma, today every school child analyzes, studies and loves his music. The same holds true even for Bach, Mozart, Brahms, Schumann and others of the world's musical geniuses. If you're from Missouri musically, and have to see it to believe it, then begin making your plans right now to be on hand at the Boston Garden on Sunday, June 15. Those 17,000 tickets are going to disappear as quickly as Hess from the front page.

To recapitulate, then, in form suitable for pasting in hats:

The first Boston Herald Musiquiz, sponsored by The Boston Herald and the Boston Pops orchestra in association with RCA-Victor and its affiliated dealers throughout metropolitan Boston, will be held on the nights of June 15 and June 22 in the Boston Garden.

The Musiquiz will consist of a concert of your musical favorites performed by the Boston Symphony orchestra under Arthur Fiedler, with Jesus Maria Sanroma as piano soloist and a musical questionnaire in which all persons may participate.

Admission will be 25 cents for each Musiquiz, the proceeds benefiting the Pension Fund of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

The 400 winning contestants (200 to be chosen at each Musiquiz) qualify for the contest finals to be held subsequently at Symphony Hall.

The prizes, totalling $800 in value, are: First prize, one RCA Victor radio-phonograph, model 301, list price $275 and $50 worth of records of the winner's choice; second prize, a trip to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, convertible into $150 cash if desired; third prize, a pair of tickets to the 24 Saturday night concerts of the Boston Symphony orchestra, value $100; fourth prize, $50 worth of Victor records of the winner's choice. Besides these grand prizes there will be 10 prizes of $10 worth of Victor records and 15 prizes of $5 worth of records.

Tickets, sample blanks and additional information may soon be secured from Symphony Hall, your own record dealer or Musiquiz Contest Editor, the Boston Herald.

BOSTON HERALD MUSIQUIZ EDITOR:
The Boston Herald, Boston, Mass.

I vote for.....by.....
(name of composition) (composer)

as the all-time Pops favorite, and request that it be included on one of the programs of The Boston Herald Musiquizes to be held in the Boston Garden on the nights of June 15 and 22.

Please send me ( ) Sample Blanks, which will contain a complete list of Boston Pops and Boston Symphony Orchestra Victor Red Seal Records.

Name .....
(Please Print)

Street .....

City ..... State .....

NOTE: It is not necessary to enter the Contest nor to send for Sample Contest Blanks in order to vote.

You May Purchase Your Tickets NOW

at Boston Garden

Symphony Hall

Herald-Traveler

RCA-Victor Record Dealers

One Price to All

25 cents

And Send in the Coupon Above

THE FIRST PRIZE

RCA-Victor Combination No. V-301 and $50 worth of Victor Records

INCORRECT PAGINATION

167

Record Crowd Expecte

City, State Heads Enthusiastic Over Musiquiz Contest

Ticket Sale Indicates Widespread Public Interest

By RUDOLPH ELIE, JR.

With Gov. and Mrs. Leverett Saltonstall heading the distinguished sponsors and with Mayor Maurice J. Tobin acting as chairman, the first Boston Herald Musiquiz in the Boston Garden Sunday night will be one of the most spectacular musical events in the nation's history.

Being conducted to benefit the Pension Fund of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which in turn makes possible the innumerable benefits and fre concerts that the orchestra each year contributes to the civic life of its city, The Herald Musiquiz is a unique musical entertainment provided by Arthur Fiedler and the sensationally popular Boston Pops orchestra. It combines the attractive features of a regular Pops concert and a general musical questionnaire in which all people can participate at will for 29 magnificent musical prizes—all for 25 cents.

STIRRED IMAGINATION

From the moment of inception, The Herald Musiquiz has been stirring the imaginations of music lovers all over New England and today, a scant 32 hours before the first event in the Boston Garden, the response can be considered nothing short of phenomenal.

The advance ticket sale already runs into the thousands, a fact considered without precedent for a benefit event for which there are no reserved seats, and the transportation facilities of Boston have been deluged with questions about the specially reduced group fares they have arranged for Musiquizzers.

Considered in the cold light of day, this is not so astonishing as it sounds. After all, the Boston Pops orchestra, an organization which in 56 years has proved itself time and again to be part and parcel with the intellectual and cultural life of this metropolitan center of two million people, is a mightily potent attraction. Turning away as it does hundreds of people at every concert, it will, for once, in the large and acoustically perfect Boston Garden, be able to accommodate all its fans in a body.

While Arthur Fiedler, Jesus Maria Sanroma and the Pops orchestra itself remain by all odds the "stars" of the Musiquiz, a host of celebrities will be on hand to share the spotlight.

Mayor Tobin, in his capacity as chairman will present the various guests of honor as well as outline briefly the purpose and the benefits to the Pension Fund of The Herald Musiquiz. He will then turn the microphones over to the two masters of ceremonies, Charles O'Connell, RCA-Victor music advisor and Cott, radio program director and the other master of ceremonies, who will be astonished at the simplicity of the questions, for it is absolutely not designed exclusively for musicians and professionals.

Equally important with securing Herald question ballots and filling them out as directed by the masters of ceremonies is the business of filing them in the proper receptacles when the Musiquiz is over.

Receptacles will be placed at convenient points throughout the Garden, each plainly indicated by huge signs saying "DROP YOUR BALLOT HERE." Naturally, contestants must not fail to write plainly their names and addresses in the proper place indicated on the ballot itself.

In an adjoining column, you will find a complete list of co-operating Rictor record dealers. Besides being able to furnish contestants with invaluable information on how to win the Musiquiz, each dealer can supply tickets to all at 25 cents each. In addition, tickets may be obtained at Symphony Hall, the Boston Herald-Traveler building and at the Boston Garden.

The ticket office of the Boston Garden will be open from 10 o'clock on Sunday morning right up to the Musiquiz and there will be plenty of seats available.

Those entering the contest seriously still have three full days to study over the list of recordings of the Boston Symphony orchestra and Pops orchestra from which all questions are being derived, and two full days to visit their neighborhood Victor record dealer and ask his advice, as well as to look at the

EVERY ONE IS INTERESTED IN MUSIC, as these pictures show bottom, are Charles O'Connell, RCA-Victor music advisor and o Cott, radio program director and the other master of ceremoni

List of RCA-Victor Dealers Selling Tickets for Musiquiz

The Record Shop, 213 Pleasant St., Brockton, Mass.
A. T. Ball, Inc., 609 Main Street, Waltham, Mass.
C. V. Stackpole, 27 Market St., Lynn, Mass.
F. H. Magrane, Lynn, Mass.
Gaumont Bros., 338 Merrimack St., Lowell, Mass.
Bon Marche, Lowell, Mass.
F. J. Leone, 518 Essex St., Lawrence, Mass.
Hale's, 252 Washington St., Wellesley Hills.
Edgar's Music Box, Main St., Brockton, Mass.
M. Steinert & Sons, 308 Main St., Worcester, Mass.
Central Stores, 247 Main St., Brockton, Mass.
Boston Music Co., 116 Boylston St., Boston, Mass.
Briggs & Briggs, 1270 Mass. Ave., Cambridge, Mass.
Gilchrist Co., Boston, Mass.
C. W. Homeyer & Co., 498 Boylston St., Boston, Mass.
Mosher Music Co., 131 Tremont St., Boston, Mass.
Cagan Music Store, Beverly, Mass.
Newton Music Store, 281 Washington St., Newton, Mass.
Standard Radio & Electric Co., 1017 Great Plain Ave., Needham, Mass.
Upham's, 216 Pleasant St., Malden, Mass.
Turner Radio & Elec. Co., 269 Brookline Ave., Boston, Mass.
Minute Man Radio Co., 28 Boylston St., Cambridge, Mass.
The Record Shop, 90 Mass. Ave., Cambridge, Mass.
Sears Roebuck & Co., Boston, Mass.
Sears Roebuck & Co., Cambridge, Mass.
Krey Music Co., 623 Washington St., Boston, Mass.
Robinson Home Utilities, 1554 Hancock St., Quincy, Mass.
Jason's 1514 Hancock St., Quincy, Mass.
World Appliance Co., 1253 Hancock St., Quincy, Mass.
King's, Inc., 131 Central St., Lowell, Mass.
Temple Elec. Co., 66 Main St., Andover, Mass.
Concord Music Co., Concord, Mass.
Stone Radio Shop, 6 Pleasant St., Ayer, Mass.
The Book Shop, 536 Main St., Fitch-

Record Crowd Expected at Garden Musiquiz

City, State Heads Enthusiastic Over Musiquiz Contest

Ticket Sale Indicates Widespread Public Interest

By RUDOLPH ELIE, JR.

With Gov. and Mrs. Leverett Saltonstall heading the distinguished sponsors and with Mayor Maurice J. Tobin acting as chairman, the first Boston Herald Musiquiz in the Boston Garden Sunday night will be one of the most spectacular musical events in the nation's history.

Being conducted to benefit the Pension Fund of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which in turn makes possible the innumerable benefits and fre concerts that the orchestra each year contributes to the civic life of its city, The Herald Musiquiz is a unique musical entertainment provided by Arthur Fiedler and the sensationally popular Boston Pops orchestra. It combines the attractive features of a regular Pops concert and a general musical questionnaire in which all people can participate at will for 29 magnificent musical prizes—all for 25 cents.

STIRRED IMAGINATION

From the moment of inception, The Herald Musiquiz has been stirring the imaginations of music lovers all over New England and today, a scant 32 hours before the first event in the Boston Garden, the response can be considered nothing short of phenomenal.

The advance ticket sale already runs into the thousands, a fact considered without precedent for a benefit event for which there are no reserved seats, and the transportation facilities of Boston have been deluged with questions about the specially reduced group fares they have arranged for Musiquizzers.

Considered in the cold light of day, this is not so astonishing as it sounds. After all, the Boston Pops orchestra, an organization which in 56 years has proved itself time and again to be part and parcel with the intellectual and cultural life of this metropolitan center of two million people, is a mightily potent attraction. Turning away as it does hundreds of people at every concert, it will, for once, in the large and acoustically perfect Boston Garden, be able to accommodate all its fans in a body.

While Arthur Fiedler, Jesus Maria Sanroma and the Pops orchestra itself remain by all odds the "stars" of the Musiquiz, a host of celebrities will be on hand to share the spotlight.

Mayor Tobin, in his capacity as chairman will present the various guests of honor as well as outline briefly the purpose and the benefits to the Pension Fund of The Herald Musiquiz. He will then turn the microphones over to the two masters of ceremonies, Ted Cott, chief musiquizzer of the "So You Think You Know Music?" quiz of radio fame, and to Charles O'Connell, musical director of RCA-Victor and assistant conductor of the Philadelphia orchestra.

MANY SPONSORS

Lending their authority and prestige to The Herald Musiquiz as sponsors, beside Governor and Mrs. Saltonstall and Mayor and Mrs. Tobin, are Dr. Thompson Stone, conductor of the Handel and Haydn Society and organist of Emmanuel Church; Miss Marie A. Bergeron, noted vocal teacher and president of the Massachusetts Federation of Music Clubs; Reginald A. Foster and Edward A. Taft, both active in the affairs of the Boston Symphony orchestra and both long connected with important civic functions; Mrs. Elizabeth Grant, president of the Women's Symphony orchestra, and Mrs. J. Arthur Snyder, musician, lecturer on music and chairman of the Massachusetts State Federation of Women's Clubs and president of the Boston Music Lovers' Club.

Typical of the hundreds of letters which have been pouring into The Herald during the last few days is this fine letter from Mary A. Maher of Dunster road, Jamaica Plain:

"A large delegation (she writes) of members of the Nelson Eddy Music Club from Quincy, Jamaica Plain and Dorchester, with their president, Eleanor Shields, will be in attendance at this, as at all concerts of the Boston Symphony and Pops orchestra.

"Privileged as we are to attend most of the great concerts in Boston, we, as members of an organization known for its support and appreciation of all fine music, rejoice in the opportunity these concerts at their small admission price will give many people to hear this fine orchestra. Our hearty commendation goes to The Herald for its support of the finest of music—too rare of late."

And this is but one of the letters!

As to the Musiquiz itself, it is the easiest, un-red-tapedest sort of a musical contest ever conceived, but even that is only part of the fun. For actually there are two shows. First the opening concert of the Pops orchestra itself under Arthur Fiedler which consists of four great concert pieces, each chosen by popular ballot and including the celebrated performance of Gershwin's "Rhapsody in Blue" with Jesus Maria Sanroma. Then the Musiquiz, in which all people, regardless of musical knowledge, class or anything else may participate at will.

It works like this: Each person entering the Garden may help himself to a ballot, being provided free of charge by the Herald.

Everyone should bring his own pencil. After the concert, the masters of cermonies will ask questions orally, each one of which will be illustrated by musical examples played by the orchestra. Those knowing the answers write them down in the correct places on the ballots. Both Ted Cott and Charles O'Connell, the masters of ceremonies, will explain every step of the way as they go along. There's absolutely no technical difficulty about it. On the contrary, the contrary, the musiquiz is so simple that young children can do it—and indeed, many hundreds of them are going to do it.

No one has to enter the contest. Many will prefer to look on, enjoy the music, the questions and the fun. Some will try their hand at the musiquiz; some, in fact, will be astonished at the simplicity of the questions, for it is absolutely not designed exclusively for musicians and professionals.

Equally important with securing Herald question ballots and filling them out as directed by the masters of ceremonies is the business of filing them in the proper receptacles when the Musiquiz is over.

Receptacles will be placed at convenient points throughout the Garden, each plainly indicated by huge signs saying "DROP YOUR BALLOT HERE." Naturally, contestants must not fail to write plainly their names and addresses in the proper place indicated on the ballot itself.

In an adjoining column, you will find a complete list of co-operating Rictor record dealers. Besides being able to furnish contestants with invaluable information on how to win the Musiquiz, each dealer can supply tickets to all at 25 cents each. In addition, tickets may be obtained at Symphony Hall, the Boston Herald-Traveler building and at the Boston Garden.

The ticket office of the Boston Garden will be open from 10 o'clock on Sunday morning right up to the Musiquiz and there will be plenty of seats available.

Those entering the contest seriously still have three full days to study over the list of recordings of the Boston Symphony orchestra and Pops orchestra from which all questions are being derived, and two full days to visit their neighborhood Victor record dealer and ask his advice, as well as to look at the sample question blanks in the special Musiquiz edition.

But most important—and actually all any one need do—is go to the Garden on Sunday night. Whether or not you know Beethoven from Bucky Walters or "The Blue Danube" from Muddy river, you can be assured of a fascinating and exciting evening. It's the biggest 25 cents worth of musical fun you'll ever have a chance to buy!

Pops Group Is Finest

The Boston Pops orchestra has no equal in the world.

A large statement? Consider this: It's the only musical group in the country which finishes the most difficult season of symphonic music faced by any orchestra, then sheds its coats, rolls up its sleeves and plunges right into a 90-day session in a lighter vein without having to rehearse itself into a different mood or spirit.

One reason for this remarkable adaptability and versatility, according to RCA-Victor engineers who have worked with the orchestra for years, is that every musician has a complete mastery of all musical forms from "Tiger Rag" to the B minor Mass.

Another important factor is that no other orchestra has so large a repertory at its finger-tips; nearly 500 time-tested compositions. An astonishing musical arsenal!

Other musical organizations achieve versatility by different methods. Some recruit outside musicians and build the ensemble around the importations. Others, who cling to their own organization, achieve the same results only after prolonged rehearsals. The Boston Pops orchestra alone is able to switch from one musical form to another without preparation.

All Contribute To Musiquiz

Who's running the Musiquiz?

It's a question everybody asks, and quite naturally.

In the first place, the Boston Symphony Orchestra is behind The Herald Musiquiz. It's there because it must raise additional funds for its Pension Fund, a project, incidentally which makes possible the innumerable free concerts and benefits with which the Symphony Orchestra itself is always so prodigal

Then there's RCA-Victor. Being the first and only company to record the music of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Boston Pops Orchestra, the Victor Company is naturally interested in its career, since the royalties it pays the Boston Symphony from its Victor record sales go to the Pension Fund in large measure.

Then there's your neighborhood Victor record dealer, nearly 100 in all in this vicinity, and all intensely interested in furthering the love of good music on records in the general public.

And finally, The Boston Herald, New England's leading morning newspaper. Already nationally famous for its annual fall Book Fair which is the biggest yearly event in literary circles, The Herald is honored to be associated with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Musiquiz, certain to become one of the biggest musical events ever sponsored.

EVERY ONE IS INTERESTED IN MUSIC, as these pictures show, and every one is interested in the huge Musiquiz contest in the Boston Garden Sunday night. Center pictures, top to bottom, are Charles O'Connell, RCA-Victor music advisor and one of the masters of ceremonies for the contest; Mayor Maurice J. Tobin, who will preside at one of the sessions, and Ted Cott, radio program director and the other master of ceremonies. The other views show a cross-section of the wide interest in the contest.

List of RCA-Victor Dealers Selling Tickets for Musiquiz

The Record Shop, 213 Pleasant St., Brockton, Mass.
A. T. Ball, Inc., 609 Main Street, Waltham, Mass.
C. V. Stackpole, 27 Market St., Lynn, Mass.
P. H. Magrane, Lynn, Mass.
Gaumont Bros., 338 Merrimack St., Lowell, Mass.
Bon Marche, Lowell, Mass.
F. J. Leone, 518 Essex St., Lawrence, Mass.
Hale's, 252 Washington St., Wellesley Hills.
Edgar's Music Box, Main St., Brockton, Mass.
M. Steinert & Sons, 308 Main St., Worcester, Mass.
Central Stores, 247 Main St., Brockton, Mass.
Boston Music Co., 116 Boylston St., Boston, Mass.
Briggs & Briggs, 1270 Mass. Ave., Cambridge, Mass.
Gilchrist Co., Boston, Mass.
C. W. Homeyer & Co., 498 Boylston St., Boston, Mass.
Mosher Music Co., 181 Tremont St., Boston, Mass.
M. Steinert & Sons, 162 Boylston St., Boston, Mass.
R. H. White Co., Boston, Mass.
Phonograph & Record Shop, 8 Milk St., Boston, Mass.
City Radio Co., 16 Brattle St., Boston, Mass.
Big Bear Market, Medford, Mass.
Brookline Music & Radio Co., 33 Harvard St., Brookline, Mass.
Centre Radio Co., 95 Union St., Newton Centre.
Mrs. E. A. Bowen, c/o F. N. Joslin, Malden, Mass.
E. O'Byrne DeWitt, 51 Warren St., Roxbury, Mass.
Peabody Music Store, 73 Merrimack St., Haverhill, Mass.
Master Tire & Radio Co., 291 Broadway, Lawrence, Mass.
Shirley Radio Co., 432 Shirley St., Revere, Mass.
Carl Seder, Trumbull Sq., Worcester, Mass.
Music Sales Corp., c/o McLellan's, Lynn, Mass.
Wes Feero, 15 Andrew St., Lynn, Mass.
Pearce Radio Co., Mt. Auburn St., Watertown, Mass.
A. Marks & Co., 77 Summer St., Boston, Mass.
Winslow Press, Winchester, Mass.
Rosen T. M. Co., 22 Scollay Sq., Boston, Mass.
Star Radio & Tel. Co., 94 Harvard Ave., Allston, Mass.
Ipswich Elec. Co., Ipswich, Mass.
Sandler's, Gloucester, Mass.
Farrington Radio Co., 801 Mass. Ave., Arlington, Mass.
Knuepfer & Dimmock, 286 Essex St., Lawrence, Mass.
Jerome L. Proctor, 889 Dorchester Ave., Dorchester, Mass.
Al's Radio Co., 59 Broadway, Lawrence, Mass.
Peter Venezia, c/o Mitchell & Co., Haverhill, Mass.
The Music Box, 10 Prospect St., Cambridge, Mass.
Miller Music Store, 149 Essex St., Salem, Mass.
Ted's Radio Shop, Webster, Mass.
LeFavour Music House, 186 Essex St., Salem, Mass.
Ye Brunswick Shoppe, 291 Cabot St., Beverly, Mass.
Cagan Music Store, Beverly, Mass.
Newton Music Store, 281 Washington St., Newton, Mass.
Standard Radio & Electric Co., 1017 Great Plain Ave., Needham, Mass.
Upham's, 216 Pleasant St., Malden, Mass.
Turner Radio & Elec. Co., 269 Brookline Ave., Boston, Mass.
Minute Man Radio Co., 28 Boylston St., Cambridge, Mass.
The Record Shop, 90 Mass. Ave., Cambridge, Mass.
Sears Roebuck & Co., Boston, Mass.
Sears Roebuck & Co., Cambridge, Mass.
Krey Music Co., 623 Washington St., Boston, Mass.
Robinson Home Utilities, 1554 Hancock St., Quincy, Mass.
Jason's 1514 Hancock St., Quincy, Mass.
World Appliance Co., 1253 Hancock St., Quincy, Mass.
King's, Inc., 131 Central St., Lowell, Mass.
Temple Elec. Co., 66 Main St., Andover, Mass.
Concord Music Co., Concord, Mass.
Stone Radio Shop, 6 Pleasant St., Ayer, Mass.
The Book Shop, 536 Main St., Fitchburg, Mass.
Park Radio Co., 618 Main St., Winchester, Mass.
Nobo Company, 486 High St., W. Medford, Mass.
Music Box, Inc., 11 Central St., Wellesley, Mass.
J. C. Kaufman Co., 20 Province St., Boston, Mass.
Central Music Supplies, 31 Bennington St., East Boston.
Malden Jewelry Co., 27 Pleasant St., Malden, Mass.
Strandway Book Shop, 659 Boylston St., Boston, Mass.
The Melody Shop, 191 Mass. Ave., Boston, Mass.
Miss A. C. Cronin, 150 Boylston St., Boston, Mass.
College Music Shop, 331 Mass. Ave., Boston, Mass.
L. S. Gibson, 353 Newport Ave., Wollaston, Mass.
Quincy Music Shop, 8 Granite St., Quincy, Mass.
Milton Radio & Appl. Shop, 20 Adams St., Milton, Mass.
Lawrence Furniture Co., 540-546 Essex St., Lawrence, Mass.
Boyd's (Krey Music), Pleasant St., Malden, Mass.
Ed Gosselin's Radio Shoppe, 290 Main St., Hyannis, Mass.
Louis E. Dean, Hyannis, Mass.
Grove Hall Radio Co., 1159 Blue Hill Ave., Dorchester, Mass.
McClelland-Elwell Co., 577 Washington St., Dorchester, Mass.
Whitman Elec. Co., 553 Washington St., Whitman, Mass.
Sherman's, 50 Court St., Plymouth, Mass.
Sun Radio & Music Co., 648 Huntington Ave., Boston, Mass.
Denholm & McKay, Worcester, Mass.
M. Roper Co., 4 Foster St., Worcester, Mass.
J. McKenna, 19 Brattle St., Cambridge, Mass.
Warren Radio Co., 4 Elm St., Braintree, Mass.
Walter L. Reardon Tire Co., 701 Columbia Road, Dorchester, Mass.
Driscoll Radio & Elec. Co., 65 South St., Hingham, Mass.
De Roma Bros., Norwood.
Fuller Bros., Foxboro, Mass.
Murphy's New Store, Canton, Mass.

Room for All Sanroma Fans

For the first time in his career on Sunday night, Jesus Maria Sanroma will be heard by all who want to hear him when he appears as soloist in Gershwin's "Rhapsody in Blue," as the featured work on the concert program of the Herald Musiquiz.

Ever since he first appeared as soloist in that remarkable modern work, Symphony Hall has had to turn away thousands simply because the house was sold out from the moment it was announced on the program. With the greater capacity of the Boston Garden, however, there's little doubt that his thousands of fans will all be on hand to hear him—and no one need fear being turned away.

Wit, prankster, ambidextrous musician and possessor of prodigal musical gifts, Sanroma has, despite his youth, already secured a place among the legendary figures of music. An intimate sidelight on his extraordinary personality was furnished this week by Charles O'Connell, musical director of RCA-Victor and co-master of ceremonies for the Herald Musiquiz.

O'Connell relates that last winter Sanroma was engaged by Les Concerts Symphoniques de Montreal, the leading orchestra of Canada, as soloist at the final concert of the season. O'Connell was the coiductor.

"At the rehearsal," said O'Connell, "the orchestra stood up and applauded Sanroma's brilliant performance of the Weber F minor Koncertstueck. I went to the conductor's room to cool off and in a few minutes I heard the piano again—a rather extraordinary performance, rough but accurate, and fortissimo, of Sousa's 'Stars and Stripes Forever,' by piano and violin. And the next moment there were roars and whoops of laughter.

"I went down to the stage, and there was Sanroma, who a few minutes before had startled the orchestra with his mastery of Weber's concerto, playing the piano with his feet! And he played accurately and in time while one of the violinists scraped away with the melody of the Sousa march.

"The rest of the orchestra was in convulsions, and urged on by their applause, the irrepressible Sanroma was adding grace notes and variations! You'd have to see this stunt to appreciate it, or even believe it; but I think it is a fair light on the amazing ability of this artist to turn from the most serious and difficult of things to the lightest and amusing."

While artists generally are temperamental, Sanroma, according to O'Connell, is distinctly not, despite his Latin blood and amazing musical gifts.

"He is a man of acute sensibilities, and sensitive," O'Connell said, "but in a moment of stress he takes refuge in humor rather than in hysterics. Granted his humor is not always subtle—he is the world's worst punster—one must admit that an artist who can smile in a catastrophic moment is a joy to know and work with. There's iron in his blood as well as fire."

Railroads, Airline Offer Special Rates

Because of the unprecedented demand for travel facilities, the Boston & Maine railroad, the New Haven railroad and the American Airline have made special reduced rates for those who intend to come to The Herald Musiquiz in a body on Sunday night.

Those living within a 15-mile radius of the Garden are already served with minimum rates through "strip" tickets, but those from greater distances may take advantage of considerable fare savings provided 10 or more people come as a party. Complete details may be secured from the railroad serving you.

Questions for Contest Taken from Records

All the questions to be asked during The Herald Musiquiz as well as all the musical examples to be performed in person by the Pops orchestra under Arthur Fiedler, are being derived from the Victor records of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Boston Pops Orchestra.

Contestant must bear this fact in min, and should carefully study the list of these records. A list may be obtained from your neighborhood Victor record dealer, who will be very glad to give you all the assistance he can. No records of any kind will be used at the Musiquizzes in the Boston Garden, however. The Boston Pops orchestra will perform every selection in person.

Musiquiz Contest Prize List

FIRST PRIZE: An RCA-Victor console radio - phonograph model 103, valued at $275 AND $50 worth of Victor records of the winner's choice; total value, $325.

SECOND PRIZE: A deluxe trip for two to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival with the Boston Symphony orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky; value $150. (This is convertible to cash if the winner elects).

THIRD PRIZE: A pair of seats to the 24 regular Saturday night concerts of the Boston Symphony orchestra; value $100.

FOURTH PRIZE: $50 worth of Victor records of the winner's choice;

AND

TEN PRIZES OF $10 worth of Victor records of the winner's selection and FIFTEEN PRIZES of $5 worth of Victor records of the winners' choice.

TOTAL VALUE OF PRIZES: $800.

Program Announced For Musiquiz Show

Arthur Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Pops orchestra which appears in the Boston Garden Sunday night in The Herald Musiquiz ot benefit the Pension Fund of the orchestra, yesterday officially announced the formal program for the first Musiquiz. Chosen by popular ballot, it is as follows:

"Pomp and Circumstance" Sir Edward Elgar
Overture to "Merry Wives of Windsor" ..... Nicolai
Third Movement from "Pathetic" Symphony ..... Tchaikovsky
Rhapsody in Blue George Gershwin
Jesus Maria Sanroma, piano soloist

Needless to say, Mr. Fiedler will be generous with his encores, and many of the favorites voted for will be performed as encores. And it must be remembered that next week's program will also consist of all-time favorites, including the winner of the voting. Besides the formal program, the Pops orchestra will also play a large number of pieces as musical examples for the Musiquiz.

Boston Appreciates All That Is Noble in Music More Than Any City of the World

MUSIQUIZ IS WORTHY OF ATHENS OF AMERICA

By BILL CUNNINGHAM

NEW YORK, June 19—It makes a fellow proud of his paper and proud of his town when he hears of an event as delightful, as original, as instructive and as constructive as the Herald's Symphonic Musiquiz in the Boston Garden last Sunday night. The news that there's to be another simply makes it all the better. Possibly no city on this harassed planet, at current quotations, is so blessed with all that is noble in music.

Certainly none has a public that appreciates it more.

Add to this the piquancy of a game, the element of audience-participation, and especially of audience-participation increasing the knowledge and appreciation of the masters and their works and we have something truly worthy of the Athens of America.

I'm sorry I missed the last one, but I shan't miss the next one. I understand I'm to be asked to help run it in some fashion, and that will be a privilege, even if my assignment consists merely of helping carry in the bull fiddles. To some of the pale and pinquid, it may seem such a far cry that it's practically a yodel, from Rachmaninoff to a ringside, from Lohengrin to Louis, from William Tell to William Conn, but I can assure you that if they haven't a lot in common, there's nothing about the one that dulls enthusiasm for the other.

Both have rhythm and pace and grace and sock. Both have drama and color and pulse racing passages. Both lift you up and let you down. A fellow, come to think it over, could draw a pretty striking parallel between a prize fight and symphony. Probably somebody has.

From this distance, I haven't as yet been able to learn all the details of the contest end of the program, and that particular point has been a little embarrassing for news of the smashing success of last Sunday night's premiere apparently reached this metropolis as fast as news could carry. I received three telephone calls before noon Monday from interested New Yorkers asking for full details. I sent around the corner and bought 'em three copies of the Monday Herald, but the account contained therein only served to whet their appetites.

I tried to get 'em to settle for a lecture upon the subject of whether Joe Louis has slipped, or a diagram of the preliminary stages of the great army maneuvres in Tennessee. I even offered one of 'em the golf ball with which Craig Wood won the Open golf championship in Ft. Worth, all duly dated and autographed. But it was no go.

About that time, I discovered that the first party was such a grand success that there's to be another next Sunday night. So I asked them to come up and attend it. They're coming. It seems they're Fiedler fans, as who isn't? And Pops fans, as who isn't again? They love great music and the quizz idea seems to them something of a real inspiration.

According to what I can hear at this distance, nobody needs to be urged to take advantage of this unique opportunity to enjoy the first game of its sort ever played. But if you haven't heard about it, make the necessary inquiries, for this is something that can't be duplicated on the face of the earth.

I can't hope to sell you music, if it isn't in your soul, but there's almost nobody whose heart doesn't sing when the works of the masters speak their universal language. Just music in the Fiedler manner is enough. But such music with the now universally popular quizz motif added —that truly must be something outstanding in the field of entertainment. Speaking for myself, I can scarcely wait. See you Sunday night.

Questions for Contest Taken from Records

All the questions to be asked during The Herald Musiquiz as well as all the musical examples to be performed in person by the Pops orchestra under Arthur Fiedler, are being derived from the Victor records of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Boston Pops Orchestra.

Contestant must bear this fact in mind, and should carefully study the list of these records. A list may be obtained from your neighborhood Victor record dealer, who will be very glad to give you all the assistance he can. No records of any kind will be used at the Musiquizzes in the Boston Garden, however. The Boston Pops orchestra will perform every selection in person.

ALAN RICH

PRESCOTT A. STEVENS

Plenty of Room, Cool Atmosphere Pledged for Sunday's Musiquiz

Second Session of Hit Show at Garden Will Present Entirely New Program

By RUDOLPH ELIE, JR.

With "plenty of room and a cool atmosphere for everybody" as his pledge, Robert Murphy, superintendent of the vast, airy Boston Garden, said yesterday the Garden was prepared to take care of "twice as many Musiquizzers as we had last week" during the second Herald Musiquiz next Sunday night at 8 o'clock, with the Boston Pops orchestra under Arthur Fiedler presenting an entirely new program of all-time Pops favorites—including the 'Bolero"—and the second session of the fascinating Musiquizzes which had all New England buzzing this week.

O'Hara Waiting to Haul up His Chair

"Although all indications point undeniably to a larger audience than was present at the first Musiquiz," Murphy said, "we've made arrangements to provide a best seat for everybody.

"The Garden has the most elastic seating plan of any auditorium I know of," he said. "Don't forget that Shriners event some years ago when the Garden was host to 51,000 people, the largest indoor audience ever assembled.

"Of course, no one need fear a repetition of that monster affair," he said. "But an extra 5000 over the 10,000 we had last week? There's nothing to it."

Carrying the all-important task of acting as master of ceremonies for the second Herald Musiquiz, Neal O'Hara, famous Traveler columnist, speaker and humorist, indicated today he was looking forward to the event with keen anticipation.

Upon him will fall the job of springing the Musiquiz questions on the audience. An old hand at springing questions, O'Hara was one of the very first to realize the American audience had a vast amount of intellectual curiosity and liked nothing better than to answer odd and curious questions of any nature.

Some observers, indeed, credit O'Hara with starting the trend toward popping questions at people the day he first wrote "today's quiz for retentive memories" on his column, which begins with the now famous "Haul up a chair my dear."

At any rate, with his tremendous following, his ready wit and his ability to keep an audience delighted and amused, O'Hara is certain to be a big asset in the show with Arthur Fiedler, Jesus Maria Sanroma, Bill Cunningham, Charles O'Connell and the entire Pops orchestra.

As the second Musiquiz draws near, Victor record dealers throughout New England report greater interest in the Musiquiz than ever before. Those who took part in last Sunday's quiz were said to have gone all out for the idea, and all said they were coming back next Sunday night with all their friends. In the meantime, those who had their eye on the fine musical prizes were brushing up on their musical knowledge and acquainting themselves with the repertory of the Boston Symphony and Boston Pops orchestra on Victor records.

All the questions for the second Musiquiz are being derived from the Victor records of the two orchestras. This means that besides "identification" questions, all of which will be musically illustrated by Arthur Fiedler and the Pops orchestra a number of questions on related matters will be asked.

For instance, since the Boston Pops orchestra has recorded the "Rhapsody in Blue," it is perfectly fair to ask if George Gershwin is an American composer. However, since neither the Pops nor the Boston Symphony orchetrra has recorded the Mozart Adagio in C major for harmonica—and don't laugh, because Mozart did write one—it would be unfair to ask the audience to identify it.

As to the mechanics of the Musiquiz (those who Musiquizzed last Sunday needn't bother with this, incidentally), the one essential point is to remember that everything is done with a pencil. Therefore, by all means bring your own pencil along if you plan to take part in the unique Musiquiz.

It all happens something like this: Musiquizzers have but one obligation, and that is the 25 cent admission charge, every cent of which goes to the Pension Fund of the Boston Symphony orchestra. (There are no additional charges of any nature and no seats are reserved).

All who enter the Garden may help themselves to a Musiquiz ballot and a program. These are prominently displayed and indicated by signs just inside the main entrances to the Garden.

Beginning at 8 o'clock sharp, the Boston Pops orchestra under Arthur Fiedler first presents an hour's concert of all-time Pops favorites, all of which were chosen by popular balloting. Next Sunday night the concert program lists Sousa's "Stars and Stripes Forever," Ravel's "Bolero" and Gershwin's Concerto in F for piano and orchestra with Jesus Maria Sanroma as soloist.

WILL CHOOSE 200

The concert over, the Musiquiz itself begins. Presided over by Bill Cunningham, celebrated Herald columnist, the Musiquiz presents Neal O'Hara as master of ceremonies, with Charles O'Connell, musical director of RCA Victor, asking questions of a musical nature, the answers to which all people may indicate upon their Herald ballot sheet. A minimum of 200 people who turn in the best ballots, are chosen from each Musiquiz. (Receptacles for the ballots are posted throughout the Garden, and contestants must file their own therein). The first list of qualifiers is printed elsewhere in this paper. Next Sunday night, another 200 will be chosen on merit alone, and the total of 400 winners may take part in the semi-finals which will be held next Thursday afternoon at 4 in Symphony Hall. When the eliminations are all over, 29 persons will be presented with highly desirable musical prizes, the first of which is a magnificent RCA-Victor radio - phonograph model 301, valued at $275 and $50 worth of Victor records of the winner's own choice.

Really, that's all there is to it. But what this skeletonized description of the event does not convey is the enormous amount of musical entertainment the Musiquizzes provide. It goes without saying that the audience of 10,000 that attended last Sunday had the time of its life; just ask one who was there!

There are no rules or regulations of any nature. Everyone who came to the first Musiquiz is more than welcome to come back to the second. Even if his name appears on the list of qualifiers, he is perfectly welcome to come back and try again just as practice, and those who didn't quite qualify are naturally invited to try again. Yet whether or not you intend to enter the Musiquiz part of the event, the spectacle and the entertainment are more than worthwhile.

PLENTY OF SEATS

Emerging time and again as the most remarkable thing about the Musiquiz has been the fact that the audience was one of the most courteous, attentive and well-mannered audiences of its size ever seen in Boston. There was, in fact, no confusion of any kind.

Tickets for the second Musiquiz are now on sale at the Herald-Traveler building, Symphony Hall, the Boston Garden, almost every department store ticket agency in the city and at your nearest RCA-Victor record dealer. The doors of the Garden will be open at 6:30 Sunday night but it is by no means necessary to arrive at that time in order to obtain a choice seat.

Nor is it a necessity to purchase seats in advance, convenient though it is. Tickets will be on sale at the Boston Garden box office all day Sunday beginning at 10 A. M., and seats may be obtained there right up to the event.

Confidentially, this is our own experience, the vesy best seats are those in the upper balconies. Those who find seats in the upper sections of the Garden will discover that the spectacle below, the unique placed orchestra, the colorful throngs and most of all, the musical acoustics are quite beyond description.

But most of all, be there on Sunday night. You'll be a Musiquiz fan for good and all!

FRANCIS FOX

ROSE ALOFF

ELI HELFANT

RICHARD H. MILLER

HOWARD V. JONES, JR.

LEONARD A. MARASCO

CHARLES DONAHUE

MORTON BLENDER

Railroad, Airline Offer Special Rates

Because of the unprecedented demand for travel facilities, the Boston & Maine railroad, the New Haven railroad and the American Airline have made special reduced rates for those who intend to come to The Herald Musiquiz in a body on Sunday night.

Those living within a 15-mile radius of the Garden are already served with minimum rates through "strip" tickets, but those from greater distances may take advantage of considerable fare savings provided 10 or more people come as a party. Complete details may be secured from the railroad serving you.

Briggs & Briggs
1270 Mass. Ave., Cambridge, Harvard Sq.
Invites You to Enjoy the Music Played by the Boston Pops Orchestra on Victor Records
We'll Let You In on A Secret
Don't miss the Victor Musical Masterpiece for June! Ask for Mendelssohn's Concerto No. 1, in G Minor and Songs Without Words. It's played by Jesus Maria Sanroma and the Boston "Pops" Orchestra, directed by Arthur Fiedler. Album M-780 (also in automatic sequences) 6 sides. List price $3.50.
Win A Prize And Get Your Tickets Here Only 25c
CALL KIRKLAND 2007

MINUTE MAN RADIO CO.
28 Boylston Street, Harvard Square, Cambridge
Invites You to Hear THE BOSTON "POPS" ORCHESTRA ON Victor Records
Come in and listen to some of the magnificent Victor Red Seal Records featuring the Boston "Pops." Familiarize yourself with the music and the composers. Ask for Mendelssohn's Concerto No. 1, in G Minor, and Songs Without Words. It's played by Jesus Maria Sanroma and the Boston "Pops" Orchestra, directed by Arthur Fiedler. Album M-780 (also in automatic sequences) 6 sides. List price $3.50.
Get Your Musiquiz Concert Tickets Here, Only 25c
PHONE ELIOT 9110
Day and Night Service—Open EVES.

MEDFORD'S
Largest Victor Record Store
Get hot tips on MUSIQUIZ by going to see NOBO CO.
486 High St., West Medford
Tel. ARL. 3222
TIPS
1. Mendelssohn's Concerto No. 1 M-780
2. Hungarian Dance 5 & 6 Victor 4321
3. Old Times Night At The Pops Victor 4395
GET YOUR TICKETS HERE 25c

Gilchrist's
Information Please! GILCHRIST'S MUSICAL "BOARD OF EXPERTS" WILL HELP YOU IN THE MUSIQUIZ
Tickets on Sale at Gilchrist's, 25c
A Complete Stock of Every Recording of BOSTON "POPS" AND SYMPHONY
Victor Records
Come in and "scoop up" all the winning musical knowledge! Listen to our complete library of famous Victor recordings and be prepared with the winning answers for the next Musiquiz contest at Boston Garden, Sunday, June 22.
—Boston Store, Fourth Floor—

REFRESH YOUR MUSICAL MEMORY FOR THE MUSIQUIZ
We invite you to hear the music of the Boston "POPS" orchestra on Victor Records
MUSIQUIZ TIP! Don't Miss the Victor Masterpiece For JUNE.
Concerto in G Minor and Songs Without Words by MENDELSSOHN. Boston "Pops" Orchestra, Arthur Fiedler, Conductor, with Jesus Maria Sanroma, Pianist. Album M-780 (also in automatic sequences), 6 sides. List Price $3.50.
Cavalleria Rusticana — Intermezzo—Song of India
La Paloma
La Golondrina
Cradle Song (Brahms)
Perpetuum Mobile
75c
Dance of the Hours
Aida—Grand March
Pomp and Circumstance
Merry Wives of Windsor Overture
$1.00
MAIL AND PHONE ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED
COLLEGE MUSIC SHOP
331 Massachusetts Avenue, Boston. Kenmore 8808
(Across From Symphony Hall—Open Eves. till 11 P. M.)

CITY RADIO CO
Refresh Your Musical Memory FOR THE MUSIQUIZ!
AT THE BOSTON GARDEN, JUNE 22
Here's some real DOPE!
LISTEN TO Jesus Maria Sanroma and the Boston "Pops" Orchestra, directed by Arthur Fiedler, playing Mendelssohn's Concerto No. 1, in G Minor and Songs Without Words, Album M-780, 6 sides. List price $3.50.
Acquaint yourself with all the Victor Record selections by the Boston "Pops." This music contains all the Clues you need to win the big prizes in Musiquiz.
Get Your Musiquiz Concert Tickets Here!
Don't Delay—Our Supply is Limited.
16 BRATTLE ST. CAP. 4497
Near Scollay Square

PS-S-ST! HERE'S THE WAY TO WIN THE MUSIQUIZ Come to . . .
JOSLIN'S
MUSIC DEPARTMENT
Malden Sq. Tel. Mal. 3600
MRS. E. A. BOWEN, MGR.
AND HEAR THE BOSTON "POPS" ORCHESTRA, ON Victor Records
HERE'S A TIP
Mendelssohn's Concerto No. 1 in G Minor with Jesus Maria Sanroma. Ask for Album M-780. List price only $3.50
WE SELL TICKETS, 25c

IT'S NOT TOO LATE TO ENTER THE MUSIQUIZ
LET US HELP YOU
CENTRAL MUSIC SUPPLIES
31 BENNINGTON ST.
EAST BOSTON
TEL. E. B. 1098
COME IN — HEAR THESE MUSIQUIZ TIPS
Jesus Maria Sanroma and the Boston "Pops" Orchestra, directed by Arthur Fiedler, playing Mendelssohn's Concerto No. 1, in G Minor and Songs Without Words Album M-780, 6 sides. List price $3.50.
GET YOUR TICKETS HERE FOR SUNDAY 25c

CONCORD RADIO & MUSIC STORE
27 Walden St., Concord
We invite you to listen to any of the Boston Pops selections on Victor Records. Hear Jesus Maria Sanroma with the Boston Pops Orchestra on Albums—
780—Mendelssohn's Concerto No. 1 in G Minor—List price only $3.50
358—Rhapsody in Blue—only $2.50
Tickets for the MUSIQUIZ on sale here
Telephone orders filled
CONCORD RADIO & MUSIC STORE
27 Walden St., Concord

Visit The New
SUN RADIO & MUSIC CO.
648 Huntington Ave., Boston, at Fenway
FOR YOUR SELECTION OF CLASSICAL
RCA Victor Records
Featuring Gershwin's Rhapsody in Blue, played by the Boston Pop Orchestra under Arthur Fiedler and Sanroma at the piano.
ASK FOR ALBUM M-780 OR ALBUM M-358 ONLY $3.50 and $2.50 EA.
You are cordially invited to visit our new store and listen to your favorite selection
FREE DELIVERY . . . OPEN EVENINGS
For Prompt Service Phone ASP. 1120

GARINO'S MUSIC SHOP
61 CONCORD STREET
IN FRAMINGHAM
Invites You to Hear THE BOSTON POPS ORCHESTRA on Victor Records
Here's prize winning help in the MUSIQUIZ!
Mendelssohn's Concerto No. 1 in G Minor with Jesus Maria Sanroma. Ask for Album M-780 List price only $3.50
M-358 Rhapsody in Blue — only $3.50
M-490 Concerto F. (Gershwin) only $4.00
GET TICKETS NOW FOR THE 2ND MUSIQUIZ AT THIS STORE
25c SUNDAY, JUNE 22nd NO SEATS RESERVED
Garino's Music Shop 61 Concord St. FRAMINGHAM

JUNE 22 MUSIQUIZ WITH THE BOSTON POPS ORCHESTRA AT BOSTON GARDEN
TICKETS 25¢
BROCKTON MUSIC LOVERS!
Here's luck in the Musiquiz. We have a complete stock of selections by the Boston "Pops" Orchestra on Victor Records. Know this music and you'll have winning answers. Come in and listen. We also have tickets.
THE RECORD SHOP
213 Pleasant St.
BROCKTON

LIST OF QUALIFIERS IN MUSIQUIZ ANNOUNCED

The Boston Symphony organization announced last night that the following qualified in the first Musiquiz contest last Sunday night at Boston Garden to enter the semi-final contest at Symphony Hall Thursday afternoon, June 26, at 4 P. M.:

Adnoff, Constance, 2 Brenton St., Dorchester, Mass.
Alden, Frank, Perkins 64, Cambridge.
Alizeo, Carl J., 169 Spring St., Medford.
Aloff, A. M., 243 Columbia Rd., Dorchester.
Aloff, Rose R., 243 Columbia Rd., Dorchester.
Alpert, Melvin, 137 Walnut St., Chelsea.
Anderson, Lennart I., 72 Trowbridge St., Arlington.
Austin, Kenneth, 24 Newton St., Belmont.
Ball, William D., Jr., 27 Vane, No. Quincy.
Barber, Laurence L., Jr., 1200 Massachusetts Ave., Cambridge.
Barber, Clarence, 11 Maple St., Arlington.
Barber, Lucia, 1200 Massachusetts Ave., Cambridge.
Barnes, Frank, 725 E. 6th St., So. Boston.
Barnet, Robert, 248 Marlborough St., Boston.
Beaton, J. Maurice, 91 Meredith Circle, Milton.
Benedict, Ellinor, 63 Rowe St., Melrose.
Benedict, P. F., 63 Rowe St., Melrose.
Berman, L. L., 17 Kirkwood Rd., Brighton.
Berman, Theodore, 114 Bellingham St., Chelsea.
Black, Melvin, 62 Maywood St., Roxbury.
Black, Norma, 62 Maywood St., Roxbury.
Blender, Morton, 37 University Rd., Brookline.
Bloomfield, Sophie S., 19 Coral Ave., Winthrop.
Bloomfield, Sidney R., 19 Coral Ave., Winthrop.
Bosher, Marjorie, 217 Neponset Ave., Dorchester.
Booth, Alan, 234 Jackson St., Newton Centre.
Booth, Beverly, 234 Jackson St., Newton Centre.
Brenton, Maxwell, 20 Branchaud Rd., Belmont.
Bradley, Willis T., 135 Ivy St., Brookline.
Brown, Beatrice L., 207 Winthrop St., Winthrop.
Bruno, Mario S., 78 Washington St., Malden.
Bryant, Ethel C., 39 Gorham Rd., Belmont.
Calkins, Grosvenor, Jr., 49 Farlow Rd., Newton.
Campbell, Anne, 94 Plymouth Ave., Milton.
Campbell, Frederic, 94 Plymouth Ave., Milton.
Carlin, May, 310 Fuller St., Dorchester.
Carlson, Helen G., 22 Martin Rd., Milton.
Carr, Peter, 55 Appleton St., Cambridge.
Cavanaugh, George E., 11 Berwick Rd., Medford.
Chabot, Lucille, 278 Commonwealth Ave., Boston.
Chansky, Daniel, 35 Warner St., Dorchester.
Chansky, Esther M., 35 Warner St., Dorchester.
Clarke, Roger A., Westminster School, Simsbury, Conn.
Cleaman, H. E., Jr., 10 Austin Park, Cambridge.
Cluff, Edward, 100 Monroe St., Dedham.
Cluff, Milon, 100 Monroe St., Dedham.
Cohen, Sylvia, 8 Union St., Cambridge.
Conroy, John A., 48 Rawson Rd., Wollaston.
Coran, Beatrice, 154 Central Ave., Chelsea, Mass.
Cotter, Joseph T., 26 Frost St., Arlington.
Cowley, William, 64 Rawson Rd., Wollaston.
Craig, Mary, 343 Pleasant St., Milton.
Crowley, Thomas E., 837 E. Fifth St., So. Boston.
Cutler, Richard W., 24 Brastow Ave., Somerville.
Davenport, E. A. (Mrs.), 26 Frost St., Arlington
Davis, Edwin G., 24 Arlington St., Cambridge.
Donohue, Charles, 144 Huntington Ave., Boston.
Dubbs, Edith, 57 Greenwood St., Dorchester.
Dubbs, Marion E., 24 Rexford St., Mattapan.
Edelstein, Ben, 58 Glenville Ave., Allston.
Ehrlich, Jesse, 56 Seventh Ave., New York City.
Eigner, Robert H., 182 Norfolk Ave., Swampscott.
Eisenberg, Edith, 20 Strathmore Rd., Brookline.
Evans, D. C., 109 Claremont Ave., Arlington.
Fellman, Reva R., 34 Wentworth Terrace, Dorchester.
Fitch, Edward, 100 Appleton St., Arlington.
Fleischner, Warren, 276 Centre St., Milton.
Forsberg, Robert, Leverett House, Cambridge.
Fox, Felix, 403 Marlborough St., Boston.
Fox, Francis, 403 Marlborough St., Boston.
Fox, Marion, 60 Wallingford Rd., Brighton.
Fox, Mary V., 403 Marlborough St., Boston.
Freedman, George, 59 Walnut Ave., Revere.
Friedman, Merton H., 11 Pleasanton St., Roxbury.
Gaddy, J. A., 252 Aspinwall Ave., Brookline.
Gill, Nora, 315 Park St., W. Roxbury.
Gordon, Hayes, 134 Brighton St., Boston.
Goudreau, Gerard L., 184 High St., Somersworth, N. H.
Greenough, H. Vose, Jr., 39 Worthington Rd., Brookline.
Hahn, Jacob W., 99 Ellington St., Dorchester.
Hall, Ruth, D., 18 Parkway Rd., Brookline.
Hall, Peter C., 18 Parkway Rd., Brookline.
Hartmann, Clifton, 11 Charles St., Danvers.
Helfant, Eli., 22 Crowell St., Dorchester.
Hebert, Margaret, 36 West St., Quincy.
Herforth, Harry B., 133 Hemenway St., Boston.
Hobbs, Beecher (Mrs.), 12 Solon St., Newton Highlands.
Hobbs, Beecher, 12 Solon St., Newton Highlands.
Holden, Emma N., 17 Gray St., Cambridge.
Horner, Matt, 32 Spring Park Ave., Jamaica Plain.
Johnson, Louise H., 42 Loring Rd., Winthrop.
Jones, Howard V., Jr., 185 Oliver rd., Waban.
Kaplan, Seymour, 1017 Beacon st., Brookline.
Katz, Sylvia, 122 Talbot ave., Dorchester.
Kaufman, Henry, 18 Blossom st., Lynn.
King, H. P., 82 Stedman st., Brookline.
Klopstock, Arthur, 371 Broadway, Cambridge.
Klopstock, Regina, 371 Broadway, Cambridge.
Kraus, Max, 72 So. Pleasant st., Hingham.
Landry, L. J., 127 Division st., Woonsocket, R. I.
Lane, C. W. (Mrs.), North st, Foxboro.
Lane, F. S., 70 Revere st., Boston.
Lane, Mary, 23 Cedar terrace, Milton.
Lapidas, Manny, 68 Thornton st., Revere.
Lapp, Virginia, 9 Radnor rd., Brighton.
Larson, Mary L., 81 Lovell rd., Watertown.
Larson, Robert N., 81 Lovell rd., Watertown.
Leary, Timothy, Jr. (Mrs.), 1203 Boylston st., Boston.
Lebowitz, Marshall, 470 Warren st., Roxbury.
Lehner, Philip, 72 So. Pleasant st., Hingham.
Leiter, Samuel, 40 Marlboro st., Chelsea.
Levenson, David M., 70 Phillips st., Boston.
Levine, Roslyn, 15 Maybrook st., Dorchester.
Levinson, Leon, 25 Hutchings st., Roxbury.
Levinson, Mollie, 25 Hutchings st., Roxbury.
Littman, Ruth, 399 High st., W. Medford.
Livingston, Hart L., 30 Whitney rd., Quincy.
Lynch, Rosamond, 717 Mass. ave., Boston.
Lythgoe, Albert H., 5 Gorham ave., Brookline.
Maclean, Robert, 214 Centre st., Dorchester.
MacDonald, John, 22 Middlesex park, Lowell.
Marasco, L. A., 149 Herbert Rd., Arlington.
Martin, R. G., Harvard Business School, Soldiers Field, Boston.
Mason, William W., 39 Anderson St., Boston.
Matthews, Ralph V., 60 Garden St., Cambridge.
Maxon, Thomas R., 121 Charles St., Boston.
McRae, Mary I., Lee, Maine.
Merritt, Robert, 881 Mass. Ave., Cambridge.
Michaels, Theodore A., 2 O St., South Boston.
Miller, Richard H., 1038 Beacon St., Brookline.
Millrood, George, 7 Sentry Hill Place, Boston.
Mooney, Frank A., 241-A Riverside Ave., Medford.
Mosser, Jacob, 128 Avalon Rd., Waban.
Mowey, Sherwood C., 36 Joy St., Boston.
Mullen, Margaret G., 18 Arlington St., Brockton.
Murray, Donald M., 75 Pleasant St., Wakefield.
Myers, Irene, 49 Embassy Rd., Brighton.
Nappe, Robert, 34 Central Ave., Danvers.
Nichols, R. H. Jr., 26 Concord Ave., Cambridge.
Norris, Diana, 8 Kilsyth Terrace, Brighton.
Parsons, R. S., 72 Central St., Foxboro.
Parsons, William, 27 Seventh St., New Bedford.
Pastene, Jerome J., 56 Commonwealth Ave., Boston.
Patton, Constance C., 100 Cushing Ave., Belmont.
Patton, Miner T., 100 Cushing Ave., Belmont.
Payeska, Cecilia M., 88 Gainsboro St., Suite 4, Boston.
Pearson, Norman, 64 Robbins Rd., Arlington.
Perry, Parker W., 4 Allen Place, Melrose.
Power, Robert W., 57 Irving St., Waltham.
Pressel, Charlotte, 167 Prospect St., Prov., R. I.
Procopio, Domenic R., 264 Boylston St., Brockton.
Redgate, Frederick F. 56 Claybourne St., Dorchester.
Reed, Ida 175 Ocean St., Lynn.
Reeves, Arthur C. 149 Wood Ave., Hyde Park.
Reid, Mary 9 Kent St., Brookline.
Reuter, Dorothy L. 282 Belmont St., Watertown.
Reuter, Norman L., 282 Belmont St., Watertown.
Rich, Alan 6 Shailer St., Brookline.
Richter, Emma 576 Warren St., Roxbury.
Riemenscheider, Robert 32 Rutland St., Boston.
Robbins, Bernard 46 Choate Rd., Belmont.
Robbins, Lillian 46 Choate Rd., Belmont.
Roekler, Helen K. Love Lane, East Greenwich, R. I.
Roy Klaus G. 361 Beacon St., Boston.
Rubinstein, David 126 Fourth St., Chelsea.
Sandberger, S. J. (Mrs.) 25 Fair Oaks Drive, Lexington.
Saslaw, Sylvia 27 Hildreth St., Dorchester.
Sawyer, E. Leigh 28 Fuller Rd., Watertown.
Sawyer, Sara Z. 246 So. Huntington Ave., Jamaica Plain.
Schirch, Douglas F. 316 Huntington Ave., Boston.
Seiberling, J. F. Eliot House (G-21), Cambridge.
Seiberling, Mary G. 714 N. Portage Path, Akron, Ohio.
Shannon, James United Church, Walpole Mass.
Shapley, Carl B. 60 Garden St., Cambridge.
Sherman, Albert C., Jr. 8 Central Ave., Newtonville.
Sherman, Elizabeth K. 8 Central Ave., Newtonville.
Sherman, Hannah M. 8 Central Ave., Newtonville.
Sherman, Margaret, 8 Central Ave., Newtonville.
Shurnofsky, Mollie, 25 Frontenac St., Dorchester.
Siegel, Edward 68 Boston Ave., W. Medford.
Smith, Marion L., 127 Timson St., E. Lynn.
Solomon, Chester 128 Columbia St., Brookline.
Solomon, Elinor R., 360 Main St., Everett.
Sperber, Doris, 41 South Russell, St., Boston.
Sperber, N. H., 41 South Russell St., Boston.
Steinberg, Arthur, 29 Oldfields St., Boston.
Stevens, Prescott A., 9 Stetson Way, Waban.
St. George, Paul, 11 James Ave., Hull.
Stockmayer, W. H., 342 Commonwealth Ave., Boston.
Stone, Geraldine, 44 Walker St., Cambridge.
Strassburg, Robert (Mrs.), 38 Bigelow St., Cambridge.
Strassburg, Robert, 38 Bigelow St., Cambridge.
Sullivan, Louise, 18 Landseer St., W. Roxbury.
Surette, Dorothy (Mrs.), 783 Huntington Ave., Boston.
Taylor, Richard M., 38 Winsor Ave., Watertown.
Tucker, Ruth, 235 W. Elm St., Brockton.
Vazakas, George, 750A Huntington Ave., Boston.
Weiss, Paul H., 109 Bellevue St., W. Roxbury.
Winship, Wm. Henry, Jr., 209 Maple St., Malden.
Wolk, Minnie, 512 Pierce Bldge., Copley Sq., Boston.
Young, Chandler, 1125 Commonwealth Ave., Allston.
Zohn, Harry, 65 Nightingale St., Dorchester.

IMPORTANT

Those who qualified in the first Musiquiz may take part in the second Musiquiz, Sunday night, and may fill out another ballot if they wish. However, they should not file their ballots in the receptacles since it merely complicates the judge's task.

The second Musiquiz is not a "finals" contest in any sense of the word. It is merely a second elimination, during which a minimum of 200 more qualifiers will be selected.

On Thursday, June 26, the 400 qualifiers will take part in the semi-finals in Symphony Hall. Further details of importance to qualifiers will be published daily in The Herald from now on. Watch for them.

All Contribute To Musiquiz

Who's running the Musiquiz?

It's a question everybody asks, and quite naturally.

In the first place, the Boston Symphony Orchestra is behind The Herald Musiquiz. It's there because it must raise additional funds for its Pension Fund, a project, incidentally which makes possible the innumerable free concerts and benefits with which the Symphony Orchestra itself is always so prodigal.

Then there's RCA-Victor. Being the first and only company to record the music of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Boston Pops Orchestra, the Victor Company is naturally interested in its career, since the royalties it pays the Boston Symphony from its Victor record sales go to the Pension Fund in large measure.

Then there's your neighborhood Victor record dealer, nearly 100 in all in this vicinity, and all intensely interested in furthering the love of good music on records in the general public.

And finally, The Boston Herald, New England's leading morning newspaper. Already nationally famous for its annual fall Book Fair which is the biggest yearly event in literary circles, The Herald is honored to be associated with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Musiquiz, certain to become one of the biggest musical events ever sponsored.

Program for Second Herald Musiquiz

In addition to the encores and special attractions which Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops orchestra will present Sunday night at the second Herald Musiquiz in the Boston Garden beginning at 8 o'clock, the official program is as follows:

"Stars and Stripes Forever".....Sousa
"Bolero" .....Ravel
Concerto in F for piano and orchestra.....Gershwin
(Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist)

R. H. WHITE'S

MUSIQUIZZERS!

WE HAVE ALL THE SELECTIONS OF THE BOSTON 'POPS' ORCHESTRA ON

Victor Records

Here's luck in the Musiquiz! Guessing is fun, but it's more fun to know. All the answers are in the music of the Boston Pops Orchestra. You listen and learn. White's has all the information you need—tickets, too (25c each). Listed below are but a few of the records you should have.

MENDELSSOHN'S CONCERTO NO. 1 in G Minor, with Jesus Maria Sanroma, 6 sides $3.50
RHAPSODY IN BLUE, Sanroma $2.50
DANCE OF THE HOURS (parts 1 and 2)..$1.00
POET AND PEASANT OVERTURE.....$1.00
HUNGARIAN RHAPSODY $1.00
PANIS ANGELICUS, AVE MARIA.....$1.00
STRAUSS WALTZES (Album 445).....$5.25

RECORDS AND RADIOS—FOURTH FLOOR

SANDLER'S 136 MAIN ST. GLOUCESTER MASS.

Most Complete Record Shop in the North Shore
Complete Stock of Boston "Pops" and Boston Symphony Records.

Invites You To Hear

MUSIQUIZ TIPS ON Victor Records

Here's A HOT TIP

Jesus Maria Sanroma and the Boston "Pops" Orchestra, directed by Arthur Fiedler, playing Mendelssohn's Concerto No. 1, in G Minor and Songs Without Words.

Album M-780, 6 sides.
List price $3.50

And here are some other suggestions for listening

1. Poet and Peasant Overture, Parts 1 and 2. Record No. 11986.....$1.00
2. Cradle Song (Brown's) Perpetuum Mobile. Record No. 4435.....$ .75
3. In a Persian Market. Parts 1 and 2. Record No. 4338.....$ .75

Get Your Tickets Here

MUSIQUIZ TICKETS ON SALE— ALL POPS & SYMPHONY RECORDS IN STOCK

Victor Records

RHAPSODY IN BLUE—SANROMA (PIANO) M358 .....$2.50
SCHUBERT'S UNFINISHED SYMPHONY M319 .....$3.50
PETER AND THE WOLF (Orchestral Fairy Tale) M566 $3.50

Mail and Phone Orders Filled.

RECORDS—RADIOS—REFRIGERATORS

J. G. KAUFMAN CO.
20 PROVINCE ST., BOSTON CAP. 7650
Opposite City Hall—Between Bromfield & School

Get hot tips on The MUSIQUIZ

BLAIR'S Foodland
formerly BIB BEAR
Mystic Valley Parkway
Corner Boston Ave.
Medford, Tel Mys. 3997
Radio & Record Dept.
HEAR THE BOSTON "POPS" ORCHESTRA, ON Victor Records
HERE'S A TIP
Mendelssohn's Concerto No. 1 in G Minor with Jesus Maria Sanroma. Ask for Album M-780. List price only $3.50
GET YOUR TICKETS HERE 25c

IN QUINCY! the MUSIQUIZ headquarters

You may hear any and all of the Boston "Pops" Orchestra records as well as any other of your Victor favorites.

$3.50

Tickets on sale at Quincy Music Shop
"Everything in Music"
8 GRANITE ST., QUINCY

MUSIQUIZZERS!

Don't Miss the Musical Masterpiece for June ON

Victor Records

Jesus Maria Sanroma and the Boston "Pops" Orchestra, directed by Arthur Fiedler, playing Mendelssohn's Concerto No. 1, in G Minor and Songs Without Words Album M-780, 6 sides. List price $3.50.

We invite you to listen to Sanroma doing

M-358 Rhapsody in Blue — only $3.50
M-690 Concerto in F (Gershwin)—only $4.00

Get Your Musiquiz Concert Tickets Here! Don't Delay—Our Supply Is Limited.

THE MUSIC BOX TEL. 1174
14 CENTRAL ST., INC.
WELLESLEY, MASS.

The Answers For First prize in the Musiquiz are on our counter!

HORA STACCATO Roumanian Dance) Dinicu-Heifetz 4413
CRADLE SONG (Wiegenlied) (Arr. by G. H. L. Smith) Brahms 4435
ARTISTS' LIFE WALTZ Strauss 12194
SWING STUFF McBride 12597
FOSTER GALLERY Gould Album M—727
MERRY WIVES OF WINDSOR Nicolai 12533
JALOUSIE (Jealousy) Tango Tzigane) Gade 12160

That is the absolute truth—for the Boston Pops Orchestra, at their performance in the Boston Garden, at the Musiquiz, will play only those pieces which have been previously recorded on RCA Victor Records.

Have You Heard the New June Album
MENDELSSOHN'S CONCERTO NO. 1 in G MINOR
PLAYED BY THE BOSTON POPS ORCHESTRA

Sure to be among the questions asked during the question period at the Musiquiz in the Boston Garden will be mentions and queries on these selections. Come in and hear this—and many other of the popular classics as recorded for

RCA Victor Records

M. Steinert & Sons
164 BOYLSTON ST., BOSTON, MASS.

TICKETS FOR THE BOSTON HERALD'S MUSIQUIZ ARE ON SALE AT THIS OFFICE
TICKETS 25 CENTS NO SEATS RESERVED

Hear the Concert and Compete in the Second Musiquiz

by the Boston Pops Orchestra
Featuring selections available exclusively on
VICTOR RECORDS
and Win the 1941 RCA Victrola
Grand Prize Model

Join musical Boston in the second performance of this fascinating event. You have every opportunity to win one of the many valuable Musiquiz prizes. Refresh your musical memory by listening to Victor Records at your Local Victor dealer.

GET YOUR TICKETS NOW!

Seats in Boston Garden are available through your local Victor Record dealer—Be sure to get yours—Only 25c each.

You'll enjoy the Musiquiz More
If you Know the Victor Record Selections
Played by Jesus Maria Sanroma, and the Boston Pops Orchestra, Arthur Fiedler Conducting.

They Will Help You Win!
The World's Greatest Artists are on Victor Records

Music Lovers and Musiquizzers'

Don't Miss the Victor Musical Masterpieces of the Month
Performed by the famous Boston artists
Mendelssohn's Concerto No. 1, in G. Minor and Songs Without Words

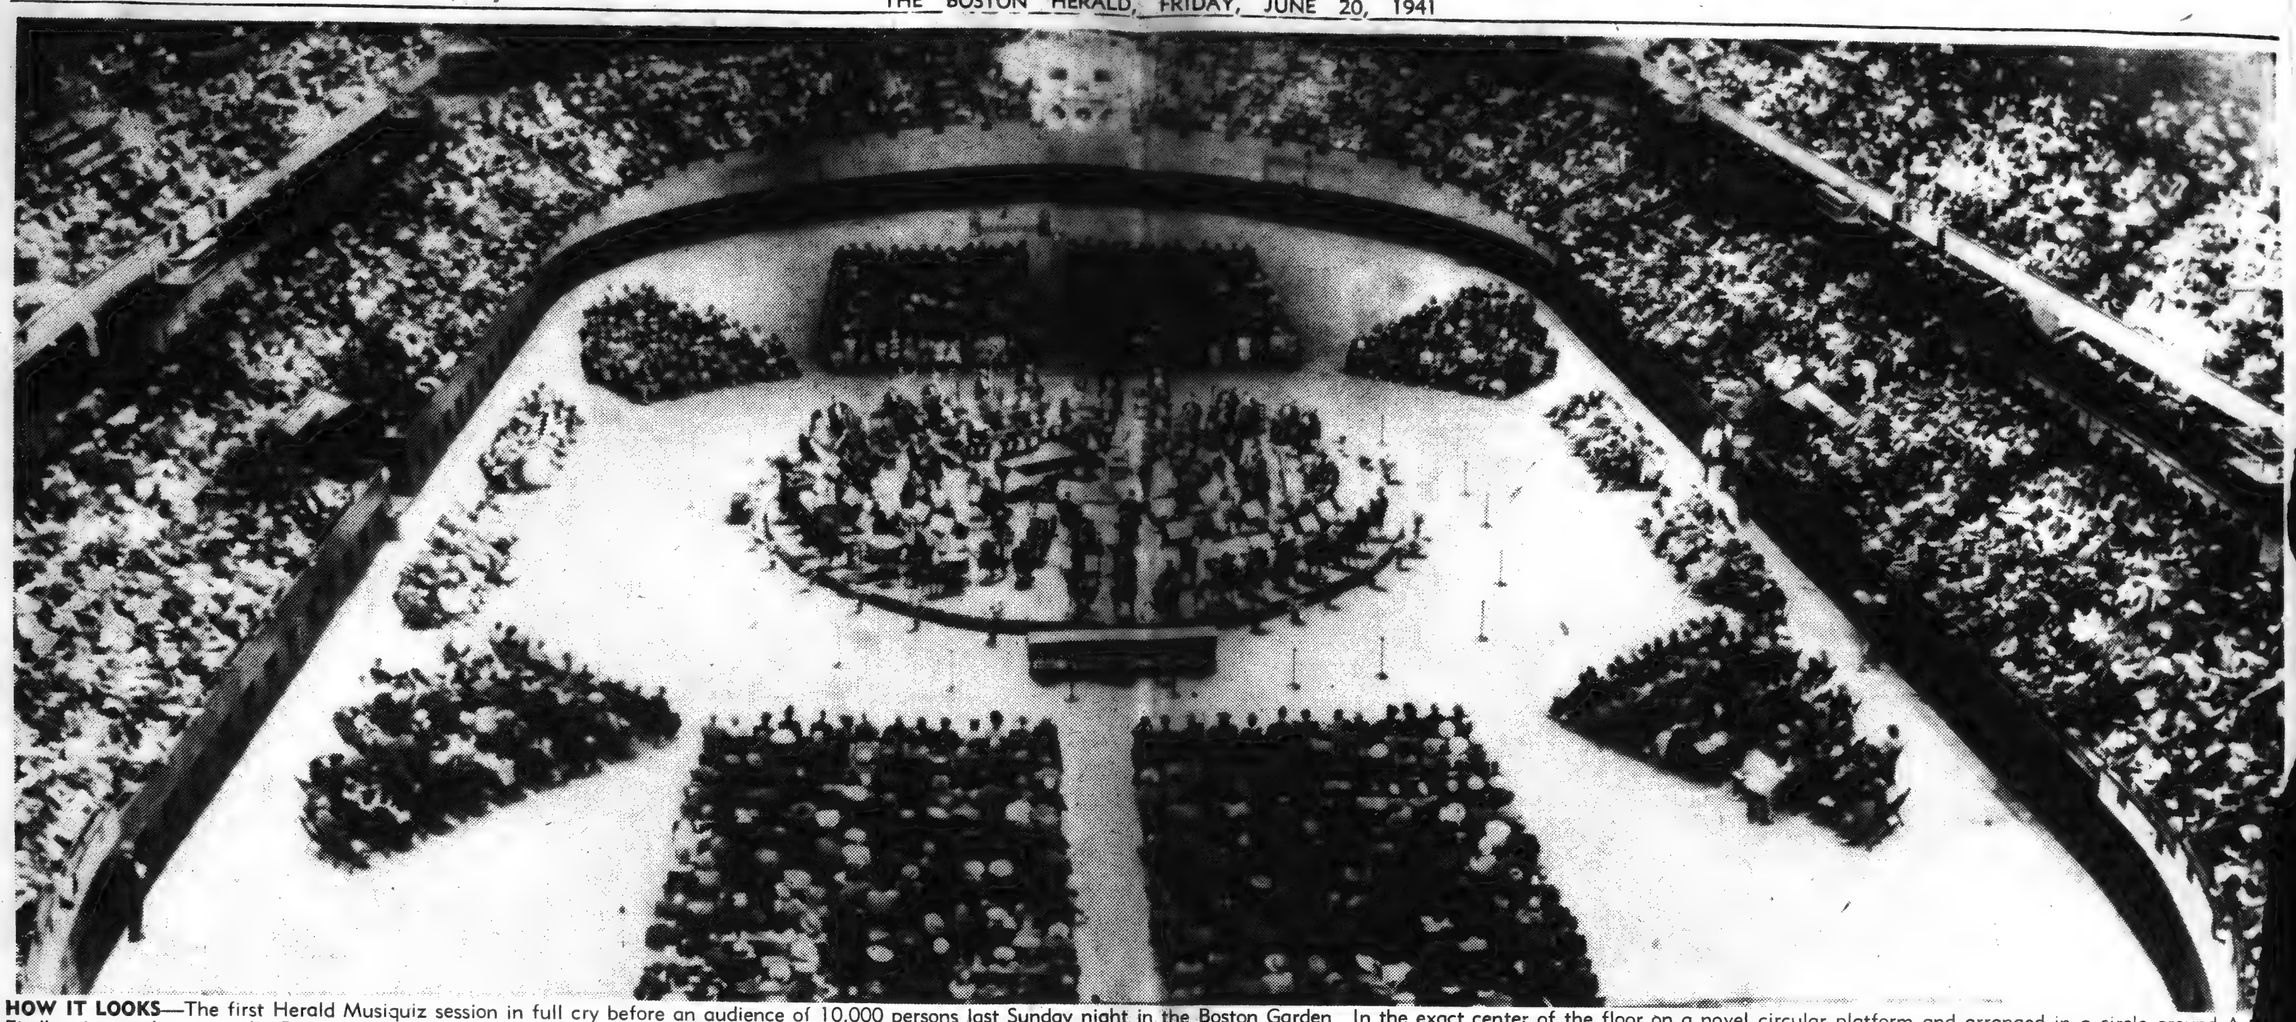
Album m-780 6 sides. List price $3.50

VISIT YOUR VICTOR RECORD DEALER TODAY!

To Be Awarded
The Top Musiquiz Winner!
THE GRAND PRIZE MODEL
RCA VICTROLA
—together with $50.00 worth of Victor Records of the winner's choice!

Model V-301—A Masterpiece of craftsmanship in a superb cabinet of Chippendale style. Phonograph-radio features include De luxe RCA Victor Gentle-Action Automatic Record-Changer . . . Specially designed Oversize De luxe Motor . . . Exclusive RCA Victor Tone Guard . . . 10 RCA Victor Preferred Type Tubes . . . Famous Oversees Dial, and many more. Designed for use with television and frequency modulation attachments.



HOW IT LOOKS—The first Herald Musiquiz session in full cry before an audience of 10,000 persons last Sunday night in the Boston Garden. In the exact center of the floor on a novel circular platform and arranged in a circle around Ar Fiedler, its conductor, is the Boston Pops orchestra which, with the Boston Herald, RCA-Victor and neighborhood Victor dealers is sponsoring the unique concert and musical quiz to benefit the Pension Fund of the Symphony orchestra.

Musiquiz Judges Select 205 Semi-Finalists in Unique Event

By RUDOLPH ELIE, Jr.

The hard-pressed Herald Musiquiz judges, swamped with more than 4500 Musiquiz ballots, which were turned in at the Boston Garden last Sunday night following the first mass musical quiz in history, emerged from their bastioned cellar in Symphony Hall, yesterday, gulped the fresh air, and announced the names of the 205 persons whose high scores had qualified them as semi-finalists in the unique musical contest.

Turning in more than 300 man-hours on the difficult and responsible task of culling the high-scorers from the masses of ballots, the judges published the names of the qualifiers in alphabetical order without committing themselves upon the actual order of merit.

They indicated, however, that the number of perfect ballots was small, and that the great majority of Musiquizzers qualifying had stumbled on two or more questions.

TEMPO OF "BOLERO" BOTHERS

Bringing about the downfall of the greatest number was the question concerning the tempo of Ravel's "Bolero," a fact which astonished Symphony Hall officials since the celebrated work in 3-4 time has long been the most popular selection the Pops orchestra plays. It will be played in its entirety Sunday night at the second Herald Musiquiz.

Equally hazardous from the Musiquizzer's standpoint was the request to identify the instrument which played the solo passage in the "Song of Idia" excerpt. One Musiquizzer was certain it was a "hobo", while another wrote that it was a piccolo. Actually, the instrument was an English horn.

Worthy of especial comment was the number of qualifiers of the same families. Husband and wife, brother and sister, father and son and mother and son combinations were much in evidence throughout the ballots. It was clearly evident, however, that they had not helped one another, since time and again, their ballots contained differences of opinion. Noteworthy, too, was the high percentage of men casting ballots.

UNANIMOUS IN ENTHUSIASM

Questioned at their homes and offices yesterday, qualifying Musiquizzers were unanimous in their enthusiasm for the Herald Musiquizzes.

Felix Fox, noted Boston pianist, teacher and composer, who was among the 205 qualifiers, said "The Musiquiz was good fun from start to finish. It was interesting to hear the Pops orchestra in the Garden and to see the large audience enjoying the whole procedure. The Musiquiz part of the program was well handled by those in charge. I am looking forward with a great deal of pleasure to more of them."

His son Francis, 22, a student at B. U. Business School and a recent Harvard graduate who also qualified, said that he was "a good listener, but not a musician." He, too, says that Boston has taken the Musiquiz idea with great enthusiasm.

Charles Donahue, 25, of Huntington avenue, said he went to the Musiquiz "for the fun of it and to see how far I could go before I was eliminated." A student, Donahue plays the flute.

COMMENDS THE HERALD

Leonard Anthony Marasco of 149 Herbert road, Arlington, a Herald Musiquiz qualifier, is a grandson of Anthony Pansilio, who years ago was one of a group of Boston musicians who founded the old Boston Music Union. Although musically inclined, Mr. Marasco, who is 29 years old, never followed the piano or violin which he studied for a time in his boyhood days.

A graduate of Tufts College a few years ago, he is a school teacher and has this year been serving as substitute teacher in the Arlington schools. He thinks the Herald Musiquiz is a wonderful idea, and commends most highly the Herald in this effort. Unmarried he lives with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Leonard Marasco in Arlington.

CLARENCE H. BARBER

Clarence Howard Barber, another of the successful contestants, is son of the Rev. and Mrs. Laurence L. Barber of 11 Maple street, Arlington, with whom he lives. Enthusiastic about Musiquiz, Mr. Barber is furthering his study of music at the Harvard Graduate School, and plans later to teach the organ and piano. He was graduated from Harvard University in the class of 1940.

A talented musician, he is organist of the King's Chapel Sunday School in Boston, also at the Harvard Divinity School, and this summer will be music counsellor at Camp Lanakila in Fairlee, Vt. Mr. Barber's father is minister of the Orthodox Congregational Church in Arlington, and his older brother, Laurence L. Barber, Jr., of Cambridge, who is instructor in the Department of Government at Harvard, yesterday received his doctor of philosophy degree at the Harvard commencement. Clarence Barber is 22 years old, and is unmarried.

MORTON BLENDER

Morton Blender, 27, of 37 University road, Brookline, director of the well-known Radio Orchestral Hall program of classical music on the air, yesterday declared the questions in the first Musiquiz "certainly were no slouch." He said he was forced to whistle through one number several times before he could identify one passage played by the Pops orchestra as a Musiquiz question.

Blender, director of music at the radio station, studied music in Toronto and here in Boston. He plays the drums.

WALTER H. STOCKMAYER

Walter H. Stockmayer of 342 Commonwealth avenue, a former Rhodes scholar and now instructor of chemistry at Massachusetts Institute of Technology, thought the first Herald Musiquiz was easy but hailed its aim to make people more conscious of classical music.

A pianist since boyhood, Stockmayer praised The Herald for promoting such a highly cultural quiz program in the wake of the radio-popular secular information programs. He added that people today were more conscious of the classical works than five years ago and praised The Herald for responding to this trend with the Musiquiz.

EDWARD PIERCE FITCH

Edward Pierce Fitch of 100 Appleton street, Arlington Heights, one of The Herald musiquiz winners, thinks the musiquizzes are grand. He is a 25 years old and the son of Mrs. Allyn C. Fitch. Very fond of music, Mr. Fitch is a frequent attendant at the Boston Pops. It was three or four years ago that his mother first persuaded him to attend, and since then he has gone regularly. He often goes to the Boston Symphony concerts in the winter.

A regular reader of The Herald, he thinks the paper is doing a splendid thing in running the Musiquiz. He is a graduate of the Bentley School of Accounting and Finance and for more than a year has been connected with the Boston Woven Hose and Rubber Company in Cambridge. He is 25 years old.

MR., MRS. MINER T. PATTON

Mr. and Mrs. Miner T. Patton of 100 Cushing avenue, Belmont, entered the contest because a friend, Warren Fleischner of Milton, also a winner, told them how interesting and educational it would be.

Mrs. Patton and her husband, who are interested in music, said: "It was thrilling, we enjoyed it immensely and we are looking forward to next Sunday's program. The Musiquiz should help the people of Metropolitan Boston to appreciate good music." Mr. Patton is a teacher of mathematics at the Cunningham junior high school in Milton.

HOWARD V. JONES

Howard V. Jones, Jr., 19, of 185 Oliver road, Waban, another qualifier, said he was looking forward to Sunday's Musiquiz and another chance to test his music knowledge. A third year student at Harvard, young Jones make a hobby of collecting old music boxes. He has been playing the piano since he was five years old.

PRESCOTT A. STEVENS

Prescott A. Stevens, 18, of 9 Stetson way, Waban, who was about to leave on a moutnain climbing trip in New Hampshire when informed he qualified in the first Musiquiz, said he would cut short his stay and return to Boston in time to attend the second Sunday night.

Stevens, a Harvard junior majoring in mathematics, has been taking piano lessons since he was seven years old. He said he found the Musiquizzes extremely interesting and urged The Herald to continue them next year.

MR., MRS. JAMES B. HOBBS

Mr. and Mrs. James Beecher Hobbs of 12 Solon street, Newton Highlands, read the recent article in the Herald on the Musiquiz contest and decided to enter the event because they liked music and, it would be fun to guess the names of orchestral numbers.

The couple thought the program was not only interesting but very well conducted. Mrs. Hobbs said that such a program should mean "something to everybody who enjoys music." 'I hope the Herald continues the Musiquiz next year, it is educational and interesting," added Mrs. Hobbs.

Mr. and Mrs. Hobbs whose hobbies are music would like to see Boston the musical center of the East. Mr. Hobbs is not only a talented pianist but also a violinist.

ELI HELFAND

Eli Helfant, 26, of 22 Crowell street, Dorchester, a clerk in the labor board of the Navy yard at Charlestown, is well versed in music, having studies at the New England Conservatory of Music and majored in the subject at Harvard. Helfant agreed with many other qualifiers in urging The Herald to make the Musiquizzes annual events.

SAMUEL LEITER

Samuel Leiter, 19, of 40 Marlboro street, Chelsea, who ranked high among the qualifiers, is a member of the 1942 class at Harvard, where he is majoring in history. He admitted yesterday his technical knowledge of music was slight, stemming from "a dozen violin lessons taken when nine years old." He gained his familiarity with the classics and popular tunes by listening to records and the radio, and by attending operas at every opportunity.

MELVIN BLACK

Melvin Black, 23, of 62 Maywood street, Roxbury, is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph R. Black. He is a second year student at the Harvard Medical School, having graduated from Harvard College in 1940. He studied music in college and used to play the violin.

I am extremely fond of music and the Boston Herald musiquiz gave me a fine opportunity to see just what I knew. I think the quiz was swell and the program benefited the occasion, in that it made the affair both an educational as well as a musical feature."

RICHARD MILLER, JR.

Richard H. Miller Jr., 17-year-old student at Milton Academy, was surprised when told that he had qualified. He lives with his mother and father, Dr. and Mrs. Miller at 1038 Beacon street.

"I have taken music courses at school, but I certainly did not expect to be among those who qualified. I love to listen to concerts and operas. The Herald quiz gave me an opportunity to spend an evening that really was not wasted. I hope they make it an annual affair."

DANIEL, ESTHER CHANSKY

Daniel Chansky, 24, of 35 Warner street, Dorchester, is a student at Tufts Medical School. His sister, Esther, 18, also was one of the fortunate contestants to qualify. She is a graduate of the Burke High School and now works at the Hecht House, Dorchester.

Chansky studied music at Harvard College, where he graduated in 1939. Miss Chansky, who started her love for music at the Opportunity School in the South End, has composed several pieces.

"I thought the quiz a great deal of fun," Chansky said. "The questions were fair. I was surprised that I was able to qualify. It is the best idea ever put out by the Herald, and one worthy of a great newspaper."

His sister echoed the idea that the quiz was fine. "I am crazy about music and this was a chance to really enjoy it and have some fun, as well as try my luck. I guess everything worked out fine."

DOMENIC PROCOPIO

Domenic Procopio, of 264 Boylston st, Brockton is a graduate of Brockton High and Harvard College where he received A.B. and M.A. degrees, majoring in music.

"It was very interesting and entertaining and I enjoyed it immensely," he said of the quiz. "I was impressed by such a large, appreciative crowd sitting quietly and listening to good music, and by the manner in which the people entered the spirit of the occasion. The quiz was very fair, with just enough tricky questions to simplify the problem of elimination."

PAUL ST. GEORGE

Paul St. George, 20, another qualifier, is a junior at Holy Cross College and a prominent contributor of articles on music to the college magazine "The Purple." He lives at 58 Elmhurst road, Newton, in the winter and at 11 James avenue, Hull, during the summer. He recently won an award at college for a musical criticism of Walt Disney's "Fantasia."

Regarding the Musiquiz, St. George said, "I think it is a splendid idea, particularly at the present time, in serving to stimulate interest in music and music's history. The Herald is to be congratulated for its enterprise and initiative in this Musiquiz contest."

FREDERIC W. CAMPBELL

Frederic W. Campbell, Jr., 18, of 94 Plymouth avenue, Milton, has just completed his freshman year at Dartmouth College. He is the brother of Elizabeth Anne Campbell, who accompanied him Sunday night to the Musiquiz.

His reaction to the Sunday program was that the first part, or musical portion, was highly enjoyable and entertaining. The second part, the quiz, he found almost as entertaining for it showed plainly just what one's knowledge of music was. While not a finished musician as is his sister he does a creditable job on the accordion and in his younger days played the violin.

FATHER AND DAUGHTER

Capt. Arthur Klopstock, 371 Broadway, Cambridge, attached to the assistant Chief of staff's office at the Army Base, said last night: "I enjoyed every minute of the Musiquiz, it was the most interesting evening that I have spent in a long time. It was particularly thrilling because I like puzzles."

His daughter Regina, 17, who also qualified, said: "After studying piano for eight years, I feel that I appreciate music. I thought the Musiquiz was a lot of fun for 25 cents. It was well worth the money."

Miss Klopstock graduated from Cambridge High and Latin school last week and will study at the New England Conservatory of Music in the fall.

SYLVIA COHEN

Sylvia Cohen, 16-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Isreal Cohen, of 9 Union street, Cambridge, commenting on the Herald's recent musiquiz, said: "Gosh, I thought it was swell. I thought that the system set up by sound experts for asking questions was wonderful. I wish I could go to the musiquiz next Sunday, but I am having my own recital Sunday afternoon."

Sylvia is a junior at Cambridge

(Continued on Page Twenty-one)

Musiquiz Contest Prize List

FIRST PRIZE: An RCA-Victor console radio - phonograph model 103, valued at $275 AND $50 worth of Victor records of the winner's choice; total value, $325.

SECOND PRIZE: A deluxe trip for two to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival with the Boston Symphony orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky; value $150. (This is convertible to cash if the winner elects.)

THIRD PRIZE: A pair of seats to the 24 regular Saturday night concerts of the Boston Symphony orchestra; value $100.

FOURTH PRIZE: $50 worth of Victor records of the winner's choice;

AND

TEN PRIZES OF $10 worth of Victor records of the winner's selection and FIFTEEN PRIZES of $5 worth of Victor records of the winner's choice.

TOTAL VALUE OF PRIZES: $800.

DON'T MISS THE VICTOR MUSICAL MASTERPIECE FOR JUNE
CONCERTO IN G MINOR AND SONGS WITHOUT WORDS
by Mendelssohn
Boston "Pops" Orchestra, Arthur Fiedler, Conductor, With Jesus Maria Sanroma, Pianist. Album M-780 (also in automatic sequences), 6 sides. List price $3.50
Complete Line of Classical & Popular Victor Records
PHONE LIBerty 5063

Mosher Music Co., Inc.
Boston's Most Convenient Music Store
181 Tremont St. Near Corner Boylston St.

2ND. MUSIQUIZ

RCA VICTOR RECORDS YOU WILL LIKE

M-358 Rhapsody in Blue only $3.50

M-690 Concerto in F (Gershwins)—only $4.00

Bolero Album — Ravel M-352 .....$2.50

New Vienna Waltz — Strauss 4478 75

Ave Maria — Schubert 13589 .....$1.00

Capriccio (Jesus Sanroma)—Stravinsky M-685 $2.50

We carry a complete line of Victor Records

Have You Heard the New June Album

It will pay you to hear and know The Victor Musical Masterpiece MENDELSSOHN'S Concerto No. 1, in G Minor, Played by Jesus Maria Sanroma. Ask for Album M-780 (also an automatic sequence), 6 sides. List price $3.50.

TICKETS FOR THE 2nd MUSIQUIZ

NOW ON SALE AT

HALE'S Mail and phone orders filled IN WELLESLEY

852 Washington St., Wellesley Hills, Wel. 1142—open Evenings

Brookline Music & Radio Co.
32 HARVARD ST
BROOKLINE

Invites You to Hear THE BOSTON "POPS" ORCHESTRA on Victor Records

MUSIQUIZ TIP!
Ask To Hear the Victor Musical Masterpiece for June Featuring
The Boston "Pops" Orchestra conducted by Arthur Fiedler and Jesus Maria Sanroma in Mendelssohn's Concerto No. 1 in G Minor and Songs Without Words

GET TICKETS NOW FOR THE MUSIQUIZ

AT THIS STORE SUNDAY, JUNE 22 NO SEATS RESERVED

25c

The most complete stock of Victor and Bluebird Records in Metropolitan Boston. Complete catalogue free upon request.

Beacon 3675 Open Day & Evening Est. 1920

MUSIQUIZZERS!
KNOW YOUR MUSIC FROM CENTRE RADIO CO.
NEWTON CENTRE
HEAR THE MUSIC OF THE BOSTON "POPS" ORCHESTRA ON Victor Records
Don't Miss the Victor Musical Masterpiece for June
Concerto in G Minor and Songs Without Words by Mendelssohn. Boston "Pops" Orchestra, Arthur Fiedler, Conductor, With Jesus Maria Sanroma, Pianist. Album M-780 (also in automatic sequences), 6 sides. List price $3.50.
GET YOUR TICKETS HERE! 25c
95 Union St., Newton Centre. Tel. Lasell 2621

Brockton! Flash!
Get hot tips on MUSIQUIZ by going to see BILLY BURKE at EDGAR'S MUSIC BOX
195 Main St., Brockton
Tel. "One"
(Downstairs Store)
"Tops" by the "Pops"
1. Hungarian Dance 5 & 6 Victor 4321
2. Old Times Night At The Pops Victor 4395
3. Mendelssohn's Concerto No. 1 M-780

Get set for the Second MUSIQUIZ at STACKPOLE'S
27 MARKET ST.
LYNN, MASS. TEL. 2-5348
Will have the answers in our complete stock of Boston "Pops" Recordings on Victor Records
TIP TO ALL MUSIQUIZZERS
Be Sure to Hear the Victor Musical Masterpieces for June!
ASK FOR ALBUM M-780
Concerto No. 1, in G Minor and Songs Without Words (Mendelssohn) Jesus Maria Sanroma and Boston "Pops" Orchestra conducted by Arthur Fiedler. 6 sides.
GET TICKETS NOW AT THIS STORE FOR SUNDAY, JUNE 22. NO SEATS RESERVED

LISTEN! NEEDHAM
MUSIQUIZ
BOSTON GARDEN
June 22nd
Come in and get your ticket for this musical treat for only 25 cents. Let us play for you—
MENDELSSOHN
Concerto No. 1 in G Minor
Sanroma and the Boston "Pops"
Standard Radio Co.
1017 Great Plain Avenue
Tel. Nee 0480-M

Musiquiz Judges Select 205 Semi-Finals in Unique Event

(Continued from Page 20)

High and Latin school and has been studying the piano for seven years.

H. GRACE CARLSON

Miss H. Grace Carlson, 19, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John A. Carlson, 22 Martin road, Milton, is a member of the class of 1943 at Simmons College. She has played the piano since childhood.

She attended Sunday night's session at the Garden and was particularly impressed by the attitude of the audience, "so large, intelligent in its reactions, and so deeply interested." Her reaction was that the entire affair was pretty specific and most informative, stirring up forgotten music knowledge and showing pretty clearly how much one knew about the subject.

J. MAURICE BEATON

J. Maurice Beaton, 21, of 91 Meredith circle, Milton, is a member of the Harvard Class of 1942. He played the piano as a boy, up to his twelfth year, then dropped . He only resumed its serious study a year ago.

Beaton said he enjoyed last Sunday night's program at the Garden and thought it was most beneficial to all, regardless of their education in music. He believes the Herald-Traveler should be commended for its initiative in making such quizes available to the music loving public.

WARREN E. FLEISCHER

Warren E. Fleischner, 20, of 276 Center street, Milton, is a member of the class of 1942 at Harvard, where he is majoring in music. He plays both piano and organ, and substitutes as organist at the famous "Little Church" of the First Parish, Milton.

Fleischner enqoyed the quiz immensely, and considered the music period worth going a long distance to hear. The question and answer period he considered very educational.

DR. LAURENCE BARBER

Know your Pops concert programs and symphonies if you wish to be a successful contest in The Herald Musiquiz, Dr. Laurence Barber, an instructor in the government department at Harvard, and his wife, Lucia, warned future competitors in the Musiquiz yesterday.

"The acoustics were marvelous, program brilliant," the couple exclaimed at their home, 1200 Massachusetts avenue, Cambridge, yesterday. "We felt that the Musiquiz covered a wide range and that the questions were well chosen."

Dr. Barber, the son of the Rev. Laurence Barber of the Orthodox Congregational Church, Arlington, received his degree of Doctor of Philosophy at Harvard commencement yesterday. The couple attended the Pops last evening.

ANNE AND FREDERIC CAMPBELL

ELIZABETH CAMPBELL

Miss Elizabeth Anne Campbell, 20, is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frederick W. Campbell, 94 Plymouth avenue, Milton. She will be a senior this coming year at Bryn Mawr College. She has been playing the piano since childhood and greatly enjoys it.

Her impressions of her visit to the Boston Garden on Sunday night were clear cut and definite. She found the first or musical part most entertaining and enjoyable, a type of program that would appeal to the majority of lovers of music.

ABRAHAM ALOFF

Abraham M. Aloff, 33, of 243 Columbia road, Dorchester, a graduate of Harvard Engineering School and Harvard College and at present employed at hte Civil Service Commission, was surprised when informed that he and his sister, Miss Rose Aloff, 24, a nurse at the Beth Israel Hospital had qualified.

"I have been interested in music for many years and my interest became keen when I started to collect records five years ago. The quizzz interested me intensely. Boston has a high percentage of music appreciation lovers. The Herald has gauged the intelligence of the city well in running an enterprise of this kind."

His sister said that she became interested in music through force. "I was forced to listen to my brother's records each morning. They awakened me from sleep. I soon became a partner in his collecting. I found The Herald quiz exactly to my liking. It brought out a great response, and I found my neighbors enjoyed it just as much as I."

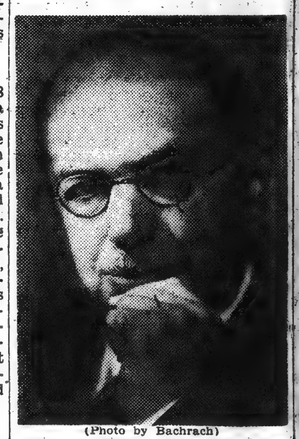
MARGARET G. MULLEN

Miss Margaret G. Mullen of 18 Arlington street, Brockton, is a graduate of Wellesley College, class of 1925. At Wellesley she won the William Billings prize for talent in music. She was soloist with the glee club, conductor of the orchestra and wrote music for an original operetta. She later studied in Paris.

"I have never attended a more thrilling event, on pure entertainment basis, than the Musicquiz, which envoked the kind of enthusiasm of a big sports event," Miss Mullen said yesterday. "To a musician, however, it was highly encouraging to see so much interest evidence in music itself, the excellent orchestral performance and the brilliant playing of Boston's beloved soloist."

JEROME J. PASTENE

HERBERT L. BERMAN



(Photo by Bachrach)
FELIX FOX

HERBERT L. BERMAN

Herbert L. Berman, 20, of 17 Kirkwood road, Brighton, was the youngest student to graduate from Boston Latin School in 1936 and last year was graduated from Harvard College as a Phi Beta Kappa student. He now is a sophomore at Harvard law school. He plays the violin and collects symphony records. He frequently attends operas and concerts.

"The musiquiz could not have been dplicated any place else in the world, except Boston, with the success and the fun. The Herald realized the great musical taste of the Boston people and gave them the best contest and educational features ever. I and my friends had a swell time."

BENJAMIN EDELSTEIN

Benjamin Edelstein, 25, is a graduate of Harvard College, where he studied harmony, and of Northeastern University. He plays the piano, guitar and violin, attends operas whenever possible, and collects records.

"I, like a great many others, think the Musiquiz idea is tops. It is one worth perpetuating and should certainly become a permanent fixture, as the Pops or the concerts at the Esplanade. The affair was run in an excellent manner and with good taste, providing a lot of fun and education."

CHESTER SOLOMON

Chester Solomon, 23, of 123 Columbia street, Brookline, is a graduate of Harvard University and is at present attending the Harvard Dental School, where he recently won a scholarship. He plays the piano and has a large collection of records. He is an active member of the Harvard Glee Club.

"I enjoyed the quiz tremendously," he said. "I think it is one of the best ideas brought before the public in a long time. It gives an excellent lesson in music and at the same time gives a lot of fun. Everybody around me appreciated it and it is certainly in keeping with the high calibre of The Herald."

JEROME J. PASTENE

Jerome J. Pastene, 24, of 56 Commonwealth avenue, is in charge of the record department at the Boston Music Company and writes the record review for the concern. He is author of a book on music for children. Pastene said he thought last Sunday's Musiquiz was harder than he expected.

ALLAN RICH

Allan Rich, 17-year-old graduate of Boston Latin School, had just returned home, 6 Shailer street, Brookline, after taking his college board examinations when informed of his luck in the musiquiz. He is a former winner in The Herald spelling bee. Rich collects records and is frequently attends the operas and concerts.

"I go to as many concerts as I can afford and buy as many good records as my allowance permits. The quiz was lots of fun. I really had a swell time and I hope to go again next week, mainly for the program. I think it is a swell idea and I would go to one anytime. I think The Herald has done a lot for Boston by promoting the quiz. It is one of the few papers taking such an interest in the educational welfare of the city."

List of RCA-Victor Dealers Selling Tickets for Musiquiz

The Record Shop, 213 Pleasant St., Brockton, Mass.
A. T. Ball, Inc., 609 Main Street, Waltham, Mass.
C. V. Stackpole, 27 Market St., Lynn, Mass.
F. H. Marrane, Lynn, Mass.
Gaumont Bros., 338 Merrimack St., Lowell, Mass.
Bon Marche, Lowell, Mass.
F. J. Leone, 513 Essex St., Lawrence, Mass.
Haie's, 252 Washington St., Wellesley Hills.
Edgar's Music Box, Main St., Brockton, Mass.
M. Steinert & Sons, 306 Main St., Worcester, Mass.
Central Stores, 247 Main St., Brockton, Mass.
Boston Music Co., 116 Boylston St., Boston, Mass.
Briggs & Briggs, 1270 Mass. Ave., Cambridge, Mass.
Gilchrist Co., Boston, Mass.
O. W. Moncyer & Co., 498 Boylston St., Boston, Mass.
Mosher Music Co., 181 Tremont St., Boston, Mass.
M. Steinert & Sons, 162 Boylston St., Boston, Mass.
R. H. White Co., Boston, Mass.
Phonograph & Record Shop, 8 Milk St., Boston, Mass.
City Radio Co., 16 Brattle St., Boston, Mass.
Big Bear Market, Medford, Mass.
Brookline Music & Radio Co., 33 Harvard St., Brookline, Mass.
Centre Radio Co., 98 Union St., Newton Centre.
Mrs. E. A. Bowen, c/o F. N. Joslin, Malden, Mass.
E. O'Byrne DeWitt, 51 Warren St., Roxbury, Mass.
Peabody Music Store, 73 Merrimack St., Haverhill, Mass.
Master Tire & Radio Co., 291 Broadway, Lawrence, Mass.
Shirley Radio Co., 432 Shirley St., Revere, Mass.
Carl Seder, Trumbull Sq., Worcester, Mass.
Music Sales Corp., c/o McLellan's, Lynn, Mass.
Wes Feero, 15 Andrew St., Lynn, Mass.
Pearce Radio Co., Mt. Auburn St., Watertown, Mass.
A. Marks & Co., 77 Summer St., Boston, Mass.
Winslow Press, Winchester, Mass.
Rosen T. M. Co., 22 Scollay Sq., Boston, Mass.
Star Radio & Tel. Co., 94 Harvard Ave., Allston, Mass.
Ipswich Elec. Co., Ipswich, Mass.
Sandler's, Gloucester, Mass.
Farrington Radio Co., 501 Mass. Ave., Arlington, Mass.
Knuepfer & Dimmock, 286 Essex St., Lawrence, Mass.
Jerome L. Proctor, 889 Dorchester Ave., Dorchester, Mass.
Al's Radio Co., 89 Broadway, Lawrence, Mass.
Peter Venezia, c/o Mitchell & Co., Haverhill, Mass.
The Music Box, 10 Prospect St., Cambridge, Mass.
Miller Music Store, 149 Essex St., Salem, Mass.
Ted's Radio Shop, Webster, Mass.
LeFavour Music House, 184 Essex St., Salem, Mass.
Ye Brunswick Shoppe, 291 Cabot St., Beverly, Mass.
Cagan Music Store, Beverly, Mass.
Newton Music Store, 281 Washington St., Newton, Mass.
Standard Radio & Electric Co., 1017 Great Plain Ave., Needham, Mass.
Upham's, 216 Pleasant St., Malden, Mass.
Turner Radio & Elec. Co., 269 Brookline Ave., Boston, Mass.
Minute Man Radio Co., 28 Boylston St., Cambridge, Mass.
The Record Shop, 90 Mass. Ave., Cambridge, Mass.
Sears Roebuck & Co., Boston, Mass.
Sears, Roebuck & Co., Cambridge, Mass.
Krey Music Co., 623 Washington St., Boston, Mass.
Robinson Home Utilities, 1554 Hancock St., Quincy, Mass.
Jason's 1514 Hancock St., Quincy, Mass.
World Appliance Co., 1253 Hancock St., Quincy, Mass.
King's, Inc., 131 Central St., Lowell, Mass.
Temple Elec. Co., 66 Main St., Andover, Mass.
Concord Music Co., Concord, Mass.
Stone Radio Shop, 6 Pleasant St., Ayer, Mass.
The Book Shop, 536 Main St., Fitchburg, Mass.
Park Radio Co., 618 Main St., Winchester, Mass.
Nobo Company, 486 High St., W. Medford, Mass.
Music Box, Inc., 11 Central St., Wellesley, Mass.
J. G. Kaufman Co., 20 Province St., Boston, Mass.
Central Music Supplies, 31 Bennington St., East Boston.
Malden Jewelry Co., 27 Pleasant St., Malden, Mass.
Strandway Book Shop, 659 Boylston St., Boston, Mass.
The Melody Shop, 191 Mass. Ave., Boston, Mass.
Miss A. C. Cronin, 150 Boylston St., Boston, Mass.
College Music Shop, 331 Mass. Ave., Boston, Mass.
L. S. Gibson, 353 Newport Ave., Wollaston, Mass.
Quincy Music Shop, 8 Granite St., Quincy, Mass.
Milton Radio & Appl. Shop, 20 Adams St., Milton, Mass.
Lawrence Furniture Co., 540-546 Essex St., Lawrence, Mass.
Boyd's (Krey Music), Pleasant St., Malden, Mass.
Ed Gosselin's Radio Shoppe, 290 Main St., Hyannis, Mass.
Louis E. Dean, Hyannis, Mass.
Grove Hall Radio Co., 1159 Blue Hill Ave., Dorchester, Mass.
McClelland-Elwell Co., 577 Washington St., Dorchester, Mass.
Whitman Elec. Co., 553 Washington St., Whitman, Mass.
Sherman's, 50 Court St., Plymouth, Mass.
Sun Radio & Music Co., 648 Huntington Ave., Boston, Mass.
Denholm & McKay, Worcester, Mass.
M. Roper Co., 4 Foster St., Worcester, Mass.
J. McKenna, 19 Brattle St., Cambridge, Mass.
Warren Radio Co., 4 Elm St., Braintree, Mass.
Walter L. Reardon Tire Co., 701 Columbia Road, Dorchester, Mass.
Driscoli Radio & Elec. Co., 65 South St., Hingham, Mass.
De Ronsa Bros., Norwood.
Fuller Bros., Sthboro, Mass.
Murphy's New Store, Canton, Mass.

Congratulations

TO THE BOSTON HERALD AND BOSTON "P O P S" ORCHESTRA

Best of Luck to all the

MUSIQUIZZERS

We have complete stocks of all Boston Symphony and Boston "Pops" Victor Recordings, as well as practically everything else listed in the Victor Catalogue.

Competent personnel, adequate and comfortable demonstration facilities.

Victor Records

PHONOGRAPH & RECORD SHOP

8 MILK STREET Just off Washington HUB. 2296

MUSIC BOX in CAMBRIDGE

Invites you to hear THE BOSTON POPS ORCHESTRA on Victor Records

MUSIQUIZ TIPS

It will pay you to hear and know The Victor Musical Masterpiece, Mendelssohn's Concerto No. 1, in G Minor, played by Jesus Maria Sanroma. M-780—$3.50.

M-358 Rhapsody in Blue—only $3.50

M-690 Concerto in F (Gershwin)—only $4.00

GET TICKETS NOW FOR THE 2nd MUSIQUIZ

AT THIS STORE

25c SUNDAY, JUNE 22 NO SEATS RESERVED

MUSIC BOX 10 PROSPECT STREET CAMBRIDGE KIRkland 1124

MUSIQUIZ FANS

Listen to the "POPS" Recordings in our Music Shop.

All the answers to the Musiquiz are contained in our Victor records. Know them!

DON'T FORGET . . . . .

Jesus Maria Sanroma and the Boston "Pops" Orchestra, directed by Arthur Fiedler, playing Mendelssohn's Concerto No. 1, in G Minor and Songs Without Words. Album M-780, 6 sides. List price $3.50.

Get your Musiquiz tickets here, 25c

The Strandway Book Shop, Inc.

659 Boylston St., Boston

Between Dartmouth & Exeter

A-MARKS & CO. INC.

77 Summer St., Boston—4th Floor

Invites You to Come in and Browse Around the Music Shop

Where you can choose at your leisure all the Boston Symphony Pops orchestra selections of

RCA Victor Records

Relax in Comfort in sound proof booths. Hear and enjoy the Finer Tones of classical and semi-classical records.

A Complete Line at ALL Times

PHONE LIBERTY 1081

MORTON MUSIC SHOP

"Everything in recorded music"

4189 BLUE HILL AVE. GEN. 0300

Have fun at the MUSIQUIZ

Here's Prize Winning Help in the MUSIQUIZ!

Refresh your Musical Memory!

Listen to some of these important Victor Record Selections by The Boston Pops Orchestra.

Ask for Mendelssohn's Concerto No. 1, 6 sides, $3.50. We carry a complete stock of all Victor and Bluebird recordings.

GROVE HALL RADIO

4189 Blue Hill Ave., Dorchester

BOSTON MUSIC COMPANY

WE HAVE THE ANSWERS TO THE 2nd MUSIQUIZ TOO!

Guessing is fun but it is more fun to know! So come into "headquarters" and get all the prize winning help you can!

Have You Heard The New June Album

MENDELSSOHN'S CONCERTO NO. 1 IN G MINOR

Played by the Boston "Pops" Orchestra with Jesus Maria Sanroma. Album M-780 — six sides — $3.50

Tickets for these concerts here too!

Air-cooled booths reserved for Musiquiz Contestants.

Among the BOSTON POPS R C A VICTOR ORCHESTRA RECORDINGS

Bolero Album—Ravel M-352 ..... 2.50

Capriccio (Jesus Sanroma, Soloist)—Stravinsky M-685 ..... 2.50

Symphony No. 2 in D Major—Beethoven—M-625 ..... 4.00

Peter and the Wolf—Prokofieff—M-566 ..... 3.50

Symphony No. 5 in E Flat Major—Sibelius—M-474 5.50

Concerto No. 12 Larghetto—Handel—14231 ..... 1.00

Barber of Seville — Pasiello—12519 ..... 1.00

Cavalleria Rusticana — Intermezzo—Mascagni—4303 . . .75

Ave Maria—Schubert 13589 ..... 1.00

New Vienna Waltz—Strauss 4478 ..... .75

Fugato on a Well-Known Theme—McBride—4378 . . .75

AND ALL OTHER POPS RECORDS

BOSTON MUSIC COMPANY

116 Boylston Street—Next to Colonial Theatre

"In Boston Over Half A Century"

MORE EXCITEMENT MORE MUSICAL FUN

Second MUSIQUIZ

Sunday Night, June 22, 8 P. M.

Boston Garden, 8:00 PM, Doors Open, 6:30 PM

BOSTON "POPS" ORCHESTRA

Featuring Selections available on

Victor Records

Here's more fun for you in the Second Musiquiz. The Boston Pops Orchestra with Arthur Fiedler conducting will again provide an hour's concert for your entertainment with Jesus Maria Sanroma as guest pianist, playing Gershwin's Concerto in F. Your Victor Record dealer has tickets—all seats 25 cents—none reserved.

Again the Musiquiz brings you two prominent men as Master of Ceremonies, and Chairman of the evening. Bill Cunningham, writer-extraordinary, will entertain you as Chairman for the evening, while his fellow worker and Boston's most popular columnist, Neal O'Hara, will preside during the question period. Charles O'Connell will aid Neal O'Hara as the twin master of ceremonies.

Boston "Pops" Victor Records Contains Prize Winning Clues

Ask to Hear Them at your Victor Record Dealer

4319	Entrance of Fauns	12516	Danube Waves
4396	Skaters' Waltz	12533	Merry Wives of Windsor
4456	Toy Trumpet	13539	Panis Angelicus
4498	The Bartered Bride Overture	13596	Hungarian Rhapsody
11827	Capriccio Espagnol		"POPS ALBUMS"
11833	Dance of the Hours	M-358	Rhapsody in Blue
11986	Poet & Peasant Overture	M-445	Album of Strauss Waltzes
12006	Marche Slavo	M-552	Bolero
12160	Jalousie
12191	Kamennoi-Ostrow
12460	In a Mountain Pass

SEE YOUR NEAREST VICTOR RECORD DEALER TODAY for TICKETS and INFORMATION

Mendelssohn's Concerto No. 1, in G Minor and Songs Without Words

Performed by the Boston "Pops" Orchestra With Jesus Maria Sanroma, Pianist, under the direction of Arthur Fiedler.

Ask for the Victor Musical Masterpiece for June. Album M-780, 6 sides. List price $3.50. RCA Victor Needles for best performance on Victor Records.

SEE YOUR NEAREST RCA VICTOR DEALER TODAY!

and get your tickets—only 25c

The World's Greatest Artists are on Victor Records

170

COTT, O'CONNELL DIRECT FIRST MUSIQUIZ, JUNE 15

By RUDOLPH ELIE, Jr.

Arthur Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Pops orchestra, last night announced that Ted Cott, fabulously popular quizzer of the high-Crossley-rated, "So You Think You Know Music?" radio quiz, and Charles O'Connell, assistant conductor of the Philadelphia orchestra and musical director of RCA-Victor, have been chosen to act as masters of ceremonies for the first Boston Herald Musiquiz in the Boston Garden on Sunday, June 15, at 8 P. M.

"I can't tell you how gratified I am to be chosen to work with Ted Cott in the Herald Musiquiz assignment," said Charles O'Connell, when he was notified by the Herald of the Pops orchestra's choice.

"I've been following the news of the Musiquiz right along," he went on, "and I can assure you that there's never been anything like it anywhere. And if Ted and I can help to find but one new music lover, we will be mighty pleased. It's a great honor to be chosen by Mr. Fiedler and his superb orchestra to help benefit the Pension Fund of the Boston Symphony."

Ted Cott, notified of his being chosen, said he was "just a musical Joe Doakes."

"But I know what I like," he con-

(Continued on Page Twenty-one)

MUSIQUIZZERS—Ted Cott, popular quizzer of the "So You Think You Know Music?" radio quiz who, with Charles O'Conn[illegible] (insert), musical director of RCA-Victor, will be the master of ceremonies for the Herald Musiquiz in the Boston Garden June 15.

This Clipping From
FITCHBURG, MASS.
SENTINEL
JUN 14 1941

* * *

Jascha Heifetz, world-famous violinist, is not expected to make any further concert appearances with members of the American Federation of Musicians. He will appear with the Boston Symphony, however.

THIS CLIPPING FROM CHRISTIAN CENTURY
CHICAGO, ILL.
JUN 25 1941

* * *

American Protection of Arts Praised

On "I am an American" Sunday, a pageant was held at "Hatch Shell" on the Esplanade, which represented Washington and Lincoln taking oaths of office. Senator David I. Walsh addressed the throng of 12,000. "Americanism is the soul in which exalted political ideals should abide—equality, justice and freedom. You, who are naturalized, may make us comprehend the uselessness of trying to dictate to other peoples, and even the danger from abandonment of the religious spirit of the founders." But it was an "American by choice," Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, who "stole the show." Presented at the microphone, while the wind rustled his long silver hair in the sunlight, he read: "I believe that there is no other country today like America, where"—applause stopped him—"where the freedom of life, vital factor of happiness, is preserved; where art, especially music, is appreciated and its relation to life so well understood. I am proud to be an American!"

* * *

This Clipping From
LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
TIMES
JUL 26 1941

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY, 1874. Conductor since 1924 of Boston's world-renowned Symphony Orchestra; quite apart from this organization's great musical distinction, it is also unique in being the only important symphony orchestra in America without a union affiliation.

Cott and O'Connell to Direct First Musiquiz on June 15

(Continued from First Page)

tinued, "and the Boston Pops orchestra is my dish. It'll be the biggest job I've ever tackled," he went on, "for, to tell you the truth, those Bostonians scare me most to death. Every time I get one on my radio quiz, I just about hand over first prize the minute he tells me he comes from Boston. Seriously, though," he concluded, "I'm thrilled at having been chosen by Mr. Fiedler and the Pops orchestra."

Ted thought up his "So You Think You Know Music?" idea when he was production manager, announcer, actor, script-writer and assistant microphone cleaner of New York's station WNYC. It took hold immediately and has since developed into one of the most popular quiz programs on the air. His manner is breezy, humorous and folksy, and he says that he has discovered that it's not the professional musicians who know all the answers but the average music-lover.

"Tell the Musiquizzers," he said, "that they needn't worry about the musical sharks. They never can remember the right thing at the right time."

Lending an air of authority as well as informality to The Herald's Musiquizzes will be Charles O'Connell, who Saturday night takes over the NBC Symphony orchestra as conductor. A Massachusetts boy born and bred, he comes from a musical family, attended Holy Cross, worked on a Springfield paper as music critic and went to Victor some years ago as an advertising director.

His becoming a conductor was quite accidental in that he was chosen by Stokowski to conduct the Philadelphia orchestra out of a clear sky. To the astonishment of everyone, including himself, he was an instant success.

Just how these two popular masters of ceremonies are going to conduct the Musiquizzes is still known only to themselves and Arthur Fiedler. At any rate, their questions will be given orally from the conductor's stand in the exact center of the Garden, whereupon all those participating will write down their answers on answer blanks supplied by The Herald. All contestants have to do is bring their own pencils. All musical examples will be played by soloists and by the Pops orchestra itself. No recordings will be used. Before the Musiquiz, the Pops orchestra will give a concert of popular music.

Remember the date—June 15 at 8 o'clock in the Boston Garden. Tickets are going like mad at 25 cents each and while it is a good idea to get your ticket in advance (no reserved seats), they may be procured right up to Musiquiz time at the Boston Garden ticket office.

Bars Canadian Air Stops at Lake Placid

WASHINGTON, June 10 (AP)—A Civil Aeronautics Board examiner recommended to the board today to authorize Canadian Colonial Airways, Inc., to make Burlington, Vt., and Glens Falls, N. Y., intermediate stops on its route between New York and Montreal, via Albany.

He recommended denial of the company's application fo rpermission to stop at Lake Placid, N. Y.

HARVARD LAW REUNION

The Harvard Law School class of 1931 will hold its 10-year reunion Monday at 6:30 P. M. at the Harvard Club, unde rthe chairmanship of Hyman Cohen. Dean James M. Landis and faculty members of the school have been invited to speak.

What Musiquiz Is All About

The Boston Herald Musiquizzes are concerts by the Boston Pops orchestra in the Boston Garden.

They will be held on the Sunday nights of June 15 and June 22, at 8 P. M.

Tickets at 25 cents each may be obtained from Symphony Hall, The Herald-Traveler, your neighborhood Victor record dealer or from the Boston Garden.

The entire proceeds benefit the pension fund of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

The Musiquiz itself follows the concert, and is a general musical questionnaire given orally by the master of ceremonies and illustrated by musical examples played by the Pops orchestra.

Contestants will be supplied with answer blanks, upon which they may indicate in pencil the correct answers to the questions.

The Musiquizzes are open to all comers (sponsors excepted), and there are no "rules and regulations."

There is no contest entrance fee; one 25-cent admission covers everything but a pencil.

Audiences may participate in either or both Musiquizzes, but no one is obligated to enter the contest.

The prizes, 29 in all, are valued at $800.

The questions to be asked are not of a technical nature; every music-lover has a winner's chance.

The Musiquizzes are designed for musical enjoyment, spectacle and fun; first the concert, then the Musiquiz, and all for 25 cents.

COTT, O'CONNELL DIRECT FIRST MUSIQUIZ, JUNE 15

By RUDOLPH ELIE, Jr.

Arthur Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Pops orchestra, last night announced that Ted Cott, fabulously popular quizzer of the high-Crossley-rated, "So You Think You Know Music?" radio quiz, and Charles O'Connell, assistant conductor of the Philadelphia orchestra and musical director of RCA-Victor, have been chosen to act as masters of ceremonies for the first Boston Herald Musiquiz in the Boston Garden on Sunday, June 15, at 8 P. M.

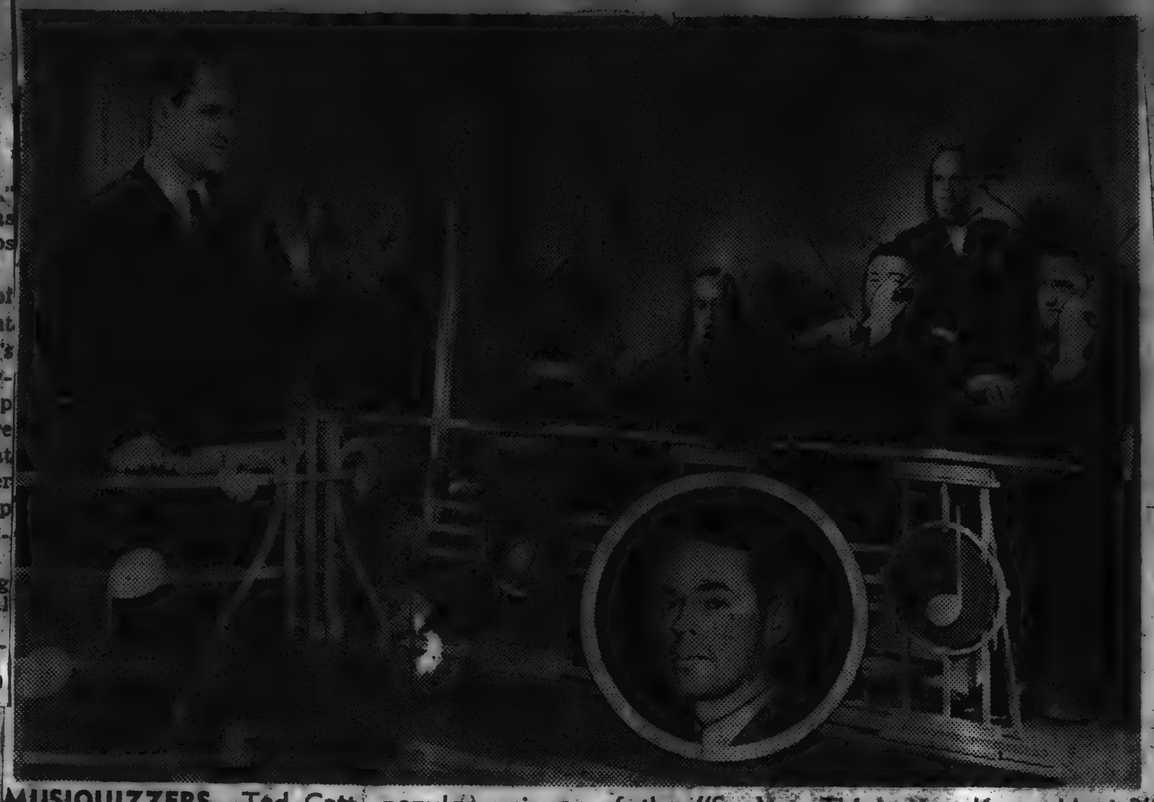
"I can't tell you how gratified I am to be chosen to work with Ted Cott in the Herald Musiquiz assignment," said Charles O'Connell, when he was notified by the Herald of the Pops orchestra's choice.

"I've been following the news of the Musiquiz right along," he went on, "and I can assure you that there's never been anything like it anywhere. And if Ted and I can help to find but one new music lover, we will be mighty pleased. It's a great honor to be chosen by Mr. Fiedler and his superb orchestra to help benefit the Pension Fund of the Boston Symphony."

Ted Cott, notified of his being chosen, said he was "just a musical Joe Doakes."

"But I know what I like," he con-

(Continued on Page Twenty-one)



MUSIQUIZZERS—Ted Cott, popular quizzer of the "So You Think You Know Music?" radio quiz who, with Charles O'Connell (insert), musical director of RCA-Victor, will be the master of ceremonies for the Herald Musiquiz in the Boston Garden June 15.

This Clipping From
FITCHBURG, MASS.
SENTINEL
JUN 14 1941

* * *

Jascha Heifetz, world-famous violinist, is not expected to make any further concert appearances with members of the American Federation of Musicians. He will appear with the Boston Symphony, however.

THIS CLIPPING FROM CHRISTIAN CENTURY
CHICAGO, ILL.
JUN 25 1941

* * *

American Protection of Arts Praised

On "I am an American" Sunday, a pageant was held at "Hatch Shell" on the Esplanade, which represented Washington and Lincoln taking oaths of office. Senator David I. Walsh addressed the throng of 12,000. "Americanism is the soul in which exalted political ideals should abide—equality, justice and freedom. You, who are naturalized, may make us comprehend the uselessness of trying to dictate to other peoples, and even the danger from abandonment of the religious spirit of the founders." But it was an "American by choice," Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, who "stole the show." Presented at the microphone, while the wind rustled his long silver hair in the sunlight, he read: "I believe that there is no other country today like America, where"—applause stopped him—"where the freedom of life, vital factor of happiness, is preserved; where art, especially music, is appreciated and its relation to life so well understood. I am proud to be an American!"

This Clipping From
LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
TIMES
JUL 26 1941

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY, 1874. Conductor since 1924 of Boston's world-renowned Symphony Orchestra; quite apart from this organization's great musical distinction, it is also unique in being the only important symphony orchestra in America without a union affiliation.

Cott and O'Connell to Direct First Musiquiz on June 15

(Continued from First Page)

tinued, "and the Boston Pops orchestra is my dish. It'll be the biggest job I've ever tackled," he went on, "for, to tell you the truth, those Bostonians scare me most to death. Every time I get one on my radio quiz, I just about hand over first prize the minute he tells me he comes from Boston. Seriously, though," he concluded, "I'm thrilled at having been chosen by Mr. Fiedler and the Pops orchestra."

Ted thought up his "So You Think You Know Music?" idea when he was production manager, announcer, actor, script-writer and assistant microphone cleaner of New York's station WNYC. It took hold immediately and has since developed into one of the most popular quiz programs on the air. His manner is breezy, humorous and folksy, and he says that he has discovered that it's not the professional musicians who know all the answers but the average music-lover.

"Tell the Musiquizzers," he said, "that they needn't worry about the musical sharks. They never can remember the right thing at the right time."

Lending an air of authority as well as informality to The Herald's Musiquizzes will be Charles O'Connell, who Saturday night takes over the NBC Symphony orchestra as conductor. A Massachusetts boy born and bred, he comes from a musical family, attended Holy Cross, worked on a Springfield paper as music critic and went to Victor some years ago as an advertising director.

His becoming a conductor was quite accidental in that he was chosen by Stokowski to conduct the Philadelphia orchestra out of a clear sky. To the astonishment of everyone, including himself, he was an instant success.

Just how these two popular masters of ceremonies are going to conduct the Musiquizzes is still known only to themselves and Arthur Fiedler. At any rate, their questions will be given orally from the conductor's stand in the exact center of the Garden, whereupon all those participating will write down their answers on answer blanks supplied by The Herald. All contestants have to do is bring their own pencils. All musical examples will be played by soloists and by the Pops orchestra itself. No recordings will be used. Before the Musiquiz, the Pops orchestra will give a concert of popular music.

Remember the date—June 15 at 8 o'clock in the Boston Garden. Tickets are going like mad at 25 cents each and while it is a good idea to get your ticket in advance (no reserved seats), they may be procured right up to Musiquiz time at the Boston Garden ticket office.

Bars Canadian Air Stops at Lake Placid

WASHINGTON, June 10 (AP)—A Civil Aeronautics Board examiner recommended to the board today to authorize Canadian Colonial Airways, Inc., to make Burlington, Vt., and Glens Falls, N. Y., intermediate stops on its route between New York and Montreal, via Albany.

He recommended denial of the company's application fo rpermission to stop at Lake Placid, N. Y.

HARVARD LAW REUNION

The Harvard Law School class of 1931 will hold its 10-year reunion Monday at 6:30 P. M. at the Harvard Club, unde rthe chairmanship of Hyman Cohen. Dean James M. Landis and faculty members of the school have been invited to speak.

What Musiquiz Is All About

The Boston Herald Musiquizzes are concerts by the Boston Pops orchestra in the Boston Garden.

They will be held on the Sunday nights of June 15 and June 22, at 8 P. M.

Tickets at 25 cents each may be obtained from Symphony Hall, The Herald-Traveler, your neighborhood Victor record dealer or from the Boston Garden.

The entire proceeds benefit the pension fund of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

The Musiquiz itself follows the concert, and is a general musical questionnaire given orally by the master of ceremonies and illustrated by musical examples played by the Pops orchestra.

Contestants will be supplied with answer blanks, upon which they may indicate in pencil the correct answers to the questions.

The Musiquizzes are open to all comers (sponsors excepted), and there are no "rules and regulations."

There is no contest entrance fee; one 25-cent admission covers everything but a pencil.

Audiences may participate in either or both Musiquizzes, but no one is obligated to enter the contest.

The prizes, 29 in all, are valued at $200.

The questions to be asked are not of a technical nature; every music-lover has a winner's chance.

The Musiquizzes are designed for musical enjoyment, spectacle and fun; first the concert, then the Musiquiz, and all for 25 cents.

MAYOR TOBIN TO PRESIDE AT MUSIQUIZ ON SUNDAY

By RUDOLPH ELIE, JR.

Mayor Tobin agreed last night to be presiding officer at The Boston Herald Musiquiz in the Boston Garden, Sunday night, while indications pointed to a huge turnout of music lovers for an occasion unique in the city's history.

The Mayor will call the Musiquiz to order, explain its purpose of bolstering the pension fund of the Symphony Orchestra and present Arthur Fiedler, famous conductor of the Pops. He will also introduce Charles O'Connell, music director of RCA and Ted Cott, conductor of the immensely popular radio music quiz.

Spurred by the unprecedented demand for travel facilities in connection with the Musiquiz, two railroads and an airline last night announced special reduced rates for htose planning to attend.

Fare reductions for parties of 10 or more were announced by the Boston & Maine and New Haven railroads, while American Airlines said it had made special arrangements for transport parties to and from the Musiquiz from such distances as Hartford, Ct.

It was pointed out by both railroads that those living within a 15-

(Continued on Page Twenty-two)

ZZERS—Stumped by questions from their passengers about the Herald ractive American Airline stewardesses are "boning" up a bit. Left to right E. McDermott of Wilkes Barre, Pa.; Lillian Fletcher of Boston and June inn. Miss Fletcher was formerly a member of the N. H. Symphony in Agrees to Preside Musiquiz Sunday

rst Page)

would be un- fares than by "strip" from greater dvantage of th the first and a half e rocking on phenomenal response the Musiquizzes have brought from music-lovers throughout New England.

Symphony Hall alone has sold more than 1500 tickets. Both the Herald-Traveler ticket desk and the box office of the Boston Garden report similar responses, and so, too, have the 90-odd individual Victor record shops throughout Greater Boston and New England. A complete audit is not yet available but considering the fact that no seats are reserved, the advance sale is considered astounding.

Yet the tickets need not be purchased in advance; tickets will go on sale at the box office of the Boston Garden up until the Musiquiz begins, and those who decide at the last moment to hear the Pop concert or take part in the Musiquiz can obtain good seats.

Equally surprising as the advance sale is the demand for sample Musiquiz blanks which contain samples of the sort of questions that will be asked as well as a complete list of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Boston Pops Victor records from which all the questions will be derived, and which will be musically illustrated personally at the Musiquiz by the Pops orchestra under Mr. Fiedler. The first edition consisted of 100,000. No sooner were they dry then they were gobbled up. Another 100,000 were forthwith printed, and these, too, have disappeared with the wind.

Aside from the interest in the concert program, one of the main questions of the thousands which pour daily into this office is, "How is the questionnaire being handled?" and "What do we have to do?"

Answering the last question first, the answer is "nothing!" Actually, the only single thing that anyone need do is go to the Musiquiz. The Boston Pops orchestra, Arthur Fiedler, Jesus Maria Sanrome, the Garden's courteous corps of ushers, The Herald and Ted Cott and Charles O'Conneli will do all the rest.

There is absolutely nothing else Musiquizzers need to do but be on hand and bring their pencils.

After the hour's concert program is over—and that, incidentally, consists of Gershwin's "Rhapsody in Blue" with Jesus Maria Sanroma as pianist, as well as four additional all-time Pops favorites which won their place on the program by popular ballot—the Musiquiz begins.

Now, everyone who enters the Boston Garden will see signs pointing to the tables which bear The Herald Musiquiz ballots, which will be provided absolutely free of charge by The Herald. These ballots contain six groups of six questions each. One of them, for instance, may simply consist of four names, like this:

Schumann — Brahms — Tchaikovsky — Beethoven.

When Ted Cott and Charles O'Connell, masters of ceremonies, come to that, they will hand Arthur Fiedled a sealed envelope containing the music, which will be distributed to the musicians who, of course, can have no idea of wnat they will play. When the orchestra has played the piece, those taking part will be asked to check the name of the composer whose music was just played by the Pops orchestra. It's as simple as that!

When the Musiquiz is over, each entrant will turn his own ballot into receptacles marked with signs, and these will in turn be placed under lock and key in the office of Garden auditor Edward Powers. On Monday, the ballots will be turned over to Arthur Fiedler and a board of judges consisting of Symphony Hall officials. They will be tabulated, and a minimum of 200 winners will be selected for the semi-final contest. That is, if 350 turn in perfect papers, they will become eligible for the grand prizes. If, however, only one turns in a perfect paper, 199 who place below will become eligible.

When all is said and done, the Musiquiz part of the evening is but a small part of the fun. No one need enter the contest at all to enjoy the spectacle, the fun and the musical entertainment.

As Gordon B. Simpson, harassed box office manager of Symphony hall put it after a day trying to explain to impatient Pops enthusiasts seeking tickets, "It'll be the first time in history that everybody who wants to hear the Pops on the same night as everybody else, can get his tickets."

Watch for tomorrow's Herald and Traveler which will contain about a whole page of information and pictures concerning the last-minute details of the Musiquiz. In the meantime, visit your neighborhood Victor record dealer who is in a position to give very valuable hints on how to win the Musiquiz, and who has tickets.

HERALD MUSIQUIZ PRIZEWINNERS received their awards last night during the Esplanade concert at the Hatch Memorial shell. Front, left to right: Parker W. Perry, co-winner of first prize; Arthur Fiedler, conductor of the Esplanade orchestra; and Warren Babb, co-winner of first prize. Rear, left to right: Leonard Bernstein, second prize winner; Frederic Davis, also a prizewinner; Charles O'Connell; Alan Steinert, president of the Eastern Company-RCA-Victor distributors; Morton Blender, a prize winner; and Rudolph Elie, Jr., Herald Musiquiz editor.

16,000 SEE MUSIQUIZ WINNERS GET PRIZES

By RUDOLPH ELIE, JR.

Climaxing a month-long chain of events which was set in motion on June 15 in the Boston Garden when the Boston Herald, the Boston Pops orchestra, RCA-Victor and the Eastern Company presented the first Musiquiz ever held, Arthur Fiedler presented nearly a thousand dollars worth of musical prizes to the five top prize winners before 16,000 persons during the interval of the Esplanade concert last night.

Taking place the moment the last chords of Tchaikovsky's "Marche Slave" had died away, the Musiquiz presentation exercises barely consumed five minutes, holding the attention of the vast audience which signified, by its applause, its previous interest in the unique musical contest.

Addressing the Esplanade audience by an amplification system, Fiedler succinctly outlined the course of the Musiquiz before introducing the grand-prize winners.

Fiedler presented Parker W. Perry of Melrose, whose high score in the Herald Musiquiz brought him highest honors and one of the first prizes of an RCA-Victor radio phonograph valued at $275 with $50 Victor records of his own choice. The audience gave Perry a warm reception as indeed it did to all of the prize winners.

Because of Perry's affiliation as a record salesman with a Boston firm, a duplicate first prize was awarded to Warren Babb of Cambridge, who otherwise held the position of second in the Musiquiz. Then followed the award to Leonard Bernstein of Sharon, whose prize was $150 cash—which he elected in place of a trip to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival—to Frederic C. Davis of Belmont, whose award was a pair of $100 seats to the regular 24 concerts of the Boston Symphony, and to Morton Blender, whose fourth prize award was $50 worth of Victor records of his own choice.

For the sake of convenience as well as to afford the prize winners a last-were offered in the form of engraved certificates containing a coupon redeemable for the full value of the prize on presentation to the sponsors.

Following the prize award, Fiedler introduced representatives of the Herald Musiquiz. Taking a split-second bow in consequence were Rudolph Elie, Jr., the Herald's Musiquiz Editor; Alan Steinert, president of the Eastern Company, which is local distributor of RCA-Victor products, and Charles O'Connell, musical director of RCA-Victor, and special chairman of both Musiquizes in the Garden.

Coming as a distinct surprise to the enormous Esplanade audience was Fiedler's generous gesture in turning over his baton to Leonard Bernstein, 22-year-old second prize winner, and presenting him as conductor of the Esplanade orchestra in Wagner's prelude to "Die Meistersinger."

The young man, a student of conducting under Serge Koussevitzky at the Berkshire school, demonstrated a remarkable degree of command, considering that it was the first time he had ever led a professional orchestra. The audience appeared to be most impressed with the young man's performance, and applauded him warmly.

Simultaneously with the awarding of the prizes last night, the sponsors announced the Herald Musiquiz was to be an annual affair, to be conducted next year in the identical manner—barring a few refinements—as it was this year. Potential Musiquizers in the Esplanade audience are consequently advised to study carefully the Victor record list of the Boston Symphony and Boston Pops orchestra during the next 11 months, and to get ready to have the musical time of their lives. All those who won prizes in the first Herald Musiquiz will be ineligible to receive prizes in the second Herald Musiquiz next year, as you're

MAYOR TOBIN TO PRESIDE AT MUSIQUIZ ON SUNDAY

By RUDOLPH ELIE, JR.

Mayor Tobin agreed last night to be presiding officer at The Boston Herald Musiquiz in the Boston Garden, Sunday night, while indications pointed to a huge turnout of music lovers for an occasion unique in the city's history.

The Mayor will call the Musiquiz to order, explain its purpose of bolstering the pension fund of the Symphony Orchestra and present Arthur Fiedler, famous conductor of the Pops. He will also introduce Charles O'Connell, music director of RCA and Ted Cott, conductor of the immensely popular radio music quiz.

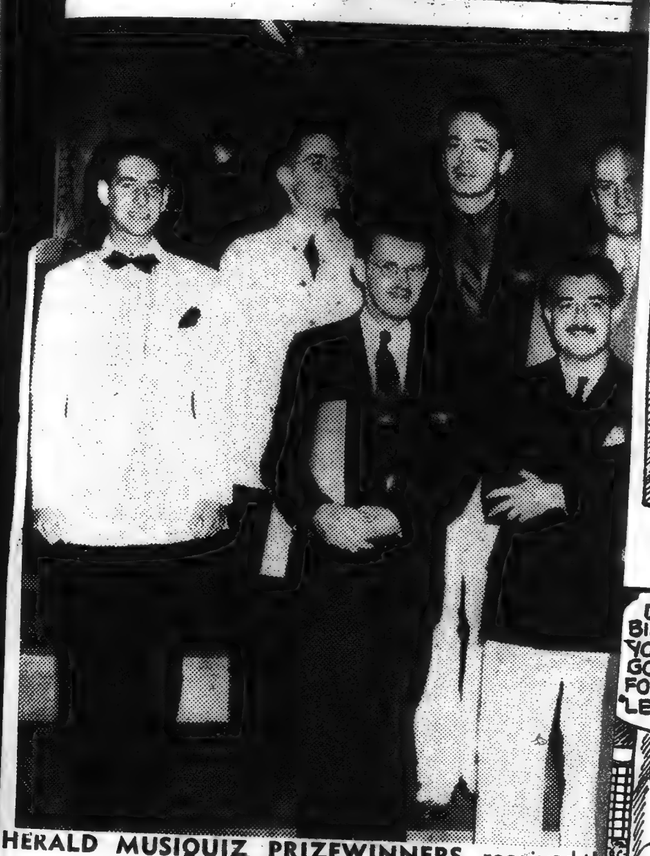
Spurred by the unprecedented demand for travel facilities in connection with the Musiquiz, two railroads and an airline last night announced special reduced rates for htose planning to attend.

Fare reductions for parties of 10 or more were announced by the Boston & Maine and New Haven railroads, while American Airlines said it had made special arrangements for transport parties to and from the Musiquiz from such distances as Hartford, Ct.

It was pointed out by both railroads that those living within a 15-

(Continued on Page Twenty-two)

FLYING MUSIQUIZZERS—Stumped by questions from their passengers about the Herald Musiquiz, these attractive American Airline stewardesses are "boning" up a bit. Left to right they are the Misses E. McDermott of Wilkes Barre, Pa.; Lillian Fletcher of Boston and June Schmitt of Rock, Minn. Miss Fletcher was formerly a member of the N. H. Symphony orchestra.



HERALD MUSIQUIZ PRIZEWINNERS received t... concert at the Hatch Memorial shell. Front, left t... first prize; Arthur Fiedler, conductor of the Esplan... ner of first prize. Rear, left to right: Leonard B... Davis, also a prizewinner; Charles O'Connell; Al... pany-RCA-Victor distributors; Morton Blender, a p... Musiquiz editor.

Mayor Tobin Agrees to Preside At Herald Musiquiz Sunday

(Continued from First Page)

mile radius of Boston would be unable to obtain lower fares than those already granted by "strip" tickets, but that those from greater distances could take advantage of the reductions.

In the meantime, with the first Musiquiz but a jump and a half away, the sponsors were rocking on their heels at the truly phenomenal response the Musiquizzes have brought from music-lovers throughout New England.

Symphony Hall alone has sold more than 1500 tickets. Both the Herald-Traveler ticket desk and the box office of the Boston Garden report similar responses, and so, too, have the 90-odd individual Victor record shops throughout Greater Boston and New England. A complete audit is not yet available but considering the fact that no seats are reserved, the advance sale is considered astounding.

Yet the tickets need not be purchased in advance; tickets will go on sale at the box office of the Boston Garden up until the Musiquiz begins, and those who decide at the last moment to hear the Pop concert or take part in the Musiquiz can obtain good seats.

Equally surprising as the advance sale is the demand for sample Musiquiz blanks which contain samples of the sort of questions that will be asked as well as a complete list of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Boston Pops Victor records from which all the questions will be derived, and which will be musically illustrated personally at the Musiquiz by the Pops orchestra under Mr. Fiedler. The first edition consisted of 100,000. No sooner were they dry then they were gobbled up. Another 100,000 were forthwith printed, and these, too, have disappeared with the wind.

Aside from the interest in the concert program, one of the main questions of the thousands which pour daily into this office is, "How is the questionnaire being handled?" and "What do we have to do?"

Answering the last question first, the answer is "nothing!" Actually, the only single thing that anyone need do is go to the Musiquiz. The Boston Pops orchestra, Arthur Fiedler, Jesus Maria Sanrome, the Garden's courteous corps of ushers, The Herald and Ted Cott and Charles O'Connell will do all the rest.

There is absolutely nothing else Musiquizzers need to do but be on hand and bring their pencils.

After the hour's concert program is over—and that, incidentally, consists of Gershwin's "Rhapsody in Blue" with Jesus Maria Sanroma as pianist, as well as four additional all-time Pops favorites which won their place on the program by popular ballot—the Musiquiz begins.

Now, everyone who enters the Boston Garden will see signs pointing to the tables which bear The Herald Musiquiz ballots, which will be provided absolutely free of charge by The Herald. These ballots contain six groups of six questions each. One of them, for instance, may simply consist of four names, like this:

Schumann — Brahms — Tchaikovsky — Beethoven.

When Ted Cott and Charles O'Connell, masters of ceremonies, come to that, they will hand Arthur Fiedler a sealed envelope containing the music, which will be distributed to the musicians who, of course, can have no idea of what they will play. When the orchestra has played the piece, those taking part will be asked to check the name of the composer whose music was just played by the Pops orchestra. It's as simple as that!

When the Musiquiz is over, each entrant will turn his own ballot into receptacles marked with signs, and these will in turn be placed under lock and key in the office of Garden auditor Edward Powers. On Monday, the ballots will be turned over to Arthur Fiedler and a board of judges consisting of Symphony Hall officials. They will be tabulated, and a minimum of 200 winners will be selected for the semi-final contest. That is, if 350 turn in perfect papers, they will become eligible for the grand prizes. If, however, only one turns in a perfect paper, 199 who place below will become eligible.

When all is said and done, the Musiquiz part of the evening is but a small part of the fun. No one need enter the contest at all to enjoy the spectacle, the fun and the musical entertainment.

As Gordon B. Simpson, harassed box office manager of Symphony hall put it after a day trying to explain to impatient Pops enthusiasts seeking tickets, "It'll be the first time in history that everybody who wants to hear the Pops on the same night as everybody else, can get his tickets."

Watch for tomorrow's Herald and Traveler which will contain about a whole page of information and pictures concerning the last-minute details of the Musiquiz. In the meantime, visit your neighborhood Victor record dealer who is in a position to give very valuable hints on how to win the Musiquiz, and who has tickets.

16,000 SEE MUSIQUIZ WINNERS GET PRIZES

By RUDOLPH ELIE, JR.

Climaxing a month-long chain of events which was set in motion on June 15 in the Boston Garden when the Boston Herald, the Boston Pops orchestra, RCA-Victor and the Eastern Company presented the first Musiquiz ever held, Arthur Fiedler presented nearly a thousand dollars worth of musical prizes to the five top prize winners before 16,000 persons during the interval of the Esplanade concert last night.

Taking place the moment the last chords of Tchaikovsky's "Marche Slave" had died away, the Musiquiz presentation exercises barely consumed five minutes, holding the attention of the vast audience which signified, by its applause, its previous interest in the unique musical contest.

Addressing the Esplanade audience by an amplification system, Fiedler succinctly outlined the course of the Musiquiz before introducing the grand-prize winners.

Fiedler presented Parker W. Perry of Melrose, whose high score in the Herald Musiquiz brought him highest honors and one of the first prizes of an RCA-Victor radio phonograph valued at $275 with $50 Victor records of his own choice. The audience gave Perry a warm reception as indeed it did to all of the prize winners.

Because of Perry's affiliation as a record salesman with a Boston firm, a duplicate first prize was awarded to Warren Babb of Cambridge, who otherwise held the position of second in the Musiquiz. Then followed the award to Leonard Bernstein of Sharon, whose prize was $150 cash—which he elected in place of a trip to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival—to Frederic C. Davis of Belmont, whose award was a pair of $100 seats to the regular 24 concerts of the Boston Symphony, and to Morton Blender, whose fourth prize award was $50 worth of Victor records of his own choice.

For the sake of convenience as well as to afford the prize winners a last-were offered in the form of engraved certificates containing a coupon redeemable for the full value of the prize on presentation to the sponsors.

Following the prize award, Fiedler introduced representatives of the Herald Musiquiz. Taking a split-second bow in consequence were Rudolph Elie, Jr., the Herald's Musiquiz Editor; Alan Steinert, president of the Eastern Company, which is local distributor of RCA-Victor products, and Charles O'Connell, musical director of RCA-Victor, and special chairman of both Musiquizes in the Garden.

Coming as a distinct surprise to the enormous Esplanade audience was Fiedler's generous gesture in turning over his baton to Leonard Bernstein, 22-year-old second prize winner, and presenting him as conductor of the Esplanade orchestra in Wagner's prelude to "Die Meistersinger."

The young man, a student of conducting under Serge Koussevitzky at the Berkshire school, demonstrated a remarkable degree of command, considering that it was the first time he had ever led a professional orchestra. The audience appeared to be most impressed with the young man's performance, and applauded him warmly.

Simultaneously with the awarding of the prizes last night, the sponsors announced the Herald Musiquiz was to be an annual affair, to be conducted next year in the identical manner—barring a few refinements—as it was this year. Potential Musiquizers in the Esplanade audience are consequently advised to study carefully the Victor record list of the Boston Symphony and Boston Pops orchestra during the next 11 months, and to get ready to have the musical time of their lives. All those who won prizes in the first Herald Musiquiz will be ineligible to receive prizes in the second Herald Musiquiz next year, so you're

'V for Victory' Heard by 8000 at Music Festival

Boston Globe Aug. 1, 1941

By CYRUS W. DURGIN

STOCKBRIDGE, July 31 — Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra were greeted by an audience of between 7500 and 8000 at the beginning of the eighth annual Berkshire symphonic festival tonight in the music shed on "Tanglewood" Estate here. This was stated by a representative of the festival management to be the biggest gathering at an opening night since the festivals began.

'V for Victory' at Berkshire Fe

Continued from the First Page

Though it came last on the program, replacing the previously announced "Eroica" symphony of Beethoven, that composer's fifth symphony, in C minor, must have had especial significance for many in the music shed. The Fifth Symphony is going to be known, it seems, as the "V for Victory" symphony for at least the duration of the war. "V" symphony it is, heroic and grand in its first and last movements, and so it was played.

No festival is without innovation. This Summer has seen erection of the new theatre and concert hall, and the opening concert brought forward, for the first time, the chorus of the Berkshire Musical Association, Horace Hunt, conductor, as participants in a program. The chorus song Villa-Lobos' Choros No. 10, "Rasga O. Coracao."

Singers Perform Well

It was difficult music the Berkshire Chorus was dealing with, semi-barbaric, fast, bouncy and full of rhythmic tricks. The singers gave a good account of themselves.

The women's section of the chorus were also to have been heard in the wordless chorus of "Sirens"—the third and least-often performed of Debussy's three nocturnes. But while the orchestra played the first two—"Clouds" and "Festivals," "Sirens" was replaced by another and more familiar Debussy work, the "Prelude to the afternoon of a Faun."

The Boston Symphony loses little if any of its hair-trigger virtuosity between the end of the regular season in Symphony Hall and the start of a Berkshire Festival. Tonight great music was heard as only it can be played by a great orchestra. How crisp, precise, pure of style and splendid of tone was, for example, Haydn's G Major Symphony, No. 88, that served as opening number.

Stormy Weather Relents

To be candid and as nearly accurate as possible, there were a few loose technical ends, not errors committed or by omission, but [illegible] voices and unobtrusiv[e] which, usually part of [the] background of the compos[er] accountably stood out wi[th] nence. How much did [the] against the magnificence o[f] ton Symphony and ag[ainst] imaginative perception o[f] ductor Hardly at all.

The weather had been stormy for 48 hours befor[e] cert tonight, but it relente[d] to give the audience a comfortable evening, dan[k] not wet, and with com[fo]rt still air.

The first series of the fe[s]tival be resumed tomorrow e[ve]ning which Dr. Koussevitzky [will] Mendelssohn's "Italian" S[ym]phony the "Leonore" overture [No.] Beethoven, and Shost[a]kovich Fifth Symphony.

Berkshire Music Festival Opens

Boston Herald Aug. 1, 1941

Every box was occupied last night at the gala opening of the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood, midway between Lenox and Stockbridge. With Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., were her mother, Mrs. Charles Robinson Smith, Miss Miriam K. Oliver, Mrs. Montgomery Hare of New York, Mrs. E. Corning Townsend of Buffalo, N. Y., Mr. Stuart Montgomery of Medfield, Mr. William Miles, manager of the Berkshire Playhouse at Stockbridge; Mr. Malcolm Vaughan, Mr. Leonardo Casanova and Mr. Bryn Strandanaes. Mr. Ernest B. Dane of Chestnut Hill, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Mrs. Dane, who are staying with Dr. and Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky at Bald Head, were in their box.

With Mr. and Mrs. John Butler Swann at "Cherry Hill," Stockbridge, for the Festival are Mr. and Mrs. Horace P. Binney, Miss Anne P. and Miss Cora W. Peabody and Mrs. John T. Coolidge, Jr., of Milton; Mrs. George S. Mumford of Chestnut Hill, Miss Phyllis Robbins of Commonwealth avenue, Miss Marian J. Homans of Marlborough street and Dr. and Mrs. Lewis Perry of Exeter, N. H.

Berkshire Symphonic Festival

Boston Traveler Aug. 1, 1941

Out in the lovely Berkshire hills of weste[rn] setts thousands of persons are attending th[e] symphonic festival at Tanglewood.

It is the eighth season for the festival, t[he] the participation of the Boston Symphony O[r]fifth to be held at Tanglewood and the fourt[h] in the Music Shed.

Orchestral, vocal and choral music are bei[ng] under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

Growth of the festival has been orderl[y] planned to the extent that today it is the count[ry's] artistic project and Tanglewood the premier [one] of America.

Beautiful music played in the midst of a be[au]tryside is a combination that draws people fr[om] this country as well as other nations.

Those who attend have only praise for the congenial atmosphere that prevails throughout [the] season. It is an experience never to be forgott[en]

Boston Symphony Benefit

Christian Science Monitor July 31, 1941

Lenox, Mass.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky has chosen the Allegro con brio from Beethoven's Symphony No. 5 as the opening number when the Boston Symphony Orchestra gives a concert as a feature of the Gala Benefit at Tanglewood on Friday, Aug. 15. Tchaikovsky's "1812" Overture will also figure on the program. Albert Spalding, who will be one of the soloists, will appear in Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto.

Besides conducting the orchestra, Dr. Koussevitzky will lead a picked band of 250 players drawn from the Twenty-Sixth Division of the United States Army, in military marches. The players, guests for the occasion, will bivouac on the grass slopes of Tanglewood.

Another musical program at the benefit will be presented by the members of the Berkshire Music Center, consisting of a symphony concert in the Shed, a choral concert in the Barn, opera in the new Theater-Music Hall, and chamber music in the new Chamber Music Hall.

Randall Thompson's "Alleluia" will introduce the "Manifestation," when speakers of national fame will address the audience in the Shed. The "Alleluia" will be sung by the Festival Chorus, which consists of pupils of the school and which is likewise to appear in the Berkshire Symphonic Festival in Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis" on the night previous.

The general program, beginning at 5:30, will last late into the evening and will also include a lawn party and a display of fireworks.

The benefit will be given to aid the fund of the United Service Organizations and the British War Relief. Last year a similar benefit at Tanglewood brought 10,000 people and netted $23,000 for Allied Relief.

"V" OPENS BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

Boston Post Aug. [illegible] 1941

Four-Note Figure by Beethoven Heard by 6000

BY WARREN STORY SMITH

PITTSFIELD, July 31—V for victory was written all over the programme of the opening concert of the eighth symphonic festival as it finally came to pass last evening at Tanglewood, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer home, between Stockbridge and Lenox.

NITIAL MOTIVE

n's Symphony No. 5 of the ous initial motive replaced lly announced "Eroica" symthat composer as final num-ace of a Handel organ con-came, as the opening item, mphony in G Major, No. 88, pears was labelled in the old ilharmonic Society catalogue
"V." And there was besides
Villa-Lobos, the Brazilian Chorus No. 10, "Rasga o for chorus and orchestra.
ution which had no bearing ecial significance mentioned the last-minute replacement
's Third Nocturne, "Sirene," more familiar "Afternoon of Rumor had it that the horus, which intones word-es in this rarely heard com-
st performed by the Boston
In 1918, had failed to satisfy vitzky's requirements.
lly, the "Faun" proved a nsatisfactory substitute, deeautiful performance, since fter the brilliant "festivals" tly anticlimatic. It would better ahead of the first louds."

en at His Jolliest of Haydn's Symphony is its unequalled among the other ents in the Haydn symny of which, taken as a uperior to this one. But the last movements, though

"Papa" Haydn at his jolhis evening's audience of the piece with every evi-asure.
evitsky did well to bring "Choros" introduced to winter, to a second per-he music has not only a power, but an exotic s softer moments, and the orus of the Berkshire sociation, Horace Hunt, ontributed notably to its his occasion.

7500 Attend First Concert Of Berkshire Music Festival

Boston Herald Aug 1, 1941

By ALEXANDER W. WILLIAMS

TANGLEWOOD, July 31—The 8th annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival got under way here tonight with what is said to be the biggest crowd ever for an opening night and what was certainly an artistic and popular success. The conservative estimate of the size of the audience was 7500, but it seemed fully as large as the 8000 crowd one week-end last year. The authorities of the festival at any rate are not complaining, and what is a beggarly 500 among friends?

The audience was an exemplary one in every respect, arriving early to look the beautiful grounds over and paying the most devoted musical attention once the concert began.

The weather also has behaved itself though in a somewhat sultry and threatening fashion. But the recent rain has brought the lawns and shrubs to the peak of perfection.

Two new buildings have attracted the attention this year. One of these is an opera and supplementary concert hall, with a perfectly equipped stage and seats designed to see stage action. This and a chamber music hall are both absolutely functional architecturally and are pernaps rather odd to look at from the outside, however perfect within.

Mr. Koussevitzky received the expected ovation when he came out to lead the Boston Symphony in tonight's unusual opening program. He not only deserved the applause in that he has done more than any one else up here to put Tanglewood in a class with Salzburg, at least as far as symphonic music is concerned, but he likewise seemed to enjoy it.

The great disappointment to musical connoisseurs at this concert was the last minute change of program omitting the third nocturne, Sirenes, by Debussy, and substituting "Afternoon of a Faun," instead. No-body will deny that the latter was beautifully played last night or that it is a lovely work in itself. But Sirenes is almost never heard, because of the difficulty of training a women's chorus in it, and thus most of us had looked forward to hearing it with the keenest anticipation. Our guess is that Mr. Koussevitzky hoped up to the last that his chorus could make the grade. But his standards are high, and it is safe to assume that it didn't.

STRONGLY RHYTHMIC

We imagine that the Villa-Lobos choros No. 10 startled the audience, which by virtue of its size if nothing else is naturally conservative. The Brazilian composer uses all sorts of unusual drums and also employs the regular instruments in sometimes outlandish fashion. The music is strongly rhythmic and often exceedingly weird. The piece unquestionably has originality—that much we determined in Boston last winter. But it is not easy to take in at first for the average listener. It says much for Mr. Koussevitzky's independence of taste and zeal in introducing new music that he put it on the opening program. There are moreover, other moderns in the succeeding programs.

The concert began with Haydn's 88th Symphony, written before his last and greatest symphonic period, but a charming and delightful work for all that. It is a favorite of Mr. Koussevitzky's and he conducts it with incomparable zest. In this and in the Debussy "Afternoon of a Faun," the Boston Symphony and its conductor were in mid-season form.

After the intermission of what was a very long concert, we listened to Beethoven's 5th Symphony. Some have suggested that this most famous of all symphonies was included as a V for Victory symbol. Maybe it was, but if so that was the only warlike note in a festival which is doing so much to uphold peacetime standards of culture.

[illegible] its sponsors proved a brilliant shire Festival is n[ot]

The war, naturally enough, has been a boon to it, for it offers about the only place for a summer musical pilgrimage. This year, too, new buildings have been finished; and we may probably expect interesting developments in opera and chamber music.

Some people not unreasonably complain of the huge crowds and the traffic problem on country roads which is the inevitable discomfort of the festival. But this has its compensation, for the vast size of the audiences will defend the festival from the curse of fashionable and intellectual snobbery which so seriously affected the last years of Salzburg. We may not get the opera that the Austrian resort produced, but at least we shall avoid, by keeping the symphonic repertoire as the chief aim of the festival, the sorry business of cliquishness and dissension, which are so often hangers-on of the artistic world.

'V for Victory' Heard by 8000 at Music Festival

Boston Globe Aug 1, 1941

By CYRUS W. DURGIN

STOCKBRIDGE, July 31 — Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra were greeted by an audience of between 7500 and 8000 at the beginning of the eighth annual Berkshire symphonic festival tonight in the music shed on "Tanglewood" Estate here. This was stated by a representative of the festival management to be the biggest gathering at an opening night since the festivals began.

Berkshire Music Festival Opens

Boston Herald Aug. 1, 1941

Every box was occupied last night at the gala opening [illegible]

When the highest offic[ials] Japs could not last six m[onths] they had oil in mind. Si[nce] government has required [dealers] to keep a supply [of] months normal consump[tion] construction of tanks to [meet] YEAR'S SUPPLY

The Chinese spy syste[m] good, indicates additiona[l] recent months, will afford [a] ent consumption rate, or [a] war.

'V for Victory' Played at Berkshire Festival

Continued from the First Page

Boston Globe Aug 1, 1941

Though it came last on the program, replacing the previously announced "Eroica" symphony of Beethoven, that composer's fifth symphony, in C minor, must have had especial significance for many in the music shed. The Fifth Symphony is going to be known, it seems, as the "V for Victory" symphony for at least the duration of the war. "V" symphony it is, heroic and grand in its first and last movements, and so it was played.

No festival is without innovation. This Summer has seen erection of the new theatre and concert hall, and the opening concert brought forward, for the first time, the chorus of the Berkshire Musical Association, Horace Hunt, conductor, as participants in a program. The chorus song Villa-Lobos' Choros No. 10, "Rasga O. Coracao."

Singers Perform Well

It was difficult music the Berkshire Chorus was dealing with, semi-barbaric, fast, bouncy and full of rhythmic tricks. The singers gave a good account of themselves.

The women's section of the chorus were also to have been heard in the wordless chorus of "Sirens"—the third and least-often performed of Debussy's three nocturnes. But while the orchestra played the first two—"Clouds" and "Festivals," "Sirens" was replaced by another and more familiar Debussy work, the "Prelude to the afternoon of a Faun."

The Boston Symphony loses little if any of its hair-trigger virtuosity between the end of the regular season in Symphony Hall and the start of a Berkshire Festival. Tonight great music was heard as only it can be played by a great orchestra. How crisp, precise, pure of style and splendid of tone was, for example, Haydn's G Major Symphony, No. 88, that served as opening number.

Stormy Weather Relents

To be candid and as nearly accurate as possible, there were a few loose technical ends, not errors committed or by omission, but inner voices and unobtrusive entries which, usually part of the woven background of the compositions, unaccountably stood out with prominence. How much did they count against the magnificence of the Boston Symphony and against the imaginative perception of its conductor Hardly at all.

The weather had been wet and stormy for 48 hours before the concert tonight, but it relented in time to give the audience a cool and comfortable evening, dampish, but not wet, and with comparatively still air.

The first series of the festival will be resumed tomorrow evening, at which Dr. Koussevitzky will offer Mendelssohn's "Italian" Symphony, the "Leonore" overture No. 3, by Beethoven, and Shostakovitch's Fifth Symphony.

Boston Symphony Benefit

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR JULY 31, 1941

Lenox, Mass.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky has chosen the Allegro con brio from Beethoven's Symphony No. 5 as the opening number when the Boston Symphony Orchestra gives a concert as a feature of the Gala Benefit at Tanglewood on Friday, Aug. 15. Tchaikovsky's "1812" Overture will also figure on the program. Albert Spalding, who will be one of the soloists, will appear in Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto.

Besides conducting the orchestra, Dr. Koussevitzky will lead a picked band of 250 players drawn from the Twenty-Sixth Division of the United States Army, in military marches. The players, guests for the occasion, will bivouac on the grass slopes of Tanglewood.

Another musical program at the benefit will be presented by the members of the Berkshire Music Center, consisting of a symphony concert in the Shed, a choral concert in the Barn, opera in the new Theater-Music Hall, and chamber music in the new Chamber Music Hall.

Randall Thompson's "Alleluia" will introduce the "Manifestation," when speakers of national fame will address the audience in the Shed. The "Alleluia" will be sung by the Festival Chorus, which consists of pupils of the school and which is likewise to appear in the Berkshire Symphonic Festival in Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis" on the night previous.

The general program, beginning at 5:30, will last late into the evening and will also include a lawn party and a display of fireworks.

The benefit will be given to aid the fund of the United Service Organizations and the British War Relief. Last year a similar benefit at Tanglewood brought 10,000 people and netted $23,000 for Allied Relief.

"V" OPENS BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

Boston Post Aug. 1, 19[illegible]

Four-Note Figure by Beethoven Heard by 6000

BY WARREN STORY SMITH

PITTSFIELD, July 31—V for victory was written all over the programme of the opening concert of the eighth symphonic festival as it finally came to pass last evening at Tanglewood, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer home, between Stockbridge and Lenox.

INITIAL MOTIVE

Beethoven's Symphony No. 5 of the newly famous initial motive replaced the originally announced "Eroica" symphony of that composer as final number. In place of a Handel organ concerto there came, as the opening item, Haydn's Symphony in G Major, No. 88, which it appears was labelled in the old London Philharmonic Society catalogue as Lebber "V." And there was besides a piece by Villa-Lobos, the Brazilian composer's Chorus No. 10, "Rasga o Coracao," for chorus and orchestra.

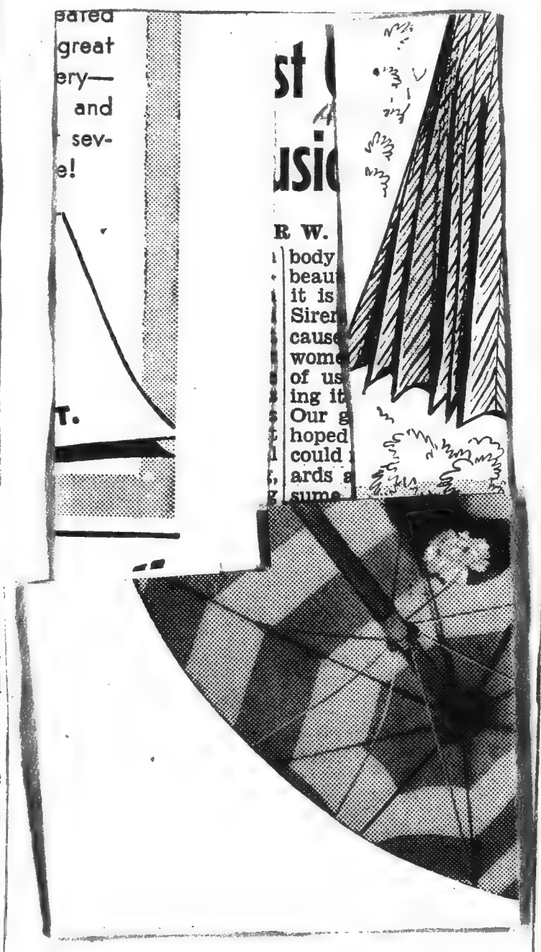
A substitution which had no bearing on the special significance mentioned above was the last-minute replacement of DeBussy's Third Nocturne, "Sirene," by his far more familiar "Afternoon of a Faun." Rumor had it that the women's chorus, which intones wordless syllables in this rarely heard composition, last performed by the Boston Symphony in 1918, had failed to satisfy Dr. Koussevitzky's requirements.

Intrinsically, the "Faun" proved a somewhat unsatisfactory substitute, despite its beautiful performance, since its effect after the brilliant "festivals" was distinctly anticlimatic. It would have fitted better ahead of the first nocturne "Clouds."

Hayden at His Jolliest

The glory of Haydn's Symphony is its noble largo, unequalled among the other slow movements in the Haydn symphonies, many of which, taken as a whole, are superior to this one. But the first and last movements, though slight, are "Papa" Haydn at his jolliest, and this evening's audience of 6000 received the piece with every evidence of pleasure.

Dr. Koussevitsky did well to bring Villa-Lobos' "Choros" introduced to Boston last winter, to a second performance. The music has not only a semi-barbaric power, but an exotic beauty, in its softer moments, and the assisting chorus of the Berkshire Musical Association, Horace Hunt, conductor, contributed notably to its success on this occasion.



Berkshire Symphonic Festival

Boston Traveler Aug. 1, 1941

Out in the lovely Berkshire hills of western Massachusetts thousands of persons are attending the celebrated symphonic festival at Tanglewood.

It is the eighth season for the festival, the sixth with the participation of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the fifth to be held at Tanglewood and the fourth to be held in the Music Shed.

Orchestral, vocal and choral music are being presented under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

Growth of the festival has been orderly and well-planned to the extent that today it is the country's greatest artistic project and Tanglewood the premier music center of America.

Beautiful music played in the midst of a beautiful countryside is a combination that draws people from all over this country as well as other nations.

Those who attend have only praise for the exceedingly congenial atmosphere that prevails throughout the festival season. It is an experience never to be forgotten.

Berkshire Boldness

Boston Herald, July 30, 194[illegible]

The trustees of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival never made a wiser move than when, some years ago, they decided to plunge in and get the best. Orchestrally the best then as now meant the Boston Symphony and its leader, Serge Koussevitzky. This bold move, which might have landed its sponsors in financial trouble, has proved a brilliant success; and the Berkshire Festival is now unsurpassed.

The war, naturally enough, has been a boon to it, for it offers about the only place for a summer musical pilgrimage. This year, too, new buildings have been finished; and we may probably expect interesting developments in opera and chamber music.

Some people not unreasonably complain of the huge crowds and the traffic problem on country roads which is the inevitable discomfort of the festival. But this has its compensation, for the vast size of the audiences will defend the festival from the curse of fashionable and intellectual snobbery which so seriously affected the last years of Salzburg. We may not get the opera that the Austrian resort produced, but at least we shall avoid, by keeping the symphonic repertoire as the chief aim of the festival, the sorry business of cliquishness and dissension, which are so often hangers-on of the artistic world.

173

Esplanade Concert Season Opens

25,000 Hear Opening Concert on Esplanade

Boston Globe - July 7, 1941

As a flaming red ball of fire sank below the roofs of Cambridge across the Charles River last night, Conductor Arthur Fiedler lifted his baton and 70 Boston Symphony musicians struck up the stirring march, "Pomp and Circumstance," while 25,000 persons, young and sold, sat motionless for the first selection of the 13th season of Esplanade Concerts.

The largest crowd of music lovers ever to attend an opening of the series of Summer concerts in the $270,000 Edward Hatch Memorial shell on Storrow Embankment at the foot of Mt. Vernon st., was on hand for the first-night performance.

Youngsters clad in overalls mingled with seasoned concertgoers to pack every available inch of room surrounding the famous shell. Persons watched for a while on neighboring roof-tops, and sailboats and other small craft were drawn to the Boston side of the Charles River Basin as if by a magnet.

Electric Organ Used

For the first time, the musicians performed with the elaborate Hammond electric organ, largest outdoor installation of its kind in the world, which is a gift of ex-Gov. Alvan T. Fuller. It had its first real test in "Pomp and Circumstance" and was immediately wildly acclaimed as the thousands clapped in unison for an encore.

Esplanade Concert Season Opens Here

Continued from the First Page

With Wilfred Tremblay at the keyboard, its delicate tones, created by electrical impulses instead of pipes or reeds, reached every ear in the spellbound crowd.

The orchestra's members, nattily dressed in blue coats and white flannel trousers, were at their playing best as attested by the six "extras" intermingled with the eight regularly scheduled pieces.

A frisky southwest wind blew in on the audience for the entire two-hour performance, unfurling the large American flag at the left of the shell and the state flag at the right near the electric organ. It was the strongest wind since the opening concert 12 years ago, but unlike that of July 4, 1929, when the sheets of music were blown from the musician's stands and in some instances carried out to the river's edge.

As Conductor Fiedler expressed his amazement at the size of the audience, in view of the extended three-day holiday, he announced that during the concert next Sunday evening a piano concerto with Jesus Sanroma as soloist will be played in memory of the late Ignace Jan Paderewski. Several other piano concertos will also be played.

As usual the crowd began to arrive long before the opening number. At 6 p. m. more than 200 persons had already rented chairs and claimed choice spots in the arena facing Memorial Shell. Traffic tie-ups in the vicinity were prevalent.

Following the program's concluding number, "Slavonic Dance in C Major, No. 15," by Dvorak, Director Fiedler, founder of the esplanade concerts which have gained country-wide fame, turned and urged the audience to sing while the orchestra played the National Anthem, the final number of the concerts since their beginning.

Other numbers played were Handel's "Largo," "Andante Cantabile," from Tchaikovsky's Fifth Symphony, the Prelude to Wagner's Mastersingers, Bach-Wilhelmj's "Air on the G String," and Strauss' "Tales from the Vienna Woods."

New Organ Heard in Program Conducted by Arthur Fiedler

Contrast is half of music, by proof of the sound of the big Hammond organ played at the opening of the Esplanade Concerts, Arthur Fiedler, conductor, in the Hatch Memorial Shell last night, along with the sound of a single violin played in succession to it. The piece which provided occasion for this particular contrast was an arrangement of Handel's "Largo," which is in the summer repertory of the Boston Symphony. The difference in volume between the keyboard mechanism which produces its tone electrically and the little fiddle, the strings of which are chafed by horsehair, is about as far as you can go; and it illustrates what happens in the performance of any music that makes artistic pretensions. Contrasting powers, or light and shade, we may say, is half the matter, and melody is the other half. Contrast is the active element, and tune the passive, or that which is acted upon.

As for the "Largo," some expert at instrumentation figured out how it ought to go and transcribed it, nobody remembers when, and the summer conductor brings it down from the library shelf just so often, whether for the pleasure of the public at the Symphony Hall Pops in May and June, or for that of the open-air July-evening listeners on the Storrow Embankment of the Charles River. The contrast was particularly exciting on this occasion and in this particular piece. because with the electric organ there arrives on the orchestral platform something from a new realm altogether. A machine seeks a place in elect orchestral society. Does it belong there? No doubt it does. For the purpose of contrast, it fills requirements; and for the purpose of melody it overfills them.

For the electric organ, they say, does not, and indeed cannot, get out of tune. Admittedly, the charm of the classic instruments is their little uncertainties of tuning. Even a piano remains perfectly in tune hardly more than the afternoon of the day on which the tuner smooths it up. The harp stays in tune but a few minutes, and is perhaps never exact throughout its compass for so much as an instant. So with everything that depends on taut wire or catgut. So also with whatever pipe or tube that is blown and that gives out a natural scale and harmonics.

Perhaps the organ, played where night breezes blow, will show fluctuations of pitch that will redeem its mathematical precision: and perhaps the inexactitude of the historic instruments will have all the more charm from being set off against mechanical perfection.

The organ in the shell, the gift of former Gov. Alvan T. Fuller, was played last night by Wilfrid Tremblay and it had a part in the opening number on the program, "Pomp and Circumstance" March, by Elgar, as well as in the "Largo." Regular orchestral numbers presented were the slow movement of Tchaikowsky's Symphony No. 5, the "Meistersinger" Prelude, the Air on the G String by Bach, arr. Wilhelmj; Strauss Waltzes, and other familiar short pieces and encores.

W. P. T.

8000 PERSONS AT ESPLANADE

Boston Post - July 8, 1941

Crowd Turns Out to Hear Concert Despite Clouds

Despite threatening weather 8000 Boston music lovers gathered at the Hatch Shell last night for another of the nightly Esplanade concerts by musicians of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Director Arthur Fiedler.

Tonight the first of the annual series of informal talks on the more important pieces of the reperoire will be given by Mrs. Dorothy T. Moyer, who will speak at 7:40 on "The Eighth Symphony of Beethoven." This talk, under the auspices of the division of university extension of the State Department of Education, will be illustrated by Wilfred Tremblay at the Hamomnd organ, through which it will be possible to reproduce the various instruments of an orchestra. Tomorrow, at 10 a. m., the first of three Wednesday concerts especially for children will be given.

Talk on Beethoven To Precede Concert

Boston Herald - July 8, 1941

Tonight's outdoor Esplanade concert at the Hatch Memorial Shell on Storrow Embankment will be preceded at 7:40 o'clock by the first in a series o fmusic appreciation talks on the more important compositions in the orchestra's repertoire.

Dorothy Tremble Moyer, speaking under the auspices of the division of university extension of the state department of education, will discuss Beethoven's Eighth Symphony. The principal symphonic themes will be illustrated by Wilfred Tremblay, who will use the new electric organ to mimic various orchestral instruments.

Arthur Fieldler, conductor of the orchestra that played to approximately 8000 persons last night, announced he would conduct the first in the series of children's concerts at the Esplanade tomorrow morning at 10 o'clock.

FIRST ESPLANADE CONCERT OF YEAR HEARD BY 25,000

Boston Post - July 7, 1941

Unexpectedly Large Audience Listens to New Hatch Memorial Shell Organ---Entire Riverbank Area Colorful Scene---To Feature Soloists

VAST THRONG AT FIRST ESPLANADE CONCERT
More than 25,000 persons crowded before the Hatch Memorial Shell last night to hear the first Esplanade concert of the season.

Before an audience of more than 25,000, the Esplanade concerts of the 1941 season opened last night in a great triumph for Boston music, Boston music audiences and Arthur Fiedler, the founder and conductor of these concerts.

FIRST ESPLANADE CONCERT DRAWS 25,000

Continued From First Page

The audience listened mostly from a compact array of camp chairs set in front of the Hatch Memorial Shell in mass formation, while thousands of others milled around the outskirts and still others listened to the lighter classics leaning over their automobile windows on Embankment road.

Excursion boats on the river stopped, some of them for the duration of the concert, and a bright yellow hydroplane was said to have changed the schedule for its take-off from its anchorage near the shell.

The whole area was a brilliant mass of color in a scenic paradise, the low lapping of the waters of the Charles in the lagoon forming a subtle obligato to the music itself, which, this time, had every aid of wind and acoustics and even the last word in engineering skill to provide the ultimate in perfect effect.

To the police and to Conductor Fiedler himself the size of the crowd was wholly unexpected, for it was presumed that the week-end holiday would give the concerts' opening this year a merely ordinary audience of perhaps 10,000 to 15,000.

The response was taken in the light of a new evidence of the depth to which the Esplanade concerts, like the Pops, which Fiedler also conducts, had become a fixed Boston institution.

Fiedler hipself, in his double-breasted blue coat and white flannel trousers, remained unchanged except for increasing silver and iron gray tints in his dark, jet black mane. But if the audience was beginning to take the concerts for granted he was not. Already he was proceeding to make the most of the new electrical organ which is a gift to the concerts from ex-Governor Alvan T. Fuller, and last night he had completed plans for having an occasional soloist here and there during the concerts which go on, except Saturdays, until July 27.

To Extend Repertoire

Mr. Fiedler referred to these plans as an "extension of our repertoire."

The organ, played last night by Wilfrid Tremblay, made itself sonorously manifest in the evening's opening selection, Elgar's "Pomp and Circumstance," where its majestic tones rendered a gracious and magnificent glamour to this same piece denied it in the past because of the organ's absence.

Technological science combined with the artistic perceptions of Mr. Tremblay to bring the organ in key with the orchestra early in the evening when, shortly after 6 o'clock, the audience began to appear for a concert not scheduled to begin until 8:30 p. m. For some time, the engineer, Mr. Tremblay, and the orchestra's oboe player, toiled to get the splendid and sensitive new instrument in tune so that the final effective was a wholly unanimous "A."

Their pains proved worthless when, later in the programme, there was an orchestral rendition of Handel's largo, arranged to give the organ especially grander play. Later on Fiedler told a newsman the audience will hear such far more ambitious things from this organ as a Handel concerto.

As an aside, it was pointed out that this organ has enough wires on its interior to reach from Boston to Worcester to Providence and back to Boston again.

Soloist to Play

Also, next week, Fiedler said, Jesus Maria Sanroma, the Boston Symphony's piano soloist, is to play Paderewski's piano concerto, which the orchestra, with Fiedler about a year or so ago, recorded for phonograph, under Paderewski's own direction.

At that time, Fiedler said, he took his place in the balcony, the empty balcony, while the recording was going on. Now and again, Fiedler related, Paderewski, aged, hoarse and stooped, offered suggestions. When it was over, Fiedler went on to relate, Paderewski stood up in the balcony, slowly and painfully, and bowed in the grand old world manner, complimenting the players with the bend of his head and the wave of his hand. It is this, in Paderewski's memory, Fiedler said, which Sanroma and the orchestra will play on the Esplanade next week.

Another feature of the concerts this year was the assembly of some three new, small but mobile, portable booths fitted with blinking electric lights and intended to help in the distribution of programmes and the collection of moneys for the Esplanade Concerts Fund.

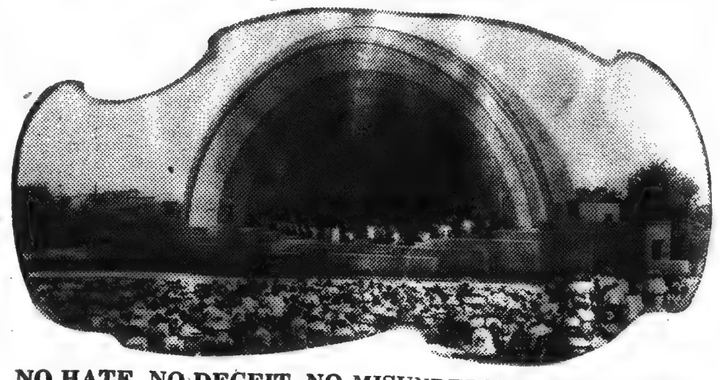
A long slot fits into one side of these booths for the easy insertion of coins and bills, the money feature continuing to be the one enduring headache of the concerts. Besides the regular evening concerts beginning at 8:30 every night, except Saturdays, until July 27, there are three children's concerts Wednesday mornings at 10 o'clock, July 9, 16 and 23.

174

CHILDREN ENJOY

Boston American, July

Boston's popular Esplanade concerts. The reader will see many young music lovers in the picture of a typical audience at Hatch Memorial Shell.



NO HATE, NO DECEIT, NO MISUNDERSTANDING HERE
Hatch Shell Concert Audience Hears Universal Language

No oratory calculated to distort truth or to further politicians' selfish ambitions misleads young minds at these concerts.

Perhaps, if there were more music, less oratory, death in war might not be the destiny of so large a part of the world's youth.

MUSIQUIZ PRIZES GIVEN AT ESPLANADE TONIGHT

Boston Herald, July 11, 1941

Appearing in person on the stage of the magnificent Hatch Memorial shell tonight during the interval of the Esplanade concert, the five highest ranking prize winners of The Boston Herald Musiquiz will be awarded engraved certificates in token of their merit by Arthur Fiedler, conductor of the Esplanade orchestra, as well as the Pops orchestra which presented the Musiquizzes in the Boston Garden on June 15 and 22 before 22,000 people.

The certificates represent nearly a thousand dollars in musical prizes, and will be awarded to Parker W. Perry of Melrose and Warren Babb of Cambridge, who are co-winners of the first prize; to Leonard Bernstein of Sharon; to Frederic Davis of Belmont and to Morton Blender of Brookline, who achieved highest honors in a musical contest in which 8500 people took active part.

According to Symphony Hall officials, the Esplanade concerts are held every night but Saturday night unless it is raining at 8 o'clock on the evening of the concert, which begins at 8:30 P. M. If, however, heavy weather makes tonight's concert impossible, the presentation exercises will take place next Sunday night.

While five prizes will be awarded during the exercises, arrangements have already been completed to award the additional 25 runners-up their prizes by mail. Among these there are 10 winners of $10 worth of Victor records and 24 consolation prize winners of the Boston Pops latest recording of the Gluck-Mottl Ballet Suite.

As an additional feature of the presentation ceremonies Arthur Fiedler has contrived a musical surprise, the nature of which was not divulged.

ON THE ESPLANADE . . . By Norbert Quinn

Boston Globe July 11, 1941

More Than 1,000 Youngsters Attend Concert on Esplanade

By Jessie Ash Arndt

Staff Writer of The Christian Science Monitor

Did you come on your tricycle or in your kiddie cart?

Maybe, if you were a few years older, you rode a bicycle or perhaps you just walked along the Esplanade with Mother, but, however you came, you listened with wide-eyed delight as the music played.

Boston begins early to build its symphony audiences. This morning more than a thousand boys and girls sat in the sunshine for the first Children's Esplanade Concert of the season, conducted by Arthur Fiedler. In the background was the sparkling water of the Charles River, overhead blue sky flecked with white clouds and, before the band shell, a sea of bright little faces, some under sunbonnets, others framed by brown or golden curls that blew in the breeze and others topped by bristling little boy haircuts or close-fitting little sailor hats.

Dolls came to the concert for the first time. They were twins, both in pink hats and dresses and were carefully held by their little owners so they wouldn't say "Mama" right in the middle of an overture.

Many members of the audience sat in groups on the grass. Others had chairs. Some sat on them with small feet keeping time to the music as they hung half way to the ground. Others stood on them. For instance, two young boys who solemnly munched graham crackers as they listened to the Prayer from "Hansel and Gretel."

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR, JULY 9, 1941

Paderewski Given Esplanade Tribute

BOSTON HERALD, JULY 14, 1941

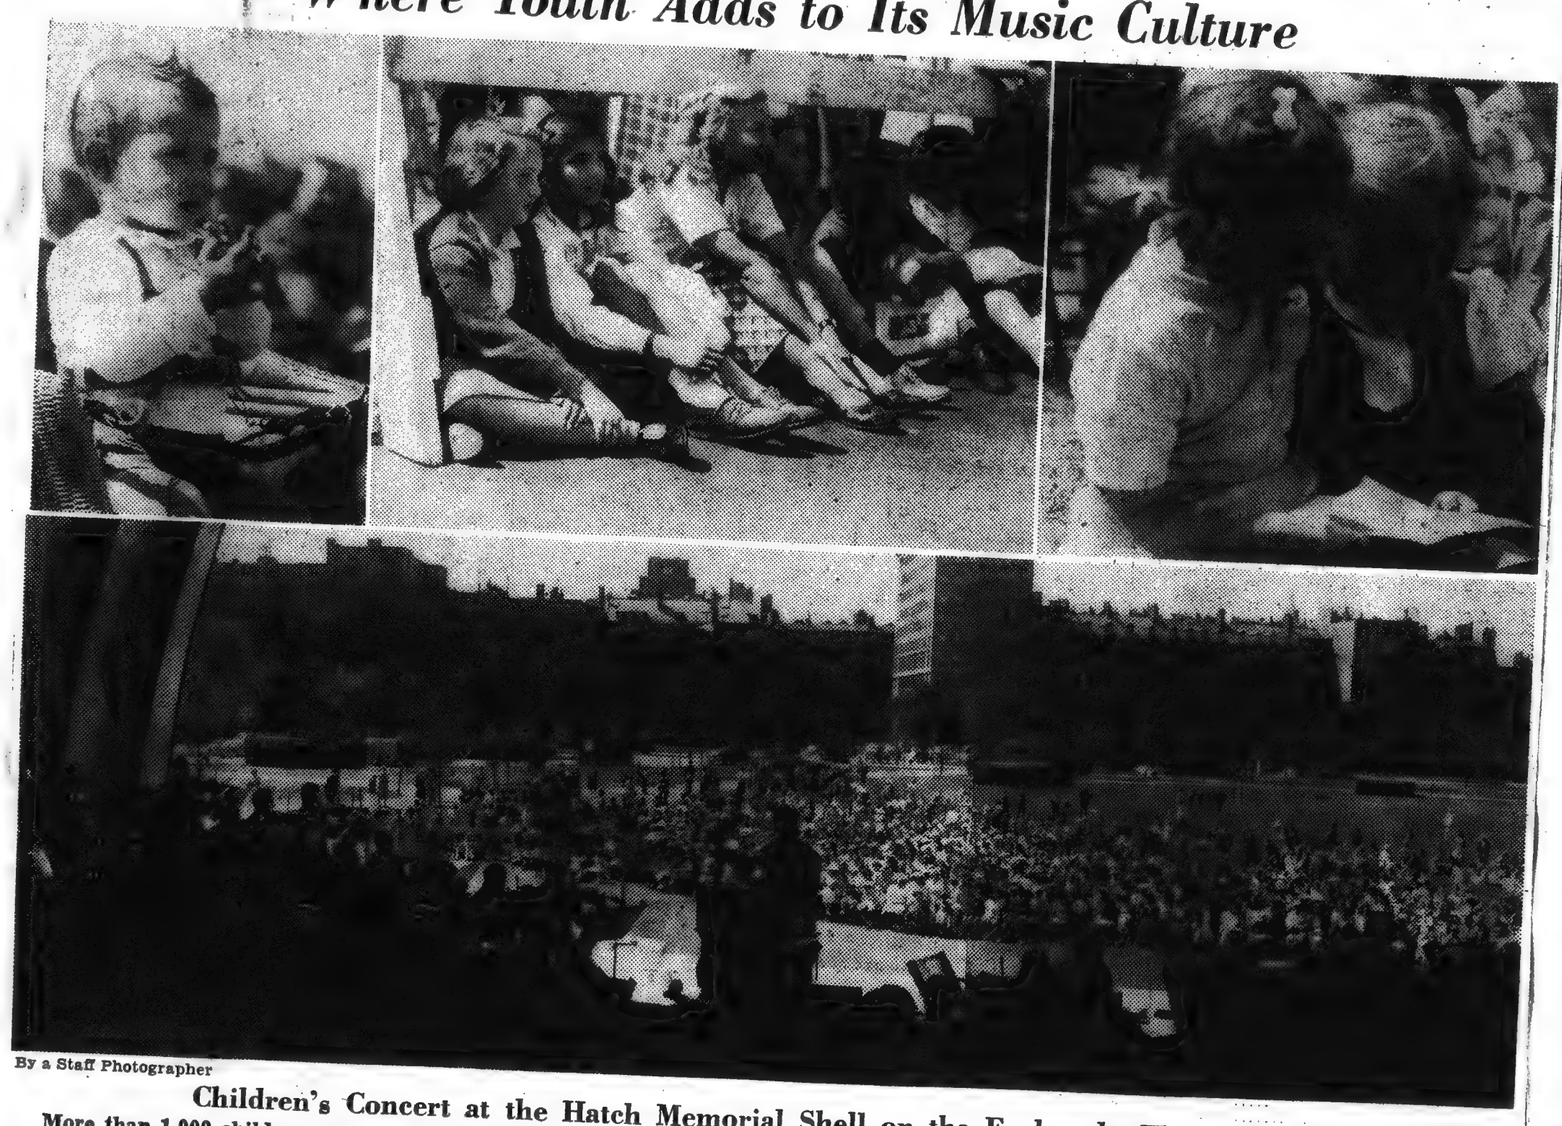
A silent tribute to the late Jan Ignace Paderewski featured the Esplanade concert in the Hatch Memorail shell last night. At the behest of paino virtuoso Jesus Sanroma 12,000 music lovers stood with bared heads for a full minute prior to Sanroma's rendition of the Polish statesman's "Concerto in A Minor."

Last night was the first time that a piano concerto has been attempted in the shell and the enthusiasm with which it was received proved it a successful venture.

Threatening skies all evening and a deluge just as the concert was scheduled to start caused thousands of less ardent music fans to forego the musicale for more sheltered spots.

175-2

Where Youth Adds to Its Music Culture



By a Staff Photographer

Children's Concert at the Hatch Memorial Shell on the Esplanade This Morning

More than 1,000 children gathered on the Esplanade this morning for the first children's concert of the season under the baton of Arthur Fiedler. Applause came from tots in baby carriages and older brothers and sisters seated on chairs and on the ground. At the right (at top) are two young members of the audience studying their program. Below is a picture of the Shell, with the orchestra looking out at the audience of youthful music lovers. The next children's concerts will be on July 16 and July 23 at 10 a. m.

BOSTON JULY 14 MUSIC GLOBE 1941

HATCH MEMORIAL SHELL

Esplanade Concert

At 7:30 last night, rain was splashing about the Hatch Memorial Shell, but an hour later a big crowd was on hand to hear the first piano concerto ever performed at the Esplanade Concerts. In fact the crowd numbered about 10,000 by the time the work actually began. Conductor Arthur Fiedler properly decided that a good many people might come to the Charles River Esplanade when once they were certain that the storm was over, so he changed the order of the program and the Concerto was the last number of the evening.

Not only was it the first such work at these concerts, but it was the A minor Concerto of Paderewski, performed in memory of the great pianist, composer and patriot who died in New York a fortnight ago. Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was soloist. The interpretation of this music by Messrs Fiedler, Sanroma and the orchestra is well known, for they have played it at the Pops and have recorded it.

Last night they repeated their success with a performance mettlesome and clear. The cool, still and dampish air favored them, making the piano and orchestral tone come out of the Hatch Memorial with more than usual carrying power.

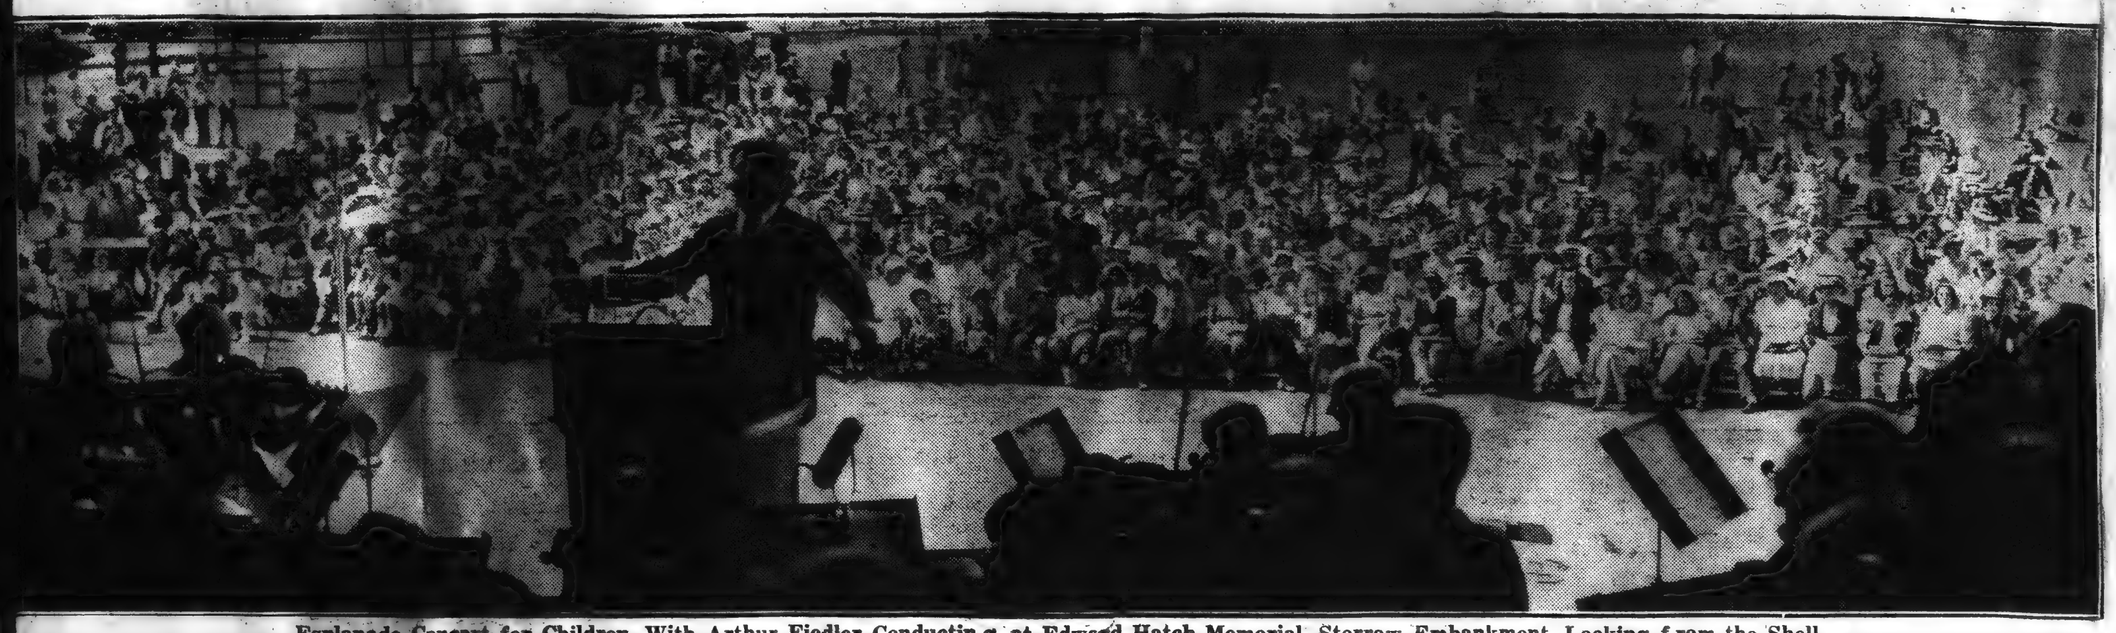
Tchaikovsky's Overture Fantasia "Romeo and Juliet," the "Military" Polonaise of Chopin in the orchestral transcription of Glazunoff, Waldteufel's "Estudiantina" waltzes, and the "Knightsbridge" March of Eric Coates were on the program. It remains only to say that the whole concert, the Concerto in particular, was received with absorbed attention and rousing applause.—C. W. D.

BOSTON HERALD, JULY 17 1941

A STUDY IN MUSIC appreciation is presented by these two Belmont sisters, Gretchen and Cynthia Stotz, who were among the hundreds of youngsters who attended the children's concert on the Esplanade yesterday.

SPELLBOUND BY MUSIC was this youthful trio yesterday during the children's concert in the Esplanade series at the Hatch Memorial Shell. The boy is momentarily engaged in studying the operation of a news camera.

DAILY RECORD, THURSDAY, JULY 10, 1941



Esplanade Concert for Children, With Arthur Fiedler Conducting, at Edward Hatch Memorial, Storrow Embankment, Looking from the Shell

Audience on Esplanade Rises as Tribute to Paderewski

BOSTON POST
July 14, 1941

PAY HOMAGE TO PADEREWSKI'S MEMORY

Arthur Fiedler and the Esplanade orchestra in a minute of silent tribute last night before a performance of Paderewski's piano concerto with Jesus M. Sanroma as soloist.

The orchestra, conductor and soloist, who a little more than a year ago recorded Ignace Jan Paderewski's Concerto in A Minor in Symphony Hall while the benign Polish statesman himself supervised it from a seat in the balcony, last night played it again before an audience of 10,000 or more on the Boston Esplanade.

AUDIENCE RISES

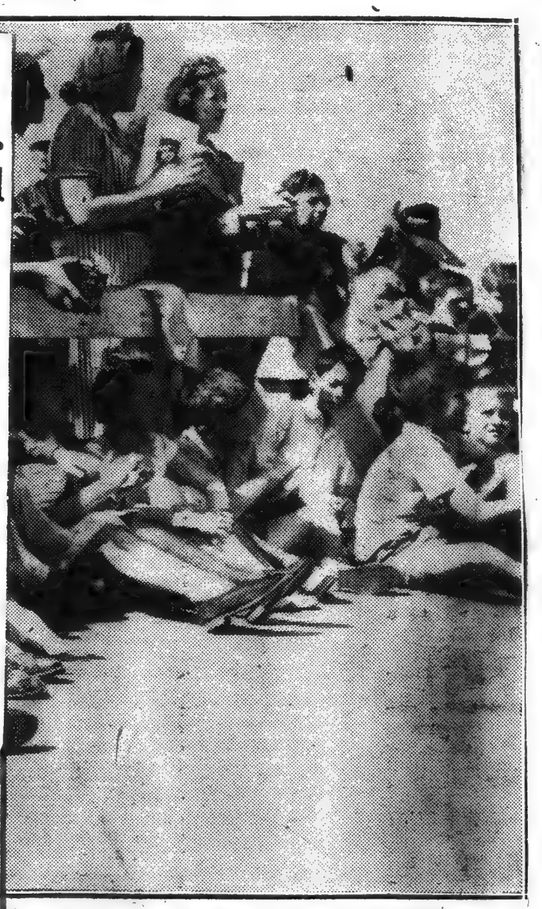
The performance was a solemn tribute to the late famous Pole, made the more impressive by a simple ceremony in which orchestra, Conductor Arthur Fiedler, Pianist Jesus Maria Sanroma and the audience stood silent for a moment of reverence, before the rendition was given.

The Paderewski composition and a Chopin Polonaise, orchestrated by Glazounov, were placed at the conclusion of a programme which, through a damp evening, fascinated the attention of an audience ready to stick it out so long as the orchestra and Conductor Fiedler would play.

Moisture a Drawback

It was because of the weather that the Paderewski tribute was switched from the first part of the programme to the last because it was feared that the moisture would play hob with the grand piano which Sanroma was to use. When the weather finally cleared, the threat of cancellation disappeared, and the Paderewski piece de resistance went on.

The rain, in the earlier part of the evening, was responsible for other misadventures, however. For the crowd, eager to place their 10-cent rented chairs in the most favorable spots before the orchestra, turned them upside down and used them for umbrellas during the downpour. Then, the seat dry, or almost dry, they turned them rightside up after the rain, and sat through the performance, losing their consciousness about the moisture in the grass and the dampness of the seats in the enchantment of the music.



ONCERT FOR CHILDREN

as they applauded during the first Esplanade ch Memorial, Storrow Embankment, Charles onducting, yesterday morning. Thousands of
It is the 13th consecutive season for the Concerts. Seventy Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians play.

BOSTON HERALD, July 23 1941

EVERYDAY MOVIES By Denys Wortman

"It's swell to listen to music out of doors in the moonlight, or even if there isn't any moon, and even if it's nly classical."

BOSTON HERALD, July 23 1941

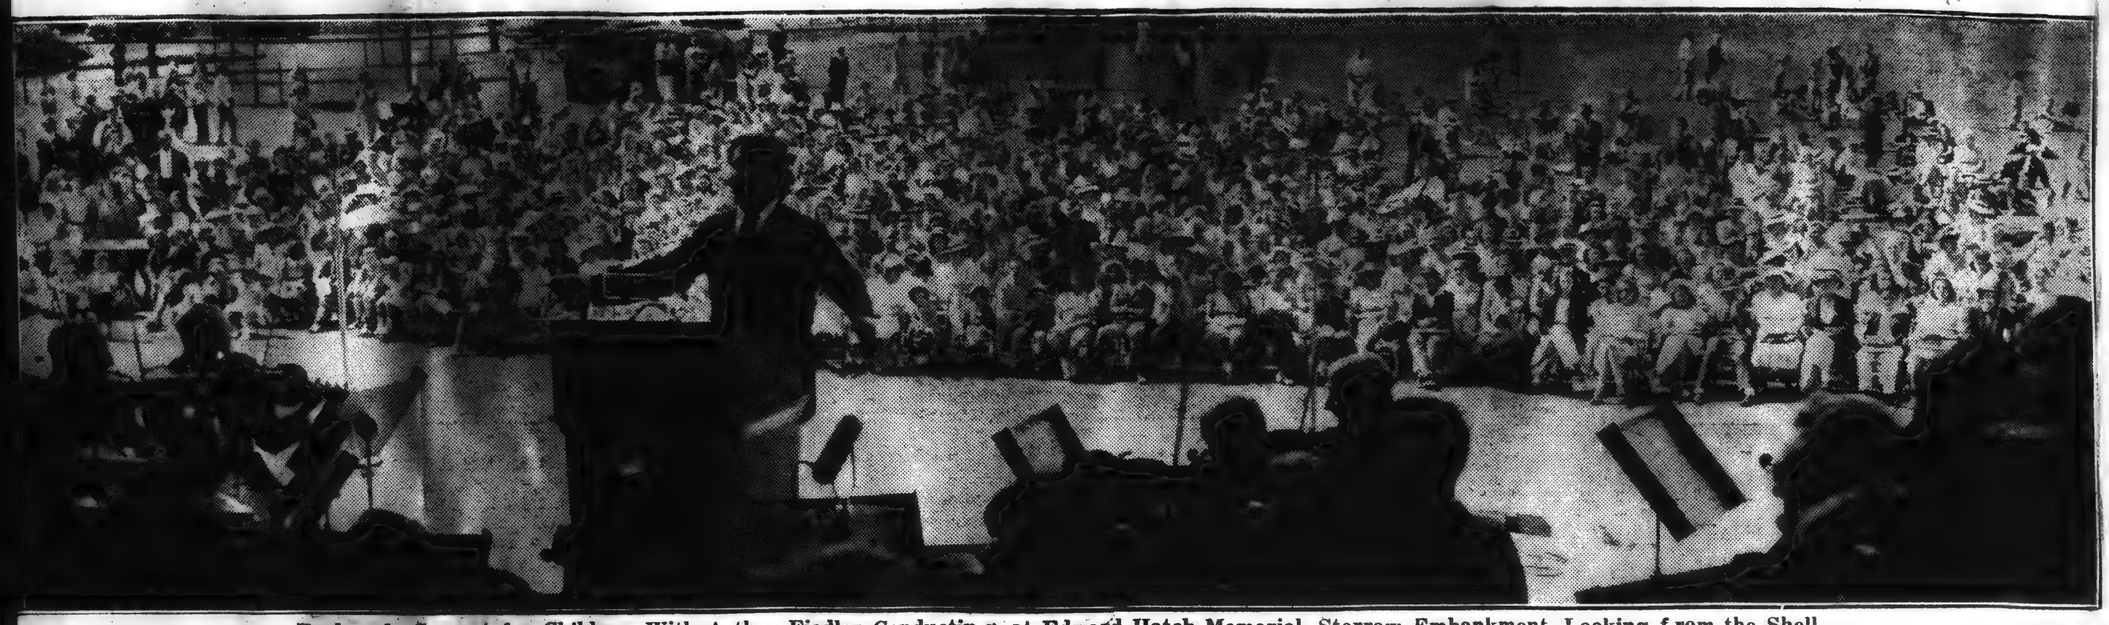
Esplanade Deficit

The season's last Esplanade Concert will be given at the Hatch Shell Sunday night. These concerts are almost entirely dependent on public support. The public's share in financing this year's 22 concerts runs to about $9000. But if contributions continue at the present rate, the fund will fall about $1800 short of this goal.

It seems unbelievable that crowds ranging as high as 30,000 should throng the Esplanade on concert nights and yet not care enough about the music to contribute more coins. It is incredible that these people should applaud and applaud and even cry "bravo" and yet not make the music the sponsors want most to hear—the tinkle of coins in the contribution boxes.

If you go to the concerts during the closing nights, drop money into these boxes or at the little green booths where the enlarged programs are distributed without charge. If you can't attend, contributions can be sent to the Esplanade Concerts Fund, Merchants National Bank, 28 State street, Boston.

DAILY RECORD, THURSDAY, JULY 10, 1941



Esplanade Concert for Children, With Arthur Fiedler Conducting, at Edward Hatch Memorial, Storrow Embankment, Looking from the Shell

Jordan's Great Basement Store

Six Way Floor Lamps

WITH SHADES

Also Bridge Reflector Style Included at This Price

Usually Higher

$5

Complete With Shade

- Gives 3 degrees of indirect and 3 degrees of direct light.
- With glass reflector.
- Decorative bronze plated base.
- Attractive pleated rayon

In Miss Sizes 12

$2

F. Jordan

The orchestra, conductor and soloist, who a little more than a year ago recorded Ignace Jan Paderewski's Concerto in A Minor in Symphony Hall while the benign Polish statesman himself supervised it from a seat in the balcony, last night played it again before an audience of 10,000 or more on the Boston Esplanade.

AUDIENCE RISES

The performance was a solemn tribute to the late famous Pole, made the more impressive by a simple ceremony in which orchestra, Conductor Arthur Fiedler, Pianist Jesus Maria Sanroma and the audience stood silent for a moment of reverence, before the rendition was given.

The Paderewski composition and a Chopin Polonaise, orchestrated by Glazounov, were placed at the conclusion of a programme which, through a damp evening, fascinated the attention of an audience ready to stick it out so long as the orchestra and Conductor Fiedler would play.

Moisture a Drawback

It was because of the weather that the Paderewski tribute was switched from the first part of the programme to the last because it was feared that the moisture would play hob with the grand piano which Sanroma was to use. When the weather finally cleared, the threat of cancellation disappeared, and the Paderewski piece de resistance went on.

The rain, in the earlier part of the evening, was responsible for other misadventures, however. For the crowd, eager to place their 10-cent rented chairs in the most favorable spots before the orchestra, turned them upside down and used them for umbrellas during the downpour. Then, the seat dry, or almost dry, they turned them rightside up after the rain, and sat through the performance, losing their consciousness about the moisture in the grass and the dampness of the seats in the enchantment of the music.

FIRST ESPLANADE CONCERT FOR CHILDREN

Interesting study of kiddie music lovers as they applauded during the first Esplanade concert for children at the Edward Hatch Memorial, Storrow Embankment, Charles River Esplanade, with Arthur Fiedler conducting, yesterday morning. Thousands of boys and girls—and adults—attended. It is the 13th consecutive season for the concerts. Seventy Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians play.

BOSTON HERALD, July 23 1941

EVERYDAY MOVIES By Denys Wortman

"It's swell to listen to music out of doors in the moonlight, or even if there isn't any moon, and even if it's only classical."

BOSTON HERALD, July 23 1941

Esplanade Deficit

The season's last Esplanade Concert will be given at the Hatch Shell Sunday night. These concerts are almost entirely dependent on public support. The public's share in financing this year's 22 concerts runs to about $9000. But if contributions continue at the present rate, the fund will fall about $1800 short of this goal.

It seems unbelievable that crowds ranging as high as 30,000 should throng the Esplanade on concert nights and yet not care enough about the music to contribute more coins. It is incredible that these people should applaud and applaud and even cry "bravo" and yet not make the music the sponsors want most to hear—the tinkle of coins in the contribution boxes.

If you go to the concerts during the closing nights, drop money into these boxes or at the little green booths where the enlarged programs are distributed without charge. If you can't attend, contributions can be sent to the Esplanade Concerts Fund, Merchants National Bank, 28 State street, Boston.

15,000 DEFY RAIN TO HEAR FINAL ESPLANADE CONCERT

Boston Post, July 28, 1941

Stay to Hear Last Note of Music in Final Outdoor Programme---Pour $900 Into Fund, Nearly Enough to Wipe Out Deficit of the Present Season

MUSIC LOVERS SEEK SHELTER AT FINAL ESPLANADE CONCERT
Part of the crowd at the final Esplanade concert of the season last night are shown with uplifted umbrellas under the shelter of the trees as rain began to fall. A few persons fashioned rain hats from folded newspapers.

Fifteen thousand music lovers laughed at the rain last night on the Charles River Esplanade and remained for the last note of the final outdoor concert of the summer season conducted under the Edward Hatch Memorial shell by Arthur Fiedler and his orchestra of 70 Boston Symphony musicians.

Continued on Page 7—Sixth Col.

As a result there now remains only $450 due to pay off all the bills of the orchestra's season, towards which the public annually contributes $9000. Had the expected record crowd of 30,000 braved the threatening skies, the entire deficit would have been erased, Edward F. Messinger, treasurer of the Esplanade Concerts Fund, estimated. He expressed the belief that the mail contributions within the next few days might permit the organization to clear its financial slate.

During the first half of the concert the heavens merely sprinkled the audience, but following intermission the rain came down hard, forcing some of the listeners in their flimsy summer dresses to race for the protection of nearby trees. But the greater part of the crowd remained in their seats throughout the entire programme.

177

PRAISE FOR TRAVELER FIEDLER AND WAGNER

People's Editor:

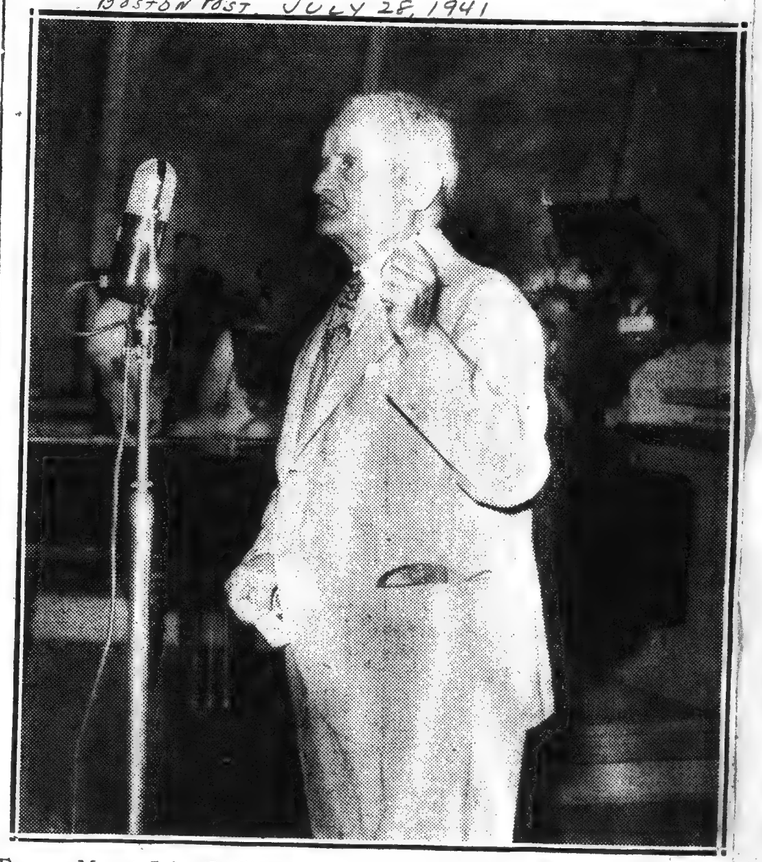
Now that the Esplanade concerts have drawn to a close it seems to this writer that Mr. Fiedler should be given a special vote of thanks for his sound judgment, wisdom and generosity in giving us the opportunity of hearing several guest conductors during this summer's Esplanade series.

When we look around us and see so many petty jealousies in this world, especially among persons of the same profession, it makes this move on Mr. Fiedler's part all the more significant.

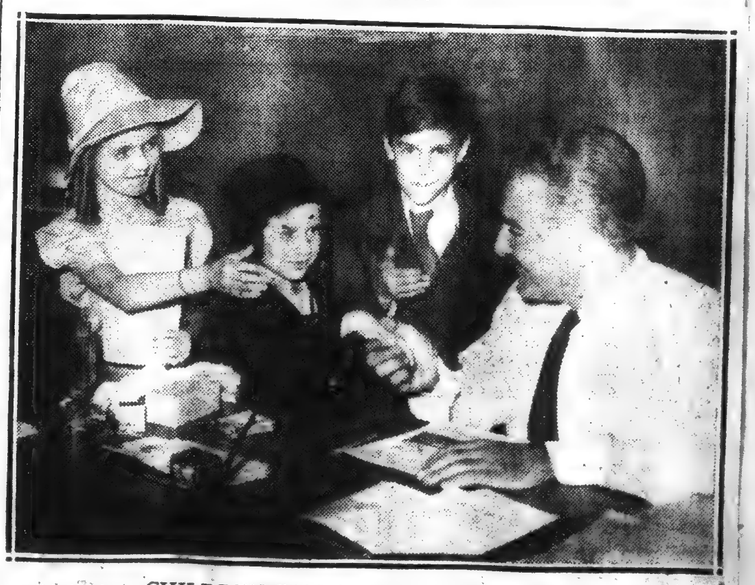
Having heard all of the guest conductors this summer, this writer was especially impressed with the program of July 23, under the Boston composer and conductor, Joseph Wagner. Here is an American composer-conductor who is coming into his own both as a composer as well as conductor. Not only is he writing good music, but judging from last Thursday's large audience and their hearty response, is also writing music that is good to hear. RICHARD D. ROW.

Esplanade Crowd Hears Familiar Voice

Boston Post, July 28, 1941



Former Mayor John F. Fitzgerald is shown addressing the crowd of music lovers from the Hatch Memorial Shell at the final Esplanade concert of the season.



CHILDREN SAY GOOD-BY TO FIEDLER
These children are shown saying good-by to Conductor Arthur Fiedler at the final Esplanade concert. Left to right: Lorraine Terranova, and Claire and Thomas Mahoney.

Boston Herald, July 28, 1941

15,000 Defy Rain to Hear Last Esplanade Concert

MUSIC LOVERS, TOO, are Uncle Sam's soldiers and sailors and here are Sgt. Charles Jones of Fort Standish and Seaman Bill Chandler braving last night's rain at the Esplanade concert.

Contributions Cut Deficit to $450

Boston's claim as the music loving center of America remained undisputed last night when nearly 15,000 persons paid absolutely no attention to the threatening skies and made their way to the Hatch Shell on the Esplanade to hear Arthur Fiedler and his 70 Boston Symphony musicians play their final concert of the season.

True, some left at the intermission when the showers became heavy, and a few of the less hardy sought shelter under tarpaulins and friendly trees, but at least 10,000 just sat—sat in the wet to hear their favorites played.

Some had umbrellas, several newspapers, but the majority just turned up their coat collars and shrugged their shoulders. A baseball or football fan couldn't have done better. They were well rewarded for the orchestra, recognizing their spirit, gave probably its best concert of the season.

Further proof of their determination to hear good music came during an appeal for funds by former Mayor John F. Fitzgerald in which he revealed that the deficit for the concerts this year had dropped below the $1000 mark.

This definitely showed that the audiences have enlarged their donations in that last year's deficit was more than twice that amount despite mail contributions which totalled nearly double those of this year.

siastically er Mayor their apn district nethod of r worried

e Connor s parents took the m where ounded a speakers, of the ough the recovered

ce for the bion Met-American he Franz nz, opened
nme. The e the end

3 years of piano con-
first time
Maria San oncerto in the great enough, it hough the concerto it that not called off

ome down on of To-push the shell when ayers were he rear of The audind took it.
ers bowed ance, their of grati-ceived was nival spirit n the last
e, Straus' d, a num-rain, were dancing on the [illegible] greensward.

15,000 DEFY RAIN TO HEAR FINAL ESPLANADE CONCERT

Boston Post July 28, 1941

Stay to Hear Last Note of Music in Final Outdoor Programme---Pour $900 Into Fund, Nearly Enough to Wipe Out Deficit of the Present Season

MUSIC LOVERS SEEK SHELTER AT FINAL ES
Part of the crowd at the final Esplanade concert of the season last nigh der the shelter of the trees as rain began to fall. A few persons fashio

Fifteen thousand music lovers laughed at the rain last night on the Charles River Esplanade and remained for the last note of the final outdoor concert of the summer season conducted under the Edward Hatch Memorial shell by Arthur Fiedler and his orchestra of 70 Boston Symphony musicians.

Continued on Page 7—Sixth Col.

DEFY RAIN AT ESPLANADE CONCERT

Continued From First Page

That it was a music-loving crowd anxious for another open air season of symphony music was displayed when the deficit was all but wiped out when they poured $800 into the contribution boxes. This was twice as much as the average night's gifts and it came after former Mayor John F. Fitzgerald sounded an appeal for funds.

As a result there now remains only $450 due to pay off all the bills of the orchestra's season, towards which the public annually contributes $9000. Had the expected record crowd of 30,000 braved the threatening skies, the entire deficit would have been erased, Edward F. Messinger, treasurer of the Esplanade Concerts Fund, estimated. He expressed the belief that the mail contributions within the next few days might permit the organization to clear its financial slate.

During the first half of the concert the heavens merely sprinkled the audience, but following intermission the rain came down hard, forcing some of the listeners in their flimsy summer dresses to race for the protection of nearby trees. But the greater part of the crowd remained in their seats throughout the entire programme.

Cheer Musicians

Not only did they enthusiastically cheer the musicians and former Mayor Fitzgerald, but they showed their appreciation of the Metropolitan district police, who engaged a new method of returning lost children to their worried parents.

On finding 8-year-old Leslie Connor of Randolph, vainly seeking his parents in the throng, the police took the youngster upon the platform where Electrician "Dusty" Downs sounded a message through the loud speakers, calling for the identification of the youth. His parents moved through the audience to the stage and recovered their youngster.

The disregard of the audience for the downpour was a tribute to Albion Metcalf, 39, of Reading, young American virtuoso, whose playing of the Franz Liszt piano concerto, Totentanz, opened the second half of the programme. The rain started to fall just before the end of the intermission.

Push Piano Back

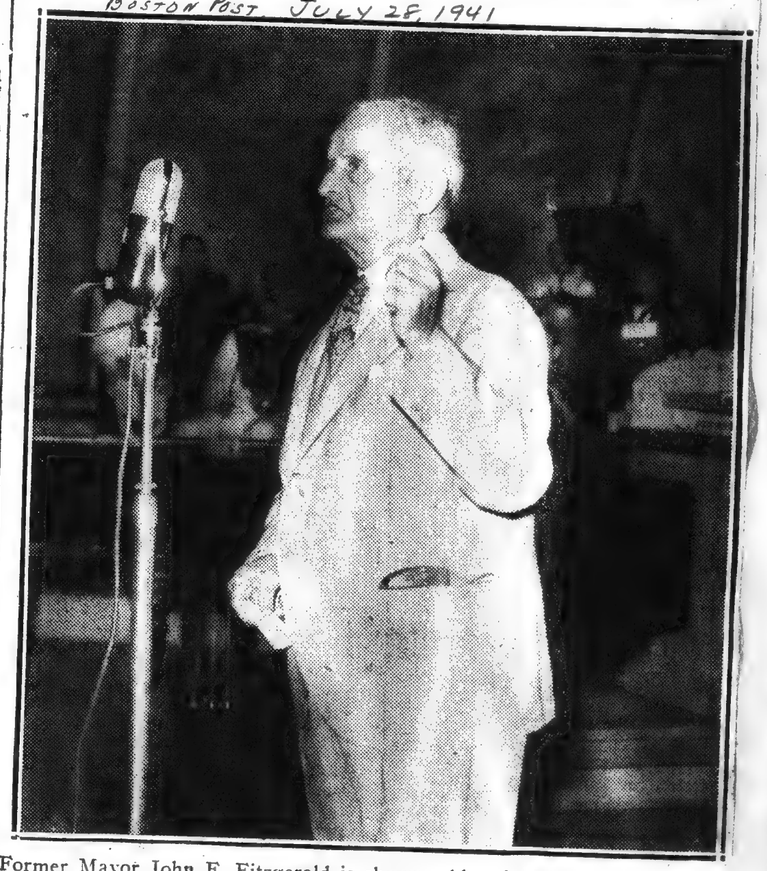
It was the second time in 13 years of Esplanade concerts that a piano concerto has been played. The first time was July 13, when Jesus Maria San Roma played Paderewski's concerto in the memorial programme to the great Polish master. Curiously enough, it rained that night also, although the storm was over before the concerto began. Musicians pointed out that not a single concert has been called off because of rain this season.

The rain continued to come down throughout Metcalf's rendition of Totentanz. It was necessary to push the piano farther back into the shell when the rain started and the players were forced to move closer to the rear of the shell to avoid the rain. The audience, for the most part, sat and took it.

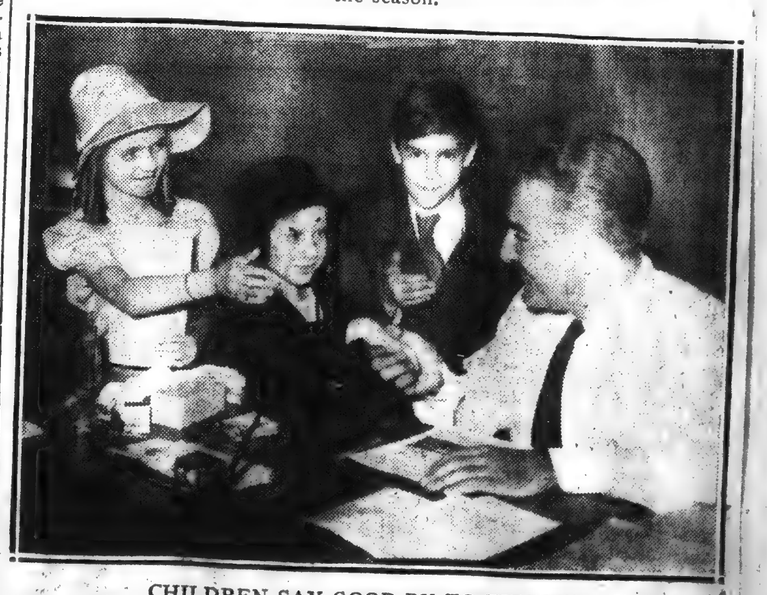
When Metcalf and the players bowed at the end of their performance, their bows deepened with a sense of gratitude. The applause they received was even more prolonged. A carnival spirit gripped the crowd and, when the last number of the programme, Straus' Artist Life, was being played, a number of couples, soaked with rain, were dancing on the equally wet greensward.

Esplanade Crowd Hears Familiar Voice

Boston Post July 28, 1941



Former Mayor John F. Fitzgerald is shown addressing the crowd of music lovers from the Hatch Memorial Shell at the final Esplanade concert of the season.



CHILDREN SAY GOOD-BY TO FIEDLER

These children are shown saying good-by to Conductor Arthur Fiedler at the final Esplanade concert. Left to right: Lorraine Terranova, and Claire and Thomas Mahoney.

177

PRAISE FOR TRAVELER FIEDLER AND WAGNER

People's Editor:

Now that the Esplanade concerts have drawn to a close it seems to this writer that Mr. Fiedler should be given a special vote of thanks for his sound judgment, wisdom and generosity in giving us the opportunity of hearing several guest conductors during this summer's Esplanade series.

When we look around us and see so many petty jealousies in this world, especially among persons of the same profession, it makes this move on Mr. Fiedler's part all the more significant.

Having heard all of the guest conductors this summer, this writer was especially impressed with the program of July 23, under the Boston composer and conductor, Joseph Wagner. Here is an American composer-conductor who is coming into his own both as a composer as well as conductor. Not only is he writing good music, but judging from last Thursday's large audience and their hearty response, is also writing music that is good to hear. RICHARD D. ROW.

MUSIC LOVERS, TOO, are Uncle and here are Sgt. Charles Jones of Bill Chandler braving last night's ra

This Clipping From
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
JOURNAL-COURIER
JUN 13 1941

Musicians Reelect Petrillo

SEATTLE, June 12 (AP)—Unanimously reelected president, James Caesar Petrillo vowed to delegates to the American Federation of Musicians convention today that the famous Boston Symphony Orchestra—only one in the nation not a member of the union—would be

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL
JUN 13 1941

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SALAMANCA, N. Y.
REPUBLICAN PRESS
SEP 20 1941

Union Chief Bars Zimbalist, Szigeti From Symphony

New York, Sept. 20 (AP)—James Petrillo, international president of the American Federation of Musicians (AFL), ruled yesterday that AFM members Efram Zimbalist and Joseph Szigeti, violinists, could not appear with the famed Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Members of the Boston Symphony are not unionized.

The ruling, latest step in the Federation's jurisdictional battle with the American Guild of Musical Artists, carried an ironic twist.

Zimbalist and Szigeti quit the Guild last March to join the Federation. After they resigned, the Court of Appeals reversed an Appellate Division decision and awarded a temporary injunction against the Federation pending a Supreme Court trial of the dispute between the two AFL affiliates.

Had the violinists not joined the Federation they would be free to play with the Boston orchestra. Zimbalist was scheduled to appear with the Symphony on October 31 and November 1 and Szigeti April 10 and 11.

This Clipping From
WINSTED, CONN.
CITIZEN
SEP 20 1941

NEW HARTFORD

Union Refuses to Allow Efrem Zimbalist to Play With Boston Symphony Orchestra—Other Notes

New Hartford, Sept. 20—James Petrillo, international president of the American Federation of Musicians (A.F.L.) ruled at New York yesterday that A.F.M. members Efram Zimbalist of this town and New York city, and Joseph Szigeti, violinists, could not appear with the famed Boston Symphony orchestra.

Members of the Boston Symphony are not unionized.

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN
SEP 19 1941

HUB SYMPHONY HIT BY UNION RULING

New York, Sept. 19.—(INS)—The American Federation of Musicians, headed by James C. Petrillo, today renewed the fight to organize the Boston Symphony Orchestra—the only major non-union band in the country.

Disrupting the symphony's schedule, Petrillo ruled that the two star violinists, Efram Zimbalist and Joseph Szigeti, AFM members, could not play their scheduled fall and spring engagements with the orchestra.

Petrillo also disclosed that the union would prevent Serge Koussevitzky, leader of the Boston Symphony, from appearing in New York this winter as the guest conductor of the Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra, a union band.

The AFM president pointed out that it would be inconsistent for the union to prohibit union members from appearing with a non-union orchestra and then allow a non-union conductor to lead a union orchestra.

This Clipping From
JAMESTOWN, N. Y.
POST
SEP 20 1941

Musicians Union Bars Zimbalist From Symphony

NEW YORK, Sept. 19.—(AP)—James Petrillo, international president of the American Federation of Musicians (AFL), ruled today that AFM members Efram Zimbalist and Joseph Szigeti, violinists, could not appear with the famed Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Members of the Boston Symphony are not unionized.

The ruling, latest step in the Federation's jurisdictional battle with the American Guild of Musical Artists, carried an ironic twist.

Zimbalist and Szigeti quit the Guild last March to join the Federation. After they resigned, the Court of Appeals reversed an Appellate Division decision and awarded a temporary injunction against the Federation pending a Supreme Court trial of the dispute between the two A. F. of L. affiliates.

Had the violinists not joined the Federation they would be free to play with the Boston orchestra. Zimbalist was scheduled to appear with the Symphony on October 31 and November 1 and Szigeti April 10 and 11.

THIS CLIPPING FROM CLEVELAND, TENN.
BANNER
SEP 20 1941

Boston Symphony to Be Minus 2 Stars

NEW YORK, Sept. 20.—(U.P.)—Two concert violinists will be unable to keep engagements with the Boston Symphony orchestra this winter—because it is a non-union organization.

The A. F. of L. Federation of Musicians has so ruled in the cases of its members, Efrem Zimbalist and Joseph Szigeti. Zimbalist says he is disappointed. Szigeti is in Mexico.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
SEP 20 1941

Union Ruling Hits Boston Symphony

Famed Violinists Are Barred From Playing With Orchestra

NEW YORK, Sept. 19 (AP)—James Petrillo, international president of the American Federation of Musicians (A. F. of L.), ruled today that A. F. M. members Efram Zimbalist and Joseph Szigeti, violinists, could not appear with the famed Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Members of the Boston Symphony are not unionized.

The ruling, latest step in the federation's jurisdictional battle with the American Guild of Musical Artists, carried an ironic twist.

Zimbalist and Szigeti quit the guild last March to join the federation. After they resigned, the Court of Appeals reversed an appellate division decision and awarded a temporary injunction against the federation pending a Supreme Court trial of the dispute between the two A. F. of L. affiliates.

Had the violinists not joined the federation they would be free to play with the Boston orchestra. Zimbalist was scheduled to appear with the symphony on Oct. 31 and Nov. 1 and Szigeti April 10 and 11.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN
SEP 19 1941

Petrillo Bars Soloists From Hub Orchestra

James C. Petrillo, czar of the American Federation of Musicians, launched a new controversy in the ranks of music today when he barred Efrem Zimbalist and Joseph Szigeti, noted violinists, from appearing with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The orchestra is the only major non-union one in the country.

Petrillo issued his ultimatum to the NBC Concerts Service, agent for both violinists. Zimbalist was slated to appear as soloist with the orchestra on Oct. 31 and Nov. 1, Szigeti on April 10 and 11.

"It's a disappointment," Zimbalist commented tersely when he heard the news.

Szigeti is now in Mexico and was not reached for comment.

Petrillo also declared that Serge Koussevitsky, leader of the Boston orchestra, would not appear this Winter as guest conductor of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra, which is unionized.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
SUN
SEP 19 1941

2 VIOLINISTS BARRED

Union Row Keeps Zimbalist and Szigeti From Playing.

Because they resigned from the American Guild of Musical Artists and joined the American Federation of Musicians, Efrem Zimbalist and Joseph Szigeti, violinists, apparently will be unable to make scheduled appearances this winter with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the only major non-union orchestra in the country.

The two A. F. of L. unions have been engaged in a long jurisdictional fight. Yesterday James C. Petrillo, president of the federation, ruled that the two violinists could not play with the Boston orchestra. He denied that he had issued any special order on the subject, but pointed out that it was the federation's rule that union members could not play with non-union musicians.

Mr. Zimbalist, who was to have played with the Boston orchestra on October 31 and November 1, remarked when he heard of the ruling: "It's a disappointment." Mr. Szigeti is in Mexico and his manager here would make no comment. He was to have appeared with the orchestra next April. After the resignations of several persons from the guild last March, the guild was awarded a temporary injunction against the federation in its fight to keep Mr. Petrillo from organizing the solo instrumentalists. The matter is still to be settled in the Supreme Court.

This Clipping From
HOLYOKE, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT TELEGRAM
SEP 23 1941

James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, affiliate of the AFL, threatened to throw a picket line around Symphony hall this season if the Boston Symphony Orchestra continues to refuse to deal with his union.

This Clipping From
AMSTERDAM, N. Y.
RECORDER DEMOCRAT
SEP 20 1941

This Clipping From OSWEGO, N.Y.
PALLADIUM TIMES
SEP 20 1941

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT
SEP 20 1941

This Clipping From
HORNELL, N. Y.
TRIBUNE
SEP 20 1941

This Clipping From
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
MERCURY
SEP 20 1941

Petrillo Rules Two Are Not to Appear

NEW YORK, Sept. 19 (AP) — James Petrillo, international president of the American Federation of Musicians (A.F.L.), ruled today that A.F.M. members Efram Zimbalist and Joseph Szigeti, violinists, could not appear with the famed Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Members of the Boston Symphony are not unionized.

This Clipping From
UTICA, N. Y.
OBSERVER DISPATCH
SEP 20 1941

This Clipping From
ITHACA, N. Y.
JOURNAL
SEP 20 1941

This Clipping From
CORNING, N.Y.
LEADER
SEP 20 1941

This Clipping From
NEWARK, N. J.
NEWS
SEP 20 1941

This Clipping From
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD JOURNAL
SEP 20 19

THIS CLIPPING FROM NORWICH, N. Y.
SUN
SEP 20 1941

Gist of the News As Arranged For Busy Readers

Petrillo threatens picketing of Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Phosphorus described as life generator at Chicago university.

U. S. Surgeon restores speech to boy made mute by Nazi bomb.

Wastepaper drive in New York nets 350,000 pounds in a week.

Thurman Arnold blames industries and unions for defense delays.

Modern war equipment to be shown at exhibition in New York.

Trinity church in New York to mark burning of first edifice in 1776.

Dr. Koussevitzky Faces Union Ban in New York City

By LAWRENCE PERRY

NEW YORK, Sept. 23 (N.A.N.A.)—Serge Alexandrovich Koussevitzky, famous conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will not be permitted to fulfil his projected two weeks' engagement as guest conductor of the New York Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra next January, unless all the

Koussevitzky Banned

Continued on Page 21

Koussevitzky Banned by Union in New York

Continued from the First Page

members of the Boston orchestra become affiliated with the American Federation of Musicians.

This is definite and final, according to James Caesar Petrillo—"Don't forget the Caesar," he says—now serving his second year as president of the federation.

Not only this: Efrem Zimbalist and Joseph Szgeti, violinists, will not keep their scheduled dates with the Boston orchestra and, furthermore, in its annual tour next Winter, the orchestra may run into a lot of embarrassment concerning halls in which to play.

In his sumptuous eyrie 41 floors above Broadway's midtown section James Caesar Petrillo has upon his desk the 1940 traveling itinerary of the Boston troupe.

Says Director Wants to Join

"It will be about the same this year," Petrillo said, studying the booklet containing details of last year's activities. "Here, first of all, is Harvard."

"That's a college," the visitor suggested. "You can't do anything about that."

"Can't we?" Petrillo asked grimly. "Well, there's other places we can do something about.

"Look here," he said, in sudden access of irritation, "the Boston Symphony wants the privilege of walking around the country as a non-union organization whereas 95 percent of its members want to join. This includes Koussevitzky himself. How do I know? He told me so, personally, when I visited him at his home in the Berkshires last Summer. But that isn't the point. The point is that if he comes to New York to conduct the Philharmonic Orchestra, 100 members of that band will walk off the stage."

Has the New York organization been advised to this effect? It has, by letter. No reply has been received, but none was necessary, none was expected. Petrillo went on record and that was that.

All Through 'Going Easy'

He said that when he talked to Koussevitzky about prospects of his orchestra joining the Musicians' Federation, the maestro told him to go easy with the authorities.

"I did go easy," said Petrillo. "I've been going easy for a year. But what do I get? A letter from Ernest B. Dane, president of the Boston Symphony Trustees, that he will stand by Judd, the manager. And what did Judd write before that? He said he could not go over the heads of the trustees. All right, if a fight is what they want, they can have it. I haven't begun to fight yet. I've got—"

"Weapons?" the visitor suggested.

"No, ideas. Plenty of ideas. We have nothing personal against the Boston Symphony nor any of its members. We think they should be in the union. Do you know it is the only orchestra, large or small, that is not in an organization covering all of the United States and Canada—138,000 musicians?

(Boston Globe—N. A. N. A., Inc.)

This Clipping From
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
JOURNAL-COURIER
JUN 13 1941

Musicians Reelect Petrillo

SEATTLE, June 12 (AP)—Unanimously reelected president, James Caesar Petrillo vowed to delegates to the American Federation of Musicians convention today that the famous Boston Symphony Orchestra—only one in the nation not a member of the union—would be

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL
JUN 13 1941

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN
SEP 19 1941

HUB SYMPHONY HIT BY UNION RULING

New York, Sept. 19.—(INS)—The American Federation of Musicians, headed by James C. Petrillo, today renewed the fight to organize the Boston Symphony Orchestra—the only major non-union band in the country.

Disrupting the symphony's schedule, Petrillo ruled that the two star violinists, Efram Zimbalist and Joseph Szigeti, AFM members, could not play their scheduled fall and spring engagements with the orchestra.

Petrillo also disclosed that the union would prevent Serge Koussevitzky, leader of the Boston Symphony, from appearing in New York this winter as the guest conductor of the Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra, a union band.

The AFM president pointed out that it would be inconsistent for the union to prohibit union members from appearing with a non-union orchestra and then allow a non-union conductor to lead a union orchestra.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
SUN
SEP 19 1941

2 VIOLINISTS BARRED

Union Row Keeps Zimbalist and Szigeti From Playing.

Because they resigned from the American Guild of Musical Artists and joined the American Federation of Musicians, Efrem Zimbalist and Joseph Szigeti, violinists, apparently will be unable to make scheduled appearances this winter with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the only major non-union orchestra in the country.

The two A. F. of L. unions have been engaged in a long jurisdictional fight. Yesterday James C. Petrillo, president of the federation, ruled that the two violinists could not play with the Boston orchestra. He denied that he had issued any special order on the subject, but pointed out that it was the federation's rule that union members could not play with non-union musicians.

Mr. Zimbalist, who was to have played with the Boston orchestra on October 31 and November 1, remarked when he heard of the ruling: "It's a disappointment." Mr. Szigeti is in Mexico and his manager here would make no comment. He was to have appeared with the orchestra next April. After the resignations of several persons from the guild last March, the guild was awarded a temporary injunction against the federation in its fight to keep Mr. Petrillo from organizing the solo instrumentalists. The matter is still to be settled in the Supreme Court.

This Clipping From NORWICH, N. Y.
SUN
SEP 20 1941

Gist of the News As Arranged For Busy Readers

Petrillo threatens picketing of Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Phosphorus described as life generator at Chicago university.

U. S. Surgeon restores speech to boy made mute by Nazi bomb.

Wastepaper drive in New York nets 350,000 pounds in a week.

Thurman Arnold blames industries and unions for defense delays.

Modern war equipment to be shown at exhibition in New York.

Trinity church in New York to mark burning of first edifice in 1776.

Dr. Koussevitzky Faces Union Ban in New York City

By LAWRENCE PERRY

NEW YORK, Sept. 23 (N.A.N.A.)—Serge Alexandrovich Koussevitzky, famous conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will not be permitted to fulfil his projected two weeks' engagement as guest conductor of the New York Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra next January, unless all the

Koussevitzky Banned

Continued on Page 21

This Clipping From
SALAMANCA, N. Y.
REPUBLICAN PRESS
SEP 20 1941

Union Chief Bars Zimbalist, Szigeti From Symphony

New York, Sept. 20 (AP)—James Petrillo, international president of the American Federation of Musicians (AFL), ruled yesterday that AFM members Efram Zimbalist and Joseph Szigeti, violinists, could not appear with the famed Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Members of the Boston Symphony are not unionized.

The ruling, latest step in the Federation's jurisdictional battle with the American Guild of Musical Artists, carried an ironic twist.

Zimbalist and Szigeti quit the Guild last March to join the Federation. After they resigned, the Court of Appeals reversed an Appellate Division decision and awarded a temporary injunction against the Federation pending a Supreme Court trial of the dispute between the two AFL affiliates.

Had the violinists not joined the Federation they would be free to play with the Boston orchestra. Zimbalist was scheduled to appear with the Symphony on October 31 and November 1 and Szigeti April 10 and 11.

This Clipping From
JAMESTOWN, N. Y.
POST
SEP 20 1941

Musicians Union Bars Zimbalist From Symphony

NEW YORK, Sept. 19.—(AP)—James Petrillo, international president of the American Federation of Musicians (AFL), ruled today that AFM members Efram Zimbalist and Joseph Szigeti, violinists, could not appear with the famed Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Members of the Boston Symphony are not unionized.

The ruling, latest step in the Federation's jurisdictional battle with the American Guild of Musical Artists, carried an ironic twist.

Zimbalist and Szigeti quit the Guild last March to join the Federation. After they resigned, the Court of Appeals reversed an Appellate Division decision and awarded a temporary injunction against the Federation pending a Supreme Court trial of the dispute between the two AFL affiliates.

Had the violinists not joined the Federation they would be free to play with the Boston orchestra. Zimbalist was scheduled to appear with the Symphony on October 31 and November 1 and Szigeti April 10 and 11.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
SEP 20 1941

Union Ruling Hits Boston Symphony

Famed Violinists Are Barred From Playing With Orchestra

NEW YORK, Sept. 19 (AP)—James Petrillo, international president of the American Federation of Musicians (A. F. of L.), ruled today that A. F. M. members Efram Zimbalist and Joseph Szigeti, violinists, could not appear with the famed Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Members of the Boston Symphony are not unionized.

The ruling, latest step in the federation's jurisdictional battle with the American Guild of Musical Artists, carried an ironic twist.

Zimbalist and Szigeti quit the guild last March to join the federation. After they resigned, the Court of Appeals reversed an appellate division decision and awarded a temporary injunction against the federation pending a Supreme Court trial of the dispute between the two A. F. of L. affiliates.

Had the violinists not joined the federation they would be free to play with the Boston orchestra. Zimbalist was scheduled to appear with the symphony on Oct. 31 and Nov. 1 and Szigeti April 10 and 11.

This Clipping From
HOLYOKE, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT TELEGRAM
SEP 23 1941

James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, affiliate of the AFL, threatened to throw a picket line around Symphony hall this season if the Boston Symphony Orchestra continues to refuse to deal with his union.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN
SEP 19 1941

Petrillo Bars Soloists From Hub Orchestra

James C. Petrillo, czar of the American Federation of Musicians, launched a new controversy in the ranks of music today when he barred Efrem Zimbalist and Joseph Szigeti, noted violinists, from appearing with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The orchestra is the only major non-union one in the country.

Petrillo issued his ultimatum to the NBC Concerts Service, agent for both violinists. Zimbalist was slated to appear as soloist with the orchestra on Oct. 31 and Nov. 1, Szigeti on April 10 and 11.

"It's a disappointment," Zimbalist commented tersely when he heard the news.

Szigeti is now in Mexico and was not reached for comment.

Petrillo also declared that Serge Koussevitsky, leader of the Boston orchestra, would not appear this Winter as guest conductor of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra, which is unionized.

This Clipping From
WINSTED, CONN.
CITIZEN
SEP 20 1941

NEW HARTFORD

Union Refuses to Allow Efrem Zimbalist to Play With Boston Symphony Orchestra—Other Notes

New Hartford, Sept. 20—James Petrillo, international president of the American Federation of Musicians (A.F.L.) ruled at New York yesterday that A.F.M. members Efram Zimbalist of this town and New York city, and Joseph Szigeti, violinists, could not appear with the famed Boston Symphony orchestra.

Members of the Boston Symphony are not unionized.

THIS CLIPPING FROM CLEVELAND, TENN.
BANNER
SEP 20 1941

Boston Symphony to Be Minus 2 Stars

NEW YORK, Sept. 20.—(U.P.)—Two concert violinists will be unable to keep engagements with the Boston Symphony orchestra this winter—because it is a non-union organization.

The A. F. of L. Federation of Musicians has so ruled in the cases of its members, Efrem Zimbalist and Joseph Szigeti. Zimbalist says he is disappointed. Szigeti is in Mexico.

This Clipping From
AMSTERDAM, N. Y.
RECORDER DEMOCRAT
SEP 20 1941

This Clipping From OSWEGO, N.Y.
PALLADIUM TIMES
SEP 20 1941

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT
SEP 20 1941

This Clipping From
HORNELL, N. Y.
TRIBUNE
SEP 20 1941

This Clipping From
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
MERCURY
SEP 20 1941

Petrillo Rules Two Are Not to Appear

NEW YORK, Sept. 19 (AP) — James Petrillo, international president of the American Federation of Musicians (A.F.L.), ruled today that A.F.M. members Efram Zimbalist and Joseph Szigeti, violinists, could not appear with the famed Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Members of the Boston Symphony are not unionized.

This Clipping From
UTICA, N. Y.
OBSERVER DISPATCH
SEP 20 1941

This Clipping From
ITHACA, N. Y.
JOURNAL
SEP 20 1941

This Clipping From
CORNING, N.Y.
LEADER
SEP 20 1941

This Clipping From
NEWARK, N. J.
NEWS
SEP 20 1941

This Clipping From
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD JOURNAL
SEP 20 1941

This Clipping From NATION
NEW YORK, N.Y.
AUG 2 - 1941

MUSIC

PRESSURE of other matters has kept me from commenting on an article in the New York Times last September in which Olin Downes criticized certain practices of the American Federation of Musicians, including its mistaken insistence "on the most . . . that the traffic will bear." This was not the first time: whenever in the past ten or fifteen years the union has argued with the symphony orchestra managements about weekly minimum pay there has been a harumphing by Mr. Downes about the mistaken exaction "of all that the traffic will bear." Nor has it been only about the exactions of performing musicians: commenting a few years ago on the decision of the Philadelphia Orchestra Association not to play contemporary music, Mr. Downes attributed it in part to "the rather grasping attitude of the publishers" who "exact of orchestral associations about as heavy payments as the traffic will bear." Mr. Downes did not say what the extortionate royalties were; trying to imagine, one thought of one or two hundred dollars—the composer's share of which was little enough if one considered how long it had taken him to produce the work and how many performances it was likely to receive. In effect, then, what Mr. Downes contended was this: the orchestra players were to receive a minimum salary of $80 a week for 29 weeks; the conductor was to get $70,000 for the season; the newspaper reviewer was to get several thousands a year—to say nothing of the additional thousands for the comments that he broadcast; but the composer, for whom theoretically all this apparatus functioned, was to be very humble. How ignorant and silly Mr. Downes's statement was did not appear until a week or two later, in a reply by Mr. A. Walter Kramer which began with a bow to Mr. Downes's "highly stimulating" and "very able" article and then gave the actual royalty fees for performance: except for a celebrity like Schönberg or Stravinsky the average was $50, with many works offered at $25 for a single performance or $35 for a pair—this, it must be remembered, being shared by the composer and the publisher.

And so in the present instance. Nothing in my present article should be construed as meaning that I regard Mr. Petrillo as an engaging or wholly admirable union president. I disapprove as strongly as Mr. Downes of the union's making it difficult for a conductor to import from another city a sufficiently competent player whom he cannot find in his own city; and I disapprove of other practices—for example, the treatment of Negro musicians—which Mr. Downes apparently isn't bothered by. But I am aware that the union has secured good conditions of work and pay for its symphony orchestra members; and about this Mr. Downes makes some questionable statements.

The anti-union Boston Symphony trustees maintain that the members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra do not need the union because it would give them no more than they get without it. And Mr. Downes says the same thing: "The Boston Symphony not only gives concerts of finest quality; it also pays a bigger yearly wage, and [though] a somewhat smaller weekly stipend than the best union orchestras." But it is conceivable that if there were no union in other cities to set schedules of pay that must be matched to keep the union away from the Boston Symphony, the Boston trustees would be less generous. And actually they are less generous than they and Mr. Downes contend.

I have obtained the actual 1939-1940 figures—those of the Philadelphia Orchestra from the Philadelphia local of the union, those of the Boston Symphony from a dependable source that I am not at liberty to reveal. The player in the Philadelphia Orchestra who gets the minimum earned $80 a week for the 32 weeks of the main season; he earned $80 a week (plus a $7.25 per diem allowance) for the two weeks of the post-season tour; he was probably one of the 90 men who earned $60 a week for the eight weeks of the Robin Hood Dell season. The analogous Boston Symphony player earned $70 a week for the 30 weeks of the main season; he was probably one of the 90 men who earned $60 a week for the ten weeks of the "Pops" season; he earned $70 a week for the three weeks of the Berkshire Festival; and he may or may not have been one of the 50 men who earned $50 a week for the three weeks of the Charles River Esplanade season. The Philadelphia man worked 42 weeks for $3,200; the Boston man worked either 43 weeks for $2,910 or 46 weeks for $3,060.

To Mr. Downes the Philadelphia man's average weekly income of $61 may look like something to call indignantly "all that the traffic will bear" (I would give something to hear what the Philadelphia man would call Mr. Downes's income); but instead of luxuriating in the ease which this enormous amount brought him he went after additional jobs and teaching to earn even more, and for mere necessities! And as a union man he was in a better position to do this than the Boston Symphony man. For the union's contract with the Philadelphia Orchestra specifies the number and length of rehearsals; and since an extra rehearsal must be paid for there are normally no extra rehearsals, and our man's time is his own to devote to his greedy pursuit of money. But our Boston Symphony man may be called to an extra rehearsal without pay whenever Koussevitzky thinks it is necessary; and this interferes with the man's commitments outside.

Among the extra jobs for orchestra players are broadcasting and recording, which are no longer open to our non-union Boston Symphony man. But in 1939-1940, when the Boston Symphony was still recording, he was paid $15 for a session of three hours which included a rest-period of twenty minutes (higher-ranking men received $20; soloists more). And if he had been a union player he would have received—to Mr. Downes's indignation—$14 for each hour, of which only forty minutes would have been used for recording, the remaining twenty minutes being available, however, for rehearsal.

B. H. HAGGIN

This Clipping From ORLANDO, FLA.
SENTINEL
AUG 17 1941

179

Conductor Hails Citizenship

BOSTON, [UP] Serge Koussevitzky, Russian-born conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, celebrated his becoming a United States citizen by presenting a special program of American music.

This Clipping From PLATTSBURG, N.Y.
REPUBLICAN
AUG 22 1941

BOSTON, (UP)—Serge Koussevitzky, Russian-born conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, celebarted his becoming a United States citizen by presenting a special program of American music.

THIS CLIPPING FROM CHICAGO, ILL.
DIAPASON
SEP 1 - 1941

POWER BIGGS PLAYS HANDEL CONCERTO AT TANGLEWOOD

Handel's Tenth Concerto for organ and orchestra was a feature of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's performances this season at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, held at Tanglewood, which has become one of the foremost summer musical events in America. The concerto was played with E. Power Biggs as soloist on the seventh program, presented Aug. 14.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky listed the concerto in the traditional circumstances and manner in which Handel himself played these works. The audience of 8,000 received the music with great enthusiasm, resulting in a number of recalls. The New York Times reviewer said: "The Handel concerto, graceful, full-blooded and joyous in its stride, was a happy introduction to the more solemn part of the program. And it was played with freshness and lift."

The Tanglewood music center was filled to capacity this summer in all courses, with a number of students studying organ. In a recital given at the Shed Aug. 5 Mr. Biggs played: Toccata in F major, Bach; "Noel Grand Jeu et Duo," d'Aquin; Noel with Variations, Dupré; Passacaglia and Fugue, Bach.

It is a great tribute to G. Donald Harrison, the president of the Aeolian-Skinner Company, that the organ worked perfectly this summer, with not a single mechanical difficulty. The Shed is open on three sides, and the organ stays there right through the winter, protected by boards, but without any heat.

THIS CLIPPING FROM SALEM, MASS.
NEWS
AUG 19 1941

No War in Music World

During the World War, feeling against Germany went so far that little German music was played on the American concert stage. A broader sentiment was reflected in the management of the Boston Symphony orchestra under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, when a program of entirely German music was given last week at the first of its second series of Berkshire festival concerts. The programs for the entire nine concerts by this wonderful organization include eight German composers, and only 12 from non-German countries. There are no race and national lines in the world of music. In that realm of beauty, music lovers belong to one fraternity which worships at the shrine of art and genius. The Germany that existed when Mozart, Beethoven and Brahms were composing their deathless works was a very different thing from the Nazi-ruled country today. Then Germany was a land of culture, friendship and idealism. By some strange perversion, pagan and materialistic and warlike ideas obtained possession of this great people. Beethoven and Wagner would have fled from such a land, if they had seen those sinister forces getting control. Music teaches people to love God and the universe and their fellow men.

This Clipping From NATION
NEW YORK, N.Y.
AUG 2 - 1941

MUSIC

PRESSURE of other matters has kept me from commenting on an article in the New York Times last September in which Olin Downes criticized certain practices of the American Federation of Musicians, including its mistaken insistence "on the most . . . that the traffic will bear." This was not the first time: whenever in the past ten or fifteen years the union has argued with the symphony orchestra managements about weekly minimum pay there has been a harumphing by Mr. Downes about the mistaken exaction "of all that the traffic will bear." Nor has it been only about the exactions of performing musicians: commenting a few years ago on the decision of the Philadelphia Orchestra Association not to play contemporary music, Mr. Downes attributed it in part to "the rather grasping attitude of the publishers" who "exact of orchestral associations about as heavy payments as the traffic will bear." Mr. Downes did not say what the extortionate royalties were; trying to imagine, one thought of one or two hundred dollars—the composer's share of which was little enough if one considered how long it had taken him to produce the work and how many performances it was likely to receive. In effect, then, what Mr. Downes contended was this: the orchestra players were to receive a minimum salary of $80 a week for 29 weeks; the conductor was to get $70,000 for the season; the newspaper reviewer was to get several thousands a year—to say nothing of the additional thousands for the comments that he broadcast; but the composer, for whom theoretically all this apparatus functioned, was to be very humble. How ignorant and silly Mr. Downes's statement was did not appear until a week or two later, in a reply by Mr. A. Walter Kramer which began with a bow to Mr. Downes's "highly stimulating" and "very able" article and then gave the actual royalty fees for performance: except for a celebrity like Schönberg or Stravinsky the average was $50, with many works offered at $25 for a single performance or $35 for a pair—this, it must be remembered, being shared by the composer and the publisher.

And so in the present instance. Nothing in my present article should be construed as meaning that I regard Mr. Petrillo as an engaging or wholly admirable union president. I disapprove as strongly as Mr. Downes of the union's making it difficult for a conductor to import from another city a sufficiently competent player whom he cannot find in his own city; and I disapprove of other practices—for example, the treatment of Negro musicians—which Mr. Downes apparently isn't bothered by. But I am aware that the union has secured good conditions of work and pay for its symphony orchestra members; and about this Mr. Downes makes some questionable statements.

The anti-union Boston Symphony trustees maintain that the members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra do not need the union because it would give them no more than they get without it. And Mr. Downes says the same thing: "The Boston Symphony not only gives concerts of finest quality; it also pays a bigger yearly wage, and [though] a somewhat smaller weekly stipend than the best union orchestras." But it is conceivable that if there were no union in other cities to set schedules of pay that must be matched to keep the union away from the Boston Symphony, the Boston trustees would be less generous. And actually they are less generous than they and Mr. Downes contend.

I have obtained the actual 1939-1940 figures—those of the Philadelphia Orchestra from the Philadelphia local of the union, those of the Boston Symphony from a dependable source that I am not at liberty to reveal. The player in the Philadelphia Orchestra who gets the minimum earned $80 a week for the 32 weeks of the main season; he earned $80 a week (plus a $7.25 per diem allowance) for the two weeks of the post-season tour; he was probably one of the 90 men who earned $60 a week for the eight weeks of the Robin Hood Dell season. The analogous Boston Symphony player earned $70 a week for the 30 weeks of the main season; he was probably one of the 90 men who earned $60 a week for the ten weeks of the "Pops" season; he earned $70 a week for the three weeks of the Berkshire Festival; and he may or may not have been one of the 50 men who earned $50 a week for the three weeks of the Charles River Esplanade season. The Philadelphia man worked 42 weeks for $3,200; the Boston man worked either 43 weeks for $2,910 or 46 weeks for $3,060.

To Mr. Downes the Philadelphia man's average weekly income of $61 may look like something to call indignantly "all that the traffic will bear" (I would give something to hear what the Philadelphia man would call Mr. Downes's income); but instead of luxuriating in the ease which this enormous amount brought him he went after additional jobs and teaching to earn even more, and for mere necessities! And as a union man he was in a better position to do this than the Boston Symphony man. For the union's contract with the Philadelphia Orchestra specifies the number and length of rehearsals; and since an extra rehearsal must be paid for there are normally no extra rehearsals, and our man's time is his own to devote to his greedy pursuit of money. But our Boston Symphony man may be called to an extra rehearsal without pay whenever Koussevitzky thinks it is necessary; and this interferes with the man's commitments outside.

Among the extra jobs for orchestra players are broadcasting and recording, which are no longer open to our non-union Boston Symphony man. But in 1939-1940, when the Boston Symphony was still recording, he was paid $15 for a session of three hours which included a rest-period of twenty minutes (higher-ranking men received $20; soloists more). And if he had been a union player he would have received—to Mr. Downes's indignation—$14 for each hour, of which only forty minutes would have been used for recording, the remaining twenty minutes being available, however, for rehearsal.

B. H. HAGGIN

This Clipping From
ORLANDO, FLA.
SENTINEL
AUG 17 1941

Conductor Hails Citizenship

BOSTON, (UP) Serge Koussevitzky, Russian-born conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, celebrated [illegible]ing a United States citizen by presenting a special program of American music.

This Clipping From PLATTSBURG, N.Y.
REPUBLICAN
AUG 22 1941

BOSTON, (UP)—Serge Koussevitzky, Russian-born conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, celebarted his becoming a United States citizen by presenting a special program of American music.

THIS CLIPPING FROM SALEM, MASS.
NEWS
AUG 19 1941

No War in Music World

During the World War, feeling against Germany went so far that little German music was played on the American concert stage. A broader sentiment was reflected in the management of the Boston Symphony orchestra under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, when a program of entirely German music was given last week at the first of its second series of Berkshire festival concerts. The programs for the entire nine concerts by this wonderful organization include eight German composers and only 12 from non-German countries. There are no race and national lines in the world of music. In that realm of beauty, music lovers belong to one fraternity which worships at the shrine of art and genius. The Germany that existed when Mozart, Beethoven and Brahms were composing their deathless works was a very different thing from the Nazi-ruled country today. Then Germany was a land of culture, friendship and idealism. By some strange perversion, pagan and materialistic and warlike ideas obtained possession of this great people. Beethoven and Wagner would have fled from such a land, if they had seen those sinister forces getting control. Music teaches people to love God and the universe and their fellow men.

THIS CLIPPING FROM CHICAGO, ILL.
DIAPASON
SEP 1 - 1941

POWER BIGGS PLAYS HANDEL CONCERTO AT TANGLEWOOD

Handel's Tenth Concerto for organ and orchestra was a feature of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's performances this season at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, held at Tanglewood, which has become one of the foremost summer musical events in America. The concerto was played with E. Power Biggs as soloist on the seventh program, presented Aug. 14.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky listed the concerto in the traditional circumstances and manner in which Handel himself played these works. The audience of 8,000 received the music with great enthusiasm, resulting in a number of recalls. The New York Times reviewer said: "The Handel concerto, graceful, full-blooded and joyous in its stride, was a happy introduction to the more solemn part of the program. And it was played with freshness and lift."

The Tanglewood music center was filled to capacity this summer in all courses, with a number of students studying organ. In a recital given at the Shed Aug. 5 Mr. Biggs played: Toccata in F major, Bach; "Noel Grand Jeu et Duo," d'Aquin; Noel with Variations, Dupré; Passacaglia and Fugue, Bach.

It is a great tribute to G. Donald Harrison, the president of the Aeolian-Skinner Company, that the organ worked perfectly this summer, with not a single mechanical difficulty. The Shed is open on three sides, and the organ stays there right through the winter, protected by boards, but without any heat.

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN
SEP 8 - 1941

OVERTONES

Sixty years ago, a group of 60 players, gathered together in a communal ideal instilled by Henry Lee Higginson, presented the first of the Boston Symphony orchestra concerts. Boston citizens, with that innate love of great music which seems to be a native heritage, are said to have stood in line all night in order to procure seasonal tickets for this first year of symphonic concerts.

Mr. Higginson, in his founding of the orchestra, first laid those fundamental convictions which since have marked the course of this organization. A lover of music and amateur student of it, he had been impressed by the professional orchestras maintained in Vienna during his student days, orchestras comprised of large personnel and directed by expert conductors. When, 20 years later, he was financially in a position to back a symphonic organization he found a dream materializing in his Boston Symphony orchetra of 1861. The finest musicians available were engaged and as conductor he brought to Boston Georg Henschel, a young composer and conductor from England.

The enthusiasm of Mr. Henschel was enlarged two years later by his successor, Wilhelm Gericke. The latter was a zealous worker and organizer, important in the earliest years of so large and new an experiment. Thus he tilled the soil that Henschel had already broken. Both had paved the way for a personality, and this appeared in the person of Arthur Nikisch.

How importantly Nikisch effected the entire musical picture of the United States is already legend. He, himself, was a vivid and arresting conductor, but the music he imparted led one critic to call the four-year period of his association with the orchestra "a brilliant and stimulating period."

A return of Mr. Gericke in 1898 was preceded by a five-year conductorship under Emil Paur, a painstaking musician and a pioneer in the already debatable field of so-called modern music. It is fortunate that Gericke did return at the time he did, for the orchestra was still in a state of maturing and badly in need of refining after the brilliance of the Nikisch regime. When he left his second term, the orchestra was already housed in the Symphony hall which is still its home.

Mr. Higginson was left with the problem of finding a conductor of illustrious caliber, one who could carry the Boston Symphony to a level of world importance. Dr. Karl Muck was chosen, and after revitalizing the orchestra for one season he was forced to return to Germany, only to return in 1908 and remain until 1912. His performances of 18th century music reached a level of perfection that rapidly made the Boston Symphony a by-word of interpretation in this era.

After 37 years of outstanding leadership and devotion to a great cause, Mr. Higginson relinquished his post in 1918, turning the responsibility over to Judge Frederick P. Cabot. With this change, a policy of contributions was advanced and has consistently been carried to this day. Under him, Henri Rabuad, a well-known Parisian composer, and Pierre Monteux of the Metropolitan Opera company served as conductors. Both were distinguished for their support of new or less familiar symphonic music.

The time had finally arrived for a great conductor, a man who could make his name synonymous with this already great orchestra, a man to place this orchestra in the forefront of symphonic organizations the world over. Serge Koussevitzky was chosen, and how completely he has realized the qualifications needed is already too well known to repeat here.

Dr. Koussevitzky first saw light in Vishni Volochok, Russia, and thus was, by heritage, a born romanticist and pioneer in art. Having graduated from the Moscow Conservatory, he began a career as solo double-bass virtuoso in the Imperial theater of that same city. In 1910, he organized and conducted an orchestra of his own, making three tours through Russia on a chartered steamer down the Volga. When later he led the Concerts Koussevitzky in Paris, he was already accepted as a conductor of phenomenal abilities and creative insight.

In his association with the Boston Symphony orchestra, Dr. Koussevitzky has always conducted a staunch and ardent campaign for the modern composer. He has stood as a beacon to the young American composer as has no other man of his time.

When the Berkshire Symphonic festival came into being eight years ago, he added further to the glory and the social importance of his organization. The two years of the Berkshire Music Center have realized a dream to maintain a center for the musical arts, an opportunity for young musicians "to live and work in music" under the finest guidance available. At his first faculty meeting, obviously moved by the tangibility of his art center, he stated simply: "Gentlemen, I have never faced a more distinguished gathering, brought together by a common cause, a common ideal. Our path is clear. We must abandon the banal, the superficial, the old-fashioned. We must give the best we have with our life blood."

As he instructed his faculty, so he has practiced throughout his conductorial career. A great man, a great conductor, a great personality, he stands as a symbol of the greatest in musical art and one of the most moving forces behind it toward the betterment of the world.

CELINE KOESTER, Mus. B.

This Clipping From
COLUMBUS, OHIO
CITIZEN
SEP 15 1941

Contrasts Noted Among Conductors

There could scarcely be greater contrasts than between the three conductors who this season will wave their hands or batons before notable orchestras on the course of the Symphony Club of Central Ohio.

Eugene Ormandy, who leads the Philadelphia orchestra in its opening concert on Oct. 27, is small of stature, dapper, nervous, keen of perception, retentive of memory, uncanny in his sizing up of people, very human in his social relations. His solo instrument was the violin.

Serge Koussevitzky, who brings the Boston Symphony to Memorial Hall on Dec. 12, is dignified without being pompous, much sought after as a teacher by young conductors and definitely the idolized center of that summer mecca, the Berkshire Festival. His solo instrument is the double bass, on which he is a real virtuoso.

Jose Iturbi, who comes with the Rochester Symphony, March 6, is dynamic, tireless, a lover of motoring, a man of great physical prowess with muscles like a prizefighter. He, too, is a musical scholar in two fields, orchestral and pianistic. His solo instrument is, of course, the piano, and he has toured as soloist all over Europe and the two Americas.

Monitor Sept 12 41

Symphony Season Sale Closes Tomorrow Night

The box office at Symphony Hall will be kept open until 10 o'clock tomorrow evening to accomodate patrons who want to take advantage of the season ticket rates for the four series of Symphony cooncerts. On Wednesday the tickets become subject to the new federal tax.

Symphony Ticket Sale

The season sale for all four series of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, at Symphony Hall, will end tomorrow evening. The Symphony Hall box office will remain open until 10 o'clock. The new Federal Tax law will go into effect Wednesday, Oct. 1. Until then, all tickets are tax free. Serge Koussevitzky returns to Boston Thursday to assemble the orchestra for its 61st season and his 18th year as conductor. The first concert will be Oct. 10.

Globe Sept 27

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
SEP 14 1941

PRE-SEASONAL MUSINGS

By JEROME D. BOHM

THIS is the time of year when a reviewer of New York's musical activities, just returned refreshed from his summer vacation, begins to think about the rapidly approaching new season and to wonder what it will bring forth. That the war is exercising its ineluctable effect upon our musical life is nowhere more apparent than in our greatest opera house which will have to do without two of its mainstays, the Norwegian soprano Kirsten Flagstad, and the Swedish tenor Jussi Björling, because the former has chosen to remain in her native land until hostilities have ceased and because the latter may not be permitted to cross German territory to undertake the Clipper flight to this country.

Another hiatus in the Metropolitan's roster will be left by the probable absence therefrom of the Australian soprano Marjorie Lawrence, whose recovery from the illness which has incapacitated her for the last months in time to assume her duties at the opera house is still highly doubtful. With both Mme. Flagstad and Miss Lawrence gone, the future of the later music dramas of Wagner at our chief lyric theater is, to say the least, in jeopardy. For of the available dramatic sopranos, only the American Helen Traubel comes into question as a delineator of Wagnerian heroines. Although she has not yet disclosed her characterizations of the Brünnhildes and Isolde she is prepared to do so. But whether her schedule of concert engagements will permit her to make more than ten appearances at the Metropolitan is still in question so that performances of the "Ring" and of "Tristan and Isolde" will, under the circumstances, in all likelihood be few.

That Mr. Johnson is planning to return "Meistersinger" to the repertoire after a season's absence therefrom may be gathered from the report that the German bass-buffo Pechner, who has sung in Berlin, and whose work more recently with the San Francisco Opera Company won him the approval of Erich Leinsdorf, has been engaged to appear as Beckmesser. Mr. Pechner will, it is said, in addition to singing the part of the Marker, be intrusted with some of the smaller roles hitherto assumed by Mr. Baccaloni.

Although it has not been officially announced, there seems to be little doubt that Mozart's "Zauberflöte," which has not been given at the Metropolitan since the season of 1926-'27, is to be revived. No opera of Mozart's makes greater demands on the singers than this last and greatest of his dramatic creations, and it will be interesting to learn which members of the company have been selected to fill the arduous roles of Tamino, Pamina, Queen of the Night and Sarastro. But even the less extensive parts of the Three Ladies have in days when great singers were less rare been voiced here by first-rate artists. Perhaps Mr. Johnson will glance enviously at Grau's casts of 1901 and 1904. In 1901 Sembrich was the Queen of the Night, Fritzi Scheff, the Papagena; Emma Eames, the Pamina; Dippel, the Tamino; Campanari, the Papageno; Edouard de Reszke, the Sarastro; Reiss, the Monostatos, and Ternina, Homer and Bridewell, the Three Ladies. In 1904 the Pamina was Gadski; the Sarastro, Plancon; the Papageno, Goritz. Of course, Mr. Johnson has no such galaxy of stars at his disposal nowadays. But one hopes, at least, that he will make use of his best singers in casting the entire opera. Too much dependence on what the Metropolitan's wittiest soprano has dubbed the "paint can" wing of the company would be fatal. In Bruno Walter and Sir Thomas Beecham, the Metropolitan will have two highly distinguished interpreters of the "Zauberflöte" score. It remains to be seen which of the two will be in charge of the revival.

What May Be Expected of Recitalists

As in past years, pianists, singers and violinists and cellists will contribute the greatest number of recitals. Of the hundreds who will seek the approval of audiences a few in each category may be expected to vouchsafe accomplishments worthy of serious consideration. Of course there will be the usual handful of great artists of whom deeply satisfying and sometimes elevating discourses of masterworks may be confidently awaited. Too frequently, unfortunately, illustrious instrumentalists and vocalists are incurious as to the paths contemporary music is following, knowing that their admirers will be content to hear their interpretations over and over again of accepted classics. One of our most distinguished mature pianists is still under the impression that Moszkowski is a modern composer whose works merit performance. Another limits himself to the interpretation of Beethoven, Schubert, Schumann and Brahms, although his own compositions lean toward atonalism. Still another limits his disclosures of modern music to his own, neo-romantic effusions. Hardly one first-rate present-day pianist has revealed more than a passing interest in the products of his creative contemporaries. Nor do the best known string players or singers give much evidence of a lively concern for the music being written today.

If the most successful and worth-while purveyors of solo music do not consider it important or necessary to turn their talents to the interpretation of the works of living composers, it is scarcely to be wondered at that their less gifted associates, new and old, fail to devote their talents, such as they are, to the revelation of anything but the thrice-familiar, sure-fire works. Since Mr. Schlagfest can fill Carnegie Hall with a program consisting of Bach's Chromatic Fantasy and Fugue, Beethoven's "Appassionata" Sonata, and a Chopin group, and Mr. Streichkratzer packs them in with Corelli's "La Folia," the Mendelssohn Concerto and perhaps the Franck Sonata, the lesser player considers it folly to do anything but follow in their footsteps. The same thing is true of the young soprano who hears Mme. Drueckhals entrance her adorers with a list of songs and arias by composers who won their laurels when "Ivanhoe" was the Book of the Month.

Most of the pianists and instrumentalists who will tread the platforms of our concert halls will exhibit competent, sometimes even exceptional, technical equipments. It is rare nowadays to hear a pianist, violinist or cellist who cannot give a correct and sometimes impressive account of the music chosen for interpretation from the merely digital aspect. A richly variegated tonal palette is less frequently to be encountered and the imaginative perception without which no interpretative musician is worth his salt is met with so seldom in the course of a season that the reviewer when he does find it approaches his typewriter overjoyed at having something out of the ordinary to report.

With singers the matter of technical proficiency is less to be taken as a matter of course. Even celebrated vocalists rarely reveal reliable, even voice production. There is no dearth of good natural voices nowadays, but it is something rare, indeed, to find a singer who knows how to exploit the possibilities of his or her material. It is disheartening to have to listen to innumerable aspiring vocalists of both sexes without finding one who is really a master of his resources.

The Orchestral Outlook

It is heartening to know that the Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra plans to stress the music of American composers at its concerts this season. Leopold Stokowski's opening program, however, composed for the greater part of Beethoven's Fifth Symphony and excerpts from "Tristan," is hardly calculated to make the pulse beat faster. What has become of the Stokowski who was responsible for the first performances this side of the ocean of Mahler's Eighth Symphony, and Schönberg's "Gurrelieder" and Five Orchestral Pieces? Instead of the overworked Franck Symphony which he has promised to direct, it would perhaps be more profitable if he would turn his attentions to some neglected modern composition of worth. Why not conduct the Schönberg Five Pieces again, Mr. Stokowski, or his more easily assimilated "Pelleas and Melisande," which has not been heard here since the Philharmonic played it under Stransky's leadership? Another work which has lingered agreeably in my memory, although I have not heard it since Muck set it forth with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is Florent Schmitt's "Tragedie de Salome." This might prove a welcome substitute for some of the more frequently performed products of the impressionist school.

The plans of the Philadelphia Orchestra announced elsewhere on this page promise little that is interesting in the way of new music. Mr. Ormandy is especially reticent about telling us what he will perform for his New York audiences. Surely he is not thinking of repeating his three B cycle for our benefit. There has been nothing like a scarcity of performances of the works of these great masters hereabouts. There is such a thing as killing the goose that layed the golden egg.

No information is at hand about the Boston Symphony's programs for its ten New York concerts this winter. But Mr. Koussevitzky has always been one of our most enterprising and forward-looking conductors and may be depended upon for some absorbing novelties. The subject of orchestral programs is too wide a one to be fully discussed within the scope of this article and expatiation must be deferred until another time.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
LOWELL, MASS.
SUNDAY TELEGRAM
SEP 14 1941

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA SEASON

The Boston Symphony orchestra will open its 61st season in Symphony hall on Friday afternoon, October 10. Serge Koussevitzky will then begin his seventeenth season as conductor of the orchestra. The concerts of October 10-11 will be the first of twenty-four pairs of concerts in Symphony hall on Friday afternoons and Saturday evenings. The shorter series of six Monday evening concerts and six Tuesday afternoons will begin on October 27-28.

The soloists are announced for the Friday and Saturday series. They will include two famous artists who have not appeared with the Boston Symphony orchestra for a long time: Efrem Zimbalist and Alexander Borovsky. Zimbalist, born in 1889 and yet the first of the succession of outstanding violinists who were the pupils of Leopold Auer, made his American debut with the Boston Symphony orchestra in 1911. His last appearance with this orchestra was in 1924. Alexander Borovsky is remembered for his notable performances with this orchestra in the Bach Festival of 1931. Since then, this pianist has toured in other parts of the world, returning to the United States last spring. Yehudi Menuhin, the violinst, last heard at these concerts in 1938, will also return. Artists more recently remembered are Rudolf Serkin, the pianist, and Joseph Szigeti, violinist.

There will be two guest conductors in mid-season. Desire Defauw, the conductor from Brussels, Belgium, who was guest for a week in the season past, will return. Bruno Walter, unheard as a symphonic conductor in Boston since his single appearance here with the Boston Symphony orchestra in 1923, will conduct the orchestra for the concerts of two weeks. During this time, Dr. Koussevitzky will be the guest conductor of the Philharmonic-Symphony society in New York. Mr. Walter was heard in Boston last spring as conductor of the Metropolian Opera company.

Season tickets for each of the four series, released by the subscribers of last season, are now available at the Subscription Office in Symphony hall.

This Clipping From
OSHKOSH, WIS.
NORTHWESTERN
SEP 18 1941

New York —(U.P.)— Leopold Stokowski has chosen Beethoven's Fifth Symphony, whose opening notes are used as the "V" for victory campaign of the British, for the start of the centennail year of the New York Philharmonic-Symphony at Carnegie hall on Oct. 9.

To open the society's 100th season, Stokowski has picked the work with which the orchestra began its existence. It was the feature of the society's first concert on Dec. 7, 1842, when John Tyler was president of the United States and Queen Victoria was in the fifth year of her long reign.

Beethoven had been dead only 15 years, and Brahms was not yet 10 years old. Liszt, Verdi and Wagner were in the middle of their careers.

Stokowski's complete program for the initial concerts next Oct. 9-10, includes, in addition to the Fifth Symphony, the Bach Toccata and Fugue in D minor and the Andante Sostenuto of the sonata for violion in A minor, both arranged by Stokowski; the Prelude and Love-death from "Tristan and Isolde," and "Tales of Our Countryside," by Henry Cowell, the latter to be played for the first time in New York.

For his six remaining concerts, extending through mid-October, Stokowski plans to introduce to New York three more American works—a folk dance for strings and percussion from the "Folk Dance Symphony" of Roy Harris; the symphony "With Humor," by Paul Creston, and the symphonietta "Guaracho," by Morton Gould.

The conductors succeeding Stokowski for the gala season will be John Barbirolli, Bruno Walter Artur Rodzinski, Dimitri Mitropoulos, Fritz Busch, Serge Koussevitzky, Eugene Goossens and Walter Damrosch. The young people's concerts will be conducted by Rudolph Ganz.

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN

SEP 8 - 1941

OVERTONES

Sixty years ago, a group of 60 players, gathered together in a communal ideal instilled by Henry Lee Higginson, presented the first of the Boston Symphony orchestra concerts. Boston citizens, with that innate love of great music which seems to be a native heritage, are said to have stood in line all night in order to procure seasonal tickets for this first year of symphonic concerts.

Mr. Higginson, in his founding of the orchestra, first laid those fundamental convictions which since have marked the course of this organization. A lover of music and amateur student of it, he had been impressed by the professional orchestras maintained in Vienna during his student days, orchestras comprised of large personnel and directed by expert conductors. When, 20 years later, he was financially in a position to back a symphonic organization he found a dream materializing in his Boston Symphony orchetra of 1861. The finest musicians available were engaged and as conductor he brought to Boston Georg Henschel, a young composer and conductor from England.

The enthusiasm of Mr. Henschel was enlarged two years later by his successor, Wilhelm Gericke. The latter was a zealous worker and organizer, important in the earliest years of so large and new an experiment. Thus he tilled the soil that Henschel had already broken. Both had paved the way for a personality, and this appeared in the person of Arthur Nikisch.

How importantly Nikisch effected the entire musical picture of the United States is already legend. He, himself, was a vivid and arresting conductor, but the music he imparted led one critic to call the four-year period of his association with the orchestra "a brilliant and stimulating period."

A return of Mr. Gericke in 1898 was preceded by a five-year conductorship under Emil Paur, a painstaking musician and a pioneer in the already debatable field of so-called modern music. It is fortunate that Gericke did return at the time he did, for the orchestra was still in a state of maturing and badly in need of refining after the brilliance of the Nikisch regime. When he left his second term, the orchestra was already housed in the Symphony hall which is still its home.

Mr. Higginson was left with the problem of finding a conductor of illustrious caliber, one who could carry the Boston Symphony to a level of world importance. Dr. Karl Muck was chosen, and after revitalizing the orchestra for one season he was forced to return to Germany, only to return in 1908 and remain until 1912. His performances of 18th century music reached a level of perfection that rapidly made the Boston Symphony a by-word of interpretation in this era.

After 37 years of outstanding leadership and devotion to a great cause, Mr. Higginson relinquished his post in 1918, turning the responsibility over to Judge Frederick P. Cabot. With this change, a policy of contributions was advanced and has consistently been carried to this day. Under him, Henri Rabuad, a well-known Parisian composer, and Pierre Monteux of the Metropolitan Opera company served as conductors. Both were distinguished for their support of new or less familiar symphonic music.

The time had finally arrived for a great conductor, a man who could make his name synonymous with this already great orchestra, a man to place this orchestra in the forefront of symphonic organizations the world over. Serge Koussevitzky was chosen, and how completely he has realized the qualifications needed is already too well known to repeat here.

Dr. Koussevitzky first saw light in Vishni Volochok, Russia, and thus was, by heritage, a born romanticist and pioneer in art. Having graduated from the Moscow Conservatory, he began a career as solo double-bass virtuoso in the Imperial theater of that same city. In 1910, he organized and conducted an orchestra of his own, making three tours through Russia on a chartered steamer down the Volga. When later he led the Concerts Koussevitzky in Paris, he was already accepted as a conductor of phenomenal abilities and creative insight.

In his association with the Boston Symphony orchestra, Dr. Koussevitzky has always conducted a staunch and ardent campaign for the modern composer. He has stood as a beacon to the young American composer as has no other man of his time.

When the Berkshire Symphonic festival came into being eight years ago, he added further to the glory and the social importance of his organization. The two years of the Berkshire Music Center have realized a dream to maintain a center for the musical arts, an opportunity for young musicians "to live and work in music" under the finest guidance available. At his first faculty meeting, obviously moved by the tangibility of his art center, he stated simply: "Gentlemen, I have never faced a more distinguished gathering, brought together by a common cause, a common ideal. Our path is clear. We must abandon the banal, the superficial, the old-fashioned. We must give the best we have with our life blood."

As he instructed his faculty, so he has practiced throughout his conductorial career. A great man, a great conductor, a great personality, he stands as a symbol of the greatest in musical art and one of the most moving forces behind it toward the betterment of the world.

CELINE KOESTER, Mus. B.

This Clipping From
COLUMBUS, OHIO
CITIZEN

SEP 15 1941

Contrasts Noted Among Conductors

There could scarcely be greater contrasts than between the three conductors who this season will wave their hands or batons before notable orchestras on the course of the Symphony Club of Central Ohio.

Eugene Ormandy, who leads the Philadelphia orchestra in its opening concert on Oct. 27, is small of stature, dapper, nervous, keen of perception, retentive of memory, uncanny in his sizing up of people, very human in his social relations. His solo instrument was the violin.

Serge Koussevitzky, who brings the Boston Symphony to Memorial Hall on Dec. 12, is dignified without being pompous, much sought after as a teacher by young conductors and definitely the idolized center of that summer mecca, the Berkshire Festival. His solo instrument is the double bass, on which he is a real virtuoso.

Jose Iturbi, who comes with the Rochester Symphony, March 6, is dynamic, tireless, a lover of motoring, a man of great physical prowess with muscles like a prize-fighter. He, too, is a musical scholar in two fields, orchestral and pianistic. His solo instrument is, of course, the piano, and he has toured as soloist all over Europe and the two Americas.

Monitor Sept 12

Symphony Season Sale Closes Tomorrow Night

The box office at Symphony Hall will be kept open until 10 o'clock tomorrow evening to accomodate patrons who want to take advantage of the season ticket rates for the four series of Symphony cooncerts. On Wednesday the tickets become subject to the new federal tax.

Symphony Ticket Sale

The season sale for all four series of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, at Symphony Hall, will end tomorrow evening. The Symphony Hall box office will remain open until 10 o'clock. The new Federal Tax law will go into effect Wednesday, Oct. 1. Until then, all tickets are tax free. Serge Koussevitzky returns to Boston Thursday to assemble the orchestra for its 61st season and his 18th year as conductor. The first concert will be Oct. 10.

Globe Sept 2?

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

Typing' No Bugbear to Stone, As Long as It's Judge Hardy

By Lewis Stone

CLNLY too often when an actor begins playing the same type of role over a series of pictures he begins to have a terror of being "typed." He meditates that this is more or less bringing him to the verge of professional suicide. It's true that an actor usually has an urge to display any and all sorts of talented characters, but sometimes the character is bigger than the actor. I discovered very early in the Hardy family pictures that this was the case. Mickey literally becomes Andy Hardy; he says that Mickey Rooney today can't quite forget Andy Hardy.

So the bugbear of the Hollywood actor, that of being "typed," is really a great thing—when the character is big enough to type him. I'm proud today to be the servant of Judge Hardy, whom I respect and hope to live with a long time. Judge Hardy is doing the boys and girls of America a great deal of good; as his servants of their consciousness of [illegible] Actors like to play Shakespeare [illegible] but to the character he [illegible] idea behind it. Judge Hardy was far greater than the actor [illegible] admired him. I don't mean that [illegible] that the public looked up to [illegible] of Judge Hardy. I began to [illegible] pictures that this was [illegible] I discovered very early in the [illegible] character is bigger than the actor. [illegible] charactes, but sometimes [illegible] to display any and all sorts of [illegible] of professional suicide. It's [illegible] that an actor usually has an [illegible] or less bringing him to the [illegible] He meditates that this is [illegible] more or less bringing him to the [illegible] of professional suicide. It's [illegible] that an actor usually has an [illegible] to display any and all sorts of [illegible] characters, but sometimes [illegible] character is bigger than the actor. [illegible] discovered very early in the [illegible] Hardy family pictures that this was [illegible] true of Judge Hardy. I began to [illegible] that the public looked up to [illegible] admired him. I don't mean that [illegible] his adulation went to Lewis Stone, [illegible] actor, but to the character he [illegible] played and the idea behind it. Judge Hardy was far greater than the actor [illegible] Actors like to play Shakespeare [illegible] cause of their consciousness of "Today we are able to articulate [illegible] space or motion in the same way we [illegible] an articulate the voice or color or [illegible] and do respond to their times.

The fine arts go over into practical affairs and practical affairs influence the fine arts."

However Utopian some of his ideas may sound, Monoly-Nagy himself states that "in our most Utopian planning we have not gone far enough." Paradoxically he says that our Utopian planning hasn't reached the point of mastering the present situation. "In this century our great workers in almost all fields are very much less courageous than they have been in the past," he says. "We are covered by the circumstances, by a kind of self-censor, in much the same way that Hollywood movies restrict themselves from dealing with so many important things. The best of our contemporary artists are those who have the great luck not to be bound by a self-censor."

The work which Mr. Moholy-Nagy has done includes some of the scenic effects for the H. G. Wells's motion picture "Things to Come." Some will recall the picture, based on the Wells book, with its prophetic glimpse into the future. Many of the scenic effects were purely visionary, and certainly it would be difficult to imagine to what earthly use some of the strange devises shown might be put. But it may be that the picture is in this respect at least prophetic—that the shape of considerable art of the future will be very much influenced by Moholy-Nagy and those who are working in his direction.

Such a trend may appeal to some only as a trend toward hardness and undue severity, toward harsh practicality and standardization. But the trend of events may make no other development possible so that; these criteria will have to take on new meaning. The history of art bears witness to the fact that artists can

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

SEP 18 1941

Orchestra Plans 61st Season

Sixty Concerts Scheduled for Symphony Hall

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conductor, opens its 61st season Oct. 10 and subscriptions are reported as running ahead of the 1940 season.

The orchestra will give 60 concerts at Symphony Hall and in addition will give its usual series in New York, Brooklyn and Providence as well as many concerts on tour in other cities in the East and the Middle West.

Soloists will include Efrem Zimbalist, Rudolf Serkin, Joseph Szigeti, Yehudi Menuhin and Alexander Borovsky. Guest conductors will include Bruno Walter and the Belgian conductor, Desire Defauw. Dr. Koussevitzky who has been enjoying a vacation since the Berkshire Festival, is expected back in Lenox this week end and will remain at his summer home until early next month.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
LOWELL, MASS.
SUNDAY TELEGRAM

SEP 14 1941

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA SEASON

The Boston Symphony orchestra will open its 61st season in Symphony hall on Friday afternoon, October 10. Serge Koussevitzky will then begin his seventeenth season as conductor of the orchestra. The concerts of October 10-11 will be the first of twenty-four pairs of concerts in Symphony hall on Friday afternoons and Saturday evenings. The shorter series of six Monday evening concerts and six Tuesday afternoons will begin on October 27-28.

The soloists are announced for the Friday and Saturday series.

They will include two famous artists who have not appeared with the Boston Symphony orchestra for a long time: Efrem Zimbalist and Alexander Borovsky. Zimbalist, born in 1889 and yet the first of the succession of outstanding violinists who were the pupils of Leopold Auer, made his American debut with the Boston Symphony orchestra in 1911. His last appearance with this orchestra was in 1924. Alexander Borovsky is remembered for his notable performances with this orchestra in the Bach Festival of 1931. Since then, this pianist has toured in other parts of the world, returning to the United States last spring. Yehudi Menuhin, the violinst, last heard at these concerts in 1938, will also return. Artists more recently remembered are Rudolf Serkin, the pianist, and Joseph Szigeti, violinist.

There will be two guest conductors in mid-season. Desire Defauw, the conductor from Brussels, Belgium, who was guest for a week in the season past, will return. Bruno Walter, unheard as a symphonic conductor in Boston since his single appearance here with the Boston Symphony orchestra in 1923, will conduct the orchestra for the concerts of two weeks. During this time, Dr. Koussevitzky will be the guest conductor of the Philharmonic-Symphony society in New York. Mr. Walter was heard in Boston last spring as conductor of the Metropolian Opera company.

Season tickets for each of the four series, released by the subscribers of last season, are now available at the Subscription Office in Symphony hall.

This Clipping From
OSHKOSH, WIS.
NORTHWESTERN

SEP 18 1941

New York —(U.P.)— Leopold Stokowski has chosen Beethoven's Fifth Symphony, whose opening notes are used as the "V" for victory campaign of the British, for the start of the centennail year of the New York Philharmonic-Symphony at Carnegie hall on Oct. 9.

To open the society's 100th season, Stokowski has picked the work with which the orchestra began its existence. It was the feature of the society's first concert on Dec. 7, 1842, when John Tyler was president of the United States and Queen Victoria was in the fifth year of her long reign.

Beethoven had been dead only 15 years, and Brahms was not yet 10 years old. Liszt, Verdi and Wagner were in the middle of their careers.

Stokowski's complete program for the initial concerts next Oct. 9-10, includes, in addition to the Fifth Symphony, the Bach Toccata and Fugue in D minor and the Andante Sostenuto of the sonata for violion in A minor, both arranged by Stokowski; the Prelude and Love-death from "Tristan and Isolde," and "Tales of Our Countryside," by Henry Cowell, the latter to be played for the first time in New York.

For his six remaining concerts, extending through mid-October, Stokowski plans to introduce to New York three more American works—a folk dance for strings and percussion from the "Folk Dance Symphony" of Roy Harris; the symphony "With Humor," by Paul Creston, and the symphonietta "Guaracho," by Morton Gould.

The conductors succeeding Stokowski for the gala season will be John Barbirolli, Bruno Walter Artur Rodzinski, Dimitri Mitropoulos, Fritz Busch, Serge Koussevitzky, Eugene Goossens and Walter Damrosch. The young people's concerts will be conducted by Rudolph Ganz.

This Clipping From
PAWTUCKET, R. I.
TIMES
SEP 20 1941

Boston Symphony Opens On Oct. 21

Serge Koussevitzky will open on Tuesday evening, Oct. 21, the 60th anniversary season of the Boston Symphony orchestra in Providence, when he conducts on that evening the first of five concerts in the Metropolitan Theatre (the others will be Nov. 25, Jan. 20, Feb. 17 and April 7). The Boston Symphony orchestra first visited Providence in 1882 when it was one year old, and played in the old Music Hall. The conductor was Georg Henschel, first conductor of the orchestra. The Boston Symphony orchestra has subsequently appeared in this city under all of its conductors. In its anniversary season here, the audiences promise to be larger than ever before.

Serge Koussevitzky will lead three of the five Providence concerts as part of his 17th season in America. At two of the concerts there will be guest conductors of international fame. One of them will be Desire Defauw, the Belgian leader, who is well remembered by his appearance as guest last winter. Dr. Koussevitzky will for the first time in America conduct an orchestra other than his own, when he leads the Philharmonic-Symphony Society of New York in January for two weeks. During this time Bruno Walter will conduct the Boston Symphony orchestra in Boston and will then make his first appearance in Providence. Mr. Walter, by virtue of the symphony concerts he has conducted in this country and his appearances as conductor of the Metropolitan Opera Company last season, has been praised as a leader of the first importance.

Zimbalist Announced to Play the Brahms Concerto at Symphony

Efrem Zimbalist is still announced by Symphony Hall as the first soloist of the new Boston Symphony season, in the Brahms Violin Concerto. Reports from New York, however, have stated that James Caesar Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, has ruled that Mr. Zimbalist and Joseph Szigeti, also a violinist, cannot appear with the Boston Orchestra. Both are members of the Federation. The Boston Symphony is the only nonunion major orchestra in the United States. Mr. Petrillo also said that, so far as he knows, Serge Koussevitzky, the Boston Symphony's conductor, will not be guest leader of the New York Philharmonic-Symphony. Mr. Koussevitzky had been announced to lead the Philharmonic in January.

The 61st season of the Boston Symphony, and the 17th as conductor of Serge Koussevitzky, will begin at Symphony Hall Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, Oct. 10 and 11. Other soloists are to be violinist Yehudi Menuhin, and Rudolf Serkin and Alexander Borovsky, pianists.

Bruno Walter and Desire Defauw will be guest conductors at midseason, Mr. Walter will be here two weeks. Mr. Defauw will officiate here for a week.

Symphony Hall advises that the new Federal Revenue Act, which has just been passed, makes all symphony concerts taxable. The act becomes effective Oct. 1. Until that date, season tickets for each of the four series may be purchased tax free. The season ticket sale will close Sept. 30 and after that date tickets must be bought at the single rate with the tax added. The combined season rate and tax exemption will effect a saving of approximately 30 percent on season tickets.

61st Season Of Boston Symphony

Efrem Zimbalist, returning to the Boston Symphony Orchestra after more than a decade, will be the first soloist of the season at the Friday and Saturday concerts, appearing in Brahms' Violin Concerto. This first of the famous Auer pupils came to this country and made his American debut with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1911. Other soloists will be the pianists Alexander Borovsky and Rudolf Serkin, and the violinists Joseph Szigeti and Yehudi Menuhin. Serge Koussevitzky will open the 61st season on Friday afternoon, Oct. 10. Soloists for the series of six Monday evening and Tuesday afternoon concerts which begin on Oct. 27, will shortly be announced.

During the two weeks in January when Serge Koussevitzky appears as guest conductor of the Philharmonic Symphony Society of New York, then conducting another orchestra than his own for the first time in America, Bruno Walter will be the guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts in Symphony Hall. Desire Defauw, the Belgian conductor, will also be the guest of a week.

The new Federal Revenue Act, which has just been passed, makes all symphony concerts taxable. The act becomes effective Oct. 1. Until that date, season tickets for each of the four series may be purchased tax free. The season ticket sale will close Sept. 30, and after that date tickets must be bought at the single rate with the tax added. The combined season rate and tax exemption will effect a saving of approximately thirty per cent on season tickets.

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN
SEP 20 1941

MUSIC

The season's first concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Providence will take place in Metropolitan Theatre on the night of Oct. 21, a Tuesday. It will be the orchestra's 60th season here.

Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the first program and two others. Another will be conducted by Desire Defauw, Belgian conductor, who was a guest conductor here last season, and another by the renowned Bruno Walter, who will be appearing here for the first time. Ruth Posselt, violinist, will be soloist at one concert, the date of which has not been decided.

There will be performances the nights of Nov. 25, Jan. 20, Feb. 17, and April 7.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
SEP 19 1941

Boston Symphony Hit By New Tax Ruling

Boston—(UP)—The federal government has decided that the symphony concert is amusement rather than education.

For years, symphony tickets have been tax exempt because they represented an educational enterprise. Today, however, the Boston Symphony Orchestra was advised that effective Oct. 1 its tickets will be subject to the 10 percent amusement tax.

William H. Mortensen, managing director of Bushnell Memorial said the ruling would have no effect on the appearance of the Boston Symphoiy or other orchestras at the Bushnell. He explained that the non-profit organization of the memorial removed it from tax liability for presentations under its own sponsorship.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
NEWS
SEP 19 1941
This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
SEP 19 1941
This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TELEGRAPH
SEP 19

New York Concerts

By Oscar Thompson

New York

With the final curtain about to fall on the Metropolitan's 16 weeks of opera—though at least three post-season performances, two of "Parsifal" and one of "Tristan" are to be given in April, when the company returns from its annual tour—the symphony orchestras again hold the place in the spotlight that was theirs almost exclusively in the no-opera weeks of October and November. In the sennight just passed, they have overshadowed in interest the concluding repetitions at the opera house, partly because of the stimulations attendant on visits of the Boston Symphony and The Philadelphia Orchestra, each of which will return but once more this season, and partly because of new works and soloists.

Dr. Koussevitzky made another of his substantial contributions to the sum total of orchestral novelties for the year in setting before the Boston Symphony's Carnegie Hall audiences the expertly written Third Symphony of Nicolai Berezowsky, which was first performed in Boston as far back as 1937. In sober retrospection, the performance stands out as more brilliant and convincing than the work, which left an impression of more plan than impulse, of calculated effect rather than communicable feeling. The Thursday and Saturday concerts of the Bostonians were both distinguished by the highest order of ensemble virtuosity, with the self-pity and the frustrations of Mahler's Ninth Symphony glorified on the first occasion, the programmatic excitement of Berlioz's "Fantastic" intensified to white heat on the other.

Dr. Koussevitzky Much Refreshed After 'Runaway'

A romantic story of flight and self-exile in quest of relief from his too well-known Summer home in the Berkshires was revealed yesterday by Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

After strenuous Summer weeks of festival rehearsing and conducting at Tanglewood, combined with teaching and administrative conferences at the Berkshire Music Center, Koussevitzky sought relaxation at his estate, "Serenac," in Lenox. But there was no peace to be had—the place was too easy to find.

"And so," Koussevitzky said with a grin, "I took an airplane, which left me in a pleasant place in the South, which I will not name. There I had a cottage by the seashore. I did not have a telephone. That was beautiful. I was a complete exile from publishers, composers and—even my secretary and my manager. My only companions were a Negro chef and two little children who met me every day. And all I did was nothing—just sun bathing, and carrying one child under each arm down to the water to go wading. Such a wonderful vacation."

It is understood that that is probably the first time in his career as musician that Koussevitzky ever spent a vacation in complete relaxation.

[illegible] week and will assemble the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Monday, Oct. 6, for the first rehearsal.

The 61st season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will open in Symphony Hall on Friday, Oct. 10, with the following program: Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony, Prokofieff's Suite from "Romeo and Juliet," and Moussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition" as orchestrated by Ravel.

THIS CLIPPING FROM TAUNTON, MASS.
GAZETTE
SEP 22 1941

Symphony Tickets Will Be Taxed

The National Defense financing authorities have become symphony-minded. In other words, citizens of this community and more than 200 others in Massachusetts, who for years have enjoyed freedom from taxes on their tickets to the Boston Symphony concerts, are going to be surprised by the Collector of Internal Revenue. Word has come to Symphony Hall that on and after October first, there will be a tax on season and separate tickets for these concerts, previously tax-exempt as representing a non-profit educational enterprise. Season tickets subscribed in full by September 30, will still be tax free. But a full year's tax will go on subscriptions on which only a deposit has been made by that date.

Thus "the whirlig of time brings his revenges," for a share of the cost of American defense will be defrayed by the music, for example, of Bach, Hadyn, Mozart, Beethoven, Brahms, Wagner, Debussy, Tchaikovsky, Stravinsky, and Prokofieff.

The sixty-first season of the Boston Symphony orchestra will open on Friday afternoon, October 10, starting then two series of twenty-four concerts on Friday afternoons and Saturday evenings. On October 27, two series of six concerts on Monday evenings and Tuesday afternoons will begin. This will be the celebrated Serge Koussevitzky's seventeenth consecutive year as conductor of the orchestra. For the first time in this period he is to be guest conductor of another orchestra—the New York Philharmonic-Symphony, in connection with its Centennial celebration. In his absence, the eminent Bruno Walter will lead the Boston orchestra for two weeks. Other highlights of the season will be solo appearances by the violinist, Yehudi Menuhin, and the pianists, Alexander Borovsky and Rudolph Serkin. Belgium's Desire Defauw, who was warmly received as a guest conductor last season, will make a return engagement.

Who's News Today

N.Y.Sun

Koussevitzky Once Conducted an Imaginary Orchestra

SEP 25 1941

By LEMUEL F. PARTON.

An exile from Bolshevik Russia, Serge Koussevitzky hired a big room in Paris, filled it with empty chairs and vigorously conducted an imaginary orchestra for many days. He said he did it to get his fingers thawed out. The Bolsheviks had ordered him to keep up with his music and his fingers had been half frozen in open-air conducting and violin playing.

James Cæsar Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, says Mr. Koussevitzky will again conduct an orchestra of empty chairs if he keeps his two-week January engagement as guest conductor for the New York Philharmonic Orchestra.

The Boston Orchestra is nonunion. Mr. Petrillo says there isn't even room for an argument as to whether the Russian maestro will conduct here. The New York Philharmonic says it will meet the issue when it arises. In the meantime, the coming showdown stirs a buzz of talk and argument in musical circles here and in Boston.

Mr. Koussevitzky's fortunes have been much affected, favorably for the most part, by the backwash of war, revolution and social tension. The Russian revolution swept away his property and drove him from his country. The unfortunate experiences of the German, Dr. Karl Muck, famous conductor of the Boston Orchestra in world war days, sent him to Camp Oglethorpe and put the Boston Orchestra on the skids.

In 1924 Mr. Koussevitzky had brilliantly reclaimed his career in Paris. He was summoned to Boston to rebuild the orchestra, at $50,000 a year. His success was immediate and continuous—climactic this year with his distinguished conducting at the fifth season of the Berkshire Music Festival, in Massachusetts. He builds an American Salzburg there.

He began his musical career with the bass viol. In his home town of Tver, Russia, his father gave him a steamboat and he put on musical showboat tours on the Volga. Twenty-three years ago, on the frozen wastes of Russia, he and his players wore mittens. He has tamed the Valkyries of war and revolution. His admirers think he will master Mr. Petrillo's new Wagnerian dissonance.

Boston Daily Record Sept. 25, 1941

Boston Symphony Season Stresses American Music

Apparently unconcerned by the looming shadow of James

Caesar Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, who says he's going to bear down on the Boston Symphony Orchestra this year, the powers that be up at "The Hall" are announcing the principal events for the forthcoming season.

The opening program, for Oct. 10 and 11, will include Beethoven's "Eroica", Prokofieff's "Suite from Romeo and Juliet" and Moussorgsky's "Pictures At An Exhibition"

There will be more American and Pan-American music this season. Carlos Chaves, Mexican composer, is due to conduct works of his own; The Choros No. 10 of Villa-Lobos will be repeated. U. S. composers to be heard are William Schuman, John Alden Carpenter, Leo Sowerby and Arthur Lourie.

Music for Symphony Season Announced by Serge Koussevitzky

Boston Globe Sept 27

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has at length made known some of the music he will conduct during the orchestra's 61st season. The initial program, to be given at Symphony Hall Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, Oct. 10 and 11, will consist of Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony, the "Romeo and Juliet" Suite by Prokofieff, and Ravel's familiar orchestration of "Pictures at an Exhibition," by Moussorgsky.

The centennial observance of Dvorak's birth will be recognized at a pair of "regular" concerts, as will the 150th anniversary of the death of Mozart, in December. Mozart will be ceremonialized by excerpts from his Requiem.

As for new music, there will be program by Carlos Chavez, the Mexican, who will himself conduct. The Third Symphony, by the young American, William Schuman, will have first performances. Symphonies by John Alden Carpenter and Leo Sowerby, also American, are promised. Arthur Lourie, who has not figured on Boston Symphony programs for some years, will be represented by first hearings of a new Symphony.

Prokofieff's Third Symphony, new to this country, is listed, along with the First Symphony of Shostakovitch, which Mr. Koussevitzky will conduct for the first times. The Shostakovitch has been played here, but not under Mr. Koussevitzky. Villa-Lobos' "Choros No. 10" will be repeated.

The customary Spring choral work will be Bach's St. Matthew Passion.

Incidentally, two days more remain for tax-free purchase of season tickets for each of the four Symphony Hall series. The new Federal tax will go in effect Oct. 1.

Last Symphony Ticket Call

9

BOSTON EVENING AMERICAN, SATURDAY, SEPT. 27, 1941

Tuesday is the final day on which tax exempt season tickets may be purchased for the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts. Until the new federal revenue tax goes into effect on Wednesday, there is a substantial saving in the price of the remaining season tickets for the series of concerts.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the orchestra will start rehearsals this coming week for the epening concerts on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, Oct. 10 and 11.

Beethoven's "Eroica Symphony," the Suite from "Romeo and Juliet" by Prokofieff and Mossourgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition" make up the initial program.

While the symphonies and other works of the great will predominate, Dr. Koussevitzky has announced many novelties for the coming months. Carlos Chavez, noted Mexican composer, will conduct at one pair of concerts, and among the "first performances" will be Prokofieff's Third Symphony for the first time in America, and the American William Schuman's new Third Symphony.

Bach's "Passion, According to Saint Matthew" will be revived at a choral concert early in the spring.

RUSSIAN MUSIC BY THE BOSTON ORCHESTRA

Boston Post - Sept. 27

THE NEWS OF THE WORLD OF MUSIC

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

AS ONE who feels keenly the force of European events, Dr. Koussevitzky occasionally reflects them in his programmes. When Czecho-Slovakia was invaded we heard Dvorak. When Finland was attacked we received an unforgettably stirring performance of Sibelius' "Finlandia." When London todk its worst punishment there was a timely revival of Vaughan Williams' "London" Symphony. And now it looks as though we were going to get even more Russian music than usual. The programme for the first pair of Symphony Concerts, those of Oct. 10 and 11, will contain both Moussorgsky's "Pictures from an Exhibition" (as orchestrated by Ravel) and Prokofieff's music for a Russian film version of "Romeo and Juliet," which the composer himself introduced to us a couple of seasons ago.

* * * *

Russian works scheduled for performance later in the season include Prokofieff's Third Symphony, as yet unknown in this country, Shostakovitch's First Symphony and a new Symphony by Arthur Lourie, Dr. Koussevitzky's biographer. In furtherance of Secretary Hull's "good neighbor" policy there will be a repetition of the Brazilian Villa-Lobos' "Choros No. 10" and the Mexican Carlos Chavez will return to Symphony Hall, after a considerable absence, to conduct music of his own. North America will be represented by symphonies from the pens of John Alden Carpenter, Leo Sowerby and William Schuman. A Dvorak programme will mark the hundredth anniversary of his birth; and that composer's Requiem will be sung in December when the already much emphasized 150th anniversary of Mozart's death finally rolls around. Another impending choral masterpiece is Bach's Passion According to St. Matthew, announced for a special concert in the spring.

Monitor - Sept 26

Désiré Defauw

To be guest conductor with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Music Announced For Symphony Season

Herald Sept 27

Special works to be played at the coming 61st season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra are announced by Serge Koussevitzky from his home at Lenox. The conductor will return to Boston late this week to assemble the orchestra for rehearsal in preparation for the season's opening on Oct. 10.

The opening program for Oct. 10-11 will be as follows: Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony, Prokofieff's Suite from "Romeo and Juliet," and Moussorgsky's "Pitcures at an Exhibition" as orchestrated by Ravel. One pair of concerts will be devoted to the music of Dvorak, in commemoration of the 100th anniversary of the birth of the Czech composer. Another anniversary is the 150th of the death of Mozart, which occurs in December, when selections from this composer's Requiem will be performed.

New music by composers of this country and of the other Americas will figure upon the programs. Carlos Chavez, the Mexican composer, will conduct music of his own. The Choros No. 10 of Villa-Lobos of Brazil will be repeated. Composers of our country will include William Schuman, whose new Third Symphony will have its first performance, John Alden Carpenter, and Leo Sowerby, whose symphonies will be played. A new symphony by Arthur Lourie will have its first performance. Prokofieff's Third Symphony, as yet unheard in America, will be played, and the First Symphony of Shostskevitch, which Koussevitzky has not performed. The great symphonies and other works of the established symphonic repertory will, of course, predominate upon the season's programs. Bach's Passion According to Saint Matthew will be revived at a choral concert in the spring.

One more day remains for the purchase of season tickets for any of the four series at Symphony Hall, since the new federal tax will be placed upon all tickets on Oct. 1.

Boston Group Lists Season

Toledo Times

Koussevitzky Lists Special Works

Sept 28

BOSTON, Mass., Sept. 27—Special works to be played at the coming 61st season of the Boston Symphony orchestra are announced by Serge Koussevitzky from his home at Lenox. The conductor will return to Boston over the week end to assemble the orchestra for rehearsal in preparation for the season's opening Oct. 10.

The opening program for Oct. 10-11 will be as follows: Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony, Prokofieff's Suite from "Romeo and Juliet," and Moussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition" as orchestrated by Ravel. One pair of concerts will be devoted to the music of Dvorak, in commemoration of the 100th anniversary of the birth of the Czech composer. Another anniversary is the 150th of the death of Mozart, which occurs in December, when selection from this composers Requiem will be performed.

New music by composers of this country and of the other Americas will figure upon the programs. Carlos Chavea, the Mexican composer, will conduct music of his own. The Choros No. 10 of Villa-Lobos of Brazil will be repeated. Composers of our country will include William Schuman, whose new Third Symphony will have its first performance, John Alden Carpenter, and Leo Sowerby, whose symphonies will be played.

A new symphony by Arthur Lourie will have its first performance. Prokofieff's Third Symphony, as yet unheard in America, will be played, and the First Symphony of Shostakovitch, which Koussevitzky has not yet performed. The great symphonies and other works of the established symphonic repertory will, of course, predominate upon the season's programs. Bach's Passion According to Saint Matthew will be revived at a choral concert in the spring.

TO Ward's LOOSE LEAF
BOSTON MASS.
No 911
COLUMNS PAGES
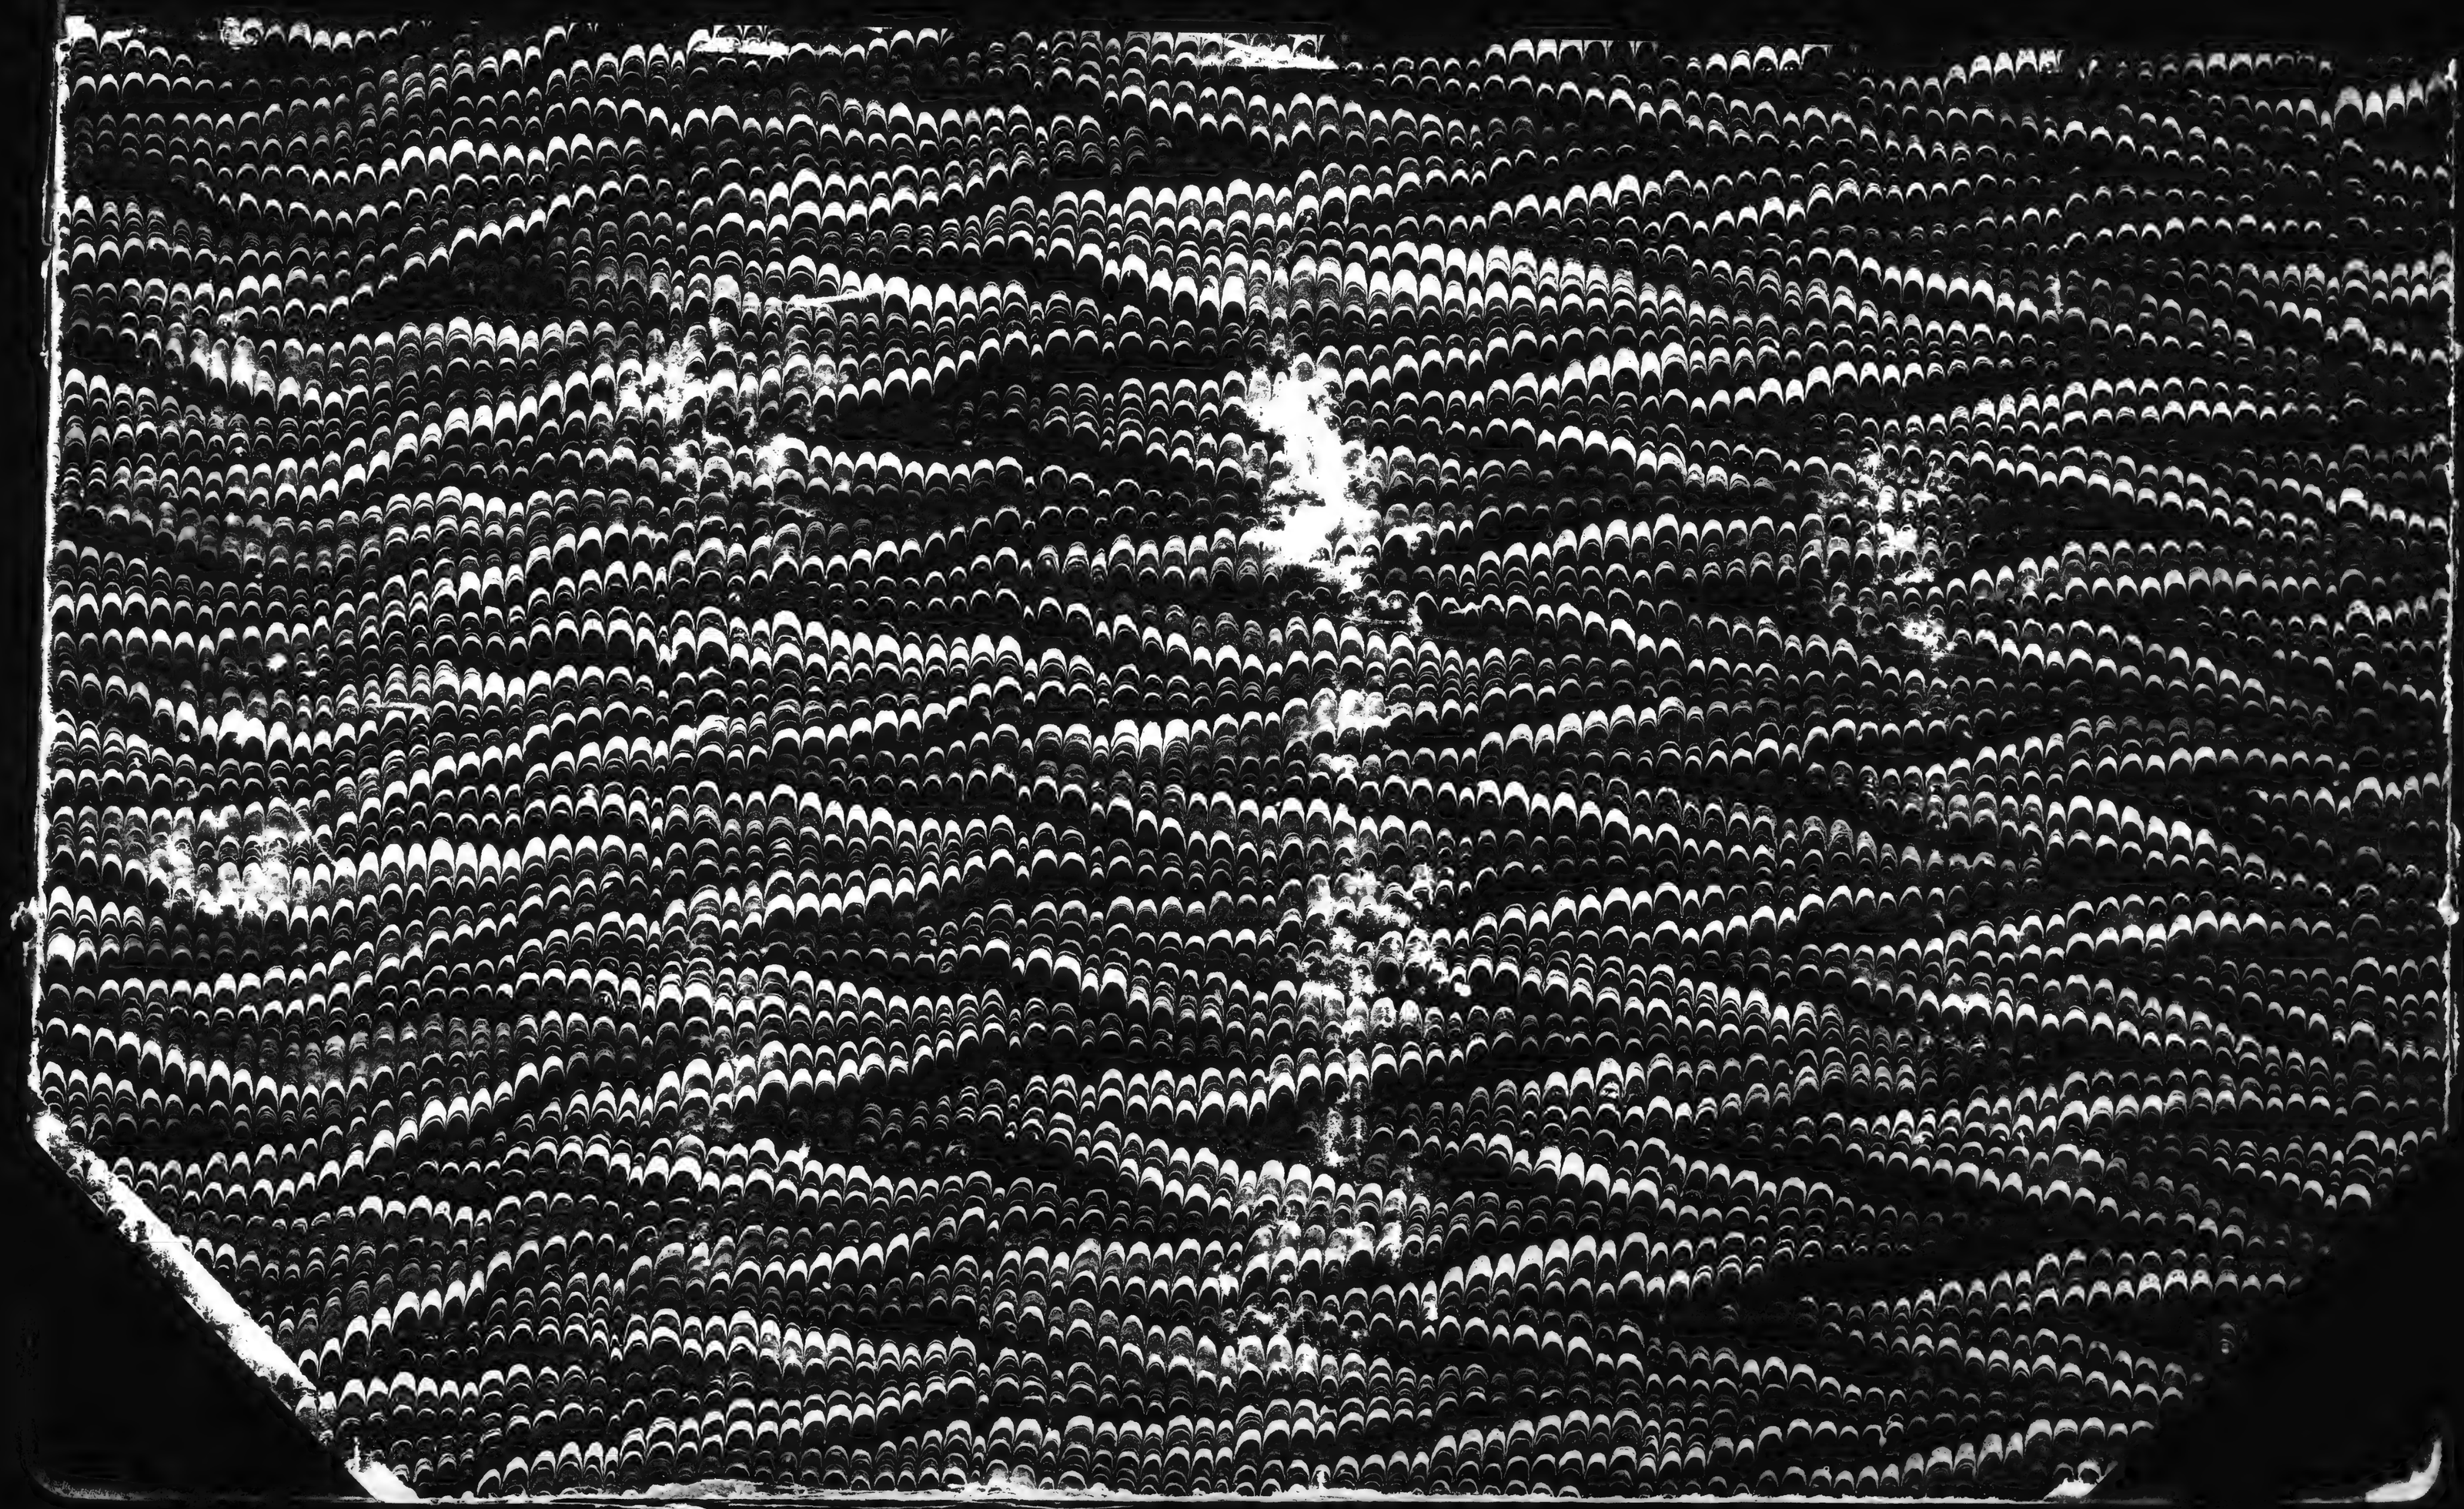
PRICE

INFORMATION OBSCURED

ASA L. SHIPMAN'S SONS
NEW YORK



END OF VOLUME

VOLUME 70

Tanglewood

1940 - 1944

BLANK PAGE

THE WORLD OF MUSIC

NEW YORK, June 30 (U.P.)—The much-heralded Seventh Symphony by Dimitri Shostakovich, young Russian composer, has finally arrived in America and will be given its first performance in this country during August at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Mass., under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

The first New York performance will be by the New York Philharmonic-Symphony at Carnegie Hall in mid-October, under the direction of Arturo Toscanini.

The symphony was composed by Shostakovich at Leningrad during the siege of that city by the Germans. Its theme is "the ordinary Soviet people who have become the heroes of this patriotic war."

The score was sent by photostat on 35-millimeter microfilm from Kuibyshev, former Russian temporary capital, where it had its world premieme last March 1, It was flown from Kuibyshev to the Soviet Embassy in Washington by way of Teheran, Persia, and Cairo, Egypt.

Koussevitzky and Toscanini are now studying the score and are said to find it full of possibilities. It is written for a large orchestra, including eight horns, six trombones, six trumpets, two harps, piano and five timpani, and takes about 90 minutes to perform.

★ ★ ★

The Metropolitan Opera has made a sharp cut in its prices for the coming season, in an effort to keep attendance at a normal level under war conditions. The new scale will range from $1 to $5 (exclusive of tax) for the regular subscription series. The "popular" Saturday night performances will be priced at $1 to $3.25. The previous top was $7.

In announcing the change, Edward Johnson, general manager of the opera, said:

"The new scale of prices is made possible through the sympathetic cooperation of the administrative staff and the various unions active at the Metropolitan — including AGMA (the organization of artists, chorus and ballet), orchestra musicians, stagehands and others. These unions and the administrative staff have generously cooperated in a revision of their arrangements."

★ ★ ★

The National Orchestral Association announces that applications for membership in all sections of its training orchestra for the season of 1942-43 are now being accepted.

No tuition is charged. Instrumentalists who have sufficient technical background to pass the auditions which will be held in September will be given the opportunity to acquire a knowledge of orchestral routine and repertoire so that they may become candidates for positions in the regular orchestra. An outline of requirements and an application blank may be obtained from the association at 119 West 57th street, New York.

The concerts of the New York Philharmonic-Symphony, which started their 25th summer season at Lewisohn Stadium last week, will be broadcast hereafter every Friday night over the Columbia system from 8 to 8:55 p. m., EWT., beginning July 3.

Famous instrumentalists and singers will be heard with the orchestra. At the opening night on June 18, Artur Rubenstein was piano soloist in the Tchaikovsky Concerto No. 2. The concert was partly in twilight and partly under dimmed blue lights, the latter because of wartime dimout regulations on the eastern seaboard. The first night audience, which numbered about 12,000, found the soft lighting much to its satisfaction, and conducive to a receptive mood for music.

★ ★ ★

The Hollywood Bowl "Symphonies Under the Stars" will be given as usual this summer, beginning July 14, under wartime restrictions. Attendance will be limited to 5,000 people for each concert and tickets will have to be bought at least 24 hours in advance. Lighting will be strictly controlled and police arrangements will be made for the adequate handling of the audience in case of a blackout alarm.

WATERBURY, CONN.
AMERICAN

JUL 30 19[illegible]

Freedom Will Be Theme of Music Fete

W. E. Channing To Be Honored At Stockbridge

The struggle for freedom will be the theme of the opening concert at the Berkshire Music Festival at Stockbridge, Mass., Saturday evening when Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the orchestra in a presentation of the Leonore Overture, No. 3 as the first number.

Sounding a call for liberty, this piece of music will mark the spirit of the concert which is being dedicated to William Ellery Channing, a champion of free men, who delivered one of his most famous orations on freedom at the Congregational church in Lenox Aug. 1, 1842, exactly 100 years to the day before the date of the concert.

War Stamp Sale Contest To Be Held

When Dr. Koussevitzky directs his new orchestra of 105 talented young musicians in the overture, in an anniversary program dedicated "to the men and women of the Berkshires," the call for a new freedom will be heard in the Music Shed at Tanglewood.

The program Sunday will be dedicated also to the new struggle for freedom, for Dr. Koussevitzky will honor the U. S. Treasury Department's war bond and stamp campaign. At this time, Ruth Posselt will be heard as soloist in the Tchaikovsky Violin Concerto. Also on the program will be the Frank Symphony in D minor and two Sousa marches.

The stub of every ticket bought for this concert and presented at the stamp booth will be redeemable for a 50 cent stamp. In a contest in which 50 young women will strive to sell the most stamps, the winners will be given war savings bonds. A "Victory ladder" will keep the audience informed of the progress of sales.

The gala benefit for Russian War Relief will be held Aug. 14 with a program lasting from 5 to 11 p. m. At the evening concert in the Music Shed, Dr. Koussevitzky will present the first concert performance of the widely discussed Shostakovitch Seventh symphony. Rehearsals held during the past week have caused Dr. Koussevitzky to conclude that this work will rank among the world's great symphonies.

WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN

JUL 30 1942

Berkshire Festival Honors Channing

Saturday Event Commemorates 1842 Oration

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky has fittingly chosen the Leonore Overture, No. 3, for the opening program of his festival of music at Tanglewood, Stockbridge, Mass., Saturday evening. The call of freedom found in the overture is an appropriate recognition of the anniversary of a significant Berkshire event.

On Aug. 1, 1842, William Emery Channing delivered his last public address in the Lenox Congregational church which was "dedicated to the men and women of Berkshire" on the eighth anniversary of the beginning of the emancipation of slaves in the British West Indies and the fourth anniversary of the final freeing of the 800,000 slaves on those islands. The oration still ranks as one of the major addresses of American history.

In the printed version of his address, Channing referred to the delight he found "in the magnificent scenery of this region, in its peaceful and prosperous villages and in the rare intelligence and virtues of the friends whose hospitality I have here enjoyed."

In his apostrophe, he sounded a call that has significance today: "A new reverence for humanity, a new feeling of brotherhood, are among the signs of the times. Before this, all oppressions are to fall. Society, silently pervaded by this, is to change its aspect of universal warfare for peace."

When Dr. Koussevitzky directs his new orchestra of 105 talented young musicians in the overture, in an anniversary program dedicated "to the men and women of the Berkshires," the call for a new freedom will be heard in the Music Shed at Tanglewood.

The program Sunday will be dedicated also to the new struggle for freedom, for Dr. Koussevitzky will honor the U. S. Treasury Department's War Bond and Stamp campaign. At this time, Ruth Posselt will be heard as soloist in the Tchaikovsky Violin Concerto. Also on the program will be the Frank Symphony in D minor and two Sousa marches.

The stub of every ticket bought for this concert and presented at the stamp booth will be redeemable for a 50 cent stamp. In a contest in which 50 young women will strive to sell the most stamps, the winners will be given War Savings Bonds. A "Victory Ladder" will keep the audience informed of the progress of sales.

The gala benefit for Russian War Relief will be held Aug. 14 with a program lasting from 5 to 11 p. m. At the evening concert in the Music Shed, Dr. Koussevitzky will present the first concert performance of the widely discussed Shostakovitch Seventh Symphony. Rehearsals held during the past week have caused Dr. Koussevitzky to conclude that this work will rank among the world's great symphonies.

PORTLAND, OREGON
OREGON JOURNAL

JUL 19 1942

Berkshire Music Center Festival Will Carry On

LENOX, Mass., July 18.—A full-fledged festival of music will be held at the Berkshire Music center at Lenox during the next five weeks. One of the first acts of the Koussevitsky Music foundation formed recently by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, was to assure the 1942 session of the center.

Foremost on the list is the series of six concerts to be conducted by Dr. Koussevitzky beginning August 1 with an orchestra of 96 advanced students. Appearing as soloists will be Ruth Posselt, violinist and Lubohutz and Nemenoff, duo-pianists.

Opera performances will be given August 7 and 13. Two different casts of the opera department under Dr. Herbert Graf of the Metropolitan Opera company and Boris Goldovsky, head of the opera department, New England Conservatory of Music, will sing Nicolai's "Merry Wives of Windsor."

Five chamber music concerts will be given under the direction of Gregor Piatigorsky, head of the center's department. Olin Downes, noted music critic, will give a series of lectures on various types of musical forms illustrated by student performances.

This year, for the first time, the public may purchase associate memberships in the center with the privilege of attending all concerts. Men in uniform will be admitted free.

Proceeds this season will go to the Koussevitzky Music foundation and the Berkshire Music center, both non-profit organizations.

National Music Council Reports on Orchestras

Replacement of men players by women has not been found necessary so far because of military service demands, the National Music Council reports after a survey of the 16 major symphonies of the United States. The council notes, however, that the continued calling up of men may alter the picture considerably during the coming season.

The Boston, New York, Cincinnati and Minneapolis orchestras have no women players except an occasional second harpist. Others have from one to five.

The World Of Music

By LOUIS F. KEEMLE

[illegible]K, June 27 (U.P.)—The much-heralded Seventh Sym[illegible] Dmitri Shostakovich, young Russian composer, has [illegible]ed in America and will be given its first performance [illegible]ntry during August at the Berkshire Music Center at [illegible]od, Mass., under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

The first New York performance will be by the New York Philharmonic Symphony at Carnegie Hall in mid-October, under the direction of Arturo Toscanini.

The symphony was composed by Shostakovich at Leningrad during the siege of that city by the Germans. Its theme is "the ordinary Soviet people who have become the heroes of this patriotic war."

The score was sent by photostat on 35-milimeter microfilm from Kuibyshev, former Russian temporary capital, where it had its world premiere last March 1. It was flown from Kuibyshev to the Soviet Embassy in Washington by way of Teheran, Persia, and Cairo, Egypt.

Koussevitzky and Toscanini are now studying the score and are said to find it full of possibilities. It is written for a large orchestra, including eight horns, six trombones, six trumpets, two harps, piano and five timpani, and takes about ninety minutes to perform.

* * *

The Metropolitan Opera has made a sharp cut in its prices for the coming season, in an effort to keep attendance at a normal level under war conditions. The new scale will range from $1 to $5 (exclusive of tax) for the regular subscription series. The "popular" Saturday night performances will be priced at $1 to $3.25. The previous top was $7.

In announcing the change, Edward Johnson, general manager of the opera, said:

"The new scale of prices is made possible through the sympathetic cooperation of the administrative staff and the various unions active at the Metropolitan—including AGMA (the organization of artists, chorus and ballet), orchestra musicians, stagehands and others. These unions and the administrative staff have generously co-operated in a revision of their arrangements."

* * *

The National Orchestra Association announces that applications for membership in all sections of its training orchestra for the season of 1942-43 are now being accepted.

No tuition is charged. Instrumentalists who have sufficient technical background to pass the auditions which will be held in September will be given the opportunity to acquire knowledge of orchestral routine and repertoire so that they may become candidates for positions in the regular orchestra. An outline of requirements and an application blank may be obtained from the association at 119 West 57th street, New York.

* * *

The concerts of the New York Philharmonic-Symphony, which started their twenty-fifth summer season at Lewisohn Stadium last week, will be broadcast hereafter every Friday night over the Columbia system from 8 to 8:55 P. M., (EWT), beginning July 3.

Famous instrumentalists and singers will be heard with the orchestra. At the opening night on June 18, Artur Rubenstein was piano soloist in the Tchaikovsky Concerto No. 2. The concert was partly in twilight and partly under dimmed blue lights, the latter because of wartime dimout regulations on the eastern seaboard. The first night audience, which numbered about 12,000, found the soft lighting much to its satisfaction, and conducive to a receptive mood for music.

* * *

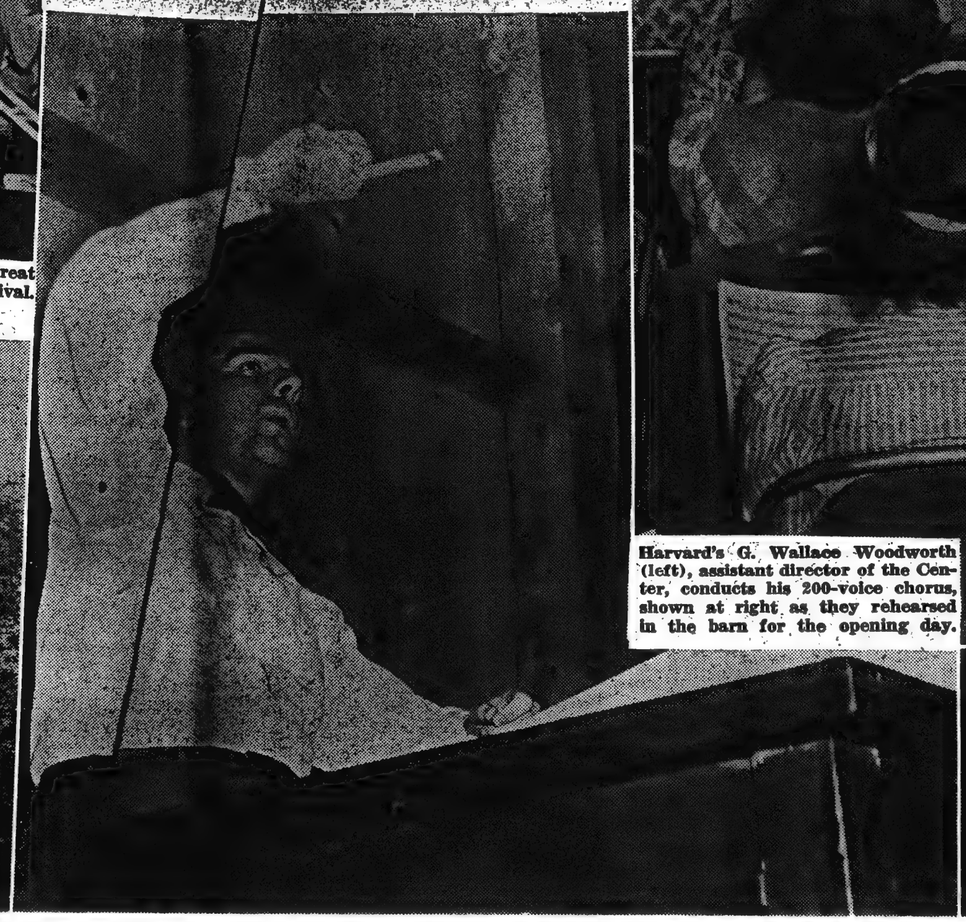
The Hollywood Bowl "Symphonies Under the Stars" will be given as usual this summer, beginning July 14, under wartime restrictions. Attendance will be limited to 5,000 people for each concert and tickets will have to be bought at least 24 hours in advance. Lighting will be strictly controlled and police arrangements will be made for the adequate handling of the audience in case of a blackout alarm.

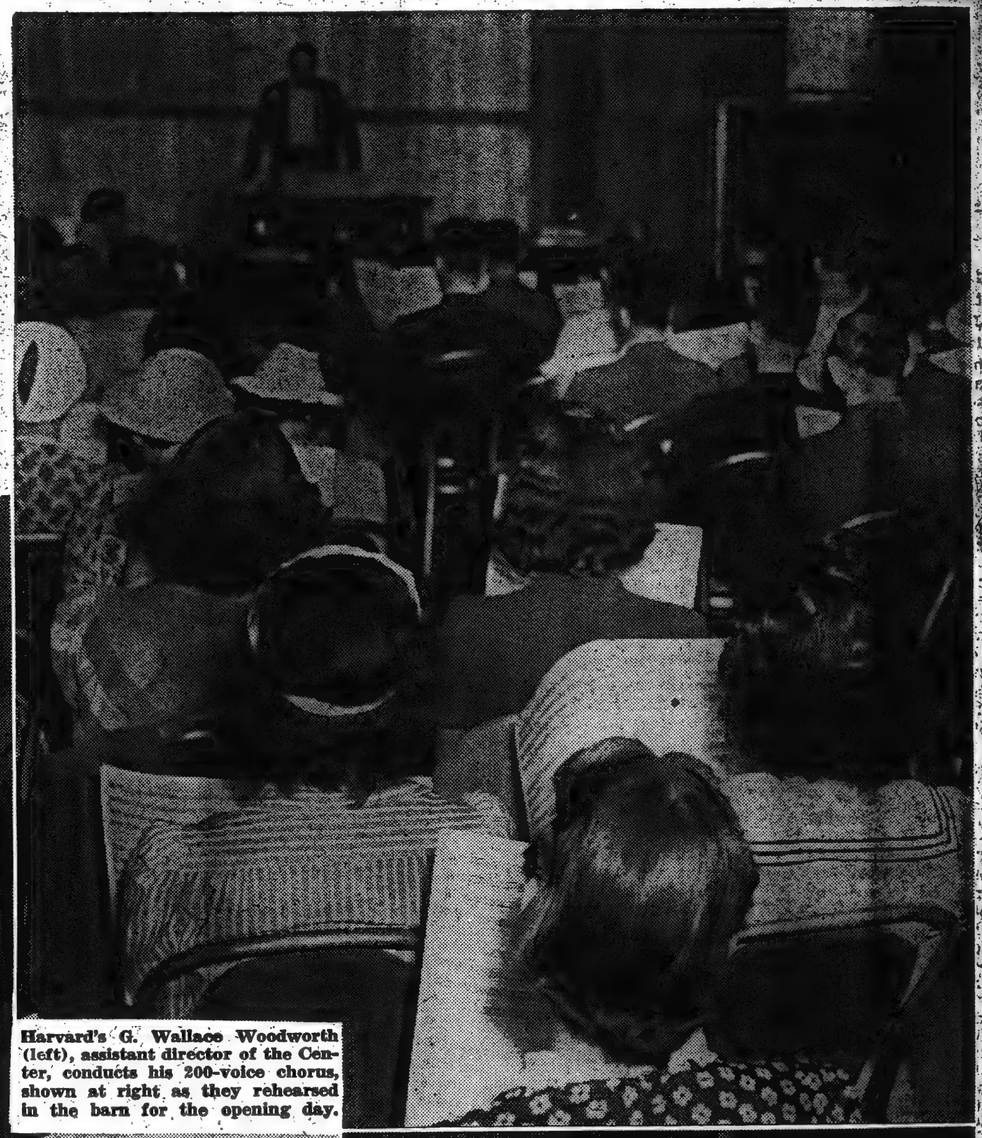
Removed for Exhibit

Tanglewood Adds a Page to History

On Monday, July , Tanglewood further strengthened its cla e the heart of musical America with the o of the Berkshire Music Center, the realizati a lifelong dream for Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, ctor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra a ector of the Center. On that day, 340 stude m all over the country began a six-week pe intensive training under some of the most s figures in contemporary music. Out of the sses, and out of those of ensuing years, it is will come the great conductors, vocalists, in entalists and composers of tomorrow. On th e is a pictorial record of the Center as it bega significant first year.

rt Spalding, outstanding American-born violinist, came from his home in Great ate in the opening-day ceremonies as a trustee of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. d him is Ernest B. Dane, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.





Harvard's G. Wallace Woodworth (left), assistant director of the Center, conducts his 200-voice chorus, shown at right as they rehearsed in the barn for the opening day.

BLANK PAGE

BLANK PAGE

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

AUG 4 - 1941

Piatigorsky Is Soloist At Tanglewood

'Cellist Plays Hindemith Work As First Series Ends in Berkshire Festival

BERKSHIRE SYMPHONIC FESTIVAL—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.; the third concert in a series of nine. The program:

Symphony No. 4 in E Minor ..Brahms
Quiet City .....Copland
Violoncello Concerto .....Hindemith
Gregor Piatigorsky, soloist
Capriccio Espagnol ..Rimsky-Korsakov

In the midst of benign weather and an idolatrous population, the first series of concerts came to a close at Tanglewood, Sunday afternoon.

The event was a super-elegant turnout, socially and satorially, and a great change from last year's matinees when there was a dismaying trend toward luxable frocks and sport shirts not tucked in. That was the seventh year, and the audience apparently took a sabbatical from La Mode. Happily this is over, and whoever has something classy to wear, puts it on and goes forth to knock the eye out.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky also followed the fashionable revival and appeared on the podium in a little, brown number, looking very nattily turned out, as if he had just stepped out of a board meeting at the Chase National Bank. An arrant conservative, however, I prefer him in the white suit which bespeaks the summer festival conductor, to the brown which suggests the snappy business fellow.

The program itself, on the other hand, was not one of those well-tailored ones which Dr. Koussevitzky can contrive with the finesse and brilliance of Herman Patrick Tappe running up a Rockefeller trousseau.

In the first place, it struck me a little too long, and in the second, the elements did not bear any special relation. Certainly it was not as tasteful on paper, and decidedly not in performance, as the one which will close the festival, including the Sibelius Seventh Symphony, "Lieutenant Kije" and the Tschaikowsky Fifth. There is a program with neatness and dispatch, and smack.

Steam-Heated Brahms.

Dr. Koussevitzky opened the program in an all-Russian mood, I thought, playing the first movement of the Brahms Fourth in the desperate key of E Minor as if it had been a Chekhov tale scored by Tschaikowsky. For my tastes it was altogether too intense and perfervid, as red-faced as Dr. Koussevitzky got in conducting it, and when it was done, I felt as if I had been through a Turkish bath. In the second movement, he created as fine a bit of rhapsody as you can ask from Brahms. The third was nice and lusty. The fourth and final was in the same steamy vein of the first, but it can more nearly stand it. By and large, Dr. Koussevitzky can ennoble Brahms more than he did yesterday, I think, and I should have enjoyed more grandeur and less passion.

City Problems.

In describing "Quiet City," which was heard after an intermission during which I should estimate at least a dozen persons were permanently maimed in the bread-lines trampling through the refreshment tent, Mr. Copland wrote his own program note.

The score had been done for a play which "called for music evocative of the nostalgia and inner distress of a society profoundly aware of its own insecurity." In the play is a young trumpet player whose trumpet playing "helps to arouse the conscience of his fellow-players."

This is a lot to ask of the five-line staff, and I am inclined to feel that Mr. Copland did not achieve it. He has written a clean, nicely open, melodious little serenade, highlighted by the meanderings of an English horn and a trumpet. I could find little that was "evocative of an inner distress," in the sense the author had in mind. Louis Speyer blew a few nostalgic passages from a world-weary horn, but the main ideas went to the trumpet. This did evoke an inner distress in me, however, because I thought the trumpet melodies were as cheaply sanctimonious as they could be. They should also arouse Georges Mager's conscience, because he had a bad time executing them.

Hindemith's Day Off.

Compared with the Hindemith Violin Concerto which Ruth Posselt played in Hartford with the Boston Symphony last winter, the Hindemith Violincello Concerto isn't one, two, three. The first movement is unmitigated boredom, mindful of nothing so much as an amateur 'cellist practising in a room next to an orchestra rehearsing an entirely different number altogether.

The third movement is the ordinary smart, sophisticated "fantastic carnival" stuff so intriguing to fashionable composers today. But the second, which begins in a heartache, perks up a little, and then goes back to melancholic headwagging, is the best, the sincerest and the most endowed with the logic of music, I thought. Its writing is rather fragile for Hindemith, but genuine and tender out of the heart.

I can't tell you how Mr. Piatigorsky performed it, having nothing to go by. I suppose he played it just as the doctor ordered, for at least Mr. Hindemith shook his hand very heartily afterward, as did Dr. Koussevitzky, and he is of course a celebrated fellow. His manner was the wildly abstract one traditional with 'cellists, who somehow always make me think of the pictures of St. Sebastian, skewered to their instruments instead of to a tree.

Try, Try Again.

Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra made a terrific din playing the concluding "Capriccio Espagnol," and it sounded very spirited but somehow paradoxically it was not. I think it was exemplary of much of the afternoon's performance as a whole. The orchestra worked industriously throughout, and there was a lot of excellent playing from bar to bar, but as a whole, after hearing the Thursday concert and yesterday's, I do not feel that it has yet returned to the brilliance it shows at its best. It's like the first few days of work after you've come back from vacation.

—T. H. P.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 5 - 1941

Demand Brisk For Festival Tickets

Benefit Committee Has Meeting at Tanglewood

The staff at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival office in Stockbridge, was trying to keep pace today with the continued heavy demands for tickets for the remaining concerts at Tanglewood by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, [illegible] Koussevitzky, conductor.

With attendance records shattered by the first series, equally large audiences are expected for the second series beginning Thursday night at 8.30.

There are some good seats left for Thursday and Sunday. All seats are sold for Saturday and for the closing concert on the 17th. General admissions, however, are not limited.

At Tanglewood this noon there was a meeting of community chairmen working for the gala benefit to be given Aug. 15 for the USO and the British War Relief. Mrs John H. P. Gould of Lenox and Mrs. George W. Edman, of Pittsfield, co-chairmen for tickets obtained reports on ticket sales and in turn reported that far more than half the boxes have been sold. Ticket chairmen are serving in many New England towns and cities and in the Hudson Valley. Mrs. Frederick Schenck of Lenox spoke about prizes to be awarded the night of the benefit.

After the meeting this noon, the group enjoyed luncheon at the Berkshire Music Center bus, then watched a rehearsal of the opera department, Dr. Herbert Graf, director.

Tickets for the benefit may be obtained from community chairmen, or at the benefit office in Stockbridge or from USO and British War Relief offices in Boston, New York and Pittsfield, at Pittsfield banks, at the Festival office in Steinway Hall, New York.

This Clipping From CLEVELAND, OHIO
PRESS

AUG 5 - 1941

Music Lovers Flock to Symphonic Festival

Thousands Come by Train, Bus, Auto and Even on Foot

By WINSOR FRENCH

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass.: Some 7000 people, literally gathered from all over the country, crowded into the Music Shed here during the week-end for the first concert in the Eighth Annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

Huge busses brought throngs of hot, tired music lovers up from New York and returned the same night. Others came by train, motor, airplane and even on walking tours. Every seat for the entire series has been sold for weeks and harried, worried looking people who apparently just took a chance on finding accommodations, actually stop you on the street in their frantic search for a bed.

There were continual showers on the opening day but towards evening the clouds lifted and long before the appointed hour of the concert every little dirt road for miles around looked like a crowded, city avenue. The parking fields were a sea of cars—vintage limousines, station wagons, collegiate jallopies and every type of vehicle imaginable.

Rich Furs in Evidence

As to the audience itself, you have never seen anything like it. White-haired old dowagers dusted off their pearl dog collars, diamonds glittered in the boxes and ermine, mink and sable wraps were thrown casually over the backs of chairs. Behind the boxes in the 2-dollar (and cheapest) seats were the real music lovers: Young men and women carrying scores and dressed in everything from slacks and seersucker to conventional evening clothes. There were women whose heads looked like transplanted flower gardens and more shawls and batik fantasies than you could believe.

The great lawns of Tanglewood were overflowing with hundreds who had invested only in general admissions. Carrying their own blankets, pillows, raincoats and thermos bottles, they sought out places under elms—stretching out comfortably to hear the music. During the half-hour intervals thousands more stumbled and tramped on the way to the refreshment tent: Sleeping old men, romantic couples trying to make one blanket do for two, and altogether as complete a cross section as you could imagine.

Every Seat Is Occupied

In the vast, fan-shaped shed, its sides open to the gardens, there was not an empty seat to be seen. Fireflies blazed against the silent pine trees and faces glowed in the flare of matches as people lit cigarettes. Across the lawn you could see, outlined against the summer sky, the rambling house where Hawthorne wrote his "Tanglewood Tales." It is a museum now, and during the intermission is crowded with throngs of curious people.

At last the members of the orchestra file in. The great Koussevitzky strides across the stage to thundering applause, taps the music stand with his baton. For an instant the silence is absolute, a cricket chirps somewhere, and then the first, certain bars of Haydn's Symphony in G Major are heard. The greatest music festival anywhere in the world today has at last begun.

Attention Is Rapt

The bowing heads in the boxes suddenly become stationary, the photographers finally cease exploding their bulbs, attention is rapt and you can almost feel the concentration. Actually, it is such an emotional experience that some people weep with excitement. Debussy's Fetes, Nuages and Faune followed the Haydn, and Villa-Lobos' Chorus No. 10 for chorus and orchestra concluded the first half of the program.

Everyone started talking at once. There was a mad rush for the refreshment tent and from all sides came torrents of inevitable criticisms. No music critic myself, I was gratified to learn atmospheric conditions had affected the strings, that the exciting Villa-Lobos might have been played more forcefully. The general feeling was that Koussevitzky had held back the orchestra for the sake of the somewhat uncertain Chorus of the Berkshire Musical Association. Personally, I had found it all extremely exciting—including the chorus of butchers, bakers and candlestick makers.

"V" Movement Is Played

Finally gongs announced the intermission had come to an end. Strolling couples hastened back to their seats from the formal, terraced gardens. People rolled up in their blankets again and in the horseshoe of boxes society ceased its chatter—the glitter dimmed and the sounds of the great "V for Victory" movement in the Beethoven Fifth rolled through the shed like a tide—on through the crowded gardens and into the quiet night.

Oddly enough, the National Anthem was not played during the evening—perhaps because the stunning Fifth Symphony had hardly been completed before the entire multitude moved in a body towards the parking fields. The applause, in my opinion, was little short of insulting in its brevity but the seasoned music addicts learned long ago that arriving at the Shed is one thing, leaving it another.

WATERBURY, CONN.
DEMOCRAT

AUG 5 - 1941

Heard in the Berkshires. . . . The performance of Shostakovich's Fifth Symphony the other night as given by Serge Koussevitzky and his orchestra, was a worthwhile score according to many of the critics, with still a great many others not convinced of the work's merit. . . About 9700 attended Sunday afternoon's concert. Many came early and picknicked outside on the Tanglewood lawns. A pretty note was introduced in the Leonore Overture No. 3 by Beethoven, the trumpet that is usually heard offstage played in the woods not too far from the stage which made it possible to get the echo. Brahms' Fourth and Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Capriccio Espagnol" delighted Sunday afternoon audiences. The weather Saturday and Sunday was ideal for the concerts. Thus far this season the attendance has beaten last year's record.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 5 - 1941

Koussevitzky Feted

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Wyman of Cincinnati, Ohio, entertained at dinner at the Pyrenees in Canaan, N. Y., last night for Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. There were 28 at the dinner including Miss Olga Naumoff, Mr. and Mrs. Pierre Luboschutz, Gregor Piatigorsky, Miss Leah Luboschutz, Aaron Copland, Paul Hindemith, Mr. and Mrs. Richard Burgin, and Miss Margaret Grant, secretary of the Berkhire Music Center.

This Clipping From
AKRON, O.
BEACON-JOURNAL
AUG 5 - 1941

$5,000,000

By ALICE HUGHES

New York, Aug. 5, 1941

FOR THE PAST FEW DAYS I have been enjoying the natural beauty of the incomparable Berkshires, and musical culchah as dispensed by the sainted Maestro Koussevitzky as he beats a Mozart symphony out of his great Boston symphony. Pleasant as this has been, I have suffered a slightly guilty feeling. Perhaps I should have been soaking up the first race week at Saratoga Springs, studying the recent improvement in the breed, and losing my $2 on a three-legged horse.

This Clipping From CLEVELAND, OHIO
PRESS
AUG 6 - 1941

Berkshire Festival Is Thrilling Event

French Finds Many Clevelanders Among Summer Mecca Visitors

By WINSOR FRENCH

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass.: If there were complaints over the strings in the first of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival concerts, surely not even the most exacting musician could find a flaw in the second performance.

The program opened with the Mendelssohn Symphony in A major, continued with Beethoven's overture to "Lenore" and concluded with Shostakovitch's Symphony No. 5. Hardly sensational — but apparently just what the milling thousands wanted and the Shostakovitch item with its wonderful, wild patterns all but reduced the audience to hysteria.

And if the concert was flawless, the night was no less perfect. A burning sun completely dried the damp lawns—giving the general admission patrons their green light, and long before the serene, gentle passages of the Mendelssohn symphony commenced flowing from the graceful sweep of the Shed there was hardly a square inch of grass to be found.

Thousands upon thousands of men, women and children carrying everything from blankets and camp stools to mere newspapers turned the gardens into a literal sea of relaxed, silent humanity Tanglewood, if anything, looked like the beach at Coney Island on the Fourth of July.

Dinner Parties Late

As always, dinner parties arrived late—women in sweeping long dresses and men in dinner jackets. Apologizing, they threaded their way through the reclining bodies toward the entrances—sometimes to be shushed but more often unnoticed. In less than 10 minutes, however, the interruptions ceased and the evening belonged to Koussevitsky's magic and the fireflies flickering among the high, steel rafters in the Shed and above the people outside.

To me the most encouraging aspects about these concerts is the incredible number of youngsters in the audiences. Joe Colleges, with crew hair cuts and pipes, stretch out on the grass beside sun-tanned girls in bandanas and tennis dresses. They motor up from Boston and New York in second-hand tiny roadsters and the sole purpose of the long trek is to hear fine music.

Later, of course, they flock to the Red Lion bar for a beer—hoping against hope Anne and Jimmy, who run the place and are equally as famous as the Boston Symphony, have saved them a table.

No Swing Bands

They talk music with all the authority of a budding Arthur Loesser or Olin Downes and during the entire festival not a swing or name band would dare to come within 100 miles of Stockbridge or Lenox. Unless, of course, they like the prospects of dying on the vine, unheard and miserable.

By the same token, if you aren't careful you will have music running out of your ears before the festival is over. Koussevitsky opens his rehearsals to the public. There are chamber music concerts in the lovely little shed designed especially for that purpose.

There is opera as well, and you may also go to hear the young students from the school of conducting take their first, eager turns at the podium. This year the flashy sensation is one Leonard Bernstein. Unfortunately I haven't heard him —you have to draw the line on all this intellectuality somewhere.

Goldovsky on Hand

Boris Goldovsky of our own Institute of Music is director of the opera school. Probably the most outstanding singer in his group is Mary Van Kirk, winner of the Sherwin-Williams audition for the Met. Her one appearance of the summer was in "Faust" and she had, as the French say, a success fou.

Clevelanders are all over the place for that matter. Yesterday afternoon I saw Adella Prentiss Hughes, rocking merrily away on the porch of the Red Lion Inn, thinking and talking in sharps and flats.

Later Kay Halle and I climbed the Artur Rodzinski's high hill to have tea on their terraces . More Clevelanders there. In order to avoid an absolute deluge of visitors there are signs at the gate requesting you telephone before calling, but the place is still the Grand Central Station.

Yesterday David McMillan was on the phone, trying to find Eleanor and Charles Strong to get tickets for the evening concert. Mrs. Percy Brown and Mrs. George Bickford dropped out of the blue, literally glutted with long sessions of music.

Mystery Woman

There were odd assortments of artists and musicians and one of the most beautiful, red-haired women I have ever seen and whose name no one seemed to know. Rodzinski claims she has one of the most beautiful coloratura voices he has ever heard.

In any case she was fasincating and so was the ebbing and flowing of the traffic. If things become too hectic Artur retires to the sanctuary of his bedroom, leaving the situation to Helena Rodzinski and her sisters. There are little Polish cakes, their own goat's milk cheese and conversation on every subject under the sun.

Incidentally the most recent member of the clan to arrive is another of Helena's sisters. Felicia is her first name and heaven alone knows what the last one is. Don't look for it here anyway. There are no less than a thousand letters in it and you couldn't pronounce it anyway.

5 Months En Route

Her journey to this country started exactly five months ago, was completed last week and every single day was spent on the same dreadful little French steamer. They spent three months at anchor in the harbor of Dakar—virtual prisoners and forbidden to go ashore until the last few weeks. Nazis were their watchdogs and the entire trip was a saga in horror.

You never know who you are going to run into in all this frenzy—or what kind of story. Yesterday, for instance, was crowded with everything from a fascinating interlude in a peaceful little community of Shakers to an hour with the Brock Pembertons, who came up from Manhattan on sudden impulse and are stabled in what Brock describes as a rustic tourist home.

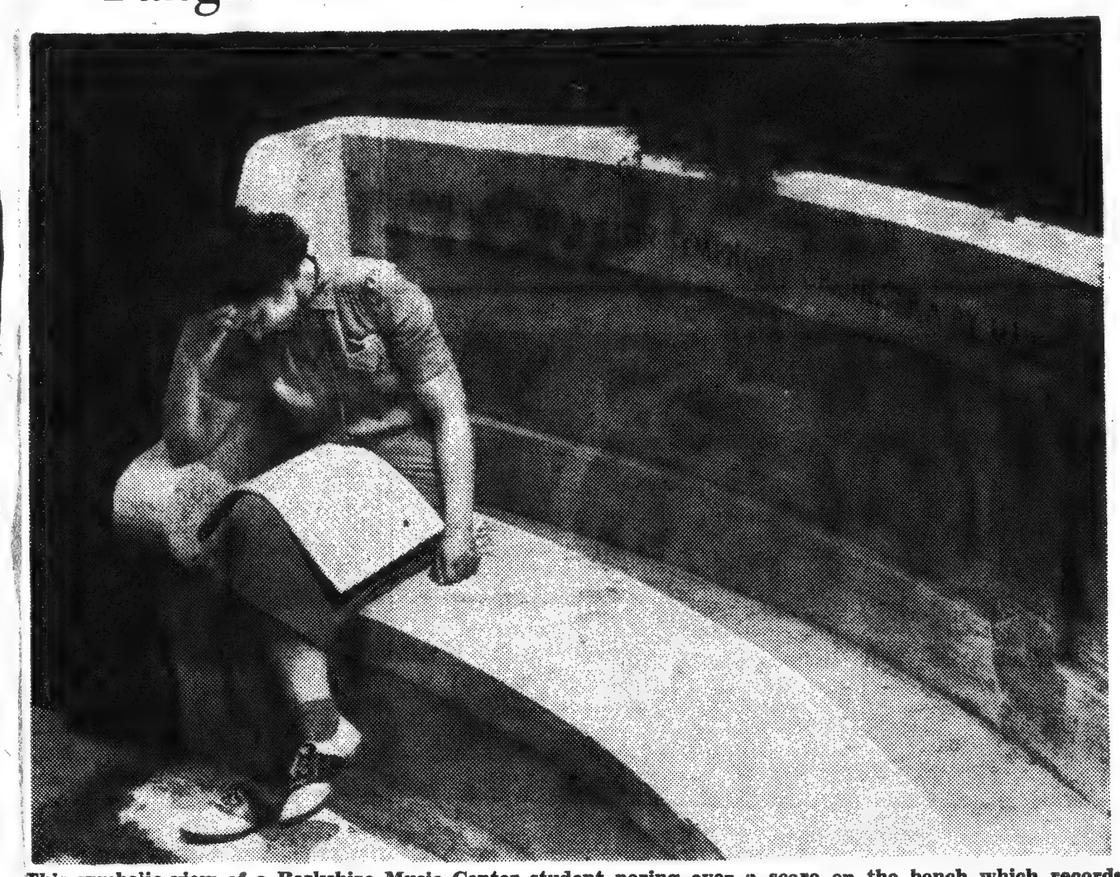
I saw Prince Serge Oblensky buying aspirin in a village drug store; Kate Pulitzer and her fiance drinking lemonade at a roadside stand. The great rub shoulders with the mortals and the unexpected never fails to happen.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
AUG 6 - 1941

FITCHBURG, MASS.
SENTINEL
Aug. 6, 1941
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
AUG 7 - 1941

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN
AUG 6 - 1941

Tanglewood Is Pictured at Museum



This symbolic view of a Berkshire Music Center student poring over a score on the bench which records the gift of Tanglewood to the Boston Symphony Orchestra is one of C. J. S. Egone's pictures now on view at the Berkshire Museum.

Of particular interest at this time are the 29 photographs and three water colors which have been hung in the foyer gallery of the Berkshire Museum. The photographs were lent by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and the water colors by Mrs. Gorham Brooks. The exhibit is known as "Tanglewood, three-quarters of a century ago, and today." The pictures will remain on display all summer.

In selecting his scenes, the photographer sought to illustrate the everyday life at Tanglewood as experienced by the students at the Music Center. The first photograph in the group is of an earnest young piccolo player practicing, with his music hung on a bush, and the theatre showing through the trees.

There are three different shots of the Tanglewood grape arbor, two of which accent its tunnel-like character and the third showing its pillared construction. Two scenes show famous Stockbridge Bowl, one taken at the swimming dock; the other of a lakeside cottage. The famous concert Shed itself appears in the majority of the photographs.

Three Early Water Colors

In contrast to modern photography are the three water colors, painted by Mrs. Richard C. Dixey around 1866. Mrs. Dixey was Miss Ellen Sturgis Tappan. The first water color is the scene visible today looking over the Bowl from the Tappan house, toward Mount Everett. The second is a path in the still-preserved Tanglewood gardens, and the third is a winter scene with Rattlesnake Mountain in the distance.

The photographs of the Music Center were made last summer by C. J. S. Egone of Brookline. Mr. Egone is regarded in camera circles as the first of the candid camera technicians, having started the fad in 1916 in his native Italy. His present work, however, shows none of the fuzziness often associated with candid camera pictures. The photographer is a refugee from Fascist Italy, having fled last year to New York with his family, and soon after settling in Brookline.

Supplementing the pictures, there is on display in a case near the front entrance a collection of letters of the same period, loaned by Mrs. Brooks. They were written to Mrs. Tappan by many Lenox notables. Included are missives from Nathaniel Hawthorne, written from "The Red House," about some matter that "might have disturbed Sophia (his wife)." Others bear the signature of Elizabeth B. Browning, Charlotte Cushman, Oliver Wendell Holmes, Fanny Kemble, and R. W. E., the initials of Ralph Waldo Emerson. All deal with the every-day details of the social life of the period.

Berkshire Festival in Strong Start; 26,000 Attend Koussevitzky Concerts Variety N.Y.T.

Aug 6, 41

By EDWARD SMITH

Lennox, Mass., Aug. 5.

The first week of the eighth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky closed Sunday (3), with a total of 26,000 people in attendance, largest in history. Sunday (3), also saw 9,700 attending the concert, another Festival record.

Festival has become perhaps the most important American summer musical attraction, with cars from every state in the union represented. Koussevitzky seems to be succeeding in making the Festival an American Salzburg.

Program for Saturday (2), included Mendelssohn's Italian Symphony, which was brilliantly played with the beautiful lyricism brought out to the fullest, and the Beethoven's Leonore Overture No. 3, which fairly smoked with fire and brilliance of its interpretation. Concert closed with Shostakovitch's Fifth Symphony, with the orchestra and conductor bringing out meanings in the score undreamed of before, and left a cheering audience recalling the men and their leader repeatedly.

On Sunday (4), Brahms Fourth Symphony, which opened the concert, had a tendency to drag in spots until the finish of the finale which rang with the clarity and power of the reading.

Copland's 'Quiet City' and Hindemith's concerto for Violincello and Orchestra followed, neither of which showed anything, both works being dull and uninteresting, and saying nothing.

The concert and week-end closed with Rimsky-Korsakov's Capriccio Espagnol, with the orchestra working to an unbelievable climax in intensity power and brilliance of its playing.

All surrounding towns and villages have been sold out for weeks with fantastic prices being asked for accommodations, and none actually available. For a 20 mile radius the countryside is reaping a small fortune.

Soldier Band to Play at Stockbridge Festival

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 6 (AP) —With Serge Koussevitzky conducting, a soldier band will appear at the eighth Berkshire symphonic festival at Tanglewood.

Arrangements have been made for 300 musicians from the 10 regimental bands of the Yankee division to come here from Camp Edwards for a concert Friday, Aug. 15.

Mr. Koussevitzky, who has been conducting his Boston Symphony orchestra in a series of three weekend concerts at Tanglewood, led the soldier bands on a recent visit to Edwards and was impressed by their playing.

BUFFALO, N. Y.
NEWS
AUG 6 - 1941

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PORTSMOUTH, N. H.
HERALD-TIMES
AUG 6 - 1941

KEENE, N. H.
SENTINEL
AUG 6 - 1941

This Clipping From LEWISTON, ME.
JOURNAL
AUG 6 - 1941

This Clipping From UTICA, N.Y.
OBSERVER DISPATCH
AUG 7 - 1941

This Clipping From
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER
AUG 6 - 1941

This Clipping From
CONCORD, N. H.
MONITOR & N. H. PATRIOT
AUG 6 - 1941

This Clipping From
BINGHAMPTON, N. Y.
PRESS
AUG 6 - 1941

This Clipping From
MANCHESTER, N. H.
LEADER
AUG 6 - 1941

THIS CLIPPING FROM TAUNTON, MASS.
GAZETTE
Aug 6, 1941

This Clipping From
NEW BRITAIN, CONN.
HERALD
AUG 6 - 1941

THIS CLIPPING FROM MONTPELIER, VT.
ARGUS
Aug 6, 1941

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
AUG 7 - 1941

THIS CLIPPING FROM
BARRE, VT.
TIMES
AUG 7 - 1941

THIS CLIPPING FROM
BARRE, VT.
TIMES
AUG 7 - 941

THIS CLIPPING FROM
BENNINGTON, VT.
BANNER
AUG 7 - 1941

This Clipping From
NORWALK, CONN.
HOUR
AUG 7 - 1941

This Clipping From
ANSONIA, CONN.
SENTINEL
AUG 6 - 1941

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION
AUG 6 - 1941

This Clipping From
ST. ALBANS, VT.
MESSENGER
AUG 6 - 1941

This Clipping From
NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
HAMPSHIRE GAZETTE
Aug. 6, 1941

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION
AUG 7 - 1941

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
AUG 7 - 1941
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
AUG 8 - 1941

Many Box Reservations Made for British Relief Benefit at Tanglewood

Mr. and Mrs. Myron Taylor of New York, Dr. James Phinney Baxter3d and Mrs. Baxter, and Mrs. E. Parmalee Prentice of Williamstown, Mr. and Mrs. Alvan T. Fuller, Mr. and Mrs. Ernest B. Dane of Boston, Mrs. Edward Bok of Philadelphia, Mr. and Mrs. Albert Spalding of Great Barrington, and Miss Mabel Choate of Stockbridge, are among the many music lovers who have taken boxes for the USO-British War Relief benefit at Tanglewood Aug. 15.

The ticket committee of which Mrs. John H. P. Gould (the former Lee Higginson) of Lenox and Mrs. George W. Edman of Pittsfield are cochairmen, announces that boxes are in brisk demand, more than half having been sold already. Reservations may be made with them at the benefit office, Stockbridge, or through the Boston committee, Mrs. Mortimer Seabury, chairman, at Symphony Hall. General admission tickets and reserved seat tickets may also be obtained at either of these sources or from the British War Relief and USO offices in Boston and New York or at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival office in Steinway Hall, New York.

Philip R. Allen of Boston, general chairman, today urged "everyone from everywhere to come to the gala benefit to help make this a real New England manifestation."

All of the forces at Tanglewood including the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conductor, the Berkshire Symphonic Festival and the Berkshire Music Center are co-operating in presentation of the program which will begin "at the unusual hour of 5.30." A 250-piece band from Camp Edwards will also be heard alone and with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the student orchestra. The day's program will conclude with fireworks and "The Star Spangled Banner."

Boxholders

Boxholders to date include Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of Stockbridge, Mr. and Mrs. Owen Johnson of Stockbridge, Mrs. John S. Newberry of Grosse Pointe, Mich., Lester Roberts of Lenox, Mrs. Clifford D. Mallory of Greenwich, Conn., Mrs. Edward A. Jones and Mr. and Mrs. Stanley P. Benton of Pittsfield, Mrs. John Meads Howells of Kittery Point, Me., Mrs. Leonard Clark Feathers of Lenox, Mrs. John Alden Carpenter of Beverly Hills, Mrs. William Felton Barrett of Rye, N. Y., Miss Alice Clapp of Washington, Mrs. Norval H. Busey, Jr., of Lee, Mrs. Thomas F. Davies of Boston, Mrs. W. Rockwood Gibbs of Richmond, E. J. Glynn of Willimansett, Mr. and Mrs. John D. Kennedy of Lenox, Mr. and Mrs. M. J. Warner of Pine Orchard, Conn., Mrs. Edwin C. Jameson of Sharon, Connecticut.

Also Mr. and Mrs. Philip R. Allen of Walpole, Mrs. R. J. Flick of Lenox, Gordon Mendelssohn of Millbrook, N. Y., Mrs. A. J. Drexel Paul of Radnor, Pa., and Mr. and Mrs. Seton Henry of New York, Mrs. Charles A. Proctor of Swampscott, Miss Edith Scoville and Mrs. Donald J. Warner of Salisbury, Conn., Mr. and Mrs. John Shepard, Jr., of Lenox, Rev. Anson Phelps Stokes and Mrs. Stokes, and Mr. and Mrs. William Earl Dodge Stokes, Jr., of Lenox, Mr. and Mrs. Edward A. Taft of Boston, Mr. and Mrs. Daniel England of Pittsfield, Mrs. Ramsay Hoguet of Stockbridge, Dr. William Mather Lewis and Mrs. Lewis of Easton, Pa., Mr. and Mrs. Henry F. Vincent of Colebrook, Conn., Mrs. Stanley L. Richter of Danbury, Conn., Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Chesney of Pittsfield, Mrs. John S. Williams of Old Chatham, N. Y., Mr. and Mrs. Samuel G. Colt of Pittsfield, Mrs. Jacques Stern and Mrs. Charles Gray of Lenox, Mrs. Maurice Hastings of Dalton, Mr. and Mrs. Halstead Lindsley of Lenox, Mrs. John Barry Ryan of Stockbridge, Mr. and Mrs. Henry B. Sawyer of Boston, Miss Shirley Farr of Chicago, Mrs. Louis A. Frothingham of North Easton, Mrs. Thomas F. Blodgett of Great Barrington, Henry P. McIlhenny of Philadelphia, Giraud Foster of Lenox, Mr. and Mrs. Winthrop M. Crane Jr., of Dalton, Miss Rosamond Sherwood of Stockbridge.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN
AUG 7 - 1941

MUSEUM FEATURE PLANNED THE 13TH

Exhibits of Berkshire Interest Among Those Listed for Members' Night — Old Movies to Be Seen

Special Dispatch to The Republican

Berkshire Hills, Aug. 6—Stuart C. Henry, director, and the trustees of the Berkshire museum at Pittsfield have issued invitations to the annual members' night on Wednesday, the 13th. Exhibitions on view will be paintings by Alexander Brock, Donald Greason's collection of "Harvard Athletics," Rex Brasher's famous "Birds and Trees of North America," and "Tanglewood Yesterday and Today," loaned by the Boston Symphony orchestra. Some of these sketches show the beautiful Lenox estate as it looked when established 90 years ago by William Aspinwall Tappan, Boston merchant and banker.

In the theater at the museum members' night will be seen some memorable American films, including "The Great Train Robbery" (1903), William S. Hart in "The Last Card" (1915) and "The Covered Wagon" (1923).

Dean Percy T. Edrop of Christ Church cathedral, Springfield, Mrs Edrop and Miss Elizabeth Edrop have returned to Springfield following a month's sojourn at Brookbend tavern, Monterey. Mrs Sigrid Undset and son are back at Brookbend for the summer from Washington. Mrs Undset is the distinguished Norwegian novelist. Other arrivals at Brookbend include Mrs Willard Parker, Mrs J. Henry Carson and Mr and Mrs Henry S. Brill of New York city.

At Red Lion inn, Stockbridge, for the second series of Tanglewood concerts are Mrs Alfred I. du Pont and Mrs Henry Belin du Pont of Wilmington, Del., Mrs James H. Brewster of Saybrook, Ct., and Mr and Mrs William Harford Curtis of Corning, N. Y.

In a house party with Mr and Mrs Thomas H. Blodgett at Great Pine farm, Great Barrington, are Mr and Mrs Francis H. Hackett of New York, Mr and Mrs Alfred H. Bill of Princeton, N. J., and Mr and Mrs Lyle E. Pritchard of Great Neck, L. I.

With Miss M. Symphorosa Bristed at Lakeside, Lenox, are Lady Edgerton and Miss Marion M. Kemp of New York.

Newcomers at Berkshire inn, Great Barrington, include Mrs Holland Duell of Larchmont, N. Y., Mrs George Crawford and Mrs Alva B. See of Greenwich, Ct.

Mr and Mrs James Dwight Francis have as guests at Arrowhead, Pittsfield, Mr and Mrs Sidney L. W. Mellen and Robert H. Pitney of New York.

At Curtis hotel, Lenox, are Mrs Harold Lehman of Tarrytown, N. Y., Mrs William A. Barron and her guest, Lady Golan of Newburyport.

Visiting Mr and Mrs Charles Rockhill at Crane hill, Great Barrington, are Mrs Park M. Woolley and Miss Nelly Hatfield of Long Branch, N. J.

THIS CLIPPING FROM HUDSON, N. Y.
REGISTER
AUG 9 - 1941
THIS CLIPPING FROM
LEOMINSTER, MASS.
ENTERPRISE
AUG 7 - 1941
This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT
AUG 7 - 1941
This Clipping From
WINSTED, CONN.
CITIZEN
AUG 7 - 1941
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION
AUG 7 - 1941

HUNDREDS AIDING BENEFIT CONCERT AT STOCKBRIDGE

Committee Reports Half of Boxes Sold for Gala Affair Aug. 15

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 6—More than half the boxes have been sold for the gala benefit to be given for the USO and British War Relief at Tanglewood Aug. 15 by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the Berkshire Music Center. There is likewise a brisk demand for general admission tickets.

Army Band to Play

One of the many features of the benefit will be the appearance of a 250-piece band from Camp Edwards to be led by Dr. Koussevitzky. Capt. Herman Hoffman of the 180th Field Artillery and Warrant Officer Chester E. Whiting, chief bandmaster of the 26th Division, have been at Tanglewood to make arrangements for the band to bivouac on the shores of Lake Mahkeenac.

The governors of all the New England States and trustees of the festival and the orchestra invite everyone from everywhere to join to help make this manifestation a tremendous success.

All over New England and in the Hudson Valley hundreds of women are serving under community chairmen, selling tickets, distributing posters and doing everything they can to promote the Tanglewood event. Mrs. George W. Edman of Pittsfield and Mrs. John H. P. Gould of Lenox and New York, cochairmen of the ticket committee today announced the following list of community chairmen:

List of Chairmen

Albany, Lawrence McKinney, the author; Vergennes, Vt., Prof. Henry Dyke Sleeper and Mrs. Sleeper; Northampton, Miss Dorothy Bement; Hartford, Conn., Mrs. Francis Murphy; Greenfield, Mrs. Frere Champney; Cooperstown, N. Y., Mrs. Henry F. Cooper; Chatham, N. Y., Miss Annabel Terrell; Chester and Woodstock, Vt., Mrs. Duncan Elsworth; Lebanon Valley, N. Y., Mrs. Harry Adams; Pittsfield, Mrs. George S. Reynolds and Mrs. Donald F. McPherson; Hillsdale, N. Y., Mrs. Alexander Bloch; North Adams, Mrs. Robert Carpenter; Adams, Mrs. Theodore R. Plunkett and Mrs. James E. Cashin; Brattleboro, Vt., Mrs. Jacob Estey; Dalton, Mrs. Maurice Hastings and Mrs. Beulah Stowell; Great Barrington, Mrs. George L. Taylor; Housatonic, Mrs. Charles Giddings; Lenox, Miss Kathleen Channing and Miss Estelle Hutchinson; Richmond, Miss Inez Eldridge; Salisbury, Lakeville and Sharon, Conn., Mrs. Maurice Firuski; Torrington, Litchfield, Winsted and Colebrook, Conn., Mrs. Bertram Peck.

Also, Stockbridge, Mrs. Henry W. Dwight; West Stockbridge, Miss Delphine Jastram; Williamstown, Mrs. Charles L. Safford; Windsor, Mrs. Alan M. Limburg; Springfield, Mrs. Hollis Carlisle; Lee, Miss Magdalene Tracy; North Adams, Mrs. Rob-

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
DEMOCRAT
AUG 6 - 1941

ert Carpenter; Mrs. Edward Thaw, Dublin, N. H.

In Boston, Mrs. Mortimer Seabury is chairman.

Supper to Be Served

On the grounds at Tanglewood will be served a New England supper of baked beans and brown bread or salads and cold cuts with desserts and hot and cold drinks. The price will be moderate and a liberal amount of the supper fee will go to the benefit fund as will the money from the refreshments sold by the women of the Thursday Morning Club of Great Barrington.

During the evening attractive prizes will be awarded, the chairman for this feature being Mrs. Frederic Schneck of Lenox and Washington, D. C.

Tickets and information may be obtained from any of these chairmen and from the Boston and New York offices of the USO and British War Relief and similar offices elsewhere in the East, the festival office at Steinway Hall, New York, and from the benefit office at Stockbridge.

Inquiries for accommodations in the Berkshires may be addressed to the Festival Accommodation Bureau at Stockbridge.

This Clipping From
PHILADELPHIA, PA.
EVENING PUBLIC LEDGER
AUG 7 - 1941

About Peo

Music in the hills . . the cool shades of twilight . . mist in the valleys, and low banks of purple on the mountain ridge against the horizon . . the refreshing stillness of the out-of-doors, as though even nature were withholding her voice, lest she mar the stirring tones of the orchestra . . such is the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, at Tanglewood, Mass.

Capacity Crowd

Opening last week to a capacity audience, the festival will continue through Sunday, August 17, and if we are to judge by the news we are receiving each day, every program will be given before a capacity crowd, with dozens who cannot get into the large pavilion seating themselves on grassy spaces outside, where, it is said the hearing is equally as good as within.

The schedule lists performances for tonight and Saturday, Sunday afternoon and on Thursday and Saturday evenings of next week, concluding with the final program on Sunday afternoon, August 17.

Benefit Program

On Friday of next week a special benefit program will be held, with proceeds to be divided equally between the United Service Organizations and the British War Relief, Inc.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky, founder and regular conductor of the festival, will be assisted by various musical groups of the Berkshire Music Center.

During the silent interims of the orchestra, visitors to this lovely Berkshire resort may find endless diversion in exploring, by foot or car, the unique charm of these gentle hills and the quaint New England villages near by.

This Clipping From BUFFALO, N.Y.
COURIER-EXPRESS
AUG 7 - 1941

Educational Work Highlights Berkshire Festival to Writer

ISABELLE WORKMAN EVANS
Courier-Express Music Editor

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 6—That great organization, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, are the center of public interest when the Berkshire Symphonic Festival is considered, but to this writer the remarkable part of the festival is the inspirational work of the music center's educational departments. One observes here talented young conductors, instrumentalists and vocalists working arduously, not only to accomplish the technical skill of their art, but to make the most of precious hours crammed with opportunities for the practical application of their ability.

During the morning hours today talented young vocalists received detailed instruction in opera dramatics in the well-equipped theater hall. After a luncheon period during which any person on the grounds obtained healthful food, moderately-priced, from a field cafeteria and wended his way with it, stepping cautiously over cases of fiddles and wind instruments, to tables under the trees, these same vocalists returned to the hall for an arduous rehearsal of Cosi Fan Tutte. The orchestra for this was directed by that authority on opera, Boris Goldovsky. In the pit were members of the advanced orchestra, who made the most of this opportunity for training under the baton of an expert.

In the afternoon also there were rehearsals of the conducting class of Stanley Chapple, of the advanced orchestra, and of the chorus which will sing with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Koussevitzky next week in the performance of Beethoven's Missa Solemnis.

At 4.30 o'clock Dr. Koussevitzky came to the theater hall to observe the young conductors. James Aliferis of Cleveland conducted a clean-cut performance of Humperdinck's Prelude to Hansel and Gretel; Sydney Baron of Bowling Green disclosed superb feeling for tone when he led the group in the first two movements of Haydn's Tenth Symphony, while Harold Leslie of Greenfield, Mass., provided well-phrased interpretations of the final movements. A Delius work was conducted by Carmine Ficocelli of Youngstown, O., and Edgar Curtis of Great Neck, L. I., interpreted Outdoor Overture by Copland.

Tonight there will be a lecture by Aaron Copland in the chamber music hall and Dr. Koussevitsky will conduct a rehearsal by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the festival chorus of Missa Solemnis.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
AUG 7 - 1941

Berkshire Center To Present Opera

The opera department, in collaboration with the advanced orchestra, will give two performances of Mozart's opera, "Cosi Fan Tutte" in English at the new Theater-Concert Hall on the evenings of Aug. 12 and 13.

These performances will be sung by two different casts of students under the direction of Herbert Graf and will be conducted by Boris Goldovsky. The scenery and costumes will be designed by Richard Rychtarik and executed by the students of stagecraft of the opera department.

Doctor Koussevitzky and members of the faculty would be pleased to have guests attend either of these performances. Admission to the reserved section will be by card only.

This Clipping From LYNN, MASS.
ITEM
AUG 8 - 1941

First Lady is Guest at Berkshire Concert

Mrs. F. D. Roosevelt Congratulates Conductor Serge Koussevitzky

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 8—(AP)—Conductor Serge Koussevitzky cherished today words of appreciation showered upon him last night by Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt for his impressive leadership at the Berkshire symphonic festival concert.

During intermission, Mrs. Roosevelt went back stage to congratulate Koussevitzky on what the audience considered some of the finest work of his long career.

The first lady and a party of five drove over from Hyde Park, N. Y., for the first concert of the middle series of the festival. They returned to New York directly after the last notes of the Beethoven "Eroica" symphony brought the gathering to its feet.

The entire audience of 9200 persons, largest ever to hear a Thursday night concert, rose and accompanied by Mrs. Henry Morgentheau and her daughter, Joan; Earl Parkman of St. Paul, Minn., and Robert Feeley and Joseph Lash, both of New York.

Frances Perkins, secretary of labor, also was in the audience as the guest of Lady Salter, wife of Sir Thomas Salter, head of the British purchasing commission. The Salters are spending the summer at nearby Tyringham.

Teutonic Compositions

The program was, in its way, a testimonial to the often repeated dictim of Dr. Koussevitzky that music has neither racial nor geographic limitations. The first lady heard only music by teutonic composers—Mozart and Beethoven written long before two World Wars disturbed the balance of the international social structure.

Before intermission there was a remarkably fine performance o Mozart's G Minor Symphony, notable particularly for its sure adjustment of tempi and for the peculiar brilliance of the Bo Symphony's string tone.

The symphony was followed by a group of excerpts from the same composers Requiem Mass, in which the orchestra had the assistance of the excellent chorus of the Berkshire Musical association, a local group conducted by Horace Hunt.

The music was concluded with Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony, one of the three or four most played symphonic works, and one that Dr. Koussevitzky never fails to make sound as if it were a new and enlightening experience.

The second third of the festival concludes with concerts Saturday night and Sunday afternoon, for which all reserved seats have been sold, but general admissions are still available.

This Clipping From
ST. ALBANS, VT.
MESSENGER
AUG 8 - 1941

This Clipping From LEWISTON, ME.
JOURNAL
AUG 8 - 1941

This Clipping From
BUFFALO, N. Y.
NEWS
AUG 8 - 1941

THIS CLIPPING FROM SALEM, MASS.
NEWS
AUG 8 - 1941

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN
AUG 8 - 1941

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
AMERICAN
AUG 8 - 1941

This Clipping From
WILMINGTON, DEL.
JOURNAL EVERY EVENING
AUG 8 - 1941

This Clipping From LOUISVILLE, KY.
TIMES
AUG 8 - 1941

THIS CLIPPING FROM NASHUA, N. H.
TELEGRAPH
AUG 8 - 1941

This Clipping From
PAWTUCKET, R. I.
TIMES
AUG 8 - 1941

This Clipping From
ANSONIA, CONN.
SENTINEL
AUG 8 - 1941

This Clipping From
NEWPORT, R. I.
NEWS
AUG 8 - 1941

This Clipping From
FITCHBURG, MASS.
SENTINEL
AUG 8 - 1941

This Clipping From
TORRINGTON, CONN.
REGISTER
AUG 8 - 1941

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE
AUG 8 - 1941

This Clipping From
NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
HAMPSHIRE GAZETTE
Aug 8, 1941

This Clipping From
FORT WORTH, TEX.
EVENING STAR TELEGRAM
AUG 8 - 1941

This Clipping From CLEVELAND, OHIO
NEWS
AUG 8 - 1941

THIS CLIPPING FROM TAUNTON, MASS.
GAZETTE
AUG 8 - 1941

This Clipping From
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER
AUG 8 - 1941

This Clipping From
NEW BRITAIN, CONN.
HERALD
AUG 8 - 1941

This Clipping From
KEENE, N. H.
SENTINEL
AUG 8 - 1941

This Clipping From
ST. PAUL, MINN.
DISPATCH
AUG 8 - 1941

This Clipping From MILWAUKEE, WIS.
JOURNAL
AUG 8 - 1941

This Clipping From
YOUNGSTOWN, O.
VINDICATOR
AUG 8 - 1941

This Clipping From UTICA, N.Y.
OBSERVER DISPATCH
AUG 8 - 1941

This Clipping From
BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
POST
Aug 8, 1941

This Clipping From
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD JOURNAL
AUG 8 - 1941

This Clipping From
WASHINGTON, D. C.
STAR
AUG 8 - 1941

This Clipping From
MANCHESTER, N. H.
LEADER
AUG 8 - 1941

THIS CLIPPING FROM
BENNINGTON, VT.
BANNER
AUG 8 - 1941

CHA

By MARGARE

AGAIN this year all the forces at Tanglewood in the Berkshire hills will present a festival program of music for the benefit of British Relief and the United Service Organizations. Participating in the event will be the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the conductorship of Serge Koussevitzky, members of the Berkshire Music Center, and persons prominent in the activities of the annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival, and the Berkshire Music Center.

The proceeds this year will be equally divided between the United Service Organizations and British War Relief, Inc. Last year the festival at Tanglewood netted nearly $25,000 for Allied relief. The money turned over to the USO will be used to provide machines and recordings of good music for all the boys in the service and now in training at various camps.

Philip R. Allen, prominent industrialist and president of the board of trustees of the New England Conservatory of Music at Boston, is general chairman for the event and to the general committee he has added trustees of the orchestra and the Festival.

The program will be presented on Friday, August 15, and it is possible that several persons from this part of Pennsylvania will travel to Tanglewood to hear the concert.

This Clipping From HARRISBURG, PA.
PATRIOT
AUG 8 - 1941

MILLERTON, N.Y
NEWS
8/14/41

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N.Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
AUG 13 1941

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM
AUG 8 - 1941

This Clipping From WILMINGTON, DEL.
NEWS
AUG 8 - 1941

FIRST LADY HONOR GUEST AT BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

Teutonic Music Rules Program at Opening Of Second Concert Series in Music Shed

By JOHN SELBY
Associated Press Arts Editor

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 7 (AP)—Teutonic music, which virtually disappeared from the American concert stage in the first World War, tonight took over the entire program of the Berkshire festival.

Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, who drove the 50-odd miles from Hyde Park, N. Y., with a party of five persons, was the guest of honor at the opening of the second of the three concert series that make up the festival's Summer list.

An estimated 8000 persons heard the evenly divided Mozart and Beethoven program, setting a new Thursday attendance record, the audience numbering 500 more than last week's previous high.

Composers Honored

The list for the entire nine programs shows that Germany and Australia have furnished Serge Koussevitzky eight composers, as against 12 from all other countries. It shows too, that Richard Wagner is being performed five times, which is the festival record; that Beethoven is furnishing three works to the list (perhaps the three most important); Mozart three, and Brahms two.

The only composer of the remaining twelve to be honored twice is Debussy—the rest, Germanic and otherwise, have one performance each.

This is about the proportion observed in Winter concert halls in pre-war times, and it proves Dr. Koussevitzky's often repeated assertion that for him music has no racial or geographic boundaries.

Well-Balanced Program

Tonight's audience heard probably the best balanced of Dr. Koussevitzky's programs so far. It began with the Mozart G Minor Symphony (K 550), a work for which the conductor has a particular fondness, perhaps because it is one of the finest things he does.

Next there was a group of excerpts from the same composer's requiem with the chorus of the Berkshire Musical Association, which is not the chorus from Dr. Koussevitzky's Berkshire music center, but a local group trained by Horace Hunt.

And finally there was the "Eroica" Symphony of Beethoven, with its moral for today. It was this work Beethoven is said to have designed in honor of Napoleon, and to have angrily revised so far as the dedication went, when Napoleon made himself emperor.

This Clipping From
BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
TELEGRAM
Aug 7, 1941

This Clipping From
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
POST-STANDARD
AUG 8 - 1941

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION
AUG 8 - 1941

This Clipping From
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE
AUG 8 - 1941

This Clipping From
ROCHESTER, N.Y.
DEMOCRAT-CHRONICLE
AUG 8 - 1941

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN
AUG 9 - 1941

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
AUG 8 - 1941

TANGLEWOOD BENEFIT SLATED NEXT FRIDAY HAS VALUABLE PRIZES

Stockbridge, Aug. 8 — A dazzling list of prizes including a pedigreed Guernsey heifer, to be given away next Friday at the gala Tanglewood benefit for the U. S. O. and British War relief has been assembled by Mrs Frederic Schenck of Lenox and Washington, D. C., chairman of the prize committee.

Miss Elsa Maxwell and others will draw the lucky numbers at the conclusion of the gala concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting, in the Berkshire Symphonic festival's shed. The drawing will take place on a platform near the flagpole. The benefit event will start at 5.30 and will include performances by the Boston Symphony orchestra, the Berkshire Music center orchestra, the opera department of the center, the chorus at the center and the 250-piece band from Camp Edwards. Fireworks to be viewed from the expansive lawns at Tanglewood will conclude the program.

The prizes to be awarded include the following: Two season tickets for the 1942 festival, a $50 defense bond, Koussevitzky's recording of Brahms' Fourth symphony, a set of Spalding's matched woods, a 1942 portable radio, autographed photographs of Dr Koussevitzky and Gregor Piatigorsky, a year's subscription to Fortune magazine, one dozen pair of nylon stockings, a cocker spaniel puppy, a Magnavox playfellow phonograph, an autographed record by Fritz Kreisler, a fitted traveling bag, one ton of coal, any kind, delivered anywhere in the United States, an autographed photograph of Albert Spalding, a Raleigh bicycle, two dinners at the Curtis hotel, a white leather handbag, an autographed photograph of the bust of Paderewski by Nison Tregor, donated by the sculptor; a tortoise-shell fan autographed by Lucreza Bori, and donated by Miss Bori, and a Sky farm pedigreed 1940 Guernsey heifer, papers included.

Tickets for the prizes may be obtained from Mrs Schenck at Lenox, from students at Tanglewood, from various community chairmen for the benefit, at the music store at Tanglewood, at the booth near the festival shed.

ALBANY, N.Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
AUG 8 - 1941

Mrs. F. D. Hears Orchestra At Festival Honor Mozart

—By JOSEPH J. HORAN

Serge Koussevitzky and his Boston Symphony Orchestra, as well as some 10,000 patrons of the Berkshire Music Festival, including Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, bowed to the memory of one of the greatest musical geniuses in history last night—Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart.

It was the beginning of the second week of concerts of the festival at Tanglewood and the program was to commemorate the 150th anniversary of the death of Mozart. It opened with Mozart's Symphony in G Minor, continued with excerpts from his Requiem Mass and closed with Beethoven's Symphony in E Flat Major, better known as the "Eroica."

Perhaps since it was to commemorate the death of Mozart (and it was a sad blow for music to have him die at 35) Dr. Koussevitzky sought to keep the program on a solemn note. For while the music was excellent it seemed to lack the verve and spice the Boston is capable of putting into a symphonic program to make it really enjoyable.

Last of Classicists

Then, too, Mozart represents the end of an era in music. He was one of the last of the great composers to write in the strictly classical style. His themes and melodies follow the precise patterns of the 17th and 18th Century composers, when music was written in the abstract form.

His Symphony in G Minor has been called one of the outstanding masterpieces of symphonic literature. It was played with the precision and grace reminiscent of the stately court days in Vienna during Mozart's time. Bits of antiphonal orchestration resembled polite conversation.

The clarity of tone of the Boston Orchestra, which is so usual as to go unremarked, became apparent by contrast with the chorus of the Berkshire Musical Association. Although this well-disciplined group of amateurs from Berkshire County and Eastern New York State gave a good performance on the Mozart Requiem Mass it failed to live up to the excellence of its instrumental counterpart. The tonal quality of the voices showed the results of months of rigorous training, but the diction was not all that it should have been in singing the words of a Requiem Mass.

Too Operatic for Church

The story goes that Mozart composed this requiem when his last illness was upon him and he felt the hand of death about to still his pen. While the music was composed, no doubt with respect and reverence, it is easy to see why the Catholic Church has outlawed the composition as being too operatic for church services.

The music is at times sombre and repetitious; again florid and almost gay. And from excerpts sung last night it could be estimated if the entire score were used for a Funeral Mass it would not be over until the middle of the afternoon.

When Beethoven wrote the Eroica Symphony he attached a program warning that it should not be placed last on the program (since it lasts three-quarters of an hour) because "there is danger that it will not produce on the audience, whose attention will be already wearied by preceding pieces, the effect which the composer purposed in his own mind to attain." Koussevitzky chose to ignore this warning by placing the Beethoven work at the end of last night's program and it seemed the composer's warning worked out. The audience seemed to be restless toward the end of the long composition.

Otherwise it was a good choice. Chronologically the Beethoven piece followed the Mozart Mass by about three years and it marks the first change from the old classical form. He turned his back on the polite patterns of Haydn and Mozart and expanded the form almost beyond recognition, yet preserved its balance and symmetry.

Koussevitzky had his choirs of instruments interpret Beethoven's extremes of temperment with dynamic contrasts on the instruments for which the symphony was scored, but as far as this reviewer's taste is concerned there was need for a number on the program which would permit the brasses and percussion sections to be heard. It seemed last night that part of the orchestra must have been enjoying a holiday.

The program needed a little Wagner or Brahms such as are promised for tomorrow night, to make it really enjoyable.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
AUG 8 - 1941

Mozart Honored at Stockbridge

Boston Group Offers Excerpts From Requiem Mass

By LOUIS BIANCOLLI.

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 8.—A pious mood spread over the Berkshires green mansions last night when 9200 votaries, plus Serge Koussevitzky, the Boston Symphony and assisting chorus honored one of music's great dead, its pet child.

In token of the 150th anniversary of Mozart's death in Vienna Mr. Koussevitzky's orchestra, reinforced by the Berkshire Musical Assn. choir, unrolled seven excerpts from the requiem mass on Tanglewood's rural altar.

Mozart's musical last will and testament, bound up with eerie myths of mysterious strangers and hushed hints from the beyond, came in for a stupendous reading making full amends for the omissions.

The day-of-wrath section boomed out like a dirge for a world in ashes. Choral outbursts surged in mounting impact as the music blazed dire threats over Tanglewood's squatter-studded lawns.

Chorus, orchestra and conductor combined in sounding the brooding depths of this liturgical classic, Mozart struck out on fresh paths here and glimpsed vistas of new worlds to conquer. Mr. Koussevitzky sensing its vast import gave the requiem panoramic sweep, despite unavoidable gaps in the continuity.

Death haunted Mozart in penning the work, and a weird dread stalks its unfinished pages. Actually Count Walsegg of Ruppach commissioned the mass and palmed it off as his own, heaping ridicule on himself. The Mozart brand sears deep into its vitals. A Mozart counterfeit is a contradiction in terms, appended as good measure to the original allotment.

The G Minor Symphony (K 550) prefaced the requiem last night, Mr. Koussevitzky envisioning its four movements in a unity of mood and method making for sustained lyric lift. Since the plurality of series B entries are Mozart items, the current bills add up to a devout act of faith in music's white angel. Mozart's music nestles snugly in the Tanglewood landscape. His art, free and unforced, seems cradled in nature's lap, though he never had a decent burial and his final resting-place is earth's secret.

Rising in grim power to the level of the Mozart requiem, Beethoven's Eroica Symphony, topping off the Berkshire soiree, was another Koussevitzky thunderbolt. Conductor and men were fully en rapport in expounding the work's giant message in clarion-clear outline and detail.

Beethoven's thwarted tribute to Napoleon—blasted by Napoleon's self-coronation—arched its massive scope in Mr. Koussevitzky's long-view reading, again leaving 9000 fevered fans in a state verging on mass hysteria.

Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt was among those making good loud use of their hands.

This Clipping From
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
UNION-STAR
AUG 8 - 1941

(5)

Mozart to Be Memorialized At Tanglewood

Berkshire Festival Programs Composer Works This Week

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 8—The second week of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, which began last night at Tanglewood, is designed, in part, to honor the memory of one of the three or four towering geniuses of musical history—Mozart. This year marks the 150th anniversary of his death, and Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra are playing some of his music on each of this week's three programs.

Last night the commemoration began with the performance of of the "G Minor Symphony" and excerpts from the "Requiem," which was one of the last works Mozart wrote and, in fact, remained unfinished at his death.

The orchestra had the assistance of the chorus of the Berkshire Musical Association, directed by Horace Hunt, for the "Requiem." The second half was devoted to Beethoven's "Erico," which might, in its own right, serve as a tribute beyond compare for any of mankinds' heroic figures.

Week-End Eelections

The Mozart score on tomorrow night's program will be the brief but delectable serenade, "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik," and for Sunday afternoon's opening number there will be Mozart's masterful "Symphony in E Flat."

Among those in last night's gathering was Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, who drove over from her home at Hyde Park, a distance of more than 70 miles, with a party of five. She purchased her tickets and declined the invitation to sit in a box. She gave every indication that she found the program delightful.

The sections of the mass presented last night were the Requiem, Dies Irae, Rex Tremendae, Confutatis, Lacrimosa and the Cum Sanctus Tuis from the Agnus Dei.

It was announced last night that Sunday afternoon's program had been revised. Besides the listing of the Mozart's mature "E Flat major Symphony" instead of the early "Symphony in A major," Brahm's "First Symphony" will replace the scheduled "Fantastic Symphony" of Berlioz. DeBussy's "La Mer" remains on the program.

This Clipping From
LAWRENCE, MASS.
TRIBUNE
AUG 8 - 1941

Elaborate Program Prepared For The Gala Benefit At Tanglewood

An elaborate program has been prepared for the Gala Benefit to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra next Friday at Tanglewood in Lenox. The Benefit will occur within the final week-end of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. The beneficiaries will be the United Service Organizations and the British War Relief. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, the forces of the Berkshire Music Center, the Orchestra's school at Tanglewood, and nationally prominent speakers and soloists will make the occasion a musical one as well as an impressive demonstration in favor of the national emergency.

Many thousands are expected to visit the great Tanglewood estate, to which there will be a nominal admission fee. The festivities will begin at 5:30, when the combined military bands, having set up their camp on the lake shore, will assemble to perform marches under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzzky.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
AUG 8 - 1941

Boston Orchestra Again Shines Before First Lady, Record Audience

Stockbridge, Aug. 8—Before a crowd of 9200 persons, including the first lady of the land, the Boston Symphony orchestra, under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky and with the Berkshire Musical association chorus assisting, opened the second series in this year's Berkshire Symphonic festival. Despite the importunings of Myron C. Taylor, former representative of the President at the Vatican, Mrs Roosevelt and her four companions, including Mrs Henry Morgenthau, preferred regular seats to the proffered box. The applause she received as she arrived threaatened to rival that gained by the orchestra. It was the largest Thursday night audience yet.

The addition of the Mozart "Symphony in G Minor," usually termed number 40, failed to alter the serious tone of last night's program, for the other two offerings were literally threnodies. The chorus sang excerpts from the Mozart "Requiem" in commemoration of the 150th anniversary of the composer's death, and the finale was the "Eroica" symphony of Beethoven. Even the most casual symphony goer knows not only its moving funeral march in the second movement, but the story of its dedication to Napoleon, and of its rededication to "the memory of a great man" when the Little Corporal began to show dictatorial tendencies.

The reason the Mozart could not dispel this symphonic gloom was theatrical rather than musical. Late comers invariably break the continuity between the first selection—or worse still, the first movement of a symphony—and the rest of the program. Experience almost cries for the programming each time of an overture to open the program in order to allow the meanderers opportunity to be seated. It was a finely tempered reading of a symphonic gem and the crisp air accentuated the beauty of the strings.

Horace Hunt, conductor of the chorus, is blessed in his bass and tenor sections which had a tendency to overpower the ladies in the "Requiem" choruses, though it was by far the best chorus work this reviewer has heard at the Berkshire festival. Attacks were keen and tone quite solid. The excerpts heard were the "Requiem," "Dies Irae," "Rex Tremendae," "Confutatis," "Lacrimosa" and the "Cum Sanctis Tuis," all of which required diligent work and coloratura virtuosity. At times, the orchestra seemed a bit overpowering, though it has been our experience that choruses sound better beyond the confines of the shell than within it.

Little need be said of the "Eroica." It was profoundly tragic, in spite of Beethoven's insertion of the scherzo in place of the traditional minuet for the third movement. There are times when the Bruno Walter reading seems to achieve a greater cohesiveness, particularly in the first movement, but the grip of the funeral march gives the Koussevitzky version cumulative power.

Saturday night, there will be more Mozart, his "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik." Also scheduled is the Howard Hanson "Romantic" symphony, the Brahms Second piano concerto with Leonard Shurs as soloist, and the Preludes to "Lohengrin" and to "Die Meistersinger."

J. D. D.

This Clipping From
ROCHESTER, N.Y.
TIMES UNION
AUG 6 - 1941

The Daily GIST
• • •
News Briefs from All the World

Military Symphony

Stockbridge, Mass. — Three hundred soldier musicians from 10 regimental bands will do their shooting with drums and trumpets at the eighth Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood, Mass., Aug. 15. Serge Koussevitsky, who has been conducting his Boston Symphony Orchestra in a series of weekend concerts at Tanglewood led the soldier bands on a recent visit to Camp Edwards and was impressed by their playing. He will conduct their Tanglewood con-

KOUSSEVITZKY
Leads soldiers

(b)

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN

AUG 8 - 1941

First Lady Is Cheered By Record-Breaking Audience Of 8,000 At Berkshire Festival

(Special to The Republican)

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 7—Before a gathering of 8,000 persons the Boston Symphony orchestra, under the conductorship of Serge Koussevitzsky, this evening resumed the summer symphonic concert at Stockbridge, Mass., with a performance of three great musical masterpieces, the Mozart G-Minor symphony and Requiem with Beethoven's Third symphony, Eroica as a finale.

A distinguished guest at the concert was Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, who, upon her entrance into the music shed, was greeted with cheers and bravos by an audience standing in tribute. Mrs. Roosevelt had driven the 50-odd miles from Hyde Park, N. Y., with a party of five friends.

The vastness of the Tanglewood estate symbolized a truly American festival with groupings of tents, tables, blankets and empty soft-drink bottles scattered throughout.

Nothing, however, broke the almost ominous silence which reigned during the performance of both the Mozart Requiem and the impassioned Funeral March which acts as second movement of the Eroica symphony.

A bit of symbolism may have been detected in the appearance of a frightened bat which hovered in sympathy over the lighted portion of the music shed during the performance of the Requiem only to disappear as the mass came to its close.

Featured on the program was the Berkshire Musical association chorus which offered the Mozart Requiem in conjunction with the Boston Symphonic orchestra.

The emotional depth which marked the circumstances under which the Requiem was composed was forcibly brought to mind in the exalted transcription of this work on part of chorus and orchestra this evening.

No mere choral deficiencies could mar the impassioned will and testament of one of the world's greatest composers. If there is to be a clue toward the true interpretation of a Mozart work, surely it can be found here.

The complete mastery of orchestral balance, tonal and dynamic scale, combined with flawless phrasing which is always present in a Koussevitzsky interpretation of Mozart, was especially in evidence in the playing of the G-Minor Symphony of Mozart.

(Continued from Page One)

Tonight's performance carried it to heights in musical integrity, understanding and artistry.

No more timely work than the Eroica symphony of Beethoven could have been played at this time on any orchestral program.

Mirroring as it does the forces of struggle, combat and ultimate exultation that not only are applicable to the Napoleonic wars but to the current war scene as well. The greatness of this pivotal work among all Beethoven's compositions was captured in all its embodiment of human suffering and human re-creation. The subjectivity of this work became almost a universal cry for the transcendency of the best in man.

The concert marked the opening of the second of the three concert series that make up the festival's summer list.

The gathering of 8,000 persons set a new Thursday attendance record, the audience numbering 500 more than last week's previous high.

The list for the entire nine programs shows that Germany and Australia have furnished Serge Koussevitzky eight composers, as against 12 from all other countries. It shows too, that Richard Wagner is being performed five times, which is the festival record; that Beethoven is furnishing three works to the list (perhaps the three most important); Mozart three, and Brahms two.

The only composer of the remaining 12 to be honored twice is Debussy—the rest, Germanic and otherwise, have one performance each.

This is about the proportion observed in winter concert halls in pre-war times, and it proves Dr. Koussevitzky's often repeated assertion that for him music has no racial or geographic boundaries.

The Berkshire Symphonic festival continues Saturday evening. Friday night the festival will present the advanced student orchestra.

CELINE KOESTER

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

AUG 8 - 1941

First Lady Attends Concert in Berkshires

Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt and Mrs. Henry Morgenthau Jr., wife of the Secretary of the Treasury, attended last night's concert of the Berkshire Symphony. Left to right: Major Willis of the Air Corps, Mrs. Roosevelt, Dr. Serge Koussevitsky and in the background Mrs. Morgenthau.

Mrs. Roosevelt Attends Tanglewood Concert

By CARL E. LINDSTROM
Special to The Hartford Times

Lenox, Mass.—The First Lady of the Land was at Tanglewood last night.

A patter of applause at the rim of the auditorium just before starting time announced her arrival and this swelled to a great tide as her party, which included Mrs. Henry Morgenthau, slowly made its way through the pressing crowd to seats in about the center of the auditorium.

Mrs. Roosevelt waved gaily to friends in the boxes a few rows back. Myron C. Taylor tried to induce her to join his party in the more exclusive precincts but she refused. Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Festival, greeted the distinguished guest and chatted with her a few moments. A solemn little girl in straight black hair made a presentation of what seemed to be a box of candy and was rewarded with a warm smile and several minutes of animated conversation. During intermission Mrs. Roosevelt went backstage and talked with Dr. Koussevitzky.

The First Lady was dressed in white with an Eleanor blue moire coat trimmed with ermine. She carried a white bag, wore a white net turban and a necklace of turquoise blue.

Included in the First Lady's party were Miss Joan Morgenthau, Earl Parkman of St. Paul, Robert Feeley and Joseph Lash, both of New York. Elsewhere in the audience was Frances Perkins who was the guest of Lady Salter, wife of Sir Thomas Salter, who heads the British Purchasing Commission.

Gala Mood

It would seem that Mrs. Roosevelt's presence were one story and the music another but that is hardly true. Tanglewood, accustomed as it is to celebrities, was in gala mood. Dr. Koussevitzky gave the orchestra dynamic leadership; players and listeners were in a state of quickened responsiveness.

The Eroica Symphony, an interpretation in which Koussevitzky is unrivalled, was given a magnificent reading. For poignancy and dramatic intensity the funeral march was never so arresting. Koussevitzky began with powerful strokes and applied his effects with a bold vehemence. His tempos in three movements were healthily fast. The scherzo was exquisitely done; the parts of the finale were made to hang together by means of a sense of lyrical continuity.

Opening Mozart

This same quality did much for Mozart's G minor Symphony with which the program opened. It was nimbly paced, with most of its personal sentiments reserved for the andante. For sheer brilliance the orchestra had its best moments in the finale.

This program commemorated the 150th anniversary of the death of Mozart, the chief dedicatory piece being excerpts from the Requiem Mass. This was performed with the collaboration of the chorus of the Berkshire Musical Association which had been trained by Horace Hunt and who was summoned to the platform to share in the applause.

Men Outsing Sopranos

The chorus was, contrary to usual cases, strong in its male voices and weakest as to tonal quality and power in the soprano section. Performance was generally smooth, however, and musically well-founded if exception be made of a marked lapse from pitch in the Confutatis and Lacrimosa.

Exceptional power and grandeur was achieved in Rex Tremendae. The fugal sections, the Kyrie and Cum sanctis tuis from the Agnus Dei had good definition if somewhat prone to choppy enunciation. Chorus and orchestra were well integrated and Dr. Koussevitzky endowed his conception of the work with imagination and conviction.

Smoking Protested

Against one practice it is impossible not to protest. While the open-air feeling of Tanglewood has encouraged the liberty of smoking during performances, propriety strongly hints that the practice be forfeit during the playing of the liturgical masterpieces of Mozart, Bach and Beethoven. Only the most callous minds will at such times insist on prerogatives associated with music hall galleries.

It seems that except there be a record broken there is no concert at Tanglewood. The attendance last night, the highest for a Thursday so far, was 9,200. Of these several thousand were seated, like Gertrude Stein's pigeons, on the grass.

The program for Saturday night will be Mozart's Eine kleine Nachtmusik, Howard Hanson's "Romantic" Symphony, Brahms' Piano Concerto in B flat played by Leonard Shure and Wagner's preludes to Lohengrin and Die Meistersinger.

This Clipping From BUFFALO, N.Y.
COURIER-EXPRESS

AUG 8 - 1941

HUGE FESTIVAL AUDIENCE HEARS TEUTONIC MUSIC

Mrs. Roosevelt and party help accord ovation to Koussevitzky and orchestra

By Isabelle Workman Evans
Courier-Express Music Editor

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 7—Emphasizing Serge Koussevitzky's assertion that music has no racial or geographic boundaries, Teutonic music of Mozart and Beethoven tonight monopolized the program at the opening of the second concert series of the Berkshire Festival. A full moon added enjoyment for the audience, estimated at 8,000 persons.

Buffalonians are somewhat familiar with music as provided by the interpretative genius of Dr. Koussevitzky and his group of remarkably-disciplined musicians of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, but tonight they played at Tanglewood, their permanent home, as though particularly inspired.

First Lady Present

Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt and her party of five who drove from Hyde Park, N. Y., were among those who accorded an ovation to Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra. Noted talking with Mrs. Roosevelt at intermission were Dr. and Mrs. Ten Eyck Perry and Mrs. Sidney Kennedy of Buffalo.

No orchestra in the world can surpass the perfection of the Boston group in interpreting the music of Mozart. Every phrase of the Symphony in G Minor (K550) was exquisitely molded. Loving care was given to legato passages and climaxes were attained with scintillating brilliancy. The range of tone color which Koussevitzky draws from his musicians is remarkable and the degree of pianissimo attained is seldom heard in orchestral organizations.

A memorable part of the program was the interpretation of excerpts from Mozart's Requiem by the orchestra and the festival chorus. Offered in commemoration of the 150th anniversary of Mozart's death, the blending tones of the voices and the instruments were a joy to hear.

The finale to the program was a performance of Beethoven's Fifth Symphony, which for artistic integrity will never be surpassed. When Koussevitzky unleaches a Beethoven phrase it is a revelation. This conductor lifts a climax to soaring heights and drops a subito pianissimo to sublime quiet. Phrases are carefully outlined and given unfailing rhythmic pulsation.

Not only was applause accorded by the audience in appreciation, but exclamations of bravos were unstinted. The next concert of the series will take place Saturday evening.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT
AUG 8 - 1941

Mesdames Roosevelt, Morgenthau Attend Berkshire Music Festival

Crowd Seems to Think Treasury Secretary's Wife Is Queen Wilhelmina; Koussevitzky Excellent In Tribute to Mozart

BY T. H. PARKER.

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 7.—(Special.) — The Berkshire Symphonic Festival paid tribute to both the quick and the dead, in opening its second series of concerts here tonight.

Topping the evening's list of celebrities was Eleanor Roosevelt, wife of the President, who arrived with Mrs. Morgenthau, wife of the Secretary of the Treasury, just after everyone had gotten comfortably seated and was waiting for Dr. Serge Koussevitzky to put in his appearance from his habitual side door.

But the increasing flurry of hand-clapping which began in the far corner of the music shed, and rippled through the crowd of 9200 in widening circles, was not for the conductor of the Boston Symphony, but for Mrs. Roosevelt. As the tumult increased, everyone climbed to his or his neighbor's feet and discovered the First Lady treading the aisles, clad in a pale blue wrap trimmed with fur, and accompanied by a rather short companion whom nobody seemed to recognize on sight, but who somehow impressed the crowd as Queen Wilhelmina.

Instead it was Mrs. Morgenthau. The pair of ranking guests did not occupy a box, however, as the crowd thought they might, but took seats in the middle of an aisle where they continued to sit during the rest of the evening, flanked by astonished and slightly flurried neighbors, sniped at by news photographers, and suffering autograph hunters to come unto them.

Tribute to Mozart.

With these current events out of the way, Dr. Koussevitzky took the podium in the midst of even more applause than vouchsafed the ladies, and began the evening, which paid tribute to Mozart on the 150th anniversary of the composer's death. Huddled toward the front of the wide, shallow stage was the Boston Symphony Orchestra, while ranged across the back were the 150 odd singers of the Berkshire Musical Association chorus.

Opening the program was the G Minor Symphony of Mozart, whether it was the memorial occasion for a return to customary quality, conductor and orchestra gave far and away the best performance to date, in presenting its lovely work. Dr. Koussevitzky erected a crystal monument to Mozart, springing with clear simple architecture ornamented with marvelous detail and technical imagery, and cool and firm with modish poetry. The orchestra played with a precision, a poise and a singleness of idea not only completely surpassing anything in the three previous concerts, but matching their customary superb elegance in playing Mozart.

Chosen by Dr. Koussevitzky from the Mozart requiem were the "Requiem "Dies Irae," "Rex Tremenda," "Confutatis," "Lacrimosa" and a portion of the "Agnus Dei." The choice I think is more dramatic than balanced, and somewhat unrelieved in its rush of vehement counterpoint. It was done on a huge scale, with tremendous fortissimo effects, and turbulence of spirit enough almost to wake the dead. I wonder if this was Mozarts idea. The chorus, which last week in singing the Villa Lobos Choros, was swamped by the orchestra, inclined to turned the tables last night.

Choral Clarity, Balance.

However in point of singing, was excellent work. For clarity of part, for exceptional balance of choir, for liveliness of temper, Horace Hunt's charges are a fine chorus in view of their short time of singing together. Their fotissimi are better than their pianissimi which lack sureness and quality, however. Mr. Hunt shared the audience tribute with Dr. Koussevitzky.

The performance of Beethoven's Third Symphony which closed the program struck me as somewhat uneven in inspiration, and of no special viewpoint, musically or emotionally. The second movement in particular I thought wan in color and spasmodic in temper. The third movement was done in an almost Mendelssohnian style, traces of which appeared again in the final section. The last movement had considerably more warmth and ruddiness, both of which were welcome. The entire reading was unusually individualistic for Dr. Koussevitzky, marked by a kind of strange quixoticism. The playing was vivi in isolated passages, but rather labored on the whole.

This Clipping From
ROCHESTER, N.Y.
TIMES UNION
AUG 8 - 1941

Music Lovers

Stockbridge, Mass.—A distinguished audience, including Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt and Madame Frances Perkins, Secretary of Labor, heard a program of music by Teutonic composers at the opening of the Middle Series of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival last night. Mrs. Roosevelt went back stage during intermission to congratulate Conductor Serge Koussevitsky on what the audience considered some of the finest work in his long career. The entire audience of 9,200 persons rose and applauded Mrs. Roosevelt and her party when they arrived from Hyde Park.

ALBANY, N.Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
AUG 8 - 1941

Notables Sponsor USO Fete

Secretary of the Navy Frank Knox and Mrs. Knox are among sponsors for the gala benefit to be given at Tanglewood Aug. 15, for the USO and British War Relief. Honorary sponsors are the six New England governors and trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

On the joint sponsoring committee from the USO and British War Relief for New York and vicinity are Mrs. Winthrop Aldrich, Mrs. John W. Cross, Mrs. Edgar W. Leonard and Henry J. Whigham, New York City; Mrs. Halstead Freeman, St. Andrews, New Brunswick; Mrs. William Armour, Peapack, N. J.; Mrs. Oswald B. Lord, Stamford, Conn.; Mrs. Paul Moore, Convent, N. J.; Mrs. Lowell Weicker, Millneck, N. Y.; Mrs. Gordon Mickler, Greenwich, Conn.

Mr. and Mrs. Myron Taylor, New York; Dr. James Phinney Baxter 3d and Mrs. Baxter; Mrs. E. Parmalee Prentice, Williamstown, Mass.; Mr. and Mrs. Alvan T. Fuller, Mr. and Mrs. Ernest B. Dane, Boston; Mrs. Edward Bok, Philadelphia; Mr. and Mrs. Albert Spalding, Great Barrington, and Miss Mabel Choate, Stockbridge, have taken boxes.

All of the forces at Tanglewood, including the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor; the Berkshire Symphonic Festival and the Berkshire Music Center are cooperating in presentation of the program which will begin "at the unusual hour of 5:30." A 250-piece band from Camp Edwards also will be heard alone and with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the student orchestra. The program will conclude with fireworks and "The Star Spangled Banner."

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION
AUG 8 - 1941

MRS. ROOSEVELT AMONG CROWD AT TANGLEWOOD

Mozart Works Predominate at Berkshire Symphonic Festival

By Willard M. Clark

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 8—Another record crowd of 9200 people attended the opening concert of the second series of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival last night. It was a perfect night with a full, yellow moon over head and thousands of people on the grass outside the shed.

First Lady Attends

Among those in the music shed were Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt and Mrs. Henry Morgenthau, Jr. Mrs. Roosevelt, being a democrat, occupied a regular seat instead of one of the boxes. As she entered the shed there was a ripple of applause from those near the entrance. It spread and everyone rose to see the First Lady and photographers got on the job immediately. It was all quite exciting for those who gloat on personalities.

The three concerts in this second series are to include works by Mozart in recognition of the 150th anniversary of his death. Two works were heard tonight, the "Symphony in G Minor" and excerpts from the "Requiem" sung by the chorus of the Berkshire Musical Association. In addition, Dr. Koussevitzky included the Beethoven "Symphony No. 3 in E Flat Major," known as the "Eroica."

The inclusion of the "Requiem" and "Eroica" at this time seemed significant, for both were born of rebellion against social injustice and tyranny. Mozart, when he accepted the commission for a requiem from the mysterious messenger in gray, thought first of creating a beautiful thing, but he was beginning to realize that his world did not fit into the world around him and his mind became occupied with death and its horrors.

Foreboding and Fear

In the opening bars of the "Requiem Aeternam" one feels the foreboding and deadly fear which pervades most of the work. There is sheer hysteria in the finale of the "Kyrie." In the "Dies irae," "Rex Tremendae," "Confutatis" "Tacrimosa" and "Agnus Dei" no more awful picture of the judgment was ever painted.

There are, of course, lovely moments in the work, for Mozart could not write otherwise, but in its entirety the work is written in a mood of depressing sadness, "a tearful confession of one of the most beautiful spirits ever born into the world."

The Berkshire singers, who, a week before, had made a real impression in their singing of Villa Lobos' "Choros", were in excellent form tonight.

Diction, phrasing and tone quality were excellent. There was a fine contrast of mood and considerable color throughout the entire interpretation. Dr. Koussevitzky led his forces, vocal and orchestral, with due regard for the limitations of the voice and incomparable beauties of the score.

If Mozart's "Requiem" was born of grief and fear, Beethoven's "Eroica" stemmed from his humanitarian ideology and his republican politics, which tempted him to dedicate the work to Napoleon and then, when Bonaparte declared himself emperor, to tear up the dedication and dedicate it to another, and Napoleon was pronounced a tyrant and a traitor.

In the brilliance of Dr. Koussevitzky's reading, one forgot the extreme length of the work. One thrilled at the emotional fervor of the music, its urgency and declamation. It was as though Dr. Koussevitzky was shouting his defiance at those who would mould this world to their own selfish ends.

Polished Performance

The program opened with so highly a polished performance of Mozart's "Symphony in G Minor" that it fairly glistened. Mozart has written in happier vein. That is revealed in this work, particularly in its opening movement. It is, however, a work of great charm and melodic content especially in the andante and menuetto. For the greater portion of the evening, tragedy was predominant.

The program Saturday night will include Mozart's "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik," Symphony No. 2 (romantic) by Hanson and the "Concerto for Piano No. 2 in B Flat Major" by Brahms, with Leonard Shure as pianist.

Sunday afternoon the program will include "Symphony in E Flat," Mozart; "La Mer," Debussy, and "Symphony No. 1," Brahms.

This Clipping From
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
AUG 8 - 1941

Fourth Festival Concert Attended by 9,200 People

Mrs. Roosevelt Included in Audience as Koussevitzky Leads Boston Symphony Orchestra in Impressive Tribute to Mozart, to Whose Memory Second Series is Dedicated—Chorus of Berkshire Musical Association Gives Admirable Presentation—Attendance Sets Record for Thursday Nights.

In impressive tribute to Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart, to whose memory the second series of concerts of the Berkshire Symphonic festival is dedicated, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky led his Boston symphony orchestra and the chorus of the Berkshire Musical association in a rendition of excerpts from the composer's Requiem Mass last night.

"Eroica" as Climax

To augment this solemn music, Dr. Koussevitzky chose Beethoven's Third symphony, the "Eroica," as a fitting climax to the program, while to precede the great religious work, he offered a characteristic orchestral work of Mozart, his Symphony in G minor.

The weather, which favored the first concert series last week and helped attract audiences, was even more auspicious as the second series opened last night, and the naturally beautiful surroundings were bathed in the light of an almost full moon. Conditions were ideal for those who heard the concert from the lawn outside the music shed. According to the management, 9,200 persons were in the audience last night.

Heading the list of prominent persons at last night's concert was Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, wife of the President, who was accompanied by Mrs. Henry Morgenthau, Jr., and other friends. Spurning a box, Mrs. Roosevelt and her party took their places in the "blue ticket" section in front of the boxes. As the first lady entered the music shed shortly before the concert was to begin, there was much craning of necks, and a wave of applause swept the audience. During the intermission, also, she was a center of attention. Among the first to greet her was Myron C. Taylor, formerly her husband's special envoy to the Vatican. Also in the audience was Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins.

Although the program for last night as originally scheduled included only the Mozart Requiem and the Beethoven symphony, the addition of the Mozart G Minor symphony was welcome, for this is one of Mozart's best-known and best-loved works, and provided an excellent contrast to the more serious music which followed.

Chorus Well Received

Mozart's Requiem was commissioned in July 150 years ago and the score was still incomplete when the composer died in poverty five months later. In last night's performance, the fine balance maintained between the orchestral and choral sections was a tribute to Dr. Koussevitsky's musicianship and leadership. The chorus, which ha already impressed festival attend ants during a previous appearanc in the first series, performed admir ably last night, and its conducto Horace Hunt, was called to the plat form by Dr. Koussevitsky to shar in the applause.

At Tanglewood

Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt who wa in audience for fourth concert o the 1941 Berkshire Symphoni Festival season last evening.

The Beethoven symphony, whicl is indeed of heroic conception, came as a fitting conclusion to a program in tribute to the master from whom Beethoven adapted the symphonic form to fit his own talents. Although some listeners find the second movement of this work excessively long, the work as a whole is one of the most impressive of all compositions, and the brief scherzo and stirring finale, as presented last night under Koussevitzky's baton, cannot fail to arouse the enthusiasm of an audience.

During the intermission Mrs. Roosevelt went backstage to talk with Dr. Koussevitzky and to voice her appreciation of his leadership. Included in her party were Mrs. Morgenthau's daughter, Joan; Earl Parkman of St. Paul, Minn., and Robert Feeley and Joseph Lash, both of New York.

9,200 Persons

Last night's attendance, estimated at 9,200 persons, was the largest recorded yet for a Thursday night concert. The program for Saturday night includes Mozart's "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik"; Hanson's Symphony No. 2 ("Romantic"); Brahms' Concerto for Pianoforte No. 2, featuring Leonard Shure as soloist, and Wagner's Prelude to "Lohengrin" and Prelude to "Die Meistersinger von Durnberg."

The Sunday program has been revised, it was announced last night, and instead of playing Mozart's A Major symphony, the orchestra will play the E Flat Major symphony. The first symphony of Brahms has been substituted for the "Fantastic Symphony" of Berlioz. Debussy's "La Mer" remains on the program.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
AUG 9 - 1941

MU

Art Code Drafted By Koussevitzky

Master Stresses Clean Lives As Necessary for Conductors

By LOUIS BIANCOLLI.

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 9.—With a handful of America's up and coming batonists eating up every word, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky drafted a conductor's code yesterday afternoon matching the Hippocratic Oath in blunt discipline.

Assembled in one of Tanglewood's study sheds, they were told to go out into American communities, become the arbiters of musical taste and, by their example, set up a design for clean and honest living for the thousands flocking to their concerts.

Louis Biancolli.

"If you think that the conductor's sole duty is to conduct, you are mistaken," he said. "Wherever you go you must become an example of correct living. You must be a model of taste in all things, even in dress.

"You must conduct your lives in such a way that when you come out on the stage to lead your orchestra you can truthfully say to yourself:

"'Yes, I have the right to appear before these lovers of good music. They can watch me without shame. I have the right because my life and my work are clean.'"

The 67-year-old sage of Stockbridge, taking time out from a jammed conducting and instructing schedule, had called the conference with baton-twirling enrolees soon to leave for distant posts as heads of newly formed symphony ensembles.

The planned talk was on the conductor's relation to the community, but Dr. Koussevitzky, intent on driving a pet point home with his fledgling batonists, made it the peg of personal credo on the conductor's relation to "everything around him."

* * *

Score Isn't All.

"First your relation to the score," he said. "Some conductors make the fatal blunder of thinking that to know the score is everything. The material is only half the score.

"After you know the material you must find the right emotion. If you cannot you will never know the score. To find the right emotion I send you to your heart, your brain and your feelings.

"Sometimes when you go out to lead a concert you will feel empty. 'What can I give the public tonight'? you ask yourself. But once you have linked your brain, your heart and your will you will contact the public's own brain, heart and will.

As the conductor's second duty Dr. Koussevitzky listed that to the composer, stressing the conductor's obligation to study, analyze and conduct new scores, however the public might object.

"The public is what you make it. You are its master. You must educate it. Besides, you owe it to creative art. A composer cannot work if he hasn't the chance to hear his own compositions.

"Composers like Schubert died of hunger and despair mainly because conductors neglected them. Such conductors think only of themselves, of their personal success, not of musical art.

"If you love music you must first go hand in hand with the young composers and creators."

* * *

Democracy in Art.

Democracy in art is another factor concerning young conductors, Dr. Koussevitzky said, emphasizing the need of going to the masses in organizing support for new orchestras.

"Individual support of symphony orchestras cannot continue much longer. You must go among the large listening public. Give them your best and they will come to you."

"Just as I have the right to say we mus thelp young composers because I believe I have done so all my life, so I have the right to say

This Clipping From
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
UNION-STAR
AUG 9 - 1941

List Program For Benefit At Tanglewood

Concert August 15 To Help USO and British Relief

Serge Kousevitzky has chosen the Allegro con brio from Beethoven's Symphony No. 5 as the opening number when the Boston Symphony Orchestra gives a concert as a feature of the gala benefit at Tanglewood on Friday, August 15. Tschaikowsky's "1812" overture will also figure on the program. Albert Spalding, who will be one of the soloists, will appear in Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto.

In addition to the conducting his orchestra, Koussevitszky will lead a picked band of 250 players drawn from the 26th Division of the United States Army. He will conduct military marches. The players, guests for the occasion, will bivouac on the grass slopes of Tanglewood, in Lenox.

The gala benefit program will also include numbers by members of the Berkshire Music Center, offering a symphony concert in the Shed, a choral concert in the Barn, opera in the new Theater-Music Hall and chamber music in the new Chamber Music Hall.

Randall Thompson's "Alleluia" will introduce the "Manifestation" when speakers of national prominence will address the audience in the Shed. The "Allelulia" will be sung by the Festival Chorus, consisting of pupils of the school. The general program, beginning at 5:30 p. m., will last late into the evening and will include a lawn party and a display of fireworks.

The gala benefit will be given to aid the fund of the United Service Organizations and the British War Relief. A similar benefit at Tanglewood last season brought 10,000 people and netted $23,000 for Allied relief.

13,000 Hear Last Concert of Festival

Koussevitzky Leads Works of Russian, Finnish Composers

By ROBERT BAGAR.

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 18. — The Eighth Annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival came to a close yesterday afternoon with the performance of three works before an audience estimated at 13,000. This brings the total attendance for the whole series to 106,000 persons, quite a handful of customers for any three-week festival.

If America had been looking forward to the day when a music festival of universal appeal, offering everything in the field of the art this is at least the nucleus for it, and the credit may be laid largely to the tireless efforts of Serge Koussevitzky.

As far as yesterday's program went, Mr. Koussevitzky proved eminently in the vein, speaking for his program devising and for the magnificent performances accorded the music by his men of the Boston Symphony.

* * *

Scores of Implications.

Witness the combination of pieces played: The Sibelius Seventh Symphony, the Prokofieff Lieutenant Kije Suite and the Fifth Symphony of Tschaikowsky. There are implications by the score — and that's no pun — in the assortment. Sibelius, the Finn, whose country is fighting that of Prokofieff, the Russian, and mixed up in the proceedings is another Russian, Tschaikowsky, who came long before modern political associations.

Be that as it may, there was splendid playing all through. Perhaps, there may have been some who took their Prokofieff with a touch of "so what?", but they certainly could not have missed the delicious irony running rampant in the music. And if they did—so what?

Sibelius originally called this one movement work of his a Fantasia Sinfonica, which seems better suited to it. Symphonies in one movement don't jell, speaking of titles. Anyway, that's the way it is and who's to change it now?

The Sibelius genius is at work here, and no mistake. The manner in which he takes simple themes, puts them through the most sinuous weavings and, at the same time, makes sense and perfectly fine music is something for the younger generations of composers to look up to.

* * *

Four-Piece Program.

The Saturday night concert offered a four-number list. To open there was the Vaughan Williams London Symphony. This was followed by the Samuel Barber Violin Concerto with Ruth Posselt essaying the solo part, and, finally, two Wagnerian items, the prelude to Parsifal and the overture to Tannhaeuser.

Mr. Barber is a composer to watch. Not that he hasn't done enough to have warranted watching all along. He is now the proud possessor of several important performances of works of his and, no doubt, more coming.

The Concerto, which Miss Posselt and the orchestra, not to forget Mr. Koussevitzky, did unqualified justice to, is a finely knit, thoroughly workmanlike job of writing and the best feature of all is the individuality that shines through its intricate web.

The London Symphony needs no encomiums at this late date. One may only report that under the tender ministrations of Mr. Koussevitzky it emerged in all its picturesque, yet somber beauty.

* * *

Wagner Well Treated.

Wagner is one composer who rarely gets a bad reading from the Bostonians. You can imagine the splendor of their playing in the Parsifal and Tannhaeuser pieces.

The crowds here have enjoyed the programs immensely. In fact, great numbers of people make Tanglewood their day-long headquarters, surveying the beauties of the scenery, and, so to speak, those of the music. In more ways than one the Festival has been a huge success.

This Clipping From CUE
NEW YORK, N. Y.
AUG 9 - 1941

CURRENT MUSIC

THE BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

WELL-THUMBED MUSIC magnificently set forth for a none-too-critical audience by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Dr. Serge Koussevitzky (see p. 3) opened the Eighth Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood, near Lenox, Mass. As the musicians' union has never been too intimate with the affairs of Dr. Koussevitzky's men, the Petrillo patriotism has not yet penetrated to these sylvan hills. Accordingly, "The Star Spangled Banner" was omitted as a prelude. In this instance it seemed unnecessary in the heart of Yankee America.

Encouraging statistics were reported to the laboring journalists during the intermission at the first concert. The attendance, 7,500, was the largest of any opening night since the Festival began. Also, the number of cars parked reached an elephantine total.

Dr. Koussevitzky was not unmindful of these patriotic times. Despite his omission of the national anthem as a curtain-raiser, he substituted the Beethoven Fifth for the Eroica previously ordained, thus saluting "V" for Victory and the pro-British sensibilities of the audience. Incidentally he conducted one of the most brilliant and soul-stirring performances of this paean of imperious fury I have heard in a long career.

There were other items equally worthy of praise. For instance, the Haydn Symphony in G (No. 88) with its laughing minuet and trio and lace-like finale; two of the three Debussy nocturnes (Sirenes gave way to "L'apres midi" because the chorus did not have time for rehearsal) and Villa-Lobos Choros No. 10, in which the Festival Chorus distinguished itself nobly.

The illustrious strings of the Boston orchestra sounded more than ever like molten gold; the exquisite finish and balance of tonal choirs, and the extraordinary precision and unity of expression—all attributes of a great conductor and his patient toil—again will make this festival one of the charmed spots of American musical life.

This Clipping From CUE
NEW YORK, N. Y.
AUG 9 - 1941

SALUTE!

AT 67 Dr. Serge Koussevitzky is beginning his 17th year as conductor of the world-renowned Boston Symphony Orchestra. During these years Dr. Koussevitzky has done more to aid the cause of the American composer than any other conductor now functioning — foreign or domestic. He co-operated with Miss Robinson Smith in the founding and operation of the annual Berkshire Symphonic Festivals, "the American Salzburg" (see p. 18); he has conducted programs devoted solely to American music and plans to accord world premieres to many more American scores. Since his own American debut as a conductor, by sheer drive and musical genius he has transformed a moribund, moss-backed and dozing relic into one of the foremost symphonic bodies in the world.

Koussevitzky always wanted to conduct. Born in Russia, at 7 he led a juvenile orchestra, later went on to study the bull fiddle (nicknamed in orchestral parlance "the dog house") and became so proficient at it that his talents earned him graduation with honors from the Philharmonic School of Music in Moscow. He later became a professor at the Conservatory of Moscow and soloed with the Imperial Theatre Orchestra. In 1905 Koussevitzky married the daughter of a wealthy merchant in Moscow. Asked what he wanted for a wedding present, he replied: "A symphony orchestra" —and got it five years later. Assembling a group of 85 musicians, he roved 2,300 miles up and down the Volga, bringing Brahms, Bach and Beethoven — as well as Scriabin, Stravinsky and Prokofieff — to remote villages where peasants left their fields and farms to sit in blissful worship of these strange and magnificent sounds.

After the Revolution Koussevitzky was appointed director of the Russian State Orchestra. He resented official interference with his work and fled to Paris whence he toured Europe with his orchestra. A few years later he came to Boston.

Today Koussevitzky is doing for American music what he did for the Russian at the outset of his career. "I firmly believe", he says, "that American composers ought to be heard, for they are young and eager and Youth in Art is what the world needs."

For his great service to American music, to American composers, and to American music lovers, CUE salutes Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
AUG 9 - 1941

MU

Art Code Drafted By Koussevitzky

Master Stresses Clean Lives As Necessary for Conductors

By LOUIS BIANCOLLI.

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 9.—With a handful of America's up and coming batonists eating up every word, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky drafted a conductor's code yesterday afternoon matching the Hippocratic Oath in blunt discipline.

Louis Biancolli.

Assembled in one of Tanglewood's study sheds, they were told to go out into American communities, become the arbiters of musical taste and, by their example, set up a design for clean and honest living for the thousands flocking to their concerts.

"If you think that the conductor's sole duty is to conduct, you are mistaken," he said. "Wherever you go you must become an example of correct living. You must be a model of taste in all things, even in dress.

"You must conduct your lives in such a way that when you come out on the stage to lead your orchestra you can truthfully say to yourself:

" 'Yes, I have the right to appear before these lovers of good music. They can watch me without shame. I have the right because my life and my work are clean.' "

The 67-year-old sage of Stockbridge, taking time out from a jammed conducting and instructing schedule, had called the conference with baton-twirling enrolees soon to leave for distant posts as heads of newly formed symphony ensembles.

The planned talk was on the conductor's relation to the community, but Dr. Koussevitzky, intent on driving a pet point home with his fledgling batonists, made it the peg of personal credo on the conductor's relation to "everything around him."

* * *

Score Isn't All.

"First your relation to the score," he said. "Some conductors make the fatal blunder of thinking that to know the score is everything. The material is only half the score.

"After you know the material you must find the right emotion. If you cannot you will never know the score. To find the right emotion I send you to your heart, your brain and your feelings.

"Sometimes when you go out to lead a concert you will feel empty. 'What can I give the public tonight'? you ask yourself. But once you have linked your brain, your heart and your will you will contact the public's own brain, heart and will.

As the conductor's second duty Dr. Koussevitzky listed that to the composer, stressing the conductor's obligation to study, analyze and conduct new scores, however the public might object.

"The public is what you make it. You are its master. You must educate it. Besides, you owe it to creative art. A composer cannot work if he hasn't the chance to hear his own compositions.

"Composers like Schubert died of hunger and despair mainly because conductors neglected them. Such conductors think only of themselves, of their personal success, not of musical art.

"If you love music you must first go hand in hand with the young composers and creators."

* * *

Democracy in Art.

Democracy in art is another factor concerning young conductors, Dr. Koussevitzky said, emphasizing the need of going to the masses in organizing support for new orchestras.

"Individual support of symphony orchestras cannot continue much longer. You must go among the large listening public. Give them your best and they will come to you."

"Just as I have the right to say we mus thelp young composers because I believe I have done so all my life, so I have the right to say

This Clipping From
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
UNION-STAR
AUG 9 - 1941

List Program For Benefit At Tanglewood

Concert August 15 To Help USO and British Relief

Serge Kousevitzky has chosen the Allegro con brio from Beethoven's Symphony No. 5 as the opening number when the Boston Symphony Orchestra gives a concert as a feature of the gala benefit at Tanglewood on Friday, August 15. Tschaikowsky's "1812" overture will also figure on the program. Albert Spalding, who will be one of the soloists, will appear in Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto.

In addition to the conducting his orchestra, Koussevitszky will lead a picked band of 250 players drawn from the 26th Division of the United States Army. He will conduct military marches. The players, guests for the occasion, will bivouac on the grass slopes of Tanglewood, in Lenox.

The gala benefit program will also include numbers by members of the Berkshire Music Center, offering a symphony concert in the Shed, a choral concert in the Barn, opera in the new Theater-Music Hall and chamber music in the new Chamber Music Hall.

Randall Thompson's "Alleluia" will introduce the "Manifestation" when speakers of national prominence will address the audience in the Shed. The "Allelulia" will be sung by the Festival Chorus, consisting of pupils of the school. The general program, beginning at 5:30 p. m., will last late into the evening and will include a lawn party and a display of fireworks.

The gala benefit will be given to aid the fund of the United Service Organizations and the British War Relief. A similar benefit at Tanglewood last season brought 10,000 people and netted $23,000 for Allied relief.

13,000 Hear Last Concert of Festival

Koussevitzky Leads Works of Russian, Finnish Composers

By ROBERT BAGAR.

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 1[illegible] — The Eighth Annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival came to a close yesterday afternoon with the performance of three works before an audience estimated at 13,000. This brings the total attendance for the whole series to 106,000 persons, quite a handful of customers for any three-week festival.

If America had been looking forward to the day when a music festival of universal appeal, offering everything in the field of the art, this is at least the nucleus for it, and the credit may be laid largely to the tireless efforts of Serge Koussevitzky.

As far as yesterday's program went, Mr. Koussevitzky proved eminently in the vein, speaking for his program devising and for the magnificent performances accorded the music by his men of the Boston Symphony.

* * *

Scores of Implications.

Witness the combination of pieces played: The Sibelius Seventh Symphony, the Prokofieff Lieutenant Kije Suite and the Fifth Symphony of Tschaikowsky. There are implications by the score—and that's no pun—in the assortment. Sibelius, the Finn, whose country is fighting that of Prokofieff, the Russian, and mixed up in the proceedings is another Russian, Tschaikowsky, who came long before modern political associations.

Be that as it may, there was splendid playing all through. Perhaps, there may have been some who took their Prokofieff with a touch of "so what?", but they certainly could not have missed the delicious irony running rampant in the music. And if they did—so what?

Sibelius originally called this one movement work of his a Fantasia Sinfonica, which seems better suited to it. Symphonies in one movement don't jell, speaking of titles. Anyway, that's the way it is and who's to change it now?

The Sibelius genius is at work here, and no mistake. The manner in which he takes simple themes, puts them through the most sinuous weavings and, at the same time, makes sense and perfectly fine music is something for the younger generations of composers to look up to.

* * *

Four-Piece Program.

The Saturday night concert offered a four-number list. To open there was the Vaughan Williams London Symphony. This was followed by the Samuel Barber Violin Concerto with Ruth Posselt essaying the solo part, and, finally, two Wagnerian items, the prelude to Parsifal and the overture to Tannhaeuser.

Mr. Barber is a composer to watch. Not that he hasn't done enough to have warranted watching all along. He is now the proud possessor of several important performances of works of his and, no doubt, more coming.

The Concerto, which Miss Posselt and the orchestra, not to forget Mr. Koussevitzky, did unqualified justice to, is a finely knit, thoroughly workmanlike job of writing and the best feature of all is the individuality that shines through its intricate web.

The London Symphony needs no encomiums at this late date. One may only report that under the tender ministrations of Mr. Koussevitzky it emerged in all its picturesque, yet somber beauty.

* * *

Wagner Well Treated.

Wagner is one composer who rarely gets a bad reading from the Bostonians. You can imagine the splendor of their playing in the Parsifal and Tannhaeuser pieces.

The crowds here have enjoyed the programs immensely. In fact, great numbers of people make Tanglewood their day-long headquarters, surveying the beauties of the scenery, and, so to speak, those of the music. In more ways than one the Festival has been a huge success.

This Clipping From CUE
NEW YORK, N. Y.
AUG 9 - 1941

CURRENT MUSIC

THE BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

WELL-THUMBED MUSIC magnificently set forth for a none-too-critical audience by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Dr. Serge Koussevitzky (see p. 3) opened the Eighth Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood, near Lenox, Mass. As the musicians' union has never been too intimate with the affairs of Dr. Koussevitzky's men, the Petrillo patriotism has not yet penetrated to these sylvan hills. Accordingly, "The Star Spangled Banner" was omitted as a prelude. In this instance it seemed unnecessary in the heart of Yankee America.

Encouraging statistics were reported to the laboring journalists during the intermission at the first concert. The attendance, 7,500, was the largest of any opening night since the Festival began. Also, the number of cars parked reached an elephantine total.

Dr. Koussevitzky was not unmindful of these patriotic times. Despite his omission of the national anthem as a curtain-raiser, he substituted the Beethoven Fifth for the Eroica previously ordained, thus saluting "V" for Victory and the pro-British sensibilities of the audience. Incidentally he conducted one of the most brilliant and soul-stirring performances of this paean of imperious fury I have heard in a long career.

There were other items equally worthy of praise. For instance, the Haydn Symphony in G (No. 88) with its laughing minuet and trio and lace-like finale; two of the three Debussy nocturnes (Sirenes gave way to "L'apres midi" because the chorus did not have time for rehearsal) and Villa-Lobos Choros No. 10, in which the Festival Chorus distinguished itself nobly.

The illustrious strings of the Boston orchestra sounded more than ever like molten gold; the exquisite finish and balance of tonal choirs, and the extraordinary precision and unity of expression—all attributes of a great conductor and his patient toil—again will make this festival one of the charmed spots of American musical life.

This Clipping From CUE
NEW YORK, N. Y.
AUG 9 - 1941

SALUTE!

AT 67 Dr. Serge Koussevitzky is beginning his 17th year as conductor of the world-renowned Boston Symphony Orchestra. During these years Dr. Koussevitzky has done more to aid the cause of the American composer than any other conductor now functioning — foreign or domestic. He co-operated with Miss Robinson Smith in the founding and operation of the annual Berkshire Symphonic Festivals, "the American Salzburg" (see p. 18); he has conducted programs devoted solely to American music and plans to accord world premieres to many more American scores. Since his own American debut as a conductor, by sheer drive and musical genius he has transformed a moribund, moss-backed and dozing relic into one of the foremost symphonic bodies in the world.

Koussevitzky always wanted to conduct. Born in Russia, at 7 he led a juvenile orchestra, later went on to study the bull fiddle (nicknamed in orchestral parlance "the dog house") and became so proficient at it that his talents earned him graduation with honors from the Philharmonic School of Music in Moscow. He later became a professor at the Conservatory of Moscow and soloed with the Imperial Theatre Orchestra. In 1905 Koussevitzky married the daughter of a wealthy merchant in Moscow. Asked what he wanted for a wedding present, he replied: "A symphony orchestra"—and got it five years later. Assembling a group of 85 musicians, he roved 2,300 miles up and down the Volga, bringing Brahms, Bach and Beethoven — as well as Scriabin, Stravinsky and Prokofieff — to remote villages where peasants left their fields and farms to sit in blissful worship of these strange and magnificent sounds.

After the Revolution Koussevitzky was appointed director of the Russian State Orchestra. He resented official interference with his work and fled to Paris whence he toured Europe with his orchestra. A few years later he came to Boston.

Today Koussevitzky is doing for American music what he did for the Russian at the outset of his career. "I firmly believe", he says, "that American composers ought to be heard, for they are young and eager and Youth in Art is what the world needs."

For his great service to American music, to American composers, and to American music lovers, CUE salutes Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

This Clipping From
DES MOINES, IA.
TRIBUNE
AUG 9 - 1941

See Next Page

Good Music in the Berkshires

Mrs. Roosevelt Hears Mozart and Beethoven Played and Sung in Western Massachusetts.

BY ELEANOR ROOSEVELT.

HYDE PARK, FRIDAY—I took my annual pilgrimage last night to Stockbridge, Mass., to hear the fourth program of the Berkshire music festival. In commemoration of the 150th anniversary of Mozart's death, excerpts were played from his Requiem Mass. His Symphony in G Minor was also played and, after the intermission, the Beethoven "Eroica."

MRS. ROOSEVELT.

The chorus of the Berkshire Musical Association, of which Horace Hunt is the conductor, sang the Mass and the whole program was a most finished and beautiful performance. I enjoyed every minute of it. Even though we did not return until rather late, for it takes us two hours to drive from here, still it was well worth it.

We had the pleasure of speaking with Dr. Sergei Koussevitsky for a few minutes during the intermission. My admiration for his work increases every year.

This Clipping From
SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.
NEWS
Aug 9, 1941

This Clipping From
YOUNGSTOWN, O.
VINDICATOR
AUG 9 - 1941

This Clipping From
FORT WORTH, TEX.
PRESS
AUG 9 - 1941

This Clipping From
AKRON, O.
BEACON-JOURNAL
AUG 9 - 1941

This Clipping From
HOLLYWOOD, CALIF.
CITIZEN NEWS
AUG 9 - 1941

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
AUG 9 - 1941

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
AUG 9 - 1941

Camp Edwards Bands Coming To Tanglewood on Thursday

Will Attend Concert That Night, Then Prepare for Big Benefit Event for USO and British Relief on Friday

On a 200-mile route from Falmouth to the Berkshires, residents of Massachusetts will have a taste of war maneuvers Thursday when the massed bands of Camp Edwards start their trip to Tanglewood where they will take part in the gala benefit for the USO and British War Relief Friday.

All the forces at Tanglewood — the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the Berkshire Music Center, Dr. Serge Koussevitzy, Albert Spalding and others, together with the 250-piece band — will join to make the benefit a memorable occasion. The public is urged to come early to witness the opening of the program by the band and to stay far into the night for the drawing of the many attractive prizes assembled for the occasion and to witness the fireworks.

All over New England and in the Hudson Valley, hundreds of men and women are working for the success of the benefit. Philip R. Allen of Walpole is general chairman.

To Leave Camp at 6 AM.

The boys from Camp Edwards will leave the Cape about 6 AM, arriving at Tanglewood at approximately 4 PM. They will immediately pitch their tents, set up their kitchens ready for supper. After supper they will be guests of Dr. Koussevitzky at the opening concert of the final series of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. Friday morning they will rehearse for their own band concert which opens the gala benefit. Early Saturday morning the boys will break camp for the return to the Cape.

Capt. Herman R. Hoffman of the 180th Field Artillery will be in charge of the expedition with the band leader, Warrant Officer Chester E. Whiting.

Friday's program, slated for 5.30, will please a wide variety of tastes.

The performance by the Berkshire Music Center of opera scenes from "Hansel and Gretel," "Otello," and "Falstaff" will thrill those interested in this exciting opportunity for young talents. The concert in the evening, ranging from Beethoven's Fifth Symphony ("V" for victory) through Holst's "Mars, the Bringer of War" and "Venus, the Bringer of Peace," Mendelssohn's violin concerto played by Albert Spalding and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, reaches an exciting climax in Tchaikovsky's Overture "1812" with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra, and the bands of the 26th Division — all massed under Dr. Koussevitzky.

Directly afterwards the audience will face the problem—how to take home a heifer won in the prize draw conducted by Miss Elsa Maxwell, where to insure the dozen pairs of silk stockings; which golf course record to break with the new set of matched clubs, or to what chilly friend "anywhere in the United States" to have the ton of coal delivered.

The committee directing the benefit today urged everyone who has not bought tickets to do so at the Tanglewood booth tonight. Tickets for the many prizes assembled by Mrs. Frederic Schenck also will be on sale.

This Clipping From
ROCHESTER, N.Y.
DEMOCRAT-CHRONICLE
AUG 9 - 1941

You Must Give the People Your Best and They Will Come To You, Declares Koussevitzky

"You must go to the people, give them your best and they will come to you," Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, told a meeting of the Conference for Orchestral Conductors being held in Berkshire this week end in conjunction with the second week of the Festival.

Symphony orchestras of today must operate on a basis of a mass audience, the noted conductor said. The system of having orchestras maintained by a wealthy few continues even with the Boston Symphony, he told his audience of 60 young conductors of secondary orchestras from 30 states, but "it cannot continue long."

He recalled concerts he gave "with a fine orchestra" at Moscow and Petrograd in 1909, where the admission was five cents.

"My Greatest Joy"

"The hall was packed with workers and poor, young students," he said. "Playing for them was my greatest joy."

The conductor must be an example in his community, Dr. Koussevitzky said. He must lead the way in musical taste. His way of living, even his way of dress, must make his audience feel that he has the right to stand before it on the stage.

Speaking of interpretation, Dr. Koussevitzky observed that many musicians think that if they can analyze a score, and know it by heart, they know everything. But he called this "their greatest mistake," which produced only scholastic or wrong performances. He added, "We have many examples of such performances."

"For the other important half of your work," Dr. Koussevitzky said, "I send you to your hearts, brains and emotions. There you must find the inner meaning of a score."

Hanson Speaks

The other speaker at the afternoon's meeting was Dr. Howard Hanson, composer and director of the Eastman School of Music of Rochester, who discussed "The Relation of the American Composer to the American Conductor."

He said he felt sometimes that it would be better if all the music from 1750 to 1880 were lost, so that "we would create our own beauty."

A final luncheon meeting of the Conference will be held at the Morgan House in Lee tomorrow afternoon. Management and orchestral administration will be discussed, with comments by George Judd, manager of the Boston Symphony, and Dr. Margaret Grant, executive secretary of the Berkshire Music Center.

German Music Accepted

Summer concerts are not to be deprived of one of their most pleasing features, the performance of German music. The bitterness which characterized the last war period and led to the banishing of German musical classics and German and Austrian musicians from American concert halls is not to prevail, apparently, in the present turmoil.

In presenting a program comprised largely of German music at the Berkshire Music Festival, Serge Koussevitzky is setting a precedent which most music-conscious Americans will wish to see followed by others. The supreme artistry of the composers in any nation, or of any race, knows no limitations of politics, national boundaries, or racial prejudice.

America honors its own musicians of English or African or Skandinavian or German ancestry without regard to their origin, and in time of peace has enjoyed without thought of discrimination the music of Russia or Poland, Sweden or Finland, Eire or Wales or Scotland, England, France or Spain, to say nothing of the popularity of German and Italian music.

After all, what have master musicians to do with the passing fever of totalitarian plagues? Nothing could be farther from the ideologies of dictators than the mighty ideals expressed in great music by the world's best composers. Besides, the Germany and Austria which produced a Beethoven, a Schubert and a Wagner had little in common with the strangled and imprisoned land which Hitler grinds under his iron heel.

This Clipping From
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
AUG 9 - 1941

MASS AUDIENCE IS ORCHESTRAL BASIS

Koussevitzky Says Symphony Orchestras Ought Not be Supported by One Rich Person.

In our time, when democracy is the dominating factor of our way of life, we must draw support from the masses of the people for our orchestras, not from any one rich person, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, declared in a brief address at Tanglewood yesterday afternoon.

Speaking at a meeting of the Conference for Orchestral conductors, which is being held at Lenox this week-end in conjunction with the eighth annual Berkshire Festival at the Berkshire Music Center, Mr. Koussevitzky made an impassioned appeal for performances of music by contemporary composers.

He told his audience of 60 young conductors of secondary orchestras from 30 states of the union and of students of the center that no leader had the right to reject any score without the deepest study.

"Even if a manuscript, which is 12 or 15 minutes long, has only 20 bars of worthwhile music, he must play it," Mr. Koussevitzky said. "A composer cannot compose unless he can hear how his work sounds. Schubert's great C Major Symphony was not played until 12 years after his death. That was terrible. In those days composers died of hunger."

Insisting that this must not happen again, Mr. Koussevitzky declared: "Conductors must think of the art of music, not of their personal success. If you love music, you must walk hand in hand with the young composers."

Symphony orchestras must operate today on a basis of a mass audience, Mr. Koussevitzky said. The system of having orchestras maintained by a few still continues, he said, even with the Boston symphony, but, said Mr. Koussevitzky, "it cannot continue long."

"You must go to the people, give them your best, and they will come to you," Mr. Koussevitzky continued "I speak with authority. In 1909, in Moscow and Petrograd, I gave concerts with a fine orchestra where admission was five cents. The hall was packed with workers and poor, young students. Playing for them was my greatest joy."

The conductor must be an example in his community, Mr. Koussevitzky said. He must lead the way in musical taste. His way of living, even his way of dress, must make his audience feel that he has the right to stand before it on the stage.

Speaking of interpretation, Mr. Koussevitzky observed that many musicians think that if they can analyze a score, and know it by heart, they know everything. But he called this "their greatest mistake," which produced only scholastic or wrong performances. He added "we have many examples of such performances."

"For the other important half of your work," Mr. Koussevitzky said. "I send you to your hearts, brains and emotions. There you must find the inner meaning of a score."

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
AUG 9 - 1941

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL PROGRAMS ANNOUNCED

Stockbridge, Aug. 9—The Brahms "Piano Concerto number two" with Leonard Shure as soloist, will be the featured selection tonight at 8.30 when the Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, presents the fifth program in the Berkshire Symphonic festival at Tanglewood. Also scheduled are the Mozart serenade "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik," the Howard Hanson "Romantic" symphony and the preludes to "Lohengrin" and to "Die Meistersinger."

Tomorrow afternoon at 3.30 the Mozart "Symphony in A major" (K.201); the Debussy tone poem "La Mer"; and the Berlioz "Fantastic" symphony are programmed. General admission tickets to the grounds are available.

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N.Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
AUG 9 - 1941

Army Band To Highlight War Benefit

The appearance of 250 Army musicians from the 26th Division playing under the baton of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, Boston Symphony Orchestra director, will be one of the features of the war-time benefit to be given at Lenox, Mass., next Friday.

Dr. Koussevitzky will direct the soldier-musicians in a program of marches and also will combine the 26th Division band with his own Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra for a part of the program.

The United Service Organizations and the British War Relief will be the beneficiaries of the varied program which, besides music, will include several prominent speakers, a lawn party and fireworks. The festivities will begin at 5:30 p. m.

Following is the program:

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
AUG 9 - 1941

Detailed Program Listed for Benefit At Tanglewood

The program in detail is here announced for the gala benefit to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra next Friday at Tanglewood in Lenox.

The benefit will occur within the final weekend of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. The beneficiaries will be the United Service Organizations and the British War Relief. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, the forces of the Berkshire Music Center, the orchestra's school at Tanglewood, and nationally prominent speakers and soloists will make the occasion a musical one as well as an impressive demonstration in favor of the national emergency.

Many thousands are expected to visit the great Tanglewood estate, to which there will be a nominal admission fee. The festivities will begin at 5:30, when the combined military bands, having set up their camp on the lake shore, will assemble to perform marches under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky. The program will be as follows:

